Lost or Damaged.]—Parish registers are admissible in evidence, notwithstanding the loss of a leaf, not destroying the series of entries. Walker v. Wingfield, 18 Ves. 443; 11 R. R. 232.

If a vicar of a parish is applied to for an extract of a parish register of a particular date, and he states that there is no register book of that year, this is not sufficient proof of loss of the book to let in secondary evidence of the contents of the register without calling the vicar. Walker v. Beauchamp, 6 Car. & P. 552.

If an original parish register is produced on a trial, that certain entries in it should be read, the jury may look at the book to see whether the entries which have been read are in their proper places or not, but for no other purpose. Ib.

Handwriting and Signature.] — A copy of a register of marriage, signed with the name of a person who had been curate of the parish eighty years before the trial, and who signed as curate, produced by a witness who had been seven years parish clerk, and who said that the same signature in the same handwriting appeared in several places of the original register, is admissible, though no proof was given of the curate's death, and no further proof of his handwriting. Doe d. Jenkins v. Davies, 10 Q. B. 314; 16 L. J., Q. B. 218.

In support of a plea of coverture, an examined copy of a register of marriage between defendant and J. G. was given in evidence. A witness deposed that he knew J. G. and his handwriting, and that the handwriting of the J. G. in the register was that of the person whom he knew:—Held, that the evidence was admissible without the production of the original register. Sayer v. Glossop, 2 Ex. 409; 17 L. J., Ex. 300.

An extract from a parish register, signed by the curate of the parish, is admissible, without proof of the signature of the curate. Porter's Trusts, In re, 25 L. J., Ch. 688; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 349; 4 W. R. 443.

Extracts from parish registers signed by persons describing themselves in such signatures as rectors or vicars, are sufficient, within 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, s. 14, but not where the description was incumbent or curate without further evidence. Hall, In re, 2 De G. M. & G. 748; 9 Hare (App.), xvi.; 22 L. J., Ch. 177; 17 Jur. 29; 1 W. R. 2.

Charges.]—A person who applied under 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 86, to search a parish register for burials and baptisms, was told by the parish clerk in whose custody it was, that if any extracts from the register were made by the applicant, he must pay a fee to the incumbent as for certified copies. Several extracts having been made after this intimation, and paid for:—Held, first, that the charge was an extortionate one, unwarranted by the statute. Steele v. Williams, 8 Ex. 625; 22 L. J., Ex. 225; 17 Jur. 464.

Appointment of Registrar.]—In every case of vacancy of the office of superintendent registrar of births, marriages and deaths in any union, the power of filling up the vacancy is by 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 86, given to the guardians; and the clerk to the guardians has no right to claim the appointment except in the case of the first appointment after the act first came into operation. Reg. v. Acason, 2 B. & S. 795; 31 L. J., Q. B. 227; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 841; 6 L. T. 535; 10 W. R. 691.

Scotch Parish Registers.]—Scotch parish registers or certified extracts from them receivable in Scotch courts as kept under the sanction of public authority, are receivable in English courts as to matters properly and regularly recorded in them. Lyell v. Kennedy, 59 L. J., Q. B. 268; 14 App. Cas. 437; 62 L. T. 77; 38 W. R. 353—H. L. (E.)

—— Proof of Writing—Duty.]—Entries in Scotch parish registers of births, deaths and marriages are only admissible in evidence if it is proved either that they are in the handwriting of a deceased person whose duty it was to make the entries, or that a public duty to keep the registers was imposed upon the person making the entries. Lyell v. Kennedy, 56 L. T. 647; 35 W. R. 725—C. A.

Colonial.] — Extracts from colonial parish registers of the entries of marriages, baptisms and burials are not receivable as evidence in support of a pedigree, unless it is proved that such registers are required to be kept by the law of the colony, and such extracts are proved to be correct copies of the register, and are signed by the registrar, whose signature must also be verified. Evans v. Ball, 38 L. T. 141.

8. Non-Parochial Registers.

Under 3 & 4 Vict. c. 92.]—See a note in 9 Car. & P. 793, for a list of registers made admissible under this statute.

Fleet.]—The Fleet registers of marriages are not receivable in evidence for any purpose whatsoever. Doe d. Davies v. Gatacre, 8 Car. & P. 578.

The Fleet register, evidence not as a register, but a declaration upon the fact. Lloyd v. Passingham, 16 Ves. 59.

Church Register—Memorandum.]—A memorandum in a register of a church by its deceased rector made 110 years ago, though not a contemporaneous entry made in the regular course of the register, is admissible as evidence, and goes to prove that the rector did the things stated in the memorandum. Lauderdale Peerage, The, 10 App. Cas. 692—H. L. (Sc.) See also Bidder v. Bridges, 54 L. T. 529; 34 W. R. 514.

—— Entry of Date of Birth.]—Although an entry in a baptismal register by the officiating clergyman of the day when the baptised child was born furnishes no proof per se that the child was born on the day stated, the entry will not be rejected altogether as an item of evidence upon an inquiry as to the legitimacy, from its birth before or after the marriage of its reputed parents, of the child in question. Turner, In re, Glenister v. Harding, 29 Ch. D. 985 ; 53 L. T. 528.

—— Proof of Identity.]—The entry of names and titles of persons in a church book, either for marriages or births, cannot be positive evidence of the marriage or birth of any person, unless the identity of person named in such entries is fully proved, and strengthened also with circumstances of cohabitation, and the allowance of parties. Draycott v. Talbot, 3 Bro. P. C. 564.

Bishop's Register.]—A bishop's register is evidence of the facts stated in it. Arnold v. Bath and Wells (Bishop), 5 Bing. 316 ; 2 M. & P. 559 ; 7 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 120.

In ejectment, it being proved by the rector of a parish that no parish registers existed there of earlier date than 1733, the transcripts of the registers of that parish for 1705 and 1706, returned under the 70th canon of 1603, were produced by the registrar of the diocese from the bishop's registry, and received as evidence of a marriage in 1705, and a baptism in 1706, of persons through whom the plaintiff traced his title. Doe d. Wood v. Wilkins, 2 Car. & K. 328.

Extracts from the register of the bishop of the diocese are admissible to prove the appointment to a parish office. Hartley v. Cook, 5 Car. & P. 441 ; 9 Bing. 728 ; 3 M. & Scott, 230 ; 2 L. J., C. P. 141.

Scotch Chapel.]—Books kept by the sessions clerk of a Scotch chapel, containing minutes of the kirk sessions, and other proceedings of the congregation, were admissible in evidence in a suit between members of the congregation. Milligan v. Mitchell, 3 Myl. & C. 72 ; 7 L. J., Ch. 37.

Episcopal Chapel.]—In the absence of proof that the registers of episcopal chapels at Edinburgh are by the law of Scotland documents of an authentic and public nature, copies thereof rejected as inadmissible by the law of England. Conway v. Bearley, 3 Hag. Ecc. 651.

Irish.]—The rule as to proof of marriages, births, &c., by the registers in the absence of living witnesses :—Held, not to apply to Ireland, where such have not been duly kept ; and copies therefore of instruments, and evidence of reputation, received after proof of no registers found, after proper search. Roscommon Peerage, 6 Cl. & F. 97.

At Library.]—Entry of birth of a dissenter's child in a register kept for the purpose at a public library, not evidence. Taylor, Ex parte, 1 Jac. & Walk. 483.

Roman Catholic.]—Upon the question of the legitimacy of one E. H. an entry, dated in 1804, in the Roman Catholic registry of marriages and baptisms of a parish, was offered in evidence of the baptism of the said E. H., in which she was described as the child of I. H. and H. his wife, signed by a clergyman who was proved to be deceased, and to have been the Roman Catholic curate of the parish. Evidence was also given that it was the duty of the clergyman, when baptising, to make an entry of the baptism, and to add a statement shewing whether or not the child was born in lawful wedlock :—Held, that the entry was inadmissible—1, because it was not contemporaneous ; 2, because there was no evidence to shew that the curate officiated at, or had personal knowledge of, the marriage. Ryan v. Ring, 25 L. R., Ir. 184.

Entries made in the chapel books by Roman Catholic clergymen, whose death and handwriting have been proved, are evidence of a marriage or baptism recorded thereby. Malone v. L'Estrange, 2 Ir. Eq. R. 16. See Malone v. O'Connor, Macl. & R. 469 ; 6 Cl. & F. 572.

Semble, that entries of births and marriages made by the curate of a Roman Catholic chapel in the discharge of his duty are not admissible as evidence. Sed quære Malone v. L'Estrange, 2 Ir. Eq. 16. Ennis v. Carroll, 17 W. R. 344. (Ir.)

9. Registrar-General's Certificates of Births, Deaths and Marriages.

Register of Births.]—A copy of an entry in the register book of births in a registrar's district, within a superintendent registrar's larger district, certified to be a true copy under the hand of the deputy superintendent registrar, who also certified under his hand that the register book was in his lawful custody :—Held, admissible evidence of the entry in the register book upon the mere production of such copy. Reg. v. Weaver, 43 L. J., M. C. 13 ; L. R. 2 C. C. 85 ; 29 L. T. 544 ; 22 W. R. 190 ; 12 Cox, C. C. 527.

Upon an indictment for carnally knowing a girl, being above the age of ten years and under the age of twelve years, such a certified copy of an entry shewing that the child was of the age of eleven years and eight months was held sufficient proof of the age, there being independent evidence of the identity of the child with the name of the child entered into the book. Ib.

The entry in a register of births under 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 86, is evidence of the birth having taken place before the date of registration, but not of the exact date of birth. Wintle, In re, L. R. 9 Eq. 373 ; 21 L. T. 781 ; 18 W. R. 394.

—— Of Deaths.]—A certified copy of the register of deaths, under the seal of the general registry office, accompanied by an affidavit of identity, is sufficient evidence of the death. Parkinson v. Francis, 15 Sim. 160.

Identity.]—The identity of the persons named in certificates of marriage, baptism and burial with persons of the same names appearing in a pedigree produced and relied on by a plaintiff to establish his claim in ejectment, is a question entirely for the jury, and the court will not grant a rule to enter a nonsuit on the ground of want of evidence of such identity. Hubbard v. Lees, 4 H. & C. 418 ; 35 L. J., Ex. 169 ; L. R. 1 Ex. 255 ; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 435 ; 14 L. T. 367 ; 14 W. R. 694.

10. Foreign Registers of Births, Deaths and Marriages.

Indian—Baptisms.]—In an action to determine the right to letters of administration, the issue being as to the legitimacy of certain persons, copies of registers of baptisms in India were admitted in evidence. Queen's Proctor v. Fry, 48 L. J., P. 68 ; 4 P. D. 230. See also Evans v. Ball, supra.

—— Marriage—Register kept in Custody of Secretary of State.]—The court allowed a marriage in India to be proved by the production from the India Office of a register kept in the custody of the secretary of state, and by a copy of the entry certified and signed by the under secretary of state, and sealed with the seal of the secretary of state, the parties themselves also swearing to the marriage. Regan v. Regan, 1 R. 493; 67 L. T. 720.

French.]—Attested copies of French registers of marriages, births, and deaths are admissible upon the testimony of a French advocate, that such registers were kept according to French law, and would be received in evidence in the French courts. Perth Earldom, 2 H. L. Cas. 865.

—— Births.]—It being proved that the register of births kept at the mairie at Hyères could not be removed:—Held, that the contents of the entry could be proved by a copy the accuracy of which was proved by a witness who had himself compared it with the original. Burnaby v. Baillie, 42 Ch. D. 282; 38 W. R. 125.

At Embassy.]—A copy of an entry, made from a certificate of baptism by a chaplain of a British minister at a foreign court, is not sufficient evidence of birth and parentage. Dufferin and Clandeboye's (Lord) Peerage, 2 H. L. Cas. 47.

A book kept at the British ambassador's hotel in Paris, in which the ambassador's chaplain makes and subscribes entries of all marriages of British subjects celebrated by him, has not the authenticity of an English parish register. An attested copy of an entry in it is not admissible to prove a marriage. Athlone Peerage, 8 Cl. & F. 262.

Consular Seal and Signature—Deaths.]—Consular signature attached to a copy of a document under the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 22, does not make the document itself receivable evidence. Forbes, In re, 9 Hare (App.) xx. n.; 1 W. R. 32.

The 22nd section of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, making consulate seals receivable, is not retrospective. Brooks v. Lery, 1 W. R. 120.

11. Other Registers.

a. Trade-Marks.

Books of Registrar of Trade-Marks.]—The books of the registrar of trade-marks, which shew marks the registration of which has been refused, are not evidence that these marks are publici juris. Orr-Ewing v. Johnston, 13 Ch. D. 434, 442.

Whether Conclusive.]—P. registered "braided fixed stars" as a trade-mark for matches. After the expiration of five years another manufacturer applied to cancel the registration, on the ground that the words could not be registered as a trade-made, for that "fixed stars" was a name well known in the trade for a particular description of matches before P. used the alleged trade-mark, and that the words "braided fixed stars" were only a proper description of a kind of matches made by P. under a patent which had recently expired, and which matches were at the time of the registration well known in the trade by that name, and differed from the "fixed stars" formerly known by having a braided stem, which was the subject of the patent:—Held, by Chitty, J., that even if s. 3 of the Trade Marks Registration Act, 1875, did not make the lapse of five years conclusive evidence that the alleged trade-mark was a proper trade-mark, which, semble, it did, it at all events excluded evidence to shew that words which primâ facie appeared to be fancy words and proper to constitute a trade-mark were not capable of constituting one. His lordship therefore declined to hear evidence on the subject, and refused the application. But held, on appeal, that a mark which is not authorised to be registered as a trade-mark does not acquire the character of a trade-mark by being on the register for five years, and may be removed from the register though that period has elapsed, and that evidence ought therefore to have been admitted which went to shew that at the time of the registration the words "braided fixed stars" were merely descriptive of a kind of matches well known in the trade. Palmer's Application, In re, 51 L. J., Ch. 673; 21 Ch. D. 47; 46 L. T. 787; 46 J. P. 772—C. A.

12. Parish Books.

Custody.]—On the trial of an indictment for the non-repair of highways, entries in a parish book, produced by the churchwardens from the parish chest, to shew who were the surveyors of the highways, are receivable. Reg. v. Pembridge, Car. & M. 157.

A written resolution of a vestry meeting purporting to allow Mr. D. 50*l.* is not admissible to prove what was said by the persons who were at the meeting, with a view of shewing for what the 50*l.* was allowed. Ib.

The workhouse of a union is not an improper repository for documents of a parish within the union, so as to make them inadmissible when produced thence. Slater v. Hodgson, 2 New Sess. Cas. 488; 9 Q. B. 727.

Boundaries.]—On an issue raised upon an alleged immemorial custom for the parishioners of a parish to go through a particular house upon their perambulations of the parish boundaries, entries in the parish books, recording the fact that the perambulations had taken a particular line, are not evidence on such an issue. Taylor v. Devey, 7 A. & E. 45; 7 L. J., M. C. 11.

Under an issue to try the boundaries of a parish, papers handed over to the present incumbent by the representative of his predecessor, as papers belonging to the parish found in the late incumbent's possession, are evidence. Earl v. Lewis, 4 Esp. 1.

On the question whether a place is parcel of a certain parish, old entries made by a churchwarden in a book, by which he does not charge himself, but in which he merely makes statements relative to repairs done to a chapel in the parish church, alleged to belong to the place in question, are not evidence. Cooke v. Banks, 2 Car. & P. 478; 31 R. R. 680.

Right to Pew.]—In an action for disturbing the plaintiff's enjoyment of a pew, claimed in right of a messuage, an old entry in the vestry book, signed by the churchwardens, stating that the pew had been repaired by the then owner of the messuage (under whom the plaintiff claims), in consideration of his using it, is admissible to prove his right to the pew. Price v. Littlewood, 3 Camp. 288.

Right to Fishery—Rate-Books.]—In an action for trespass to a several fishery, entries of the names of tenants in parish rate-books were admitted in proof of ownership of the fishery by the plaintiff's predecessors in title. Smith v. Andrews, [1891] 2 Ch. 678; 65 L. T. 175.

Burials.—An entry in an old account of burial fees received by the sexton of a large parish, by which he charged himself with the receipt of a sum of money for the burial of Joseph Lloyd, described as in Wells-street, admitted as evidence that a person of that name, who was proved by the parish register of burials to have been buried there on the day on which the entry bore date, resided in Wells-street. Lloyd v. Wait, 1 Ph. 61; 6 Jur. 456.

An entry in a parish book, kept at the parish church, of a burial in the workhouse cemetery within the parish, is evidence of the death of the person named, though it appears that the incumbent sanctioned the entries in the book on the faith of the statements made by others, and not from his personal knowledge of the burials. Doe d. France v. Andrews, 15 Q. B. 756.

Right of Election.]—Old entries in the vestry books of a parish are not evidence to shew the right of the election to a parish office to be in the parishioners and rector, as it did not appear whether the incumbent was present at the meeting they related to; but several entries of vestry meetings at which the rector was present were received. Hartley v. Cook, 5 Car. & P. 441; 9 Bing. 728; 3 M. & Scott, 230; 2 L. J., C. P. 141.

Vestry Minute-Book — Membership.] — The brother of the defendant entered into a contract with a vestry constituted under the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, and in order to enable him to carry it out, borrowed money from the defendant, who by way of security took an assignment of the contract. Afterwards the defendant was elected a member of the vestry. An action for penalties having been brought against the defendant for acting as member of the vestry, an attendance-book of the members signed by the defendant, and the minute-book of the vestry containing his name as a member in attendance, were put in as evidence at the trial:—Held, that there was evidence under s. 60 of the above act that the defendant had acted as member of the vestry. Hunnings v. Williamson, 52 L. J., Q. B. 416; 11 Q. B. D. 533; 46 L. T. 361; 32 W. R. 267.

Ownership of Land.] —An information on behalf of the poor of the parish of P. stated an agreement, dated in 1634, by the then Earl of Portland, which recited that there lay in his park at R. divers parcels of land, which contained about six and a half acres, and belonged to the poor of the parish of P., for which lands lying dispersed in his said grounds, being theretofore ordained for good and charitable uses, the earl was desirous to give a full yearly rent and satisfaction, and thereby promised and agreed to pay to the churchwardens and overseers of P. for the time being the yearly sum of 6*l.*; and the earl thereby further promised and agreed to make such further assurances thereof as by counsel should be advised, and to set out sufficient land of a better value for performance thereof, which he would either tie for the payment of the said yearly rent, or otherwise assure and convey to such person and persons and their heirs as by the vestry of the said parish should be nominated to be feoffees in trust for the same. No conveyance was shown to be made in pursuance of this agreement. It appeared from entries in the parish books that the earl and his successors, in the ownership of part of his land (which had since been divided), had paid every year 6*l.*, which was expressed in such entries to be rent of parish land; and that in 1849 a receipt was accepted by the then owner of part of the earl's land for 6*l.*, for "rent of parish land":—Held, that it could not be presumed in the face of this evidence that there had ever been any sale of the parish land to the earl in consideration of a rent-charge. Att.-Gen. v. Stephens, 1 Kay & J. 724; 3 Eq. Rep. 1072; 24 L. J., Ch. 694; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1039; 3 W. R. 649. And see 6 De G. M. & G. 111; 25 L. J., Ch. 888; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 51; 4 W. R. 191.

In the agreement the amount of rent was written upon an erasure, and it was only signed by the Earl of Portland, but being produced out of the custody of the parish officers:—Held, that it was evidence for a jury, coupled with the entries in the parish books, to prove that the rent mentioned in those entries was the same as that stipulated to be paid in such agreement, and that therefore the agreement was to pay 6*l.* a year in respect of six and a half acres of land belonging to the parish. Ib.

The books in which the said entries were being the churchwardens' books, and appearing to have been audited, and being produced from the proper custody, although not signed by any one:—Held, that the entries were good evidence of the receipt by the parish of 6*l.* yearly for rent of parish land. Ib.

Evidence of Consent to Suit.]—Where churchwardens, by order of the parish, commence a suit, the consent of the parish shall bind it, and the vestry-book shall be allowed as evidence of the consent. Radnor Parish, In re, 4 Vin. Abr. 529, pl. 10.

Production at Hearing.]—Plaintiff had subpœnaed the defendants' agent, to produce, at the hearing, a parish book in his custody:—Held, that, as it was a public document, and in the possession of the defendants' agent, the defendants were entitled to have it produced, and read at the hearing, for their benefit. Ward v. Pomfret, 5 Sim. 475; 2 L. J., Ch. 22.

13. ORDERS OF POOR LAW COMMISSIONERS.

Entries.]—Entries made by a medical officer in a book, which he is directed to keep by a rule under the hand and seal of the poor law commissioners, of his visits to sick paupers, are not admissible for him as a public writing to prove that he paid such visits. Merrick v. Wakley, 3 N. & P. 284 ; 8 A. & E. 170 ; 1 W. W. & H. 268 ; 8 Car. & P. 283 ; 7 L. J., Q. B. 190 ; 2 Jur. 838.

14. Books of Quarter Sessions.

In what Court.]—An original sessions book being a paper book, containing the orders and other proceedings of the court, made up and recorded after each sessions by the clerk of the peace, from minutes taken by him in court, headed at each sessions with the usual caption of the justices at sessions, and signed at the termination of the proceedings of the sessions, "By the court, (J. C.) clerk of the peace," and being the only record kept of the proceedings of the sessions, and always received in the court for the purpose of proving them, is admissible in the same court of quarter sessions, though sitting under a different commission, to prove an order of the court. Reg. v. Yeareley, 1 P. & D. 60 ; 8 A. & E. 806 ; 8 L. J., M. C. 9.

Contents of—How Proved.]—The minute-book of a court of quarter sessions is not evidence of its proceedings. The record should be made upon parchment, and an examined copy produced by a witness who examined it. Rex v. Thring, 5 Car. & P. 507.

Semble, that a minute-book in which an entry of the proceedings at sessions is made, and from which book the roll containing the record of such proceedings is subsequently made up, is not itself a record so as to be admissible in evidence as a proof of the fact there stated. Rex v. Bellamy, 1 R. & M. 171.

15. Bankers' Books.

Inspection under Bankers' Books Evidence Act, 1879.]—The effect of s. 3, of the Bankers' Books Evidence Act, 1879, is to make copies of entries in the books of a banker admissible evidence against any one. Therefore, copies of entries in the books of the bankers of a defendant are evidence against the plaintiff. Harding v. Williams, 49 L. J., Ch. 661 ; 14 Ch. D. 197 ; 42 L. T. 507 ; 28 W. R. 615.

—— When Ordered.]—In an action for goods sold and delivered, to which payment and a counterclaim were pleaded, the plaintiff, after issue joined, applied ex parte to a judge at chambers, and obtained leave, under s. 7 of the Bankers' Books Evidence Act, 1879, to inspect the defendant's banking account. The order was served on the defendant's bankers, and they, on receipt of it, informed the defendant, who thus heard of the order which had been made. The defendant took out a summons before the same judge to set aside the order, and obtained a variation of it by which the inspection was limited to the period within which the goods were alleged to have been sold and delivered :—Held, that under the circumstances, the plaintiff was not entitled to the order for inspection. Davies v. White, 53 L. J., Q. B. 275 ; 50 L. T. 327 ; 32 W. R. 520.

The plaintiff in an administration action was a residuary legatee of M., a solicitor, the testator in the action, and in the course of the cross-examination on the accounts, before the chief clerk, of the defendant H., who was the testator's son-in-law and executor, and was carrying on business as a solicitor under the firm of "M. & H.," applied to the court under s. 7 of the Bankers' Books Evidence Act, 1879, that she, or her solicitor, who had been appointed receiver in the action, might be at liberty to inspect at the bankers of the testator and the defendant the books of the bank for four years containing the entries of the accounts of the testator and also of M. & H., and to take copies of such entries. The plaintiff's solicitor deposed that the inspection was necessary for the purposes of the action :—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to the order asked for. Marshfield, In re, Marshfield v. Hutchings, 55 L. J., Ch. 522 ; 32 Ch. D. 499 ; 54 L. T. 564 ; 34 W. R. 511.

An order under s. 7 of the Bankers' Books Evidence Act, 1879, giving liberty to inspect and take copies from bankers' books should not be made unless special grounds for the application are shown to exist ; but upon such grounds the order will be made before trial. Perry v. Phosphor Bronze Co., 14 R. 351 ; 71 L. T. 854—C. A.

—— Bank no Party to Action.]—Sect. 7 of the Bankers' Books Evidence Act, 1879 (enabling the court to give liberty to a party to a legal proceeding to inspect and take copies of any entries in bankers' books) should be read in conjunction with the preceding sections. The power given to the court by that section is purely discretionary, and should not be exercised where a defendant seeks to prove justification of a libel imputing pecuniary embarrassment. Emmott v. Star Newspaper Co., 62 L. J., Q. B. 77 ; 5 R. 137 ; 67 L. T. 829 ; 57 J. P. 201.

—— Accounts of Persons not Parties.]—The Bankers' Books Evidence Act, 1879, gives power to order inspection of entries in bankers' books relating to banking accounts kept in the names of other persons besides the parties to the action. Howard v. Beall, 58 L. J., Q. B. 384 ; 23 Q. B. D. 1 ; 60 L. T. 637 ; 37 W. R. 555.

The court has jurisdiction under s. 7 of the Bankers' Books Evidence Act, 1879, to order inspection before trial of entries in bankers' books relating to accounts kept in the name of the third person, if the court is satisfied that such third person is identified with a party to the action, and that such entries are material and would be admissible in evidence against a party to the action upon the trial. Howard v. Beall (58 L. J., Q. B. 384) considered. South Staffordshire Tramways Co. v. Ebbsmith, 65 L. J., Q. B. 96 ; [1895] 2 Q. B. 669 ; 73 L. T. 454 ; 44 W. R. 97—C. A.

The court will not, as a general rule, make an order under s. 7 of the Bankers' Books Evidence Act, 1879, for the inspection before the trial by one of the parties to an action of the banking account of third persons not parties to or concerned in the litigation. Pollock v. Garle, 66 L. J., Ch. 788 ; [1898] 1 Ch. 1 ; 77 L. T. 415 ; 46 W. R. 66—C. A.

—— Application Ex parte.]—In civil proceedings an order for inspection of the banking account of a party under s. 7 of the Bankers' Books Evidence Act, 1879, may properly be made upon an ex parte application, although as a general rule it would be advisable to serve the party before making the order, and the application need not in every case be supported by evidence. The inspection granted ought, however, to be limited to the period covered by the matters in dispute in the proceedings. Arnott v. Hayes, 56 L. J., Ch. 844; 36 Ch. D. 731; 57 L. T. 299; 36 W. R. 246—C. A.

In civil proceedings an application for such an order for inspection ought not to be made ex parte; and semble, that the power to grant the order ex parte is limited to criminal proceedings. Davies v. White, supra, col. 629.

In an action where one of the issues was, whether the plaintiff, who had an account in a bank, had paid to the bank a sum of money due to the same bank by another party, who had also an account therein, the court, on the ex parte application of the defendant, made an order under s. 7 of the Bankers' Books Evidence Act, 1879, giving him liberty to inspect and take copies of any entries in the accounts of the plaintiff and the party indebted to the bank, with reference to any sum or sums paid by the plaintiff for the indebtedness of the other party. Fitzpatrick v. McDonald, 30 L. R., Ir. 249.

—— Irrelevant Entries.]—Where in an action an application is made before trial for inspection of the account in his bankers' books of a party to the action, the court, in exercising its jurisdiction for that purpose under s. 7 of the Bankers' Books Evidence Act, 1879, will follow the ordinary rule as to discovery before trial, and will refuse inspection of entries as to which the party whose account is sought to be inspected deposes that they are irrelevant. South Staffordshire Tramways Co. v. Ebbsmith, supra.

By the Bankers' Books Evidence Act (42 & 43 Vict. c. 11), s. 3, subject to the provisions of this act, a copy of any entry in a banker's book shall be received as primâ facie evidence of such entry. By s. 7, on the application of any party to a legal proceeding a court or a judge may order that such party be at liberty to inspect and take copies of any entries in a banker's book for any of the purposes of such proceedings. The plaintiff in an action for probate having been ordered to produce for inspection documents in her possession relating to the matters in question in the action, produced the pass-books of her banking account, sealing up parts of them which were, as she deposed, irrelevant to the matters in issue. Application was thereupon made by the opposite parties for an order authorising them to inspect the books, or in the alternative for leave to issue a subpœna duces tecum to the officers of the bank for their production:—Held, that the application could not be granted, for there was nothing in the act to deprive a party to a legal proceeding of his right to refuse discovery of entries in his banker's books on the ground that they were irrelevant, and that whether the subpœna duces tecum should be granted was a matter which ought to be left for the determination of the judge at the trial. Parnell v. Wood, [1892] P. 137; 66 L. T. 670; 40 W. R. 564—C. A.

—— Scotch Bank—Jurisdiction of Judge of High Court in England to Make Order.]—A judge of the High Court of Justice in England has jurisdiction under s. 7 of the Bankers' Books Evidence Act, 1879, to make an order that a party to a legal proceeding in England may be at liberty to inspect and take copies of entries in the books of a bank in Scotland for the purposes of such proceeding. Kissam v. Link, 65 L. J., Q. B. 433; [1896] 1 Q. B. 574; 74 L. T. 368; 44 W. R. 452—C. A.

Before the Act.]—A banker's ledger is admissible to show that a customer had no funds in his hands on a particular day, although entries were made therein by several of the clerks of the house. Furness v. Cope, 2 M. & P. 197; 5 Bing. 114; 6 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 242.

A banker's pass book delivered to his customer, in which there are entries on one side only, is not evidence of a settled account between the parties, although the customer keeps the book, without making any objection to the entries contained in it. Randleson, Ex parte, 2 Deac. & C. 534.

—— Proof of.] — Entries in the books of bankers, merchants, &c., can only be proved by the clerk by whom the entries have been made. Cooper v. Marsden, 1 Esp. 1.

Bank of England.]—Copies of the books of the Bank of England are evidence, but, upon a question whether the signature to a transfer is in a genuine handwriting, the book must be produced. Auriol v. Smith, 18 Ves. 198. See Mortimer v. M'Callan, 6 M. & W. 58; 9 L. J. Ex. 73; 4 Jur. 172.

Copies from the transfer book of stock are good evidence. Marsh v. Collnett, 2 Esp. 665; 5 R. R. 763.

To prove a transfer of stock, a copy from the bank books must be produced, parol evidence not being admissible. Breton v. Cope, Peake, 43.

16. Books of other Companies and Corporations.

India House Returns.]—A book kept at the India House, from returns given on oath, pursuant to 53 Geo. 3, c. 155, containing the lists or number of passengers going on board an East India ship, was evidence to shew the value of the voyage, on the ground that it is a public book, kept by the authority of an act of parliament. Richardson v. Mellish, 2 Bing. 229; 9 Moore, 435; 1 Car. & P. 241; R. & M. 66; 3 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 265; 27 R. R. 603.

Companies.] — In a case of pedigree, an entry in the books of the Merchant Taylors' Company, that C. was admitted a freeman of that company by the description of T. C., of S. street, son of J. C., deceased, is receivable, not only to prove the fact that he was admitted a freeman, but that the company received him by that description, and entries of admission to the freedom of the city of London are also evidence in like manner. Collins v. Maule, 8 Car. & P. 502.

The books of an insurance company, in which they charge themselves with the receipt of a certain sum of money as a premium to insure a particular house in the occupation of S. from fire, are evidence of his occupation; and such entries are evidence, because the party making them charges himself with the receipt of money. Doe d. Smith v. Cartwright, 1 Car. & P. 218; R. & M. 62; 28 R. R. 774.

Land was taken upon lease, and an association formed for the purpose of erecting and carrying on waterworks. Some years afterwards the fee simple in the lands was conveyed to the then shareholders, the conveyance being of undivided pieces of land without reference to any company. The lands were subsequently let, and the rent received by a treasurer on behalf of a committee of shareholders. Minute books were kept by a secretary in the same way as previously to the conveyance, though it appeared that the shareholders no longer considered themselves as a company:—Held, that although the form of the conveyance in fee raised the presumption that the company had been dissolved, the evidence afforded by the subsequent minute books was sufficient to show that the company was still in existence and within the provisions of the Winding-up Acts. Sheerness Well and Waterworks Co., In re, 6 W. R. 118.

—— Register of Shareholders.]—The register of shareholders of a company within 8 & 9 Vict. c. 16, s. 9, authenticated by its seal, is admissible in evidence without any proof that such seal was affixed at an ordinary meeting of the company pursuant to the act, s. 9. L. & N.-W. Ry. v. M'Michael, 20 L. J., Ex. 6.

A. was indicted for forging, and uttering a transfer of shares in a railway company:—Held, that the register of shareholders kept under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 16, s. 9, was evidence to prove that an individual is a shareholder, without any authentication of the seal; and that, in order to sustain the indictment, it was unnecessary to give further proof that such individual was a shareholder of the company. Reg. v. Nash, 2 Den. C. C. 493; 21 L. J., M. C. 147; 16 Jur. 553.

The Companies Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, enacts that the company shall keep a book, to be called "The Register of Shareholders," which is to contain the names, &c., of the shareholders, and to be authenticated by the common seal of the company, which book was to be primâ facie evidence of a party being a shareholder. In the present case the register book consisted of several large volumes, the last of which only, containing a recapitulation of the previous volumes, was authenticated by the seal of the company:—Held, that this was sufficient, and that it was properly received in evidence. Inglis v. G. N. Ry., 16 Jur. 895.

The Companies Clauses Consolidation Act directs that all minutes of proceedings of directors shall be entered in a book; "and every such entry shall be signed by the chairman of such meeting, and such entry, so signed, shall be received in evidence," &c.:—Held, following Miles v. Bough (3 Q. B. 845), that where a meeting for a particular purpose was adjourned to a subsequent day, and the minutes of the adjourned meeting alone were signed by the chairman, the minute was properly admissible in evidence. Ib.

The Companies Clauses Consolidation Act for Scotland (8 & 9 Vict. c. 17, s. 9) requires, in the same terms as the English statute of that name, a book to be kept, containing in alphabetical order "the names of the shareholders," with the number of the shares to which such shareholders shall be respectively entitled, distinguishing each share by its number, and the amount of the subscriptions paid on such shares. The 29th section of the statute makes such book primâ facie evidence of a person being a shareholder, and of the number and amount of his shares:—Held, first, that as this was an exceptional privilege in favour of the company, the provisions of the statute with respect to the mode of keeping the book must be strictly complied with; and secondly, that an entry in the book, describing A. as possessed of a certain number of shares numbered from one given number to another given number, and stating a gross amount as paid upon these shares, was a sufficient compliance with those provisions, so as to render the book admissible in evidence. Bain v. Whitehaven and Furness Junction Ry., 3 H. L. Cas. 1.

The statute requires that a book, to be called "the Register of Shareholders," shall be kept. The book actually kept was marked "Register of Proprietors":—Held, that this variation in the title did not prevent it from being given in evidence. Ib.

—— Against Member.]—Entries in the books of an incorporated company are not evidence against a member of the company, in respect of a contract entered into by him with the company, although the act by which the company is incorporated authorises each member to inspect and take copies of the books or any part of them. Hill v. Manchester Waterworks Co., 2 N. & M. 573; 2 B. & Ad. 545; 3 L. J., K. B. 19.

Corporations.]—An entry in the public books of a corporation is not evidence for them, unless such entry is of a public nature. Marriage v. Lawrence, 3 B. & Ald. 142; 22 R. R. 326.

An entry in the books of a corporation held not evidence for them upon a question as to their right to toll; the entry not being one to which the public had a right of access. Brett v. Beales, 10 B. & C. 508; 8 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 141.

The books of a corporation are not evidence to prove a usage, by entries of acts of submission by particular persons, to the exercise of rights insisted on, without proof, aliunde, of the situation of those persons, and their relative position with reference to the corporation. Davies v. Morgan, 1 C. & J. 587; 1 Tyr. 457; 9 L. J. (o.s.) Ex. 153.

Lapse of time dispenses with proof of the handwriting of the individual making entries in corporation books, where the document is admissible in se. Ib.

The entry in the books of a corporation, of an application to purchase lands, of the price of or charge for such lands, and of the receipt of a sum of money from the applicant:—Held, not evidence of a contract binding on the corporation. Livesey v. Livesey, 9 L. J., Ch. 73.

A book showing how the court of the lord mayor and aldermen have managed the estates of orphans, kept in the muniment room of the corporation, under the proper custody:—Held, to be receivable as evidence of the custom. Bruin v. Knott, 12 Sim. 436; 6 Jur. 885.

—— What Documents.]—In an action for tolls claimed by a corporation, an ancient schedule, produced from among their muniments, copies of which were delivered by their officer to the lessee of the tolls, and by the lessee to the collector, by which they have actually collected, is admissible for the corporation. Brett v. Beales, M. & M. 419.

Contra, when the copies in the hands of the lessee are not shewn to have been delivered to him from the corporation, although they correspond accurately with the old schedule. Ib.

A tenant of a corporation brought an action against O. for entering his several fishery in a public navigable river. At the trial, in order to prove the ancient possession of the fishery, the plaintiff gave in evidence an assembly book of the corporation, containing entries shewing that the fishery was let for certain rents to a tenant. On exception to this evidence:—Held, that such book was admissible, for the rule is, that ancient documents, coming out of the proper custody, and purporting, upon the face of them, to exercise ownership, such as a lease or a licence, may be given in evidence without proof of possession or payment of rent under them, as being in themselves acts of ownership and proof of possession. Malcolmson v. O'Dea, 10 H. L. Cas. 593; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1135; 9 L. T. 93; 12 W. R. 178.

—— Unsigned Minute.]—A minute, of date 1749, from an original unsigned minute-book, produced from the proper custody and kept in accordance with a charter of a society, is admissible evidence. Lauderdale Peerage, The, 10 App. Cas. 692—H. L. (Sc.)

Custody.]—The chest of an incorporated company, kept by their clerk for the time being, is the proper custody for old documents relative to the admission of freemen, and other acts of the company. Shrewsbury (Warden) v. Hart, 1 Car. & P. 114.

Such documents if kept in the clerk's house are inadmissible. Ib.

17. Probate and Letters of Administration.

Probate applies only to Personalty.]—By the law of England, the probate (and not the will) is the only admissible evidence in an action regarding the testator's personal estate. Yates v. Thompson, 3 Cl. & F. 569.

The probate of a will is not a sufficient authentication of it so far as it relates to copyholds. Archer v. Slater, 11 Sim. 507.

The court will not establish a will of copyhold; where a surrender is made to the use of a will, and an instrument is admitted to probate by the ecclesiastical court, the probate copy is sufficient to guide the uses of the surrender. S. C. 10 Sim. 624.

Probate of a will not evidence that copyholds pass by it. Jervoise v. Northumberland (Duke), 1 Jac. & Walk. 570; 21 R. R. 229.

Probate is not evidence of will of real estate. Gibson v. Whitehead, 4 Madd. 244.

The probate of a will cannot be read in case of a real estate, if the defendant admits merely that he believes there is such a will; secus, if the admission is full. Mullins v. Pratt, Bunb. 6.

Conclusiveness.]—A will is made in French, and the probate in English, and varies from the original; probate being in a different language is not conclusive. L'Fit v. L'Batt, 1 P. W. 526.

The court will look only to the probate copy of a will, though strong grounds for suspecting that another copy tendered in evidence is the correct one. Bernal v. Bernal, 3 Myl. & Cr. 559, n.

Probate of will in the ecclesiastical court sufficient as far as it goes; farther proof if necessary may be proceeded on in this court. Colman v. Sarrel, 1 Ves. J. 54; 1 R. R. 83.

A codicil, expressed to be in event of testator's death before he joins his wife, was executed after their separation in the West Indies upon an intended voyage to England. The voyage being prevented by accident, he joined her, and they lived together there and in England, to which country they returned together; and though testator, having afterwards gone to Corsica and thence to Lisbon, died there, the codicil was held to be contingent, and not to take effect under the circumstances. Probate is not conclusive, not being refused except in a plain case. Sinclair v. Hone, 6 Ves. 607.

The court, not being satisfied that the probate sufficiently set out the testator's will, required the production of the original will, and did not confine its attention to the probate. Manning v. Purcell, 24 L. J., Ch. 522.

A paper proved as a will, reciting the marriage articles of the testator's daughter with A., confirming those articles, and directing that all the testator's property and effects shall be vested in A., preferable to any executor or administrator upon and after the testator's decease for all and every the purposes of his said agreement expressed or intended. The probate obtained by A. as executor held conclusive, and he was held not a trustee for the next of kin upon parol evidence of declarations, subsequent to the will. Walton v. Walton, 14 Ves. 318.

In a suit instituted in this court for the distribution of the assets of an intestate, the grant of letters of administration is conclusive evidence upon the question who is the intestate's sole next of kin. Barrs v. Jackson, 1 Ph. 382; 14 L. J., Ch. 433; 9 Jur. 609. Reversing 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 585.

Evidence as to Executors and Administrators.]—An allegation that A., B., & C. were named executors, and that A. and B. proved the will, and are the personal representatives of the testator, may be proved by the production of the probate: and in the absence of any denial of that fact by the answers, or any averment that C. also proved, C. is not a necessary party to the suit. Dyson v. Morris, 1 Hare, 413; 11 L. J., Ch. 241; 6 Jur. 297.

The Probate-Act-Book of the prerogative court containing an entry of a will being proved, and of probate being granted to the executors therein named, admitted as evidence of those persons being the executors, without accounting for the non-production of the probate. Cox v. Allingham, Jac. 514.

An averment in the bill that a defendant had obtained a grant of letters of administration of the estate, and was the legal personal representative of the author of the trust, is sufficiently proved by the production of such letters of administration, notwithstanding they appear to have been granted on a date subsequent to the institution of the suit. Bateman v. Margerison, 6 Hare, 496.

Case in which a party in a cause, heard upon bill and answer without replication, producing letters of administration to a deceased person, the court may admit them, to ascertain the representative character of such party, and may act upon the evidence which they furnish of that character. Wilkinson v. Fowkes, 9 Hare, 592.

Evidence of Death.]—Probate of testator's will evidence of his death. French v. French, Dick. 268. But see 10 Ves. 289.

The production by a plaintiff suing as administrator to A., of the letters of administration, is not primâ facie evidence of A.'s death. Moons v. De Bernales, 1 Russ. 301.

At the hearing liberty given to a plaintiff suing as administrator, to exhibit interrogatories to prove the death of the person whose administrator he claimed to be, and the cause permitted to stand over for that purpose. Ib.

The grant of letters of administration and the copy of an entry in the registry of the death of an individual are not sufficient evidence of that fact, but an affidavit of his death must be produced. Leach v. Leach, 13 L. J., Ch. 128; 8 Jur. 211.

Of Sanity.]—Probate of a will is conclusive evidence of the sanity of the testator to dispose of his personal estate, but it is by no means conclusive evidence of his capacity to dispose of his real estate. Hume v. Burton, 1 Ridgw. P. C. 277.

Recital of.]—Recital of letters of administration in letters of administration de bonis non: —Held, sufficient evidence of the original letters. Burty v. Price, 1 Jur. 101.

Notice of Intention to Produce Probate.]—When, in a bill to set aside the grant of an annuity made by A. to B., and charged upon A.'s land, with also a personal covenant for payment, the plaintiff is himself the devisee as well as residuary legatee under A.'s will, he ought, under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 79, s. 68 (Ir.), to give notice to the other party that he intends to give in evidence as proof of the devise or testamentary disposition, the probate of the will. But if he should fail to give this notice, the omission would only create a technical difficulty in the case, and the court might properly, and would, adjourn the hearing to give an opportunity to remove that technical difficulty. Hilliard v. Eiffe, L. R. 7 H. L. 39.

Foreign Probate.]—See ante, cols. 608, 609.

18. Log Books.

Entries by Deceased Seamen.]—Entries in a log-book by a deceased seaman in the course of his duty, but not contemporaneous with the facts entered, and not against his interest, are not admissible in evidence. The Henry Coxon, 47 L. J., P. 83; 3 P. D. 156; 38 L. T. 819; 27 W. R. 263.

To Prove what.]—The log and muster-books of a ship, returned every quarter to the admiralty, mentioned the name of an officer as with the ship at a certain place for a given period of time:—Held, that this was not sufficient evidence of his having actually been there for the time specified. Heathcote's Divorce Bill, 1 Macq. H. L. 277.

To prove the time of the sailing of a ship under convoy, the log-book of the man-of-war which convoyed the fleet is evidence. D'Israeli v. Jowett, 1 Esp, 427. And see Rundle v. Beaumont, 4 Bing. 537; 1 M. & P. 396; 6 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 91.

A ship's log-book, written by the mate who is abroad, may be used to refresh the memory of the captain, who read it about a week after it was written. Anderson v. Whalley, 3 Car. & K. 54.

Engineer's.]—The engineer's log-book kept on board a steamer is admissible as evidence against the shipowner. The Earl of Dumfries, 54 L. J., P. 7; 10 P. D. 31; 51 L. T. 906; 33 W. R. 568; 5 Asp. M. C. 342.

Erasure.]—The log-book of one of the ships produced contained an erasure as to the wind at the time of the collision, but the alteration was rather adverse to the ship:—Held, that the erasure was immaterial. The Constitution, 10 Jur. (N.S.) 831; 10 L. T. 894.

19. Lighthouse Journals.

The court of admiralty, regarding lighthouse journals as official books, kept under competent authority, will admit their contents in evidence upon their mere production. The Maria Das Dorias, Br. & Lush. 27; 32 L. J., Adm. 163; 7 L. T. 838; 11 W. R. 500.

20. Court-Rolls.

Against Tenants.]—The court-rolls of a manor taken by themselves are evidence only against the tenants of the manor, and the lord of the manor. Att.-Gen. v. Hotham (Lord), Turn. & R. 217; 24 R. R. 21.

Right to Foreshore.]—Dispute between a lord of a manor and a corporation as to the ownership of a piece of foreshore. The court-rolls contained entries—(1) Of fines paid to the lord for salvage' for moorage, and for trespasses, in taking wreck and the like, and of sums paid to the lord by the bailiff for wreck sold by him. (2) Presentments as to wreck, porpoises, &c., coming on the soil with no express mention of receipt of money except (in some cases) by the bailiff. (3) Presentments of wreck, the payments in respect of which were partly made to the salvors and partly to the lord. (4) Presentments directing the bailiff to levy certain fines, &c. (5) Similar presentments with no express direction to the bailiff to levy. (6) Presentments of wreck with no particular entries as to value or entered as matter for future inquiry:—Held, that all the entries except the last could be safely admitted as evidence of the lord's title. Walton-cum-Trinley Manor, In re, Tomline, Ex parte, 28 L. T. 12; 21 W. R. 475.

As to Descent.]—An entry in the court-rolls of a manor, stating the mode of descent of lands in the manor, is admissible evidence of the mode of descent, though no instances of any persons having been taken according to it are proved. Roe d. Beebee v. Parker, 5 Term Rep. 26.

Entries on the rolls of a manor court, of admissions of tenants in remainder after the determination of the estate of the last tenant's widow, who held during her chaste viduity, are evidence of a custom for the widow, to hold on that condition, so as to maintain ejectment against her as for a forfeiture, on proof of her incontinence, although there were no instances in fact stated on the rolls or known, of such a forfeiture having been enforced. Doe d. Askew v. Askew, 10 East, 520; 10 R. R. 366. And see Doe d. Brown v. Brown, 11 East, 441.

Proclamation.]—The entry in the court-rolls is sufficient to prove proclamation. Doe d. Tarrant v. Hellier, 3 Term Rep. 164; 1 R. R. 680.

Admission.]—In ejectment, by the devisees of copyhold premises, to prove their admission, it is not only necessary to prove by the court-rolls that persons of their names have been admitted, but evidence must be given of their identity. Doe d. Hanson v. Smith, 1 Camp. 196.

As to Tenure.]—In administering the real estate of the heir of an intestate it was discovered that a farm, part of a manor, and supposed to be freehold, had been leased in 1598 to the predecessors in title of the intestate, for a term of 1,000 years, subject to a rent and heriots. The lease contained a covenant by the lord "at all times hereafter and from time to time during the space of five years next ensuing," at the request of the lessee, to convey to him the fee. There was no direct evidence of any such conveyance. The entries in the court rolls of the manor recorded the payment of rent and heriots down to the present time, and also uniformly mentioned the farm as freehold. In 1777 the remainder of the term was assigned (for the fifth time since the lease) to L., who, two years afterwards, devised the farm as freehold, and it subsequently passed as freehold under several devises, until it reached the intestate in the cause:—Held, that the continuance of the rent and heriots rendered the entries in the court rolls more at variance with the theory of the farm being freehold than with that of its being leasehold; that L. having acknowledged the existence of the term two years before he devised the farm as freehold, the court could not presume that the tenure had been in the interim converted to freehold; and that the farm must pass to the intestate's personal representatives as leasehold. Pickett v. Peckham, 16 W. R. 1177.

Examined Copies.]—An examined copy of an ancient court-roll is admissible without the production of the original. Rowe v. Brenton, 3 M. & Ry. 297; 8 B. & C. 765.

Entries in court-rolls of amerciaments imposed are not evidence without proof of payment. Ib.

An examined copy from the books of the manor, that certain pits have been demised, is evidence, without production of the books themselves, to shew that they are demisable by custom. Doe d. Croydon v. Cook, 5 Esp. 221.

Copies of court-roll authenticated by the steward of a manor are admissible, though they are not the copies delivered to the tenant of the estate. Breeze v. Hawker, 14 Sim. 350.

A copy of court-roll duly stamped purported to be signed by V., who was proved to be the steward of the manor. The plaintiff's attorney, who produced it, did not know the handwriting of V.; but he stated that he had shewn this copy of court-roll to V., who stated that it had been delivered out by him, as steward of the manor, to the plaintiff:—Held, that this acknowledgment of it by V. was equivalent to the witness having received it from V., as steward of the manor. Doe d. Burrows v. Freeman, 1 Car. & K. 386.

An examined copy of a court-roll of a manor, made for the purpose of being given in evidence on a trial, does not require a stamp. Doe d. Burrows v. Freeman, 1 Car. & K. 386; 12 M. & W. 844; 14 L. J., Ex. 142.

Copy Thirty Years Old.]—Copy of admittance may be read, though not signed, where it is of thirty years' standing. Ely (Dean) v. Stewart, 2 Atk. 44; Barnard 170.

Manor Books.]—Where an ancient manor book is offered in evidence, the custody must be proved by a sworn witness. It is not enough that the book is produced in court by the counsel or the steward of the lord of the manor; nor as it seems, by the lord of the manor in person. Evans v. Rees, 10 A. & E. 151; 2 P. & D. 626; 9 L. J., M. C. 83.

To prove a prescriptive right of fishery, as appurtenant to a manor, old licences on the court-rolls, granted by the lords of the manor, in consideration of certain rents, to fish in the locus in quo, are evidence, without proof of the rents being paid, if it appears that such rents have been paid in modern times, or that the lords of the manor have exercised other acts of ownership over the fishery. Rogers v. Allen, 1 Camp. 309; 10 R. R. 689.

Parchment writings preserved among the muniments of a manor, dated 1698 and 1717, purporting to be signed by many persons, copyholders of the manor, stating an unlimited right of common in the commoners, but that this having been found inconvenient, they had agreed to stock the common in a certain restricted manner, is evidence of reputation as to the general right, sufficient to destroy the restricted right set up by the plaintiff. Chapman v. Cowlan, 13 East, 10; 12 R. R. 294.

Customaries.]—A customary of a manor, appearing to be of great antiquity, and delivered down with the court-rolls from steward to steward, although not signed by any person, is good evidence to prove the course of descent within the manor. Denn d. Goodwin v. Spray, 1 Term Rep. 466; 1 R. R. 250.

In lands held by copy of court-roll, not at the will of the lord, but according to the custom of the manor, the freehold is in the lord; and in the absence of custom (the onus of establishing which lies upon the tenant), the tenant has no right to work the minerals. Portland (Duke) v. Hill, 35 L. J., Ch. 439; L. R. 2 Eq. 765; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 286; 15 W. R. 38.

The existence of a customary, compiled within the period of legal memory, is conclusive evidence against the existence of a custom not mentioned therein. Ib.

The customary of a manor, compiled within the period of legal memory, recognised a right in the tenants to dig coal propriis usis. It appeared, from subsequent documents, that the privilege of digging coal for their own consumption had been enjoyed by the tenants under the waste, but there was no evidence of a similar restricted enjoyment by the tenants under their customary inclosures. There was evidence of tenants having during a long period dug coal in their customary inclosures for sale:—Held, that the custom was restricted to digging in the waste for coal for the tenants' own consumption, and that the tenants had no right of digging coals under their customary inclosures. Ib.

Book of Steward.]—A book was kept by the steward of a manor, in which were entered the assessments of all fines, as well those which were paid as those which were unpaid; but the steward made out a second book at the end of each year, in which he entered the fines which he had received:—Held, that the first book was not admissible for the lord of the manor, to shew what fines had been paid. Ely (Dean) v. Caldecott, 5 M. & P. 272; 7 Bing. 433; 9 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 171.

An entry in the book of the steward of a manor, and a parol proof by the foreman of the jury, allowed as good evidence against an entry on the roll, and an admission thereon. Hill v. Wiggett, 2 Vern. 547.

Presentments and Answers.]—In an action by the lord of a manor for wreck, a document, dated in 1639, was offered in evidence, purporting to be the answer of the tenants of the manor, to a commission issued by the lord of the manor, for surveying the same, in which document it was stated that the lord was entitled to wreck:—Held, that this evidence was inadmissible, the title of the lord not being a matter of public concern, and the jurors having no peculiar means of knowledge. Talbot v. Lewis, 1 C., M. & R. 495; 5 Tyr. 1; 4 L. J., Ex. 9. See Briscoe v. Lomax, 3 N. & P. 308; 8 A. & E. 198; 7 L. J., Q. B. 148.

A plaintiff was the occupier of a farm called Tyr Adam, situate within a manor adjoining a mountain, and claimed to be exclusive owner of that part of the mountain next adjoining his farm. The question in the cause being whether he was exclusive owner of the soil, or had a right of common only over that part of the mountain, the defendant, in order to shew that the plaintiff had not the right of soil, produced, from the rolls of the manor, an instrument purporting to be a presentment in 1759, wherein the jurors, after reciting that they were sworn to view such part of the waste land as was within the lordship, and was claimed by A. to belong to his tenement, called Tyr Adam, upon their oaths said, that they had considered the claim and the evidence, and presented that all the land within the boundaries was part and parcel of the common called K., and that neither A., nor the tenants or occupiers of the tenement called Tyr Adam, had any right to the same, or further or any greater right than such as the other freehold tenants of the lordship had for their common cattle:—Held, that this instrument was not admissible, either as a presentment, because the homage had no right to decide the claim made by an individual to the freehold, they being interested,—nor as an award, because there was no mutual submission,—nor as evidence of reputation, because it was the declaration of the homage post litem motam. Richards v. Bassett, 10 B. & C. 657; 8 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 289.

Entries of presentments in the books of a manor are not evidence of acts of ownership. Irwin v. Simpson, 7 Bro. P. C. 317.

21. Revenue Books.

Stamp Office.]—Under 36 Geo. 3, c. 52, s. 27, a copy of an entry in the stamp-office books, of payment of the duty on a legacy, is evidence of payment of the legacy, but the copy must be proved in the usual way. Harrison v. Berwell, 10 Sim. 380; 9 L. J., Ch. 72; 4 Jur. 245.

A copy signed by the comptroller of stamp duties is not sufficient. Ib.

Excise Office.]—An entry by A. in the excise office, in the names of A., B. and C., of premises for the keeping of beer for sale, is conclusive, where the crown is concerned, against A., as to his partnership with B. and C.; but in respect of private persons, it is merely primâ facie evidence. Ellis v. Watson, 2 Stark. 453; 20 R. R. 725.

Excise books transcribed from the maltster's specimen paper are admissible against him, without calling the officers to substantiate them. Rex v. Grimwood, 1 Price, 369.

Whether accounts of stock kept in the excise books are evidence between third parties as to the delivery of goods, quære. Copies of such accounts may be given in evidence, semble, on the ground that the originals are public books; but in such case the copies produced must be proved by a witness who had examined them with the originals, and can swear to their accuracy. Dunbar v. Harvie, 2 Bligh, 351.

Land Tax.]—Entries in the books of a collector of land-tax stating S. to have been rated for a particular house, and the payment of the sum so rated, are admissible to shew that S. was in the occupation of the premises at the time of the rates being made. Doe d. Smith v. Cartwright, R. & M. 62; 1 Car. & P. 218; 28 R. R. 774.

Land-tax assessments are not evidence of seisin, where it is shewn to be usual to retain the name of deceased proprietors on the books until the estate is sold to a different family. Doe d. Stansbury v. Arkwright, 1 N. & M. 731; 2 A. & E. 182; 2 L. J., K. B. 102.

Assessments of commissioners of the land-tax, by which it appears that at a certain time property was assessed in the name of S. (the family surname only), are evidence to shew, in connection with other facts, that at such time the property was occupied by a particular individual. Doe d. Strode v. Seaton, 2 A. & E. 171; 4 N. & M. 81.

Stage-Coach Licence.]—The entry in the office in Somerset House for licensing stage-coaches, is no evidence to prove that the persons named in the licence are owners of the coach. Strother v. Willan, 4 Camp. 24.

Cart Duty.]—An entry in the books of the receiver of the duties on carts, is not evidence of property, without shewing by whom the entry was made. Weever v. Prentice, 1 Esp. 369.

22. Other Public Books.

Government Offices.]—A book containing the acts of the legislative council of India, produced by a clerk from the India office, is sufficient evidence of the acts therein contained. Gardner v. Wright, 15 L. T. 325.

Roll of Attorneys.]—The book from the master's office, wherein are entered the names of the attorneys of the court, is good evidence to prove a party an attorney, without production of the roll. Rex v. Crossley, 2 Esp. 526.

Church Trustees.]—If, by a private act of parliament, church trustees are to enter their proceedings in a book, which is made evidence, and by the same act persons aggrieved by the rates are to appeal to the trustees; appeals not being required by the act to be in writing; parol evidence may be given that parties did in fact appeal, but not of what the trustees did on those appeals, as that should be proved by the book. Reg. v. Murphy, 8 Car. & P. 297.

Paving Commissioners.]—A local paving act authorised commissioners, at a meeting to be called for that purpose, to order footpaths to be raised, and directed that the entries in the commissioners' books might be read in evidence. An entry in the books, stating that such an order was made at a meeting held by public notice, does not prove that the meeting was duly holden, so as to legalise the order. It should appear by the entry, or be shewn aliunde, that notice was given of the purpose for which the meeting was called. Heysham v. Forster, 5 M. & Ry. 277.

Heralds' College.]—The book called "Arms and Descents of the Nobility, E. 16," though produced from the Heralds' College, is not admissible; not being kept under authority of any official order, or in discharge of any official duty. Shrewsbury Peerage, 7 H. L. Cas. 1.

Rentals of Deanery.] — Upon a question whether certain ancient books, from 1585 to 1693, preserved in the archives of the dean and chapter of Exeter, entitled "Rentals," and containing columns of the names of their estates with the rents reserved on each, and "solvit" written in different handwritings against such rents, were entries made by the receivers of the dean and chapter, charging themselves with the receipt of the rents, parol evidence cannot be received to prove them to be receivers' books, by shewing that the receivers of the dean and chapter for the last sixty years had kept their books of accounts in the same form. Doe d. Webber v. Thynne (Lord), 10 East, 206; 10 R. R. 280.

A book in which leases were inrolled, and which was kept in the office of the auditor of the bishop of Durham (such officer holding a patent office in the county palatine), is admissible in evidence to sustain the claims of a lessee of the bishop of Durham, the original and counterpart of the lease being lost. Humble v. Hunt, Holt, N. P. 601.

A book in the chapter-house of the dean and chapter of Sarum, purporting to contain copies of leases granted by the dean and chapter, is as a public book evidence of those leases for the purpose of reputation, without proof of possession under the leases. Combs v. Coether, M. & M. 398.

"Assembly Book" of Corporation.]—A plaintiff in an action claiming under a grant from the crown of a several fishery, tendered in evidence an "Assembly Book," belonging to the corporation, dated in 1676, and containing entries of the rents due to the corporation from its various tenants, among which were entries of rents paid in respect of the fishery:—Held, that the book was admissible as an ancient document shewing the exercise of acts of ownership. Malcolmson v. O'Dea, 10 H. L. Cas. 593; 9 Jur. 1135; 9 L. T. 93; 12 W. R. 178.

Letter of Licence from Crown.]—The plaintiff also tendered in evidence, for the purpose of shewing the meaning of a particular phrase in the grant, a letter of licence from the crown, in 1676, to one of its grantees, to alien the subject-matter of the grant:—Held, that the licence was admissible for that purpose. Ib.

Coroner's Book.]—In an action to try whether the Queen, in right of the Duchy of Lancaster, has the right to appoint coroners for the duchy, the plaintiff insisting, that in former times an officer of the duchy, called the feodary, discharged the duties of coroner: a manuscript book, written by a feodary in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, and purporting to contain an account of the duties of his office, and precedents relating thereto, is not receivable for the plaintiff, who claimed to be duchy-coroner, although such book has been kept in the duchy office, and referred to there as a book of authority. Jewison v. Dyson, 3 M. & Rob. 377.

Magistrates' Minute Book.]—A minute book kept by the magistrates' clerk, to shew who had been appointed by the magistrates to be surveyors of the highways for 1812, is not receivable without proof of a search for the original appointment under the hands and seals of the magistrates. Reg. v. Pembridge, Car. & M. 157.

Consistorial Court Minute Book.]—To prove a decree for alimony, the minute book of the Consistorial Court is good evidence. Houliston v. Smyth, 2 Car. & P. 25; 28 R. R. 609.

College Books.]—Where it was the usual practice for entries in the books of a certain college at Cambridge to be authenticated by the signature of the college registrar, who was a notary public, in his character as such:—Held, that an unauthenticated entry in such book was not admissible in evidence. Fox v. Bearblock, 50 L. J., Ch. 489; 17 Ch. D. 429; 44 L. T. 508; 29 W. R. 661.

23. Other Public Documents.

Copy or Original.]—If a copy of any document, which itself is not evidence at common law, is made evidence by act of parliament, a copy must be produced, and the original is not made admissible by implication. Burdon v. Rickets, 2 Camp. 121, n.

When an ancient document, purporting to be an exemplification, is produced from the proper place of deposit, but has not, at the time of its production, the Great Seal affixed, it is still to be presumed that it is an exemplification, and may be read in evidence as such. Beverley Corporation v. Craven, 2 M. & Rob. 140.

Exemplification of part of a patent not suffered to be read in evidence, notwithstanding the statutes of 3 & 4 Edw. 6, and 13 Eliz., where the other side have notice to consult the patent roll, and so may be surprised by an imperfect exemplification. Att.-Gen. v. Taylor, Pre. Ch. 59.

Letters Patent.]—Letters patent under the Great Seal are records and valid before inrolment. Devonshire (Duke) v. Neill, 2 L. R., Ir. 132.

Letters patent are admissible in evidence without proof of the king's letter directing the grant. Ib.

A commission, referred to in a patent confirming the title of a subject to lands in Ireland, is admissible to shew the authority and explain the position of the commissioners, by whose advice the patent was granted, and it is no objection that the commission was constituted by letters patent passed under the Great Seal of England. Ib.

Close Rolls—Order directing Inquiries—Mere Claim.]—Two entries were offered in evidence from the Close Rolls of 2 & 8 Hen. 3; both were commands of the king to the then Justiciary of Ireland, by which, after reciting that certain persons alleged they were wrongfully disseised of certain lands, he directed him to make inquiries, and, if the claim was right, to cause these persons to have full seisin thereof:—Held, not admissible, being mere claims to the possession of lands, and not followed by judgments. Ib.

Court Seals.]—The common seal of the city of London proves itself. Doe d. Woodmass v. Mason, 1 Esp. 53; 5 R. R. 718.

Where a court is constituted by act of parliament, and possesses a seal, such seal proves itself. Doe d. Duncan v. Edwards, 1 P. & D. 408; 9 A. & E. 554; 2 W. W. & H. 12; 8 L. J., Q. B. 98; 3 Jur. 41.

Voting Papers.]—The voting papers given in at the election of councillors, under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, which, by s. 35, the mayor is to cause to be kept in the town clerk's office for six months after the election, are not such public documents as to prove themselves on production from the proper custody. Reg. v. Ledgard, 3 N. & P. 513; 1 W. W. & H. 487; 8 A. & E. 535; 7 L. J., Q. B. 237.

Inquisitions.]—An inquisition by the Duke of Lancaster in the year 1360 was held to be a public document, as the Duke of Lancaster had sovereign rights at that time in the duchy, and as it was directed to three of the justices of the duke, and was said to be sent "into our chancery." Manchester Corporation v. Lyons, 22 Ch. D. 299—C. A.

Leases.]—The inrolment of a lease granted by the Duke of Cornwall is evidence, in the same manner as if it had been granted by the crown, when there is no Duke of Cornwall. Rowe v. Brenton, 8 B. & C. 755; 3 M. & Ry. 164.

Diplomas.]—The mere production in court of a diploma of a doctor of physic, under the seal of one of the universities, is not in itself evidence to shew that the party named in the diploma is entitled to that degree. Moises v. Thornton, 1 Term Rep. 303; 3 Esp. 4.

Return of Corn Sales.]—Returns of sales of corn made under 1 & 2 Geo. 4, c. 87, were not conclusive evidence to shew the parties to whom the corn was delivered. Woodley v. Brown, 2 Bing. 527; 10 Moore, 281; 1 Car. & P. 503.

Entries as to Livings.]—Entries in the books kept at the First Fruits' office are admissible to shew the fact of a collation to a living made by the bishop at a particular time. Irish Society v. Derry (Bishop), 12 Cl. & F. 641.

Returns made by the bishop in obedience to writs from the exchequer, requiring him to state the vacancies of, and presentations and collations to, the livings in his diocese, are admissible as statements made by a public officer in the discharge of a public duty. Ib.

Though such returns may contain statements of a kind unusual in such documents, which statements were in favour of the right of the bishop who made them, they are, nevertheless, admissible, provided that the statements are within the scope of the inquiry to the writ. Ib.

An original collation from the registry of the bishopric, and appearing on the face of it to be pleno jure, is admissible to shew that the right claimed has, in fact, been exercised. Ib.

A return made by the incumbents of an ancient chapelry, and other clergymen, in answer to questions sent by the diocesan, for the information of the governors of Queen Anne's Bounty, at the time an augmentation was made, is admissible, as being in the nature of an inquisition in a public matter. Carr v. Mostyn, 5 Ex. 69; 19 L. J., Ex. 249.

A return made by the registrar of a diocese in answer to the inquiry of a clergyman whose benefice was under sequestration, enumerating the writs lodged with him, with the dates of the delivery and the sums due, though not proved to be made in virtue of his office, is evidence against the bishop; and so also are letters of the registrar of a similar character. Hogg v. Garrett, 12 Ir. Eq. R. 559.

Report—Surveyor of Public Body.]—A public body, acting under the powers of the Lands Clauses Act, had entered into negotiations with the plaintiff for the purchase of his land. They passed a resolution directing their solicitor to write a letter to the plaintiff, the resolution being based upon the report of their own surveyor. The plaintiff wished to put the report in evidence to shew the grounds for passing the resolution, and to explain the latter:—Held, that the report was not admissible as evidence. Cooper v. Metropolitan Board of Works, 25 Ch. D. 472; 50 L. T. 602—C. A.

Consent to Suit.]—The consent of the creditors of a bankrupt to the institution of a suit by his assignees, though filed amongst the proceedings in the bankruptcy, must be proved. Smith v. Briggs, 5 Sim. 391. But see Evans, Ex parte, 3 Deac. & C. 470; Jones v. Yates, 3 Y. & J. 373; Piercy v. Roberts, 1 Myl. & K. 4; 2 L. J., Ch. 17.

Poundage.] — Semble, that the receipt of poundage is evidence of a conversion by the sheriff. Garland v. Carlisle, 4 Cl. & F. 693; 11 Bli. (N.S.) 421.

24. Examined and Certified Extracts and Copies.

Register—Of Voters.]—The register of voters at a parliamentary election is a document of such a public nature as to be admissible in evidence, upon its mere production by the returning officer, and therefore an examined or a certified copy of it is also admissible. Reed v. Lamb, 6 H. & N. 75; 29 L. J., Ex. 452; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 828.

If a document offered in evidence under 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, s. 14, as a certified copy, is rejected as such for not containing the requisites of one, it may be received in evidence as an examined copy, if proved to have been duly examined. Ib.

Whenever a book is of such a public nature as to be admissible on its mere production from the proper custody, its contents may be proved by an examined copy. Ib.

—— Of Marriages.]—An authenticated copy of the register of marriages kept in India, made and transmitted to the East India Company in London under the authority of the company, is a duplicate original, and as such is admissible evidence to prove a marriage celebrated in India. Rateliff v. Rateliff, 29 L. J., Mat. 171; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 714; 7 W. R. 726.

On an indictment for bigamy, it was alleged that the first marriage took place in a dissenting chapel, duly licensed for marriages. A witness produced a certificate, under the hand of the superintendent registrar, of the fact that the chapel had been duly registered. It did not purport to be a copy of an extract, but the witness proved that he had examined it with the register book at the office of the superintendent registrar, and that it was correct:—Held, that the document was admissible as an examined copy or extract from the superintendent registrar's book, under 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, s. 14, and was therefore good evidence of the due registration of the chapel. Reg. v. Mainwaring, Dears. & B. 132; 26 L. J., M. C. 10; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1236; 5 W. R. 119; 7 Cox, C. C. 192.

Crown Leases.]—Documents deposited in the office of her Majesty's Land Revenue, Records, and Inrolments, pursuant to 2 Will. 4, c. 1, may be proved by examined copies in a suit brought to establish the title of the crown or its lessee to lands to which such documents relate. Doe d. William the Fourth v. Roberts, 13 M. & W. 520; 14 L. J., Ex. 274.

Expired leases by the crown of lands or mines, tendered in evidence as acts of ownership, by the crown, are so provable by examined copies, although the originals may not have been inrolled within six months after their execution, pursuant to 10 Geo. 4, c. 50, s. 63. Ib.

Memorial of Assignment of Judgment.]—Under 9 Geo. 2, c. 5, amended by 25 Geo. 2, c. 14, and made perpetual by 12 Geo. 3, c. 19, s. 3, an examined copy of the inrolment of the memorial of an assignment of a judgment recovered in Ireland, is good evidence of that assignment. Fitzgerald v. Fitzgerald, 8 C. B. 592; 19 L. J., C. P. 126; 14 Jur. 485.

An attested copy of the memorial of the assignment of a judgment is evidence of the fact of the assignment: so, the attested copy of the memorial of the registry of a deed is evidence of the fact of the registry; but if the memorial be used as evidence of the contents of the deed, the original must be produced. Hobhouse v. Hamilton, 1 Sch. & Lef. 207.

Affidavits.]—An examined copy of an affidavit for an injunction is not admissible without proof of identity, or that it has been used. Rees v. Bowen, 1 M'Clel. & Y. 383.

Semble, the office copy of an affidavit lodged in the registry is a document of a "public nature" within the meaning of 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, s. 14. Moriarty v. Moriarty, 18 W. R. 145.

Other Documents.]—By-laws duly made by a railway company pursuant to the Railway Clauses Act, 8 & 9 Vict. c. 20, ss. 108–111, and confirmed and allowed as by law required, are public documents, a certified copy of which is admissible under 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, s. 14. Motteram v. Eastern Counties Ry., 7 C. B. (N.S.) 58; 29 L. J., M. C. 57; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 759; 1 L. T. 101; 8 W. R. 77.

By 17 & 18 Vict. c. 36, s. 3, the officer of the Queen's Bench is required to keep a book containing a list of every bill of sale filed in the office, and the dates of the execution and filing of the same:—Held, that this book was of such a public nature that a certified copy was admissible under 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, s. 14, and that such certified copy proved the time at which the affidavit was filed, as well as the time at which the bill was filed. Grindell v. Brendon, 6 C. B. (N.S.) 698; 28 L. J., C. P. 333; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1420; 7 W. R. 579. S. P., Bath v. Sutton, 27 L. J., Ex. 388.

A copy (unstamped) of the act book of the Ecclesiastical Court is admissible under 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, s. 14, with accounts for non-production of probate. Dorrett v. Meux, 15 C. B. 142; 2 C. L. R. 807; 23 L. J., C. P. 221; 2 W. R. 480.

Copies of the tithe certificate and applotment, compared and attested by the registrar of the diocese, are evidence of the contents of the original document. Hawkins v. Carry, 2 Jones, 431; Crowley v. Flood, Ib., 555.

Certified copies of the schedule, &c., may be given in evidence, under the Insolvent Act, by parties other than the insolvent or his creditors. Price v. Assheton, 1 Y. & Coll. 441.

An inspeximus of a grant contained in the inrolment of a subsequent grant of confirmation of the preceding grant, produced from the records of the Rolls Office:—Held, to be good evidence of the former grant. Att.-Gen. v. Cashel Corporation, 2 Con. & L. 9; 3 Dr. & War. 299.

Mode of Examining.]—To prove a copy of a record it is sufficient to prove that the paper agrees with what the officer of the court read as the contents of the record; it is not necessary for the persons examining to exchange papers, and read them alternately. Rolf v. Dart, 2 Taunt. 52. S. P., M'Neil v. London (Sheriffs), 1 Esp. 263; Reid v. Margison, 1 Camp. 468; Giles v. Hill, 41 Camp. 471, n.

To make a copy of a record admissible, it is not enough that it was held by witness while another read the original to him. There must be a change of hands, or the witness must himself read the copy with the original. Slane Peerage, 5 Cl. & F. 23.

To give evidence of the transcript of the rules of a benefit society inrolled at the office of the clerk of the peace, by proof of an examined copy of it, the witness who examined the copy with the transcript must prove that he examined the copy of all the rules with the transcript. Reg. v. Boynes, 1 Car. & K. 65.

B. JUDICIAL DOCUMENTS.

1. Proceedings at Law.

a. Judgments.

Proof of.]—The judgment book is not evidence of the judgment entered therein, though the record has not been made up, and though the person interested in proving the judgment is no party to the action. Ayrey v. Davenport, 2 Bos. & P. (N.R.) 474.

The day-book kept at the judgment office is not evidence to prove even the time of signing a judgment. Lee v. Meecock, 5 Esp. 177.

A judgment cannot be proved by a judgment paper from the office of the master, but only by an examined or an office copy of the record. Jeffs v. Day, 12 L. T. 852.

An unsealed issue roll is not a record of the court; and, therefore, the entry of a nolle prosequi thereon against one of two defendants is not the proper evidence of such nolle prosequi, to shew that, as against such defendant, the action is at an end. Fagan v. Dawson, 4 Man. & G. 711.

A judgment may be proved by the production of a duly certified copy of an entry in the entry-book of judgments of the court in which the judgment was recovered. Anderson, Ex parte, Tollemache, In re, 54 L. J., Q. B. 383; 14 Q. B. D. 606; 52 L. T. 786—C. A.

An allegation in an indictment for perjury that judgment was "entered up" in an action, is proved by the production of the book from the judgment office in which the incipitur is entered. Reg. v. Gordon, Car. & M. 410.

Where the examined copy of a judgment was proved by a witness to have been examined at the house of a person having the custody of the records of the court, the witness knowing that the person had the custody :—Held, sufficient. Bannister v. Lambert, 1 L. J., K. B. 179.

A mother and son were in possession of a house, for which a declaration in ejectment was served on the son, who let judgment go by default, and also on the mother, who defended :—Held, that on the trial of the ejectment against the mother, an examined copy of the judgment recovered against the son by the lessor of the plaintiff for use and occupation of the house was not receivable in evidence. Doe d. Morse v. Williams, Car. & M. 615.

The judgment of a manor court is sufficiently proved by production of a minute in the court books containing entries of the pleadings, but setting forth as to the judgment only a form of caption, names of parties and suitors of the court, and a memorandum that a venire facias was executed, verdict found for plaintiff, and final judgment entered for debt and costs, specifying the amounts, the deputy steward of the court stating that he was present at the trial, and that it was not usual to draw up a more formal judgment, and it appearing that a levari facias had issued reciting a judgment in terms corresponding with the entry. Dawson v. Gregory, 7 Q. B. 756 ; 14 L. J., Q. B. 286 ; 9 Jur. 688.

—— Report of Judge—Irish Action.]—A report made by an Irish judge to a divisional court in Ireland to be used on an application to set aside a verdict, is evidence in an English action between the same parties of what took place at the trial and what the judge decided. Houstoun v. Sligo (Marquis), 29 Ch, D. 448—C. A.

—— Shorthand Note.]—An affidavit verifying the shorthand note of the judgment in the action pleaded as res judicata was also admitted. Ib.

—— Shorthand Writer Dead.]—It was proposed to read a shorthand note of proceedings in a prior probate suit, but the shorthand writer was dead. On an affidavit being produced by a person who had acted as proctor in that suit certifying to the correctness of the note, the court permitted it to be read. De Mora v. Concha, 29 Ch. D. 281—C. A.

In what Cases Evidence.]—In a dispute between a lord of a manor and a corporation as to the ownership of a piece of foreshore, an action of trespass by a former lord of the manor against the same corporation, and decided in his favour in 1738 and acquiesced in ever since, was considered the strongest possible evidence in his favour. Walton-cum-Trimley Manor, In re, Tomline, Ex parte, 28 L. T. 12 ; 21 W. R. 475.

A claim by an individual to a several fishery in non-tidal waters is not a question of public interest on which a judgment which does not work an estoppel is admissible against strangers. De Burgho's Estate, In re, [1896] 1 Ir. R. 274.

In an action by third persons for selling goods under a fieri facias, a copy of the judgment must be given in evidence for the defendants. Martin v. Podger, 2 W. Bl. 701 ; 5 Burr. 2631.

In an action by a plaintiff claiming under an elegit for use and occupation, an examined copy of the judgment-roll containing the award of the elegit and return of the inquisition, is evidence of the plaintiff's title, without proving a copy of the elegit and of the inquisition. Ramsbottom v. Buckhurst, 2 M. & S. 565 ; 15 R. R. 352.

On a trial at Nisi Prius, evidence that the cause was originally commenced in the Palace Court, and that defendant let judgment go by default in that court and afterwards removed the cause by habeas corpus is admissible. Tedmas v. Lees, 5 Car. & P. 233.

Bill by a party, from whom a promissory note had been obtained for a gambling debt, to restrain an indorsee of the note with notice of the consideration from proceeding in an action commenced by him against the plaintiff in equity upon the note, and in which action the defendant in equity had declared. Before an injunction had been applied for the action was tried, and a verdict found for the defendant at law :—Held, on the hearing of the cause, that the judgment was admissible in evidence, and conclusive in equity, as to those facts as to which it was conclusive at law ; but that, as it was obtained after the defendant had answered and no supplemental bill had been filed, he was entitled to an inquiry whether it had been fairly obtained. Pearce v. Gray, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 322.

A judgment recovered against executors is not evidence against devisees. Marten v. Whichelo, Cr. & Ph. 257 ; 10 L. J., Ch. 384.

Of Courts of Concurrent or Exclusive Jurisdiction.]—The judgments of courts of concurrent jurisdiction are evidence only where the very same matter comes distinctly in issue between the same parties. Mackintosh v. Smith, 4 Macq. H. L. 913.

The judgments of courts of exclusive jurisdiction are evidence, whether the matter arises incidentally, or is the matter directly in issue. Ib.

Judge's Charge and Notes.]—An unauthenticated MS. report of a trial about 140 years ago of an action of trespass, and of the charge of the chief baron, is a document which ought not to be admitted in evidence. Bridges v. Highton, 11 L. T. 653.

At the hearing of an appeal a party is entitled to read a shorthand writer's notes of the evidence taken in the court below as his impression of what passed ; and the judge's notes will be taken by the Court of Appeal to represent rightly the whole effect. Gee, In re, Laming v. Gee, 41 L. T. 744 ; 28 W. R. 217—C. A.

Judge's notes are not evidence in equity. Learmouth, Ex parte, 6 Madd. 113. S. P., East India Co. v. Bazett, 1 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 93.

Effect of.]—If a judgment of outlawry stand in the way of a claim to a barony in abeyance, although it is clearly erroneous, the Committee of Privileges cannot overlook it or reverse it ; but the claimant must apply to the proper tribunal for its reversal, and produce the judgment of reversal to the committee. Wharton Peerage, 12 Cl. & F. 295.

b. Verdicts.

Where a verdict is found subject to a special case, and a new trial directed, the special case as signed by counsel on each side, is evidence or the facts therein stated. Van Wort v. Wolley, R. & M. 4.

In the 13 Car. 1, a commission issued out of the Duchy Court of Lancaster to inquire into certain boundaries. The return stated that the commissioners had inquired into the matter, having been attended by the parties, and that a jury had been sworn to inquire and give a true verdict concerning the boundary, and that thereupon the commissioners set out the boundary:—Held, that this was a proceeding in the nature of a verdict before a court of competent jurisdiction and therefore admissible. Briscoe v. Lomax, 3 N. & P. 308; 8 A. & E. 198; 7 L. J., Q. B. 148; 2 Jur. 682.

A verdict on an issue is not admissible evidence on a second trial of the same issue. O'Connor v. Malone, Macl. & R. 468; 6 Cl. & F. 572.

On a plea of usury to an action on a bond, a verdict of acquittal for the usury penalties on the same bond, between the same parties is admissible for the plaintiff. Cleve v. Powell, 1 M. & Rob. 228.

A verdict will not be set aside on the ground of the admission of illegal evidence, where, independent of such evidence, there is evidence amply sufficient to sustain the verdict. Essex (Earl) v. Hodgson, 15 W. R. 960.

Postea.]—The postea is evidence of a verdict for the sums indorsed, and is good evidence of a set-off to the extent of it. Garland v. Scoones, 2 Esp. 648.

In an action on an indemnity bond, the postea was held sufficient evidence in proof of an allegation in a replication, that the plaintiff was obliged to and did pay a sum of money, as and for the damages and costs recovered by the person against whose claims the obligor had become bound to protect the plaintiff; where, in consequence of an arrangement between the parties, no judgment was ever entered up. Harrop v. Bradshaw, 9 Price, 359.

A general verdict was returned for the defendant. It was entered by order of the judge by mistake for the plaintiff. After the jury had been discharged they were recalled, the judge recollected what their verdict was, and from their statement found that a mistake had been made. The judge directed the postea to be amended:—Held, that he had power to order the amendment. Baker v. Lawrence, 22 L. T. 813; 18 W. R. 835.

Proof of.]—An action in a superior court is a "proceeding" in which a certified copy of a record is admissible as evidence of the record under 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, s. 13. Richardson v. Willis, 42 L. J., Ex. 15; L. R. 8 Ex. 69; 27 L. T. 828; 12 Cox, C. C. 298.

A document becomes a record of the court by being delivered to the proper officer of the court, and received and filed by him as such, although it is not numbered or docketed. Parsons v. Willoughby de Broke (Lord), 13 W. R. 315.

Parol evidence is inadmissible to shew the day on which a trial takes place; the record must be produced. Thomas v. London (Sheriffs), 6 Esp. 80.

To prove an allegation that a cause was carried down to trial, it is necessary to produce the nisi prius record, although it is not alleged that the cause was in fact tried. Parry v. Collis, Peake's Add. Cas. 47.

The nisi prius record of a cause with the minute of the verdict indorsed by the officer of the court on the jury panel, is good evidence that the cause came on for trial, though no regular postea is indorsed. Rex v. Browne, M. & M. 315.

A record, found in the proper office, must be intended to have been always in the state in which it was found, and parol evidence will not be admitted to prove it wrong. Dickson v. Fisher, 1 W. Bl. 664; 4 Burr. 2267.

A nisi prius record having been put in evidence, and there appearing to be two counts or distinct causes of action, and the verdict entered generally for the plaintiff, with 65*l.* damages, parol evidence is admissible to shew that substantial damages were recovered on one count only. Preston v. Peeke, El. Bl. & El. 336; 27 L. J., Q. B. 424; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 613; 6 W. R. 591.

Printed copies of records rejected, the originals being accessible. Crawford and Lindsay Peerages, 2 H. L. Cas. 547.

In a former action between the same parties in which the plaintiff sued in person, certain statements were made in the defendant's plea which were not denied by the replication; there had been a trial, but no judgment:—Held, that neither the issue delivered by the plaintiff himself, nor the nisi prius record in the former action, was admissible in evidence as proof of an admission of the facts stated in the plea in the former action and not denied in the replication. Holt v. Miers, 9 Car. & P. 191.

When Lost.]—The plaintiffs in an action to establish commonable rights over a piece of land in a certain parish, founded their claim upon an action of novel disseisin brought in 23 Hen. 3, the records in which were missing. It was submitted that the proceedings could be proved by (1) a note-book in the British Museum containing a note of the case, which was submitted as being a copy of the record; (2) a document forming part of the Cottonian MSS. in the British Museum, purporting to be a register of a priory interested in the action, containing an account of the action; and (3) a note of the action in an entry in the church-book of a parish, the parson of which was a defendant to the action, made 438 years after the date of the action:—Held, that (1) and (2) were not admissible, but that (3) was receivable in evidence quantum valeat, as an entry of an historical fact in which the parish was interested, it being probably taken from the record which might then have been in existence. Bidder v. Bridges, 54 L. T. 529; 34 W. R. 514.

d. Rules and Orders of Court.

Arbitration.]—A submission to arbitration by agreement written and attested is not sufficiently proved by evidence of a rule making such agreement a rule of court, under 9 & 10 Will. 3, c. 15, s. 1. Berney or Bernie v. Reed, 7 Q. B. 79; 14 L. J., Q. B. 247.

But a judge's order for referring a cause may be proved by such rule of court. Ib.

The allegations in a rule of court do not prove the facts alleged. Woodroffe v. Williams, 6 Taunt. 19; 1 Marsh. 419.

In an action on an award made under a judge's order, to prove the order it is not enough to put in an office copy of the rule making it a rule of court. Still v. Halford, 4 Camp. 17.

A rule of the Court of Queen's Bench, made in an action pending in that court, cannot be read on a petition of bankruptcy, without being verified by affidavit, and notice ought to be given to the other party of the intention to read it on the hearing. Chambers, Ex parte, 1 Deac. 197.

Reference at Trial to Official Referee.]—At the trial of an administration action, certain inquiries were by consent ordered to be made before an official referee, and further consideration was adjourned. When the action came on for further consideration, the plaintiff applied to have the referee's report varied, though he had given no notice to the defendant of the application:—Held, that the application must be heard; but that, if the defendant desired, the further consideration must be adjourned for him to have time to meet the application:—Held, also, that no evidence of what took place before the referee need be produced. Brook, In re, Sykes v. Brook, 50 L. J., Ch. 744; 45 L. T. 172; 29 W. R. 821.

Practice.]—Where a court prints and circulates copies of its rules for the guidance of its officers, the production of one of those printed copies is good evidence of the rules which the officers are to act on, though the original rules are kept under the seal of the court, and the copy is not shewn to have been examined with the original. Daniel v. Robson, M. & M. 294.

Upon an indictment for perjury, a witness was called to prove the practice of the Insolvent Debtors Court, which the prosecutor alleged made an affidavit necessary, and upon which perjury had been assigned. The witness produced a printed paper, which purported to be a copy of the rules of the Insolvent Debtors Court, from which he stated what was the practice. He had no knowledge of the practice independently of the paper:—Held, that such evidence could not be received as proof of the practice. Rex v. Koops, 1 N. & P. 828; 6 A. & E. 198; W. W. & D. 148; 6 L. J., K. B. 114.

The practice of the Ecclesiastical Court is a matter of fact to be proved by evidence, and left to the jury. Beaurain v. Scott, 3 Camp. 388; 14 R. R. 759.

e. Writs, Warrants and Returns.

Time from which Writ takes effect.] — It appeared from the statement of claim that the writ of summons in the action issued on the 2nd of July, and that on the same day, but before the issuing of the writ, the cause of action arose. The statement of claim was demurred to, on the ground that the issuing of the writ of summons being a judicial act, must be considered as having taken place at the earliest moment of the day, and therefore before the cause of action accrued:—Held, that the writ of summons being an act of the party and not a judicial act, the court could for this purpose take cognizance of the fact that the writ did not issue till later in the day than the cause of action accrued, and that the statement of claim was therefore good. Clarke v. Bradlaugh, 50 L. J., Q. B. 678; 7 Q. B. D. 151; 44 L. T. 779; 29 W. R. 882. Affirmed, 51 L. J., Q. B. 1; 8 Q. B. D. 63; 30 W. R. 53—C. A.

Semble, even in the case of judicial acts, the court will, if necessary, in order to ascertain which has priority, inquire as to parts or fractions of a day. Ib.

Error in Date of "Teste."]—The plaintiffs, in an action for goods supplied, issued a specially-indorsed writ against the defendant. The goods were supplied during and after the month of July, 1882. The copy of the writ served on the defendant was accurate in all respects except that in the "teste," the year was thus given, "one thousand eight hundred and eighty," instead of "eighty-two." In default of appearance the plaintiffs signed final judgment under Ord. XV. r. 1. The defendant afterwards applied to set the judgment aside on the ground that the "teste" of a writ was a material part of it, and any error in it would be fatal to its validity; and that the affidavit of service by the solicitor's clerk who served it was false. The registrar and the judge at chambers before whom the application was made both refused to set the judgment aside. The defendant appealed:—Held, that the affidavit of service by the clerk was not a false one, and that the mistake in the "teste" of the writ was a mere imperfection, and not a fatal error prejudicing the defendant, who therefore was not entitled to have the judgment against him set aside. Wesson v. Stalker, 47 L. T. 444.

The record is conclusive evidence of the time of the issuing of the writ; but, if a wrong date has been inserted, the trial may be set aside, and the record altered. Whipple v. Manley, 2 Gale, 56; 5 D. P. C. 100; 1 M. & W. 432; 1 Tyr. & G. 672; 5 L. J., Ex. 191.

The date of the commencement of the action being stated in the writ of trial requires no proof. Robinson v. Rowland, 1 W. W. & H. 74; 2 Jur. 136.

Order.]—The marshal's return is not proof of the order in which writs, by virtue of which a party is in custody, were executed. Wright v. Stanford, 1 D. (N.S.) 272; 6 Jur. 130.

Sheriff's Returns.]—In an action against a sheriff for a false return to a fi. fa., office copies of the writ and return, which are not proved to have been examined copies, are not receivable, even where the original cause was in the same court as the action against the sheriff. Pitcher v. King, 1 Car. & K. 655.

An examined copy of a writ returned and filed, and of the indorsement thereon, on which writ is indorsed, apparently by the sheriff's authority, the name of the bailiff employed to make the levy, is not evidence to prove who was the bailiff so employed by the sheriff, evidence not being added that the indorsement of the bailiff's name on the writ itself was made by the sheriff's authority. Hill v. Middlesex (Sheriff), 7 Taunt. 8; Holt, 217. S. P., contra, Blatch v. Archer, Cowp. 66.

But, in an action against the sheriff, to recover penalties for the extortion of his officer, in taking a larger fee than was allowed on the discharge of a person out of custody on giving bail:—Held, that the indorsement of the name of the officer on the writ was sufficient to connect him with the sheriff, without shewing that such indorsement was made with his authority. Bowden v. Waithman, 5 Moore, 183.

So, in an action against the sheriff for not arresting a defendant, proof of the indorsement of the officer's name on the writ by a clerk in the under-sheriff's office, is sufficient to connect such officer with the sheriff, and to shew that the indorsement was made with his authority, without calling the officer himself, or producing the warrant under which he acted. Francis v. Neave, 6 Moore, 120; 3 Br. & B. 126.

The sheriff's return to a fi. fa., that he has levied the money. is not sufficient evidence to prove that he has paid it over to the judgment creditor, so as to charge the latter with the receipt of it, in an action for money had and received. Cator v. Stokes, 1 M. & S. 599.

In an action against a sheriff's officer for an illegal arrest, it is evidence against him, that the warrant was directed to him. Slack v. London (Sheriffs), 1 Esp. 42.

In an action of trespass against the sheriff, it is sufficient evidence to shew a bill of sale executed by him of the property in question, which recites the writ and taking, and the sale of the property by him under it. Woodward v. Larking, 3 Esp. 286.

The return purporting to be made by a lord of a manor to the sheriff's mandate to levy under a fi. fa. is primâ facie evidence that the person whose return it purports to be is the lord of the manor. Tyler v. Leeds (Duke), 2 Stark. 218.

Evidence that the person who actually made the return has acted as bailiff to the lord of the manor for sixteen years, and during that time has made returns for the lord of the manor, is sufficient to charge the lord of the manor with the acts of the bailiff. Ib.

In an action against a judgment creditor for maliciously suing out an alias fi. fa. after a sufficient execution levied upon the plaintiff's goods under the first fi. fa.:—Held, that the sheriff's return indorsed upon the two writs (which writs had been produced in evidence by the plaintiff as part of his case), wherein the sheriff stated that he had forborne to sell under the first, and had sold under the second writ, by the request and with the consent of the now plaintiff, was primâ facie evidence of the facts so returned; credence being due to the official acts of the sheriff between third persons. Gyfford v. Woodgate, 11 East, 297; 2 Camp. 117.

Precept to Returning Officer at Election.]—In an action for bribery at a borough election, an examined copy of the precept to the returning officer, taken from the original at the Crown office, is sufficient evidence of the precept. Webb v. Smith, 4 Bing. (N.C.) 373; 6 Scott, 147; 1 Arn. 145; 9 L. J., C. P. 191.

Sequestration.]—Plaintiff producing a copy of sequestration only, on motion to take bill pro confesso, court refused it; but sequestration not being under seal or executed, was held no objection. Anon., 10 Mod. 431.

2. Proceedings in Chancery.

a. Decrees and Orders.

Effect of.]—Orders of the Court of Chancery will be inadmissible in evidence as not amounting to any final decree, or containing any adjudication of the court upon the right of the parties, but merely directing the continuance of a certain state of things pendente lite. Pim v. Curell, 6 M. & W. 234.

A final decree upon a sum ascertained is equal to a judgment; but a mere decree for an account of the plaintiff's demands, and of the personal estate come to the hands of the defendant, with a mere direction for a payment out of the result of that account, does not prevent the executor praying a judgment. Perry v. Phelips, 10 Ves. 34; 7 R. R. 331.

In an action upon a wager, whether a decree of the Court of Chancery would be reversed on an appeal to the House of Lords, proof of the decree and reversal is sufficient, without shewing the previous proceedings below; a copy of the judgment of reversal is admissible. Jones v. Randall, Cowp. 17; Lofft, 383, 428.

Semble, that a decree in equity is admissible in evidence, without reciting the previous proceedings therein, or proving them, where the object of its production is to prove the existence of the decree, and not any facts previously in issue in the suit. Blower v. Hollis, 3 Tyr. 356; 1 C. & M. 393; 2 L. J., Ex. 176.

An order for an attachment for not paying the costs of a suit in equity is in itself primâ facie evidence that a suit had been pending. Ib.

An order made in one suit giving liberty to prove in another suit for an amount to be certified by the chief clerk, and a certificate made in pursuance of such order, are not alone sufficient to establish the debt in the other suit. Micklethwait v. Winstanley, 5 N. R. 204.

Decree in a former cause between the same parties read as evidence, though not conclusive; so also of depositions in a cause which had settled the rights of all as under a decree for performance of trusts. Askew v. Poulterers' Co. 2 Ves. 89.

Pleadings and depositions and a decree in a former suit (the same will being in issue) are admissible, as shewing the acts and knowledge of the parties who had the same interests under the will as the plaintiff. Lorton (Viscount) v. Kingston (Earl), 5 Cl. & F. 269.

Acts of the court, as a decree or order in another cause between the same parties, may be read without an order. Brooks v. Taylor, Mos. 188.

Decree of Court of Chancery determining matter of right, is good evidence of that right, as to all persons claiming under party against whom decree was made, though at the distance of a hundred years afterwards. Borough v. Whichcote, 3 Bro. P. C. 595. See also Benson v. Olive, 1 Barnard. K. B. 348.

A decree between co-defendants, grounded on pleadings and proof, between plaintiff and defendant, is regular. Chamley v. Dunsany (Lord), 2 Sch. & Lef. 718.

Identity—Pedigree.]—A decretal order in chancery, reciting the substance of the bill and answer, is admissible, on proof of pedigree, to establish the identity of parties to the suit. Wharton Peerage, 12 Cl. & F. 295.

But an answer alone, though sworn but not filed, is not admissible. Ib.

Nature of Rights.]—On the trial of a writ of right, a decree of chancery between the father of the tenant and certain other persons in no way connected with the defendant, brought to establish the will under which the tenant's title arose, and by which decree the court directed, that the estates were to be considered as belonging to the tenant's father, the devisee, and that he should be let into possession, and have all the title-deeds delivered to him, is properly admitted for the purpose of explaining the character in which the devisee took possession of the estate. Davies v. Lowndes, 7 Scott (N.R.) 141; 6 Man. & G. 47.

On an issue as to the existence of an immemorial right of the deputy day-meters of the city of London to the exclusive right, by themselves and their servants, of measuring, shovelling, unloading, and delivering all oysters brought in any vessel for sale to the port of London, and to receive a reasonable compensation for so doing:—Held, that a decree of a court of equity, in a cause between third parties, touching the same right, whereby an issue was directed to try whether certain sums were a reasonable recompense, was admissible. Laybourn v. Crisp, 4 M. & W. 320; 8 Car. & P. 397; 1 H. & H. 326; 8 L. J., Ex. 118.

Decree professing to establish customs of tithing, and modes of payment, some of which are obviously not legal moduses, founded on agreements not ratified by ordinary and patron, and not on bonâ fide adverse suit, to establish moduses, and pronounced in cause to which the ordinary and patron were not parties, is not conclusive on church or court. Jenkinson v. Royston, 5 Price, 496.

On a trial, touching the right to lands, decrees in chancery touching the rights of other parties concerning the same lands, were held admissible in evidence to shew the character in which the possessor enjoyed the lands. Davies v. Lowndes, 4 L. J., C. P. 214; 1 Bing. (N.C.) 606; 2 Sc. 90.

Judgment in Possessory Suit.]—In an action for trespass to a several fishery in a navigable tidal river in Ireland the defendants justified on the ground that the public had the right of fishing. The plaintiff's paper title (if the possession and enjoyment were consistent with it) afforded irresistible ground for a presumption that the fishery was put in defence before Magna Charta. As evidence of possession and user the plaintiff tendered (inter alia) the proceedings and decree in 1687 in a "possessory" suit brought in the Court of Chancery in Ireland by C. (the plaintiff's predecessor in title) against strangers to the present action; by which decree an injunction was awarded to quiet C. and his under-tenants in such possession of their fishing as they had at the time of exhibiting the bill and three years before, to continue until evicted by due course of law, both parties being at liberty to take proceedings at law against each other for ascertaining their titles:—Held, that as the decree was a solemn and final adjudication, not collusive, and as it could not have been made except upon proof of unbroken user and enjoyment for at least three years before the bill, inconsistent with any actual exercise at that time of a public right of fishing, the proceedings and decree were admissible; and that the effect of this evidence (not being met by any counter-evidence applicable to the same period) was extremely strong to establish possession and enjoyment of the fishery in the latter part of the seventeenth century, consistent with the paper title and exclusive of the public. Pim v. Curell (6 M. & W. 234) discussed. Neill v. Devonshire (Duke), 8 App. Cas. 135; 31 W. R. 622—H. L. (Ir.)

Held, also, that a judgment obtained by the plaintiff in 1826 in an action against a stranger for trespass by fishing in the locus in quo, in which action the defendant appeared but allowed judgment to go by default of pleading, was evidence in the present action of possession in 1826. Ib.

Admissibility of Copy, where Original Lost.]—To support the proof of a custom for the lord of a manor to take only one heriot from a tenant, whatever the number of his holdings might be, a paper, purporting to be a copy of an old decree of the Court of Chancery, in a suit between a copyholder and the lord, produced by a witness, who succeeded his brother as lord of the manor, and who stated that he had found it amongst his brother's papers, is admissible, as against a subsequent lord, evidence having been given of an ineffectual search for the original. Price v. Woodhouse, 3 Ex. 616; 18 L. J., Ex. 271.

Original Order.]—The document delivered out by the registrar of the Court of Chancery, as the order of the court, is the original order; and to make it evidence, it is not necessary that it should be compared with any book of the orders of the court. Ludlow Corporation v. Charlton, 9 Car. & P. 242.

Office Copy.]—An office copy of an order is for all practical purposes the same as the original order. Davenport v. Townsend, 15 L. T. 528; 15 W. R. 378.

Bill of Discovery.]—A. brought an action against a sheriff for a false return of nulla bona to a fi. fa. against the goods of B. B. filed a bill of discovery against A., on which there had been a decree or an order that A. should bring into the Court of Chancery all letters written by B. or any other person to him respecting the original debt. A., under this decree or order, brought in various letters:—Held, that none of them could be read in evidence on the part of the defendant in the present action, without first putting in the bill and answer. Hewitt v. Pigott, 5 Car. & P. 75.

Effect in Irish Suit.]—A mortgagee of part of estate in Ireland files his bill of foreclosure in Court of Chancery, in England, and obtains the usual decree; a mortgagee of other part of same estate files his bill of foreclosure in Court of Chancery in Ireland, and on hearing of cause, desired that decree of English Court of Chancery might be read to intent that decree of Irish Court of Chancery might be made agreeable thereto; but refused, because present plaintiff, though defendant in former cause, was not brought to a hearing on that cause, and consequently was no party to that decree. Everard v. Ashton, 3 Bro. P. C. 561.

In Rolls Court.]—An order by the Lord Chancellor, on the death of a lunatic tenant for life, of a fund in court, discharging her committee to whom the dividends had been ordered to be paid, is no evidence in the Rolls Court of such death. Berry v. Usher, 4 Jur. 5.

b. Bills and Answers.

Bill—Privity.]—A bill in chancery is not evidence against the party in whose name it is filed, unless his privity to it is shewn. Boileau v. Rutlin, 2 Ex. 665; 12 Jur. 899.

Where that privity is established the bill is admissible to prove the fact that such a suit was instituted, and what the subject of it was; but it is not evidence by way of admission against the party by whom it was filed of the truth of the facts alleged or stated in it. Ib.

Proceedings after answer of a bill in chancery tend to diminish the presumption that it might have been filed by a stranger, and may be sufficient to establish the privity of the party in whose name it was filed. Ib.

A bill in chancery is no evidence of the facts contained therein, not even of those on which the prayer of relief is founded. Doe d. Bowerman v. Sybourn, 7 Term Rep. 2 ; 2 Esp. 499 ; 4 R. R. 363.

Except that a bill in chancery by an ancestor is evidence to prove a family pedigree stated therein. Taylor v. Cole, 7 Term Rep. 3, n ; 1 R. R. 706. See also Malcolmson v. O'Dea, infra.

The court never reads a bill as evidence of plaintiff's knowledge of a fact. Lord Chancellor, holding that plaintiff had determined his option by the case made by his bill, refused to allow paragraphs of it to be entered on the registrar's notes of proofs on hearing, to shew that plaintiff contemplated an aspect of the facts circumscribing his own rights as growing out of the alternative he had elected. Kilbee v. Sneyd, 2 Moll. 207.

Bill in chancery may be read as evidence in court of equity, though it cannot be read at law. Ives v. Medcalfe, 1 Atk. 63.

—— In Other Suits.]—Bill in another cause allowed to be read at hearing, as corroborating circumstances to prove stale demand. Handeside v. Brown, Dick. 236.

A bill in chancery filed by tenant for life, though no decree was pronounced in the cause, may be read in evidence in a suit against remainderman, partly relating to the same lands, but only as evidence of such a bill having been filed. Nangle v. Smith, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 119.

Where a bill has been amended, the amended bill is the only one upon record : the original bill, therefore, cannot be read as evidence to prove what a plaintiff considered his right to be at the time of filing it. Hales v. Pomfret, Dan. 141.

—— Effect of Reading.] — Where plaintiff reads bill in another cause against the same defendant as evidence, the defendant may also read his answer to it. Dolphin v. Dolphin, 2 Moll. 540.

Answer—In what Action.] — The answer in chancery of one who had been a partner in a firm, but who had retired from the firm, and ceased to have any interest in it before the commencement of that suit, is not admissible against the continuing partners of the firm, although it relates to transactions which occurred with the firm at the time when the retired partner was a member of it. Parker v. Morrell, 2 Car. & K. 599.

Declarations made by a party in possession of an estate, in his answer to a bill in chancery, are admissible against him, and persons deriving from him ; but declarations by him of what he heard another person state, not adding that he believed the statement, are not admissible to cut down or defeat his estate. Roe d. Trimlestown (Lord) v. Kemmis, 9 Cl. & F. 780.

In 1810 the plaintiff became assignee of an unexpired term granted to W. In 1809 W. had entered into an agreement to grant a lease to M., who was let into possession under the agreement, and through whom the defendant claimed. In 1835 the plaintiff filed a bill in chancery against M. to enforce the agreement ; and in 1839 M. put in his answer, in which he acknowledged the title of the plaintiff. In ejectment against the defendant : — Held, that the answer was an acknowledgment of title given to the plaintiff within 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 14. Goode v. Job, 1 El. & El. 6 ; 28 L. J., Q. B. 1 ; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 145.

An answer in chancery by a mortgagor to a bill of foreclosure filed by the mortgagee is not admissible in evidence, the mortgagor having conveyed his interest in the estate to another twenty years before the answer was filed, and the person to whom the estate was conveyed being no party to the mortgage or to the proceedings in equity. Gully v. Exeter (Bishop), 2 M. & P. 266 ; 5 Bing. 171.

There was a dispute as to the limits of a several fishery. In an action against alleged trespassers the lessee of the corporation tendered in evidence a bill and an answer in chancery in a suit instituted a great many years before by another grantee of the crown against the corporation, and in which the limits of the alleged fishery were described :—Held, that as part of the history of the fishery and of the claims made to it, the bill and answer were admissible. Malcolmson v. O'Dea, 10 H. L. Cas. 593 ; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1135 ; 9 L. T. 93 ; 12 W. R. 178.

In an action on a bond, a defendant pleaded that he was induced to execute it by the fraud, covin, and misrepresentation of A. and B., the plaintiffs, and D. in collusion with them. The money for which the bond was given was part of the property included in the marriage settlement of H., the defendant's brother, which was advanced to H. by the plaintiffs, the trustees. For the defendant, it was proposed to put in the answer of A. in chancery, to shew that D. had committed a breach of trust with respect to some other of the trust money :—Held, that the answer could not be given in evidence for this purpose. Courtenay (Lord) v. Phillimore, 2 Car. & K. 1018.

In ejectment by an executor, it is sufficient primâ facie evidence that the testator had a chattel interest in the premises, to put in the defendant's answer to a bill in equity, stating that "he believed the testator was possessed of the leasehold premises in the bill mentioned." Doe d. Digby v. Steel, 3 Camp. 115 ; 13 R. R. 768.

A., B. and C. were committees of a lunatic. To a bill filed against the lunatic and themselves as committees, they put in an answer stating certain facts. That cause went to issue, and witnesses were examined. The lunatic died. A., and the wives of B. and C., who were relatives, obtained letters of administration to her estate, as her next of kin. The plaintiff in the original suit then filed a bill of revivor against A., the two wives and their husbands, merely praying for a revival of the suit. The ordinary order was made. The defendants to the bill of revivor put in an answer, in which they craved to have the full benefit of the answer to the original bill. There was no replication to this answer. The original answer contained statements which, at the hearing, were admitted to be read against the defendants :—Held, that, under the circumstances of this case, these statements were properly admitted in evidence. Stanton v. Percival, 5 H. L. Cas. 257 ; 24 L. J., Ch. 369 ; 3 W. R. 391.

Quære, by the Lord Chancellor, whether, as a general rule, the answer of a committee of a lunatic is admissible in a suit against the lunatic's personal representative to bind the lunatic's estate. Ib.

A plaintiff in one suit put in his answer to the original bill in another suit respecting the same matter. The bill in the second suit was then amended, and the plaintiff died before putting in his answer to the amended bill. Replication was filed in the second suit, and the first suit was brought on by way of motion for decree. An order was obtained to use the evidence in the second suit on the hearing of the first:—Held, that the plaintiff's answer to the original bill was not admissible as evidence. Moore v. Harper, 14 L. T. 14; 14 W. R. 306.

A defendant having, on cross-examination as a witness in another cause, given evidence affecting the statements contained in her answer, plaintiff applied, after the cause was in the paper, and seven months after notice of motion for decree, for leave to read at the hearing the defendant's evidence in the other cause. Plaintiff having been guilty of no laches, leave was given. Watson v. Cleaver, 1 Jur. (N.S.) 270; 3 W. R. 265.

Effect of.]—An admission in answer to a bill filed by other creditors against the defendant may be read as evidence against him. Grant v. Jackson, Peake, 204.

An admission in an answer of one defendant of a certain fact, is not evidence of that fact against another defendant upon motion for decree, though notice to read the answer has been given. Where, however, a defendant objected to such evidence, the court allowed the case to stand over with leave for the plaintiff to file affidavits, deposing to the fact in question. Saltmarsh v. Hardy, 42 L. J., Ch. 422.

The futility of a defence resting on an unproved inconsistent prior conveyance, evidenced by admissions in an answer to another suit, observed on. Scott v. Scott, 11 Ir. Eq. R. 487.

Expenditure on the estate claimed with plaintiff's knowledge, but chiefly in his minority:—Held, no defence. Ib.

If a defendant in his answer states portions of pleadings at law, but for greater certainty refers to a copy thereof, when produced the plaintiff may, on a motion for an injunction, read the whole of such pleadings from a copy verified by affidavit. Rawson v. Samuel, 4 Myl. & C. 330.

A bill was filed in chancery by A. as next friend to B. The defendant put in an answer which was not signed, but there was indorsed a consent by A. that this answer should be received without oath. The bill and answer were produced from the proper office:—Held, admissible. Shrewsbury Peerage, 7 H. L. Cas. 1.

The answer of W. and H. to a bill in equity, filed by a third person, stating that W. has conveyed a reversion to H., is evidence against H. that he has done so, and if the answer refers to a deed, that makes no difference, and notice to produce the deed is not necessary. Ashmore v. Hardy, 7 Car. & P. 501.

Where matters are stated by the answer which are not put in evidence, it is in the discretion of the court to direct inquiries as to those matters before the master. A settled account suggested by the answer, but not proved, is usually the subject of inquiry. Counop v. Hayward, 1 Y. & C. 633.

If a defendant gives in evidence an answer in chancery of the plaintiff, it will not entitle the plaintiff to avail himself of any matters contained in such answer which are only stated as hearsay. Roe d. Pellatt v. Ferrars, 2 Bos. & P. 542.

If an answer in chancery is produced in evidence, the party against whom it is produced is entitled to have the whole bill in chancery read, as part of his adversary's case. Pennell v. Meyer, 8 Car. & P. 470; 2 M. & Rob. 98.

As to all equity proceedings, it is a general ule, that, in order to give any interlocutory matter in evidence, a foundation must be laid by proving all its former stages. Roch v. Rix, Gilb. Evid. 56. As the bill to make way for the answer, the bill and answer, or the defendant's contempt for the depositions, &c., Piercy v. ——, T. Jones, 164; Gilb. Evid. 65; otherwise the whole bearing of the evidence would not appear, neither would the court see that the proceeding was regular; in which case the answer and depositions would have only the effect of a mere voluntary affidavit, and which, if made by a stranger, could not be received in evidence, as the party would be deprived of his cross-examination, and if made by the party himself then as before mentioned. Anon., Sty. 446.

When the answer of a party in another cause is resorted to as evidence the whole of it is admissible both at law and in equity. Boardman v. Jackson, 2 Ball & B. 386.

Although in general, pleadings in one suit cannot be used in another, as evidence of the truth of the allegations contained in them, yet, where a pleading is signed by the party, it will be regarded in the light of an admission, and, as such, will be evidence against him, not only with reference to a different subject-matter, but in a suit maintained against a different opponent. Marianski v. Cairns, 1 Macq. H. L. 212.

Putting in.]—The defendant in the action filed a bill against plaintiff in the action, who put in an answer which being excepted to, and the exceptions allowed, he filed an amended bill to the answer, to which exceptions were also allowed. Five other amended bills in succession were also filed in consequence of the exceptions taken to the answers being in like manner allowed. The answer to the last amended bill was not excepted to:—Held, that defendant having given in evidence the first five amended bills and answers, was not bound to put in evidence the last answer also. Edwards v. Glengall (Earl), 9 L. J., Ex. 65. (See L. J. Digest, Vol. IV., p. 233.)

Examined Copies.]—On a trial at law, an examined copy of the plaintiff's answer to a bill in equity may be read in evidence against him without producing the original. Hodgkinson v. Willis, 3 Camp. 401.

But some evidence of the identity of the parties must be given. Ib.

Upon a plea of plene administravit a plaintiff, in order to shew assets, gave in evidence a copy of a bill and answer, purporting to be an answer by a person of the same name, and sustaining the same character as the defendant:—Held, that the copy was admissible, and that on the face of it there was presumptive evidence of identity, the defendant not having shewn any circumstances to rebut the presumption. Hennell v. Lyon, 1 B. & Ald. 182; 18 R. R. 456.

In ejectment, examined office copies of a bill in chancery, filed by the defendant for an injunction, and of an affidavit purporting to have been made in the equity suit by a person of the same name and description, in support of the motion for the injunction, which alleged title to the premises in one of the lessors of the plaintiffs, were produced to prove that title:—Held, that the copy of the affidavit was not admissible without proof of identity, or that it had been used. Rees d. Howell v. Bowen, M'Clel. & Y. 383. And see Highfield v. Peake, M. & M. 109; 31 R. R. 722.

On the trial of a civil cause, an examined copy of an answer in chancery is admissible to contradict a witness who swore in opposition to what was stated in the answer to which he was a party. Ewer v. Ambrose, 6 D. & R. 127; 4 B. & C. 25; 3 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 128; 28 R. R. 198.

An examined copy of an answer in chancery by a person not party to the action, is admissible without producing the original or proving the party's handwriting. Tooth v. Bagwell, 2 Car. & P. 271.

Office Copy.]—Office copy of an answer in chancery offered in evidence. It appeared from the examination of the witness, who had compared the office copy with the original, that the original contained words at length, such as "complainant," "orator," &c., which in the office copy were written "complt.," "oror.," &c.:—Held, no objection. Anderdon v. Foley (Lord), 2 L. J., K. B. 214.

Office copy of bill cannot be read as evidence, if original is not on file, though officer of court is ready to prove that the original cannot be found amongst the records. Irwin v. Simpson, 7 Bro. P. C. 317.

The defendant refusing to produce the office copy of the bill, the draft could not be read, but a specific performance was decreed upon inspection of the record. Huddleston v. Briscoe, 11 Ves. 583.

The fact that the plaintiff had filed a bill in this court, being relied on by the defendant as having worked a forfeiture of his interest:—Held, that the mere production of the office copy was not sufficient evidence, there being no proof of identity; and, secondly, that the defendant was not entitled to an inquiry on the point. Williams v. Knipe, 5 Beav. 273.

Copies of bills, answers, and depositions in this court, ordered to be certified by the clerk of records and writs, under the statute 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, s. 14. Reeve v. Hodson, 10 Hare (App.) xix; 22 L. J., Ch. 696; 12 Jur. 844; 1 W. R. 244.

Demurrer to Bill.]—A demurrer or a plea to a bill in equity, does not so admit the facts charged as to be evidence against the defendant of those facts in a future action between the same parties. Tomkins v. Ashby, M. & M. 32.

Record.]—Before ordering the production of original records, the court requires it to be shewn that the office copies will not be sufficient. Anon., 13 Beav. 420.

To warrant an application to produce, on the trial of a civil action, a record of the court, the court may require sufficient ground to be laid, particularly as the office copy might be evidence. Stratford v. Greene, 1 Ball & B. 296.

—— Proper Custody.]—An order having been improperly obtained in this court for the production of the records of the proceedings in a suit in the Court of Great Sessions, Wales, they were forwarded by the registrar of that court, through his agent in London, to the clerk in court of the plaintiff, the proper officer:—Held, till such order was rescinded, that they were to be deemed to be in the proper custody. Greenfell v. Girdlestone, 7 L. J., Ex. Eq. 42; 2 Y. & C. 662.

c. Depositions.

Admissibility under Ord. XXXVII. r. 3.]—In order to make the evidence taken in one action available in another under the provisions of Ord. XXXVII. r. 3, the actions must be between the same parties or their privies or the persons they represent, and the issue must be exactly the same. Ord. XXXVII. r. 3, merely does away with the necessity for an order, but does not affect the ordinary rules of evidence. Printing Telegraph and Construction Co. of the Agence Havas v. Drucker, 64 L. J., Q. B. 58; [1894] 2 Q. B. 801; 9 R. 677; 71 L. T. 172; 42 W. R. 674—C. A.

In whose Presence.]—The deposition of a witness, taken in a judicial proceeding in the presence of the party there charged, is not admissible in another proceeding against that party, on the ground that he was present and had the opportunity of cross-examining. Melen v. Andrews, M. & M. 336; 31 R. R. 736.

Taken de bene esse.]—In a suit instituted in 1815 for a declaration of title to mines and minerals, witnesses were examined by commission de bene esse in that year. Nothing had been done in that suit since 1818. In modern suits for, in effect, the same purpose, the evidence had been closed, and the suits were ready to be set down for hearing. On motion in all the suits publication of the ancient evidence was allowed, and an order was made as in Hamilton (Duke) v. Meynal. Moggridge v. Hall, 13 Ch. D. 380; 28 W. R. 487. Affirmed, on appeal, 19 Ch. D. 224; 30 W. R. 557—C. A.

When a bill had been filed to administer the real and personal estate of an intestate, the object being to ascertain his co-heirs and next of kin, and after decree made, but before it was drawn up, a person claiming to be a co-heir and one of the next of kin, not a party to the first suit, had filed a bill against all the parties to the first suit, also praying administration, with the object of having the evidence of a witness taken de bene esse, and the witness had been examined and cross-examined—an application that the evidence taken de bene esse in the second suit might be read in the first suit was refused. Hill v. Hibbit, 38 L. J., Ch. 447; L. R. 7 Eq. 421.

Parties.]—In an issue from chancery between A. and B., depositions produced in chancery by B., in a suit of C. against B., are inadmissible. Atkins v. Humphreys, 1 M. & Rob. 523.

Where, on a bill brought by A. against B., C. and D., and others, the defendants had examined some witnesses, that B. being now plaintiff, may read those depositions against the plaintiff or any of the defendants in the first cause. Barstow v. Palmes, Pre. Ch. 233.

Depositions taken in a former cause cannot be read, in another cause, against one who does not claim under the party against whom those depositions were taken. But if a legatee brings a bill against the executor, and proves assets, another legatee, though no party, may have the benefit of those depositions. Coke v. Fountain, 1 Vern. 413.

If the cause is brought into a hearing, and stands over, with liberty to add a party, if he is a material defendant, and concerned in interest, the depositions taken before cannot be read against him. Niblett v. Daniel, Bunb. 310.

The creditors of L. obtained a decree for payment of their debts, and to set aside some conveyances gained by fraud, and S. and the legatees are made defendants. The legatees having brought their bill against S., the question was, if the depositions in the former cause, touching the fraud, could not be read in this :—Held, the question being the same in both causes, and S.'s defence the same, the depositions ought to be read. Nevil v. Johnson, 2 Vern. 447.

A witness examined at a former trial of an issue betwixt the same parties, and who has been examined in the cause, in case he dies, not only his depositions may be read, but what he swore at the former trial may be given in evidence. Coker v. Farewell, 2 P. W. 563.

Depositions taken in a former cause, where neither plaintiff nor defendant were parties, cannot be read as evidence, but where either plaintiff or defendant was a party in the former cause, the depositions in that cause may be read against such of them as was a party. Peterborough v. Germaine (Earl), 3 Bro. P. C. 539.

Depositions of witnesses taken in former causes, relating to same matter for which new suit is instituted against another party, ought to be permitted to be read as evidence upon the hearing of such new cause, although the witnesses themselves are not proved to be dead. London (City) v. Perkins, 3 Bro. P. C. 602.

An order made to read the proceedings taken in one cause, in another, must be between the same parties. Eade v. Lingood, 1 Atk. 204.

The deposition of a witness examined on interrogatories, jointly interested with the defendant, may be read in evidence for defendant, the name of the deponent being indorsed on the record under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, s. 27. Adams v. Garrard, 2 M. & Rob. 400.

Depositions in a former cause in chancery admitted to be read upon motion, the same matter being then under examination as now, though neither the plaintiff nor any under whom he claimed was privy to the former suit. Terwit v. Gresham, 1 Ch. Ca. 73.

Where a bill was filed by a person claiming as tenant in common, founding his title on articles alleged to be lost, and evidence of the contents of the articles was given :—Held, that the depositions if read in that cause, the witnesses being dead, might be read in a suit instituted by another tenant in common, claiming in the same right against the same person in possession ; what was evidence against the occupying tenant in common in the first cause, may be used as evidence for the plaintiff in the second, although he claims, not as representative, but as having rights co-extensive in pari materiâ. Byrne v. Frere, 2 Moll. 20.

Although there are two suits in this court between parties having the same respective interests, and relating to the same matters, the depositions of such only of the witnesses in the prior suit as are dead will be allowed to be read in the subsequent suit. Carrington v. Cornock, 2 Sim. 567.

A party having been examined as a witness in a former cause :—Held, that his depositions were sufficiently put in issue to entitle them to be read by a general reference in the pleading to his deposition. Houlditch v. Donegal (Marquis), 1 Moll. 366.

After witnesses examined upon original bill, amended bill was filed against new parties, some infants, court will not allow evidence taken on original bill to be read against new defendants the infants. Quantock v. Bullen, 5 Madd. 81.

Case in which, after parties have gone into evidence in an original suit, evidence is material or admissible in a supplemental suit. Wilkinson v. Fowkes, 9 Hare, 592.

Evidence taken in an original suit may be read in a cross-suit under the common order, the court having judicial notice of both causes. Gray v. Haig, 21 L. J., Ch. 542.

Order of course granted to read in another suit evidence taken in winding-up suits. Ernest v. Weiss, 1 N. R. 6.

A., without authority, sold a trust estate to B. In a suit to recover the money from A., B., who was not a party, was examined as a witness. A suit was afterwards instituted against the representatives of B. to recover the estate itself, and an order of course was obtained in it to use the depositions in the former suit, saving just exceptions. It was discharged as irregular. Hope v. Liddell, 21 Beav. 180.

Depositions taken in a cause wherein tenant in tail, or the father, is only tenant for life, remainder to the son, cannot be read against the son. Peterborough v. Norfolk, Pre. Ch. 212.

Tenant for life, in possession of real estate, was also tenant for life of personal estate, under same will, and was heir-at-law of surviving trustee of real estate, but was not a trustee of the personal estate. Two suits were instituted against him, one by the tenant for life in remainder of the real estate, complaining of mismanagement of that estate, and praying consequential relief, and particularly the removal of the tenant for life in possession from being trustee ; the other suit was instituted by the first tenant in tail in remainder for the same objects as regarded the real estate, but praying also relief in respect of personal estate :—Held, that evidence taken in the former suit was not admissible in the latter, it not appearing that the witnesses were dead, or incapable of being examined. The court declined, except on consent, to make one decree in both the above suits. Blagrave v. Blagrave, 1 De G. & Sm. 252 ; 16 L. J., Ch. 346 ; 11 Jur. 744.

A., B. and C. were partners. C. became lunatic, but A. and B. carried on the business in partnership : and then A. died. In a suit to take the accounts of the firm of A. and B., it was held, that affidavits made by A., in a suit between him and the committee of C., in which he alluded to an understanding between himself and B., which in some instances had been acted upon, that the advances made to the customers of A. and B., should be repaid before any portion of the moneys paid by those customers should be applied in payment of the debts of the prior firm of A., B. and C., were not sufficient proof of such an agreement in a contest between B. and the executors of A. Toulmin v. Copland, 3 Y. & Coll. 625.

Although, generally, the best evidence for a litigant is his adversary's testimony in his favour, yet this rule must be qualified, where the evidence was given in a suit in which the controversy was not between the same parties, nor put upon the same footing, or where the adversary had an interest in giving the testimony in question. Ib.

In replevin in which the question was, whether the locus in quo, a tract of mountain land, was the property of B., as lord of the manor, or formed part of the estate of M., the plaintiff tendered the depositions of two witnesses taken in a chancery suit, previously to the 1st November, 1852, instituted by E. against M., the object of which was to set aside the purchase of the estate, on the ground that M. had acted as his (E.'s) solicitor, and had given inadequate value. In that suit M. sought to shew, by his answer, that the acreage and value of the estate were but small, and used as part of his evidence the depositions of two former tenants of the estate in corroboration. These depositions contained statements respecting the extent of the estate, and tended to prove that the locus in quo could have formed no portion thereof. The plaintiff claimed under B., and the defendant on the record was tenant to M., who was the real defendant in the action :—Held, that the depositions were admissible as primary evidence of the same facts against M. in a subsequent action by a stranger to the suit of E. against M. Richards v. Morgan, 4 B. & S. 641 ; 33 L. J., Q. B. 114 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 559 ; 9 L. T. 662 ; 12 W. R. 162.

Evidence with respect to a transaction between A. and B., taken on behalf of B. in a suit between B. and C. for the purpose of asserting against C. a right to property which B. claimed by virtue of that transaction, cannot be used by D. in a suit to which B., C. and D. are parties, and in which D. sets up both against B. and C. an equitable interest in the property, contemporaneous with and growing out of the title alleged to have been acquired by B. A. made a voluntary statement of lands in favour of C., and afterwards, under an alleged contract for sale, conveyed them to B., who was represented on the face of the conveyance to be a purchaser for value. B. then filed a bill against C., to have the voluntary settlement set aside, and his own title on the lands established, and in that suit examined a witness to prove the bona fides of the sale. D. subsequently filed a bill against B. and C., alleging that the sale was valid, but that the price was in part paid out of the moneys which belonged to D., and claiming a lien to that extent upon the lands purchased. Finally C. filed a bill against B. and D. to set aside the sale in toto, on the ground of its being fraudulent and collusive, and to establish the voluntary settlement :—Held, that in the last-mentioned suit, upon an issue directed between D. and C., to try whether the purchase-money was bonâ fide paid, it was not competent to D. to use the depositions taken in the suit between B. and C. Humphreys v. Pensam, 1 Myl. & C. 581.

In a tithe suit by a vicar, for small tithes, depositions of deceased witnesses in an old suit, by the rector, for the great tithes of the parish, were received as evidence. Ward v. Pomfret, 5 Sim. 475 ; 2 L. J., Ch. 22.

Answer purporting to be the answer of a minor by his mother and guardian, may be read against the mother in another cause where she is defendant in her own capacity. Beasley v. Magrath, 2 Sch. & Lef. 34.

When Action Dismissed.]—Depositions taken on a bill of revivor, afterwards dismissed upon the ground that the party had no title to revive, cannot be read ; otherwise, if the bill had been dismissed for want of equity merely. Backhouse v. Middleton, 1 Ch. Ca. 173 ; 3 Ch. Rep. 39 ; 2 Freem. 132.

If plaintiff's bill be dismissed for irregularity, as where a devisee revives the suit for his devisor, and several depositions are taken, and then the cause on hearing is dismissed, because a devisee claiming as a purchaser, and not by representation, cannot revive, then the depositions cannot be read in any other cause, for there was no cause regularly before the court. S. C., 1 Ch. Ca. 173.

But if a cause was once regularly before the court, though the bill be dismissed by reason that the remedy was at law, then the depositions will be evidence. Smith v. Veale, 1 Ld. Raym. 735.

For what Purpose.]—An examined office copy of a deposition in chancery is admissible for the purpose of contradicting the testimony of the same person in a court of law. Highfield v. Peake, M. & M. 109 ; 31 R. R. 722.

Where depositions in a suit in equity are given in evidence at law, and the bill and answer are also put in to shew that the depositions are admissible, the opposite counsel has no right to refer to the bill and answer in his address to the jury. Chappell v. Purday, 14 M. & W. 303 ; 14 L. J., Ex. 258.

Depositions of a witness made in another cause, or another court, may be read for the purpose of confronting his evidence, and without any order of the court. Anon., Mos. 118.

Depositions in former cause between different parties, cannot be used as to credit of witness. Mackworth v. Penrose, Dick. 50.

Semble, on bill for relief, the evidence taken may be read as evidence of reputation against persons not parties to suit ; but secus, on bill to perpetuate only. Biddiford v. Partridge, 3 Anstr. 646.

On petition to expunge debt of C., examination of witness on former occasion as to a debt sought to be proved by A., cannot be read. Coles, Ex parte, 3 Madd. 315 ; Buck, 242.

Pleadings and depositions and a decree in a former suit (the same will being in issue) are admissible, as shewing the acts and knowledge of the parties who had the same interests under the will as the plaintiff. Lorton (Viscount) v. Kingston (Earl), 5 Cl. & F. 269.

Examination in chancery may be used before the delegates. Gargrave v. ——, 2 Ch. Ca. 250.

Declarations as to Pedigree.]—Upon the trial of an ejectment respecting Blackacre, between A. and B., in which it was necessary for A. to prove that he was the legitimate son of S. ; A., after proving by other evidence that S. was his reputed father, offered to give in evidence a deposition made by S. in a cause in chancery, instituted by A. against C., in order to perpetuate testimony to the alleged fact disputed by C., that he was the legitimate son of S., in which character he claimed an estate in remainder in Whiteacre, which was also claimed in remainder by C. B., the defendant in the ejectment, did not claim Blackacre under either A. or C., the plaintiff and defendant in the chancery suit :—Held, by the judges, that according to law the deposition of S. could not be received upon the trial of such ejectment against B. as evidence of declarations of S., the alleged father, in a matter of pedigree. Berkeley's Case, 4 Camp. 401 ; 14 R. R. 782.

Commission.]—Depositions taken under an old commission may be admitted without producing the commission, as it may be presumed to be lost ; aliter, where under a recent one. Bayley v. Wylie, 6 Esp. 87.

The bill and answer need not be produced. Ib.

Nature of Interrogatories.]—In an action, the issue at the trial being in which of the two counties the locus in quo was situated, an exemplification of the depositions taken in an ancient suit to perpetuate testimony, to which the plaintiff and defendant were privies, is admissible evidence at the trial, though it appeared that the interrogatories upon which the depositions were framed were leading interrogatories, such as would not have been allowed to be put at the trial. Williams v. Williams, 4 M. & S. 497.

Parol Evidence of.]—A witness examined on the trial of an issue out of chancery, died; a new trial was granted, and on the new trial parol evidence was allowed to be given of what this witness had deposed on the former trial, notwithstanding there was the usual order for reading the depositions in equity of such witnesses as had died since the first trial. Tod v. Winchilsea (Earl), 3 Car. & P. 387.

Producing Office Copies.]—On a reference to the master under a decree, all the evidence referred to in the decree is before the master. Therefore, a party who objects to the draft of the master's report, on the ground that it is not warranted by the evidence, is not bound to produce office copies of the depositions; but he ought previously to notify to the master what parts of the evidence he intends to rely upon. Wilson v. Wilson, 15 Sim. 487; 11 Jur. 340.

3. Proceedings in County Courts.

Witness as to.]—The modern county courts are courts of record without records, and the mode of proving what occurred on a trial in one of those courts is, to call a person who was present who can speak as to the particular matter of fact. Harmer v. Bean, 3 Car. & K. 307.

Clerk's Books.]—But the clerk's book, or a certified copy of entries from such book, is the best and therefore the only evidence of proceedings in a county court. Reg. v. Rowland, 1 F. & F. 72.

A minute of the proceedings of a county court, made by the clerk, pursuant to the County Courts Acts, is conclusive evidence of them, even though the judge gives evidence to the contrary. Dews v. Ryley, 2 L. M. & P. 544; 11 C. B. 434; 20 L. J., C. P. 264; 15 Jur. 1159.

Recital on Writ.]—Goods having been seized under an execution upon a judgment in a county court against R., the plaintiff, who claimed the goods under an assignment which was void against creditors, brought an action against the bailiffs of the county court for such seizure, and, to prove the trespass, put in evidence the writ of execution, with the levy indorsed thereon. The writ recited the judgment recovered in the county court:—Held, that this was not sufficient evidence of the judgment to justify the bailiffs. White v. Morris, 11 C. B. 1015; 21 L. J., C. P. 185; 16 Jur. 500.

Effect of Judgment.]—See County Court.

4. Proceedings before Magistrates.

a. Orders.

Recitals in.]—Upon the trial of an indictment for disobeying an order of justices, the recital upon the face of the order of the facts giving the magistrates jurisdiction is not evidence of the existence of such facts. Rex v. Gilkes, 2 M. & Ry. 454; 8 B. & C. 439; 6 L. J. (o.s.) M. C. 118.

Under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 73, an order of a justice, reciting that the plaintiff's timber was laid on the highway, and directing its removal, is conclusive to shew that the locus in quo was a highway; so that the plaintiff, in an action of trespass against the justice who made the order, cannot dispute his jurisdiction on the ground that the locus in quo was not a highway. Mould v. Williams, D. & M. 631; 5 Q. B. 469.

As to Highway.]—An order of justices made under 34 Geo. 3, c. 64, in the form given in the appendix, dividing a highway lying in two parishes, by a transverse line, into two parts, and directing that they should be repaired by the two parishes respectively, is conclusive evidence, on an indictment for the non-repair of one of the parts, that it is in the parish ordered to repair it. Reg. v. Hickling, 7 Q. B. 880; 14 L. J., M. C. 177; 9 Jur. 1075.

Affiliation.]—An order of affiliation is admissible to contradict a witness who denies having been present at the making of such order. Watson v. Little, 5 H. & N. 472; 29 L. J., Ex. 267; 8 W. R. 420.

b. Commitments and Convictions.

Conclusive.]—A conviction by a justice having competent jurisdiction, unappealed against and unreversed, cannot be controverted in evidence. Fawcett v. Foulis, 7 B. & C. 394; 1 M. & Ry. 102; 6 L. J. (o.s.) M. C. 44.

So, in an action against two justices, for seizing and detaining a decked and registered vessel on the river Thames, having gunpowder on board, under 2 Geo. 3, c. 28:—Held, that the owner could not give evidence to shew that she was not a boat within the meaning of that statute. Brittain v. Kinnaird, 4 Moore, 50; 1 Br. & B. 432; Gow, 164; 21 R. R. 680.

Action for disturbing a watercourse, which of right, ought to flow into the plaintiff's close to irrigate it. Plea, a denial of the right. On the trial it appeared that the watercourse was not ancient, but that the water had flowed in its present course for more than twenty years past the plaintiff's close. There was evidence that during that period the plaintiff and those under whom he claimed had been constantly in the habit of drawing off the water to irrigate his close, and that the owners of the watercourse resisted it. On one occasion when plaintiff's servant drew off the water he was summoned before a justice for so doing; the plaintiff's son, by his direction, attended and defended the servant, and paid a fine of one shilling. The conviction was under a local act, from which there was an appeal. The plaintiff did not appeal. The conviction was tendered and rejected:—Held, improperly rejected, as the conviction unappealed against was evidence of an acknowledgment by the plaintiff that the usage to draw off the water for irrigation was not as of right. Eaton v. Swansea Waterworks Co., 17 Q. B. 267; 20 L. J., Q. B. 482; 15 Jur. 675.

In what Actions.]—If A. is convicted before a justice, on the evidence of B., although B.'s name does not appear on the conviction, he cannot avail himself of it in any civil proceeding between him and A. Smith v. Rummens, 1 Camp. 9.

So, if B. and C. are convicted of a conspiracy on the prosecution of A., the conviction is not admissible evidence in an action afterwards brought against them by A. for the same conspiracy. Hathaway v. Barrow, 1 Camp. 151. And see Burdon v. Browning, 1 Taunt. 520.

The conviction of a person before a justice of the peace for obstructing officers, in which the evidence given is set out, cannot be given in evidence to contradict what is sworn by a witness at the trial as to what he swore before the justices. Rex v. Howe, 6 Esp. 124; 1 Camp. 461.

A conviction by justices in rem is evidence as between strangers, though founded upon the evidence of one of the parties who uses it. Davies v. Nest, 6 Car. & P. 167.

In an action against a defendant for giving the plaintiff into custody on a charge of stealing oysters from an oyster-bed:—Held, that the defendant could not, for the purpose of proving bona fides on his part, give evidence of a prior conviction of a third party for stealing oysters from the same bed, such conviction not having come to the knowledge of the defendant at the time of his giving the plaintiff into custody. Thomas v. Russell, 9 Ex. 764; 2 C. L. R. 542; 23 L. J., Ex 233; 2 W. R. 418.

When a plaintiff had been convicted under the Highway Act, 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 69, of erecting a building so as to encroach on a highway, and which building the defendant, as surveyor of the highway, had pulled down:—Held, that the conviction of the plaintiff under that section justified the defendant, and was conclusive as to the building being an encroachment. Keane v. Reynolds, 2 El. & Bl. 748; 2 C. L. R. 245; 18 Jur. 242.

Effect of Recitals in.]—Where, in a conviction, the summons is recited, such recital of it is evidence of the summons; but in an action against the convicting magistrate for false imprisonment, the plaintiff is entitled to give evidence to shew that there was no summons, and, if he succeeds in doing so, the conviction is bad. Mason v. Barker, 1 Car. & K. 200.

An examined copy of the magistrate's conviction, reciting an information, is sufficient proof of the information. Scarth v. Gardener, 5 Car. & P. 38.

Before Police Magistrate.] — A conviction before a police magistrate can only be proved by the production of the record of the conviction, or an examined copy of it. Hartley v. Hindmarsh, 1 H. & R. 607; 35 L. J., M. C. 255; L. R. 1 C. P. 553; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 502; 14 L. T. 795; 14 W. R. 862.

Copy.]—The 5 Geo. 4, c. 83, s. 17, requires convictions before justices under the act to be filed in the court of quarter sessions, and makes a copy of such conviction, signed by the clerk of the peace, evidence of the same. At a petty sessions it was attempted to prove a previous conviction of an offence under 5 Geo. 4, c. 83, by the oath of the police and the production of the minute-book of the clerk of the court, containing an entry of such conviction:—Held, that such evidence was insufficient. Giles v. Siney, 13 W. R. 92; 11 L. T. 310.

Warrant.]—A warrant of commitment is not evidence of the facts which are therein recited. Stevens v. Clark, 2 M. & Rob. 435; Car. & M. 509.

c. Depositions.

On another Charge.]—In order to prove malice or motive against an accused, the deposition of the deceased against him, taken before the magistrates on another charge, and for which he was afterwards convicted, was tendered in evidence, and it was admitted. Reg. v. Buckley, 13 Cox, C. C. 293.

Signing by Magistrates.]—It is not necessary that each deposition should be signed by the justice taking it; and therefore where a number of depositions taken at the same hearing on several sheets of paper were fastened together and signed by the justice taking them once only at the end of all the depositions in the form given in schedule M. to the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, one of these depositions will be admissible after the death of the witness making it, although no part of it is on the sheet signed by the justice. Reg. v. Parker, 39 L. J., M. C. 60; L. R. 1 C. C. 225; 21 L. T. 724; 18 W. R. 353. S. P., Reg. v. Carrol, 11 Cox. C. C. 322.

Where, on a preliminary hearing of a case, the magistrate's clerk had taken down what a witness said, but neither witness nor magistrate signed it:—Held, that what the witness said might be proved by any one who heard him, without producing the clerk's note. Jeans v. Wheedon, 2 M. & Rob. 486.

In Writing.]—The court will not in the absence of positive evidence presume that examinations before justices are not taken down in writing, so as to let in parol evidence. Parsons v. Brown, 3 Car. & K. 295.

It is to be presumed, that what is stated on oath before a magistrate is taken down in writing; and, therefore, parol evidence of such a statement is not receivable, unless it is first shewn that it was not so taken down. Phillips v. Wimburn, 4 Car. & P. 273.

The rule, that a written deposition, taken before a magistrate, under 7 Geo. 4, c. 64, s. 3, is the best evidence of the statement of the witness, is not confined to the proceeding in which the deposition is taken, but extends to all proceedings, civil as well as criminal, in which it is sought to adduce the statement of the witness in evidence. Leach v. Simpson, 5 M. & W. 309; 7 D. P. C. 13; 3 Jur. 654.

Evidence is admissible to add to the examination of a party before a magistrate, though taken in writing. Venafra v. Johnson, 1 M. & Rob. 316.

Party Alive.]—Where a plaintiff claimed to hold land under A., and on a previous charge of malicious trespass on the land before the petty sessions, had called A. as a witness, who however disproved the tenure:—Held, that the deposition of A. was admissible in evidence against the plaintiff, although A. was alive. Cole v. Hadley, 3 P. & D. 458; 11 A. & E. 807; 4 Jur. 483.

Whether Party Present.]—In an action by B. against A. for false imprisonment, A. pleaded a justification that B. had been guilty of embezzlement. A. and his witnesses having made the charge before a magistrate, depositions were taken in the hearing of B., and he made a statement in answer:—Held, that these depositions and B.'s statement in answer were receivable for A., as being matters stated in the hearing of B., to which he made an answer, but the depositions were no proof of any fact therein stated. Jones v. Morrell, 1 Car. & K. 266.

Party Bedridden.]—Where a prosecutrix in a case of felony is bedridden, and there is no probability that she will ever be able to leave her house, the judge will admit her deposition before the magistrate as if she were dead. Rex v. Hogg, 6 Car. & P. 176.

See further, CRIMINAL LAW.

d. Statements of Parties.

In an action of assault, what was said by the magistrate to the plaintiff at a previous investigation of the circumstances before him, cannot be received as evidence on the part of the defendant at the trial, unless it drew any observations in reply from the plaintiff. Child v. Grace, 2 Car. & P. 193. See Edden v. Thorniloe, 6 Jur., N. P. C. 265.

5. PROCEEDINGS IN OTHER COURTS.

Decisions.]—On plea, sentence in Ecclesiastical Court, ex directo, in a matter properly cognizable there, is conclusive evidence where the same matter comes in question collaterally in a court of law or equity. Meadows v. Kingston (Duchess), Ambl. 756.

Sentence of Ecclesiastical Court held admissible, but not conclusive evidence on non-reconciliation between husband and wife. Bateman v. Ross (Countess), 1 Dow. 235.

Sentence in Ecclesiastical Court for fornication, &c., in a criminal way, not evidence against the issue; otherwise, if on the point of the marriage, and no collusion. Brownsword v. Edwards, 2 Ves. 245.

Infant defendants are not precluded as to question of bankruptcy by production of commission, &c., though no notice of intention to dispute has been given. Bell v. Tinney, 4 Madd. 372.

A. married B. by licence in 1798, during the time that the 26 Geo. 2, c. 33, was in force. In 1802 B. commenced a suit in the Ecclesiastical Court against A. of nullity of marriage, on the ground that she was a minor at the time of the marriage, and that her father's consent had not been given. It was proved in the suit that A. was a minor, and that her father was absent at the time of the marriage. A sentence of nullity was pronounced in June, 1802. In May, 1802, C., the only child of the alleged marriage, was born. Upon an inquiry who was the heir at law of A., C. claimed to be sole heiress, and objected to the reception, as evidence, of the sentence of the Ecclesiastical Court, on the ground that it had been fraudulently and collusively obtained. In support of this case, C. produced a bond, given by A. in 1801, for securing an annuity to B. for her life for her separate use, in which it was declared that it should remain good, notwithstanding a sentence of nullity of marriage, and produced a witness to prove conversations between A. and B. previously to the suit, in which they agreed that A. should give B. an annuity, and that legal proceedings to annul the marriage should be taken:—Held, that the sentence was not fraudulently or collusively obtained, and was admissible in evidence. Harrison v. Southampton Corporation, 22 L. J., Ch. 372.

A decree of the court of claims under stat. 11 & 12 Will. 3, s. 2, c. 2 (Eng.), adjudicating upon lands vested in an innocent person as charged with a rent, is not admissible in evidence, not being a matter within their jurisdiction; and although the possession of the lands and rent has ever since gone in accordance with the decree, it does not render it admissible, at least, without proving that it was known to the parties against whom it is produced, or those through whom they claim. Dublin (Archbishop) v. Trimleston (Lord), 12 Ir. Ch. R. 251.

Pleadings.]—Personal answer of defendant to libel in Ecclesiastical Court, preserved among the records of the register, is admissible evidence in suit for tithes in exchequer, by party claiming under same title as person whose answer it was. Taylor v. Cook, 8 Price, 664.

A man's answer in the Spiritual Court may be read against him in this court. Mildmay v. Mildmay, 1 Vern. 53.

Evidence—Court of Exchequer.]—Evidence taken in the Court of Exchequer may be used between the same parties litigant in chancery. Magrath v. Veitch, 1 Hog. 127.

Court will not, on motion, order depositions in tithe cause in exchequer, to be read in a tithe cause in this court, against other occupiers of land in the same parish, though objects of both suits and the interest of parties were the same. Goodenough v. Alway, 2 Sim. & S. 481.

Office copies of depositions by living persons in a tithe suit in the exchequer, may be read in a similar suit of this court, against another defendant, who makes the same defence, on production of office copies of the bill and answer in the former suit, without any order of this court for that purpose. Williams v. Broadhead, 1 Sim. 151; 5 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 112.

—— Court of Admiralty.]—Examination in the Admiralty Court used in the Court of Chancery. Watkins v. Fursland, Tothill, 192.

—— Bankruptcy.]—The notes of the evidence of a bankrupt taken at his public examination are not evidence against him in an action to which he is a party in a representative capacity. New's Trustee v. Hunting, 66 L. J., Q. B. 554; [1897] 2 Q. B. 19; 76 L. T. 742; 45 W. R. 577—C. A.

The proceedings under a commission of bankruptcy, superseded, ordered to be produced at the hearing of a cause, in the Court of Chancery in Ireland, with a view to evidence, from the bankrupt's examination, but not of course Bernal, Ex parte, 11 Ves. 557.

Plaintiff had been examined in a bankruptcy, and defendant in his answer referred to the examination, as inconsistent with the bill of the plaintiff, who gave evidence in the suit, but was not cross-examined. Statement in bankruptcy which was neither an admission nor a confession, admitted as evidence at the hearing. Davis v. Robinson, 6 W. R. 673.

The examination of the assignee before the commissioner as to the sale of the property, was permitted to be read as evidence of the assignee's misconduct, although petition did not pray a resale. Turrill, Ex parte, 3 Deac. & C. 346.

An order of course may be made, under Consolidated Order XIX. r. 4, to read, at the hearing of a cause, proceedings in bankruptcy, including depositions. Lake v. Peisley, L. R. 1 Eq. 173; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 1012.

—— Court of Council of York.]—Depositions taken in Court of Council of York not allowable in chancery. Rex v. Arundel (Countess), Hob. 112. See also Fielders v. Winchester (Bishop), 1 Barnard, K. B. 323.

Depositions taken without bill or answer, not allowable in chancery. Ib.

—— Star Chamber.]—Allegations and admissions made in the course of arbitrary proceedings in the Star Chamber, and treaty for a compromise against its decree, as well as before the House of Commons, in an attempt to be relieved from the judgment of that court, were not to influence the court of equity. Skinners' Co. v. Irish Society, 7 Beav. 593. And see S. C., 1 Myl. & C. 162. Affirmed, 12 Cl. & F. 425; 9 Jur. 1043.

—— Chancery of Lancaster.]—An order of course, to read, in a suit, evidence taken in a suit between the same parties in the Chancery Court of Lancaster, discharged as irregular. Stephenson v. Biney, L. R. 2 Eq. 303; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 428; 14 L. T. 432; 14 W. R. 788.

The right course in such a case is to prove that the issue is the same by production of the bill and answer, and the depositions can then be read without an order. Ib.

Evidence before Extinct Court.]—Where there had been a decree of one of the extinct courts, and depositions taken in the cause in which such decree was made, the court held that these depositions could not be used in evidence in a cause in this court (the court for matrimonial causes) except so far as they were embodied in the decree and therefore part of the proceedings of a court, and documents of a public nature of which this court would receive in evidence a certified copy. Linzee v. Linzee, 29 L. J., P. 128.

Order to Read.]—It is not necessary or proper to obtain an order of course to read in a cause depositions taken in another court, if they can be made evidence in the ordinary way. Allen v. Bonnett, L. R. 6 Eq. 522; 16 W. R. 1075.

6. Inquisitions.

Lunacy.]—Where, to an action against executors on the bond of their testator, they pleaded non est factum, and set up lunacy as a defence, an inquisition taken under a commission of lunacy against the testator after the execution of the bond, finding that he had been a lunatic from a day antecedent to that, without any lucid interval, is admissible. Faulder v. Silk, 3 Camp. 127; 13 R. R. 771.

An inquisition of lunacy is always admitted to be read, but is not conclusive evidence, for you may traverse it. Sergeson v. Sealy, 2 Atk. 412; 9 Mod. 370.

An inquisition of lunacy is not conclusive evidence of the precise date at which the lunacy commenced. Bradbury, Ex parte, Walden, In re, Mont. & C. 625; 4 Deac. 202; 9 L. J., Bk. 7; 3 Jur. 1108.

—— Irish Inquisition.]—Where an order in lunacy has been made in Ireland by the court having jurisdiction for that purpose, and a transcript of the record has, under the provisions of s. 52 of the Lunacy Regulation Act, 1853, been transmitted to this country, the English court must treat the order as a binding order, and has no jurisdiction to entertain an application either for the purpose of setting aside the proceedings in Ireland, or for a supersedeas. Any such application must be made to the court which originally made the order. Talbot, In re, 51 L. J., Ch. 360; 20 Ch. D. 269; 45 L. T. 730; 30 W. R. 386—C. A.

Whether Production of Commission necessary.]—An old inquisition post mortem, may be read in evidence, without producing the commission upon which it issued; but it is necessary to prove that such a commission did actually issue, but which may be done vivâ voce. Anderton v. Magawley, 3 Bro. P. C. 588.

Ownership.]—A document from the Court of Exchequer, purporting to be an extent of Crown lands, and pursuing the directions of the 4 Edw. I, stat. 1, may be given in evidence without producing the commission, or the authority under which it was taken. Rowe v. Brenton, 3 M. & Ry. 164; 8 B. & C. 747.

An inquisition made by a sheriff's jury to ascertain to whom the property of goods taken under a fi. fa. belongs, though found in favour of A., is not admissible in trover for the goods, brought by A. against the sheriff. Latkow v. Eamer, 2 H. Bl. 437.

In an action against a sheriff for a false return of nulla bona, an inquisition taken by him to ascertain the property of the goods taken under the fi. fa., finding them to be the property of a third person, not of the defendant in the execution, is not admissible for the sheriff. Glossop v. Pole, 3 M. & S. 175.

Damages.]—A horse having been killed by falling down an old shaft of a mine which had not been sufficiently covered over, the owner of the horse charged a person who was in the possession of a mine near to the spot with being also in possession of that shaft. The latter denied that the shaft was his, but said that if a miner's jury were called, and that they should say that the shaft was his, he would pay for the horse. A miner's jury was accordingly called, and they found in writing that the shaft was his:—Held, that this finding of the jury, coupled with his declaration, was admissible against him in an action to recover compensation for the loss of the horse. Sybray v. White, 1 M. & W. 435; 2 Gale, 68; 1 Tyr. & G. 746; 5 L. J., Ex. 173.

Liability to Repair.]—On an indictment for non-repair of Kelham Bridge, ratione tenuræ, the defendants tendered in evidence a record temp. 18 Edw. 3, setting out a presentment of the Bishop of Lincoln for not repairing the bridge; that the indictment was removed by certiorari, and at the trial the finding of the jury was, that the bishop was not liable to do the repairs, and that the jury was ignorant who was liable to do them; that the bridge had been constructed sixty years, and had been repaired from the alms of the men passing over it. It also appeared that a grant of pontage to the men of Kelham was also issued from the crown, upon the ground that it had been found by inquest that no one was liable to repair the bridge:—Held, that these documents were admissible. Reg. v. Sutton, 3 N. & P. 569; 8 A. & E. 516; 1 W. W. & H. 525; 7 L. J., Q. B. 205.

Tolls.]—In an action by the lessee of a corporation for toll traverse for a waggon, and a market toll for cattle, an information quo warranto by the attorney-general of Queen Elizabeth against the corporation, in respect of the customs they claimed and used, is not receivable, as it does not appear that it was prosecuted, such an information, like an indictment, not being evidence, unless there is the finding of a jury upon it. Lancum v. Lovell, 6 Car. & P. 437.

Where Evidence Lost.]—A report of the master finding a particular fact, will not be ordered to be read as evidence in another suit relating to the same matter, but between different parties, though the evidence, by which that fact was formerly proved, has been since lost. Maule v. Mence, 3 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 42.

C. OTHER DOCUMENTS.

1. Letters.

a. Date.

Effect of.]—The date of a letter is evidence against the writer that it was written where dated. Anon., 2 Chit. 194.

The date a letter bears is primâ facie its true date. Potez v. Glossop, 2 Ex. 191. S. P., Malpas v. Clements, 19 L. J., Q. B. 435.

Quære, whether the date a letter bears is primâ facie its true date. Butler v. Mountgarrett (Viscount), 7 H. L. Cas. 633.

A letter will be presumed to have been written on the day on which it bears date. Goodtitle d. Baker v. Milburn, 6 L. J., Ex. 209; 2 M. & W. 853.

Post-mark.]—The date in the post mark upon a letter is primâ facie evidence that such letter existed at the time of that date; but it is necessary to prove that the letter bears the genuine post-mark used by the particular post-office whose stamp it purports to bear at the time. Fletcher v. Braddyl, 3 Stark. 64; 23 R. R. 758.

The post-office mark is not conclusive of the time when a letter is posted. Stocken v. Collin or Collins, 7 M. & W. 515; 9 Car. & P. 653.

But if a letter containing a libel has the post-mark on it, this is primâ facie evidence of its having been published. Shipley v. Todhunter, 7 Car. & P. 580. S. P., Warren v. Warren, 1 C., M. & R. 150; 4 Tyr. 850.

Semble, if the post-mark of a letter is given in evidence, it ought to be proved, either by persons from the post-office, or by persons who are in the habit of receiving letters from the post-office. Woodcock v. Houldsworth, 16 M. & W. 124; 16 L. J., Ex. 49.

A date of a letter varying from the post-mark, it was objected that the post-mark could only be proved to be genuine by calling the person from the post-office who impressed the letter; on which the judge offered to stay the cause till the arrival of such clerk. But the jury found the post-mark genuine without his being called. The court refused to disturb the verdict. Abbey v. Lill, 5 Bing. 299; 2 M. & P. 534; 7 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 96.

The post-office marks, in town or country, proved to be such, are evidence that the letters on which they are were in the office to which those marks belong, at the time those marks specify. Rex v. Plumer, R. & R. 264; 15 R. R. 741.

b. Posting and Delivering.

Posting—Effect on Contracts.]—Proof of the posting of several letters at successive dates is not conclusive of any of them having been received at the address at which they were directed. Reidpath's Case, Constantinople and Alexandria Hotels Co., In re, 40 L. J., Ch. 39; L. R. 11 Eq. 86; 23 L. T. 834; 19 W. R. 219.

A proposed contract is not binding on the proposer until its acceptance by the other party has been communicated to him, and posting a letter communicating the acceptance to him, is not sufficient to make it binding on him if he does not in fact receive the letter. British and American Telegraph Co. v. Colson, 40 L. J., Ex. 97; L. R. 6 Ex. 108; 23 L. T. 868. But see following cases.

The defendant applied for shares in the plaintiff company. The company allotted the shares to the defendant and duly addressed to him and posted a letter containing the notice of allotment, but the letter never was received by him:—Held, by Baggallay and Thesiger, L.JJ., Bramwell, L.J., dissenting, that the defendant was a shareholder. British and American Telegraph Co. v. Colson (supra), overruled. Household Fire Insurance Co. v. Grant, 48 L. J., Ex. 577; 4 Ex. D. 216; 41 L. T. 298; 27 W. R. 858—C. A.

A contract is complete when a letter has been posted accepting an offer which can be accepted by letter so sent. Imperial Land Co. of Marseilles, In re, Harris's Case, 41 L. J., Ch. 621; L. R. 7 Ch. 587; 26 L. T. 781; 20 W. R. 690.

A company being in course of formation, T., in March, 1866, sent a written application for shares, giving an imperfect address. Shares were allotted to him, and notice of the allotment posted on the 16th of March to the address given on his application. This should have reached him on the 17th, but owing to this address being imperfect, it did not reach him at all. Another letter was posted on the 20th, which reached him on the 21st. On the 20th he posted a letter to revoke his application for shares:—Held, that as the notice of the 16th would have reached him but for his giving a wrong address, its being posted must be taken as good notice to him, and that his revocation was too late. Imperial Land Co. of Marseilles, In re, Townsend's Case, 41 L. J., Ch. 198; L. R. 13 Eq. 148; 25 L. T. 692; 20 W. R. 164.

When a person has applied for shares, and they have been allotted to him, and notice of the allotment has been posted to and received by the allottee, the date at which the contract to take the shares is completed is the time of the posting the notice: and if the allottee sets up a revocation, he must prove that the letter of revocation was posted before the notice of allotment. Ib.

When an application for shares in a company has been sent by post, the contract to take shares is complete and binding from the moment that the letter announcing the allotment is put into the post, whether such letter subsequently reaches the allottee or not. Imperial Land Co. of Marseilles, In re, Wall's Case, 42 L. J., Ch. 372; L. R. 15 Eq. 18.

On the 28th June, 1873, M. H. by deed agreed to assign for value a policy, effected with the Reliance Assurance Society on his own life, to his father, who, on the same day, by a separate deed assigned it to D. by way of equitable mortgage to secure a present loan and future advances. The parties were all resident in Ireland, and a memorandum at foot of the policy which had been issued from the Dublin branch office, directed that notice of assignments should be given at the head office in London. Immediately upon the execution of the deeds of the 28th June, D. prepared a formal notice of the assignment to the father, in whose name and at whose request it was signed by him and addressed and posted in Dublin to B., the society's secretary at the London office. M. H., the son, was adjudicated a bankrupt in January, 1874, and died in the following August, when his assignees in bankruptcy gave notice to the London office, and claimed the proceeds of the policy as having been in his order or disposition at the time of his adjudication, B. deposing that D.'s notice had never reached the London office:—Held, per Ball, C., that the notice having been duly posted, must be presumed to have reached its destination; and, per Christian, L.J., that, irrespectively of the question whether the notice was actually received at the office, the mere posting of it was effectual to prevent the policy from being in the order or disposition of the bankrupt at the date of his bankruptcy by the consent and permission of the true owner within the meaning of the Irish Bankrupt and Insolvent Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 60), s. 313. Hickey, In re, 10 Ir. R. Eq. 117.

Withdrawal before Acceptance.]—An offer in writing for the sale of real estate, giving time for the acceptance of the offer, cannot be converted into a binding contract, if at any time before acceptance the person to whom the offer is made becomes aware of its withdrawal, although formal notice of such withdrawal may not be given to him. Dickinson v. Dodds, 45 L. J., Ch. 777; 2 Ch. D. 463; 34 L. T. 607; 24 W. R. 594—C. A.

The defendants offered goods to the plaintiffs by a letter posted on the 1st of October; the plaintiffs received the offer on the 11th, and accepted it by telegram on the same day, and by letter on the 15th. On the 8th of October the defendants posted to the plaintiffs a letter withdrawing the offer. This letter reached the plaintiffs on the 20th:—Held, by Lindley, J., that the withdrawal was inoperative, a complete contract binding both parties having been entered into on the 11th of October when the plaintiffs accepted the offer of the 1st, which they had no reason to suppose was withdrawn. Bryne v. Van Tienhoven, 49 L. J., C. P. 316; 5 C. P. D. 344; 42 L. T. 371; 44 J. P. 667.

Revocation of Offer, when Effective.]—The defendant, being possessed of warrants for iron, wrote from London to the plaintiffs at Middlesborough, asking whether they could get him an offer for the warrants. Further correspondence ensued, and ultimately the defendant wrote to the plaintiffs fixing 40*s.* per ton, nett cash, as the lowest price at which he could sell, and stating that he would hold the offer open till the following Monday. The plaintiffs on the Monday morning at 9.42 telegraphed to the defendant: Please wire whether you would accept forty for delivery over two months, or if not, longest limit you could give." The defendant sent no answer to this telegram, and after its receipt on the same day he sold the warrants, and at 1.25 p.m. telegraphed to plaintiffs that he had done so. Before the arrival of his telegram to that effect, the plaintiffs having at 1 p.m. found a purchaser for the iron, sent a telegram at 1.34 p.m. to the defendant stating that they had secured his price. The defendant refused to deliver the iron, and thereupon the plaintiffs brought an action against him for non-delivery thereof. The jury found at the trial that the relation between the parties was that of buyer and seller, not of principal and agent. The state of the iron market was very unsettled at the time of the transaction, and it was impossible to foresee when the plaintiffs' telegram was sent at 9.42 a.m. how prices would range during the day:—Held, by Lush, J., that under the circumstances the plaintiffs' telegram at 9.42 ought not to be construed as a rejection of the defendant's offer, but merely as an inquiry whether he would modify the terms of it, and that, although the defendant was at liberty to revoke his offer before the close of the day on Monday, such revocation was not effectual until it reached the plaintiffs; consequently the defendant's offer was still open when the plaintiffs accepted it, and the action was, therefore, maintainable. Cooke v. Oxley (3 Term Rep. 653) discussed. Stevenson v. McLean, 49 L. J., Q. B. 701; 5 Q. B. D. 346; 42 L. T. 897; 28 W. R. 916.

A letter making an offer, adding, "send a reply by return of post," is conditional, and does not constitute a contract in the absence of a reply; and the subject of the letter having been sent to, but not actually received by, the defendant:—Held, no delivery to him. Kirby v. Trotter, 1 F. & F. 544.

If a person who receives a letter containing the terms of a proposed agreement writes an answer reciting those terms, and declaring his acceptance of them, he cannot, in any way, vary the effect of them without distinctly calling the attention of the party making the offer to the fact of his desire to do so. English and Foreign Credit Co. v. Arduin, 40 L. J., Ex. 108; L. R. 5 H. L. 64.

Reclaiming after Posting.]—A banker at Lyons posted a letter containing bills of exchange to D. in London, but before the departure of the mail he received a telegram from D., telling him to remit nothing. The banker accordingly sent to the post-office to reclaim his letter, which by the regulation of the French post-office he was entitled to do on complying with certain formalities. By mistake the formalities were not observed, and the letter was forwarded to its destination. In the meantime D. had filed a petition for liquidation:—Held, that the property in the bills did not pass to the trustee. Cote, Ex parte, Deveze, In re, 43 L. J., Bk. 19; L. R. 9 Ch. 27; 29 L. T. 598; 22 W. R. 39.

Posting within Jurisdiction.]—The defendant posted a letter at a post-office within the jurisdiction of the Lord Mayor's Court of London addressed to and received by the plaintiff outside the jurisdiction. This letter contained the following order: "Please send in at once (to office for us to pack) four hundredweight old brown Windsor soap." The plaintiff did not reply accepting the offer, but sent the goods ordered to the defendant's office within the jurisdiction:—Held, that the contract was made within the jurisdiction, and that the posting of the order within the jurisdiction was the making of the offer within, and the delivery of the goods within, the acceptance of the offer within. Taylor v. Jones, 45 L. J., C. P. 110; 1 C. P. D. 87; 34 L. T. 131.

Proof of Posting.]—To prove the sending of a letter by the plaintiff to the defendant, a clerk of the plaintiff deposed that he made up the letters of which this was one, and placed them in a box in the room where he sat, and that the public postman invariably called every day and took the letters from that box:—Held, that such delivery to the postman was evidence for the jury that the letters had gone to the post-office. Skilbeck v. Garbett, 7 Q. B. 846; 14 L. J., Q. B. 338; 9 Jur. 939.

To prove the posting of letters, the party whose duty it was to post them should be called. Ireland v. Stiff, 1 F. & F. 240.

A letter allowed to be proved which had been given to a servant to be posted without any direct evidence that it had been posted or received, it being shewn that at the time at which, if posted, it would have arrived, a letter did reach the house to which it had been addressed. Smith v. Osborn, 1 F. & F. 267.

An agreement to employ the plaintiff in a particular capacity cannot be inferred from the direction upon a letter addressed by the defendant to the plaintiff in that character, the letter itself relating to the quantum of salary only. Chiodi v. Waters, 1 Stark. 335; 18 R. R. 777.

A witness produced a copy of a letter which he said was made by him, and he swore that he should in the ordinary course of business have posted the original:—Held, that this was evidence of posting, and that, the original not being produced, the copy was good secondary evidence. Trotter v. Maclean, 13 Ch. D. 574; 42 L. T. 118; 28 W. R. 244.

Neither proof of an entry made by a deceased person in the ordinary course of business in a postage-book of a letter to be posted, nor proof of possession by the deceased person for the purpose of posting, is sufficient evidence of postage. Rowlands v. De Vecchi, 1 Cab. & E. 10.

Presumption.]—Proof of the posting of a letter is not conclusive as to its arrival. Reidpath's Case, 40 L. J., Ch. 39; L. R. 11 Eq. 86; 23 L. T. 834; 19 W. R. 219. But see cases supra.

And see CONTRACT.

c. Contents.

Admissibility.]—An Irish railway company contracted with the plaintiff to carry certain pigs from a station in Ireland through to London, part of the journey being performed on the London and North-Western Railway. In an action against the Irish company for breach of contract in failing to carry the pigs to London within a reasonable time, a letter from I. T., an agent of the London and North-Western Railway Company, to the plaintiff, was admitted in evidence, subject to the defendants' objection, which stated: "Mr. S." [the defendants' traffic manager] "writes that the pigs arrived at Dublin on the 29th of October, but as the company" [the defendants] "only advised us about half-an-hour before they arrived, and having more on hand than could be shipped that day, they were not sent forward until the 30th of October":—Held, first, that the letter was properly received, although the written document to which it referred was not produced; secondly, that the letter was evidence of unreasonable delay in the carriage. Ruddy v. Midland G. W. Ry., 8 L. R., Ir. 224.

When the object was to prove a claim of transaction terminating in fraud, on the part of the agent, a letter written by him containing a contract, which was a link in the chain, was held admissible evidence; so that the agent's vivâ voce testimony was dispensable. Irving v. Motley, 9 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 161; 7 Bing. 543; 5 M. & P. 380.

Though a letter found upon a prisoner may be read, it is no evidence of the facts it states, they must be proved by other evidence. Rex v. Plumer, R. & R. 264; 15 R. R. 741.

Inclosure.]—A letter inclosing a note may be read in evidence as a declaration accompanying an act to shew for what purpose the note was sent. Bruce v. Hurly, 1 Stark. 23.

In an action for goods sold and delivered, the question turned upon whether a piece of cloth had been returned by the defendant to the plaintiff. The production of a note by the defendant, in which the plaintiff requested him to return the piece, is primâ facie evidence to shew that the piece has been returned. Shepherd v. Currie, 1 Stark. 454.

A post-office mark of double postage paid on letter, is not of itself evidence that the letter contained an inclosure. Rex v. Plumer, R. & R. 264; 15 R. R. 741.

Indorsement.]—In an action by the assignee of an insolvent, a letter written by the defendant was given in evidence; on the back of it something had been written by the insolvent:—Held, that the defendant's counsel was entitled to have that read. Dagleish v. Dodd, 5 Car. & P. 238.

Secondary Evidence.]—After notice to produce a letter written by the plaintiff to the defendant, parol evidence of its contents may be given by any one who recollects the contents, although it is in the plaintiff's power to produce the clerk who wrote the letter. Liebman v. Pooley, 1 Stark. 167; 18 R. R. 756.

But in such case the contents cannot be proved by the production of a copy of the original copy. Ib.

d. Putting in and Reading.

Purpose.]—A party has a right to call for and have read a letter making a demand on the other party, for the purpose of proving the demand, though the counsel for the other party offers to admit the demand. The statement of facts in such letter is not evidence of the facts, but only of their having been communicated to the other side. Whithead v. Scott, 1 M. & Rob. 2.

In what cases equity will allow letters to be read as evidence. Montgomerie v. Att.-Gen., 9 Mod. 365.

Whether letters written by the defendant, against whom a bill was filed to set aside a deed for fraud, after the execution of the deed, could be received as evidence of a fraudulent intention in executing it. Blenkinsopp v. Blenkinsopp, 19 L. J., Ch. 425.

Letters addressed to a testator whose competency was the question in issue by persons well acquainted with him in his lifetime, and in which letters he was addressed as a sane and competent person, are not admissible in evidence, unless it can be proved that the testator himself dealt with the letters, or did some act in reference or relation to them. Wright v. Tatham, 2 Jur. 461.

What Part of Correspondence.]—It was proposed on the part of a plaintiff to give in evidence a letter written by the defendant's attorney, which purported to be an answer to a letter written to him by the plaintiff's attorneys:—Held, that, if the plaintiff's counsel put in this letter of the defendant's attorney, he should also call for and put in the letter to which it was an answer and not leave it to the defendant to put in the letter of the plaintiff's attorneys as his evidence. Watson v. Moore, 1 Car. & K. 626.

If a defendant gives in evidence a letter of the plaintiff, which purports to be an answer to a letter of the defendant, the defendant is not bound to give his own letter in evidence, even if the other side desires it; but the plaintiff's counsel may put in the defendant's letter as his evidence, or comment on its not being given in evidence. De Medina v. Owen, 3 Car. & K. 72.

Where the plaintiff puts in evidence letters of the defendant selected out of a correspondence, the defendant is not entitled to put in the intermediate letters, unless expressly referred to by those put in by the plaintiff. Sturge v. Buchanan, 2 M. & Rob. 90.

On cross-examination some letters written by a witness who was not a party in the cause, were put into her hand, and she was asked to explain the meaning of certain passages therein contained, and whether what she wrote in such passages was true:—Held, that the other party was entitled to have the whole of such letters read. Smith v. Prickett, 7 Jur. (N.S.) 610.

A defendant who puts in evidence a correspondence, consisting of several letters, between himself and the plaintiff has a right to give in evidence a letter written by him to the plaintiff, in reply to the plaintiff's last letter, which bore date on the day before the defendant's letter. Roe v. Day, 7 Car. & P. 705.

A defendant gave in evidence a letter of the plaintiff's, dated 17th January, purporting to be an answer to a letter to the plaintiff, written by W. Plaintiff's counsel proved W.'s handwriting to a letter addressed to plaintiff, and dated 16th February, but which had no post-mark, and wished to give this letter in evidence as being the letter to which that of the 17th was an answer:—Held, that the letter of the 16th was not receivable in evidence, unless it were shewn that it was the letter to which the plaintiff's letter was an answer, or at least that it was in existence before the date of plaintiff's letter. M'Namara v. Gibbs, Car. & M. 412.

Signed by Third Person.]—A letter written by a party, sought to charged is evidence, though it be signed by a third person. Alexander v. Brown, 1 Car. & P. 288.

When written without Prejudice.]—A letter from the plaintiff's solicitors to the defendant, which was followed in a day or two by another letter guarding against prejudice to the plaintiff's legal and other rights, was not allowed to be used by the defendant as evidence for any purpose of his defence. Peacock v. Harper, 26 W. R. 109.

The defendant being sued on a bill of exchange drawn and indorsed by him, wrote to the plaintiff's attorney in a letter headed "Without prejudice," as follows: "I never had any notice of dishonour of this bill, but if the debt will be accepted without costs, I do not want Mr. Holdsworth to be the loser of it, and I would give a cheque." Thereupon the plaintiff took out a rule to discontinue the action on payment of costs, which were afterwards taxed and paid by him. Before the costs were paid the plaintiff commenced another action on the bill against the defendant, and at the trial offered the letter as evidence of waiver of notice of dishonour, and it was admitted, and the jury found for the plaintiff:—Held, that the letter was a conditional offer to waive notice of dishonour, which became absolute when the plaintiff accepted the terms by discontinuing the first action and foregoing costs, and was therefore rightly admitted. Holdsworth v. Dimsdale, 24 L. T. 360; 19 W. R. 798.

A letter from a debtor which is stated to be "without prejudice," can never be relied upon to take the case out of the Statute of Limitations, for such a letter does not amount to a new contract, but is merely an offer which, if not simply accepted by the creditor, is intended to have no effect at all. River Steamer Co., In re, Mitchell, Ex parte, L. R. 6 Ch. 822; 25 L. T. 319; 19 W. R. 1130.

Where letters are written "without prejudice," with a view to a compromise, they cannot be given in evidence. Hoghton v. Hoghton, 15 Beav. 278; 21 L. J., Ch. 482; 17 Jur. 99.

Where a letter is expressed to be written "without prejudice," although it cannot be used against the writer, there is nothing to prevent the writer himself using it. Williams v. Thomas, 2 Dr. & Sm. 29; 31 L. J., Ch. 674; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 250; 7 L. T. 184; 10 W. R. 417.

A letter written without prejudice that is sent by a debtor to his creditor stating that he is about to suspend payment of his debts is admissible upon the hearing of a bankruptcy petition to prove the commission of an act of bankruptcy. Holt, Ex parte, Daintrey, In re, 62 L. J., Q. B. 511; [1893] 2 Q. B. 116; 5 R. 414; 69 L. T. 257; 41 W. R. 590; 10 Morrell, 158.

The effect of letters and interviews "without prejudice" discussed. Kurtz v. Spence, 57 L. J., Ch. 238; 58 L. T. 438.

A judge is not entitled, without the consent of both parties, to look at letters written without prejudice for the purpose of seeing whether there is "good cause" for depriving a successful litigant of costs under Ord. LXV. r. 1. Walker v. Wilsher, 58 L. J., Q. B. 501; 23 Q. B. D. 335; 37 W. R. 723; 54 J. P. 213—C. A.

Letters written "without prejudice" cannot be used in evidence of admissions. The practice of attempting to do so disapproved of. Jones v. Fowall, 15 Beav. 388; 21 L. J., Ch. 725.

Observations as to the limited purpose for which such letters may be used. Ib.

A railway company having entered into possession of certain lands required for their works after notice by the landowner that they were not to enter until payment of the purchase-money, an injunction was granted against their retaining possession. They afterwards entered into a long correspondence "without prejudice." Ultimately they paid the purchase and compensation-money into court, and then moved only to dissolve the injunction. The plaintiff wished, on that motion, that all proceedings might be stayed, and to go into the general question, but the defendants refused. Thereupon the plaintiff moved to that effect:—Held, on the hearing of this latter motion, that the defendants ought to pay all the costs of the suit, including the costs of this motion. Woodard v. Eastern Counties Ry., 1 Jur. (N.S.) 899.

Effect of the words "without prejudice" on a correspondence for winding up a suit; and semble, that the letters may be read to assist the court in deciding on the question of costs. Ib.

Production refused of letters which passed between the respective solicitors, with a view to a compromise, upon an express stipulation that they should not, in any way, be referred to or used to the prejudice of the defendant, if an amicable arrangement was not come to. Whiffen v. Hartwright, 11 Beav. 111.

If, in a case of assault, plaintiff's attorney has written a letter to defendant asking an apology, plaintiff is only entitled to have so much of the letter read as simply asks the apology, and not any part of it in which plaintiff's attorney extols the respectability of his client, and if in the letter the writer states that he writes "without prejudice," no part of it can be given in evidence. Healey v. Thatcher, 8 Car. & P. 388.

—— Effect on Subsequent Letters.]—Where a letter is expressed to be written "without prejudice," the reply to it cannot be used in evidence, though not similarly guarded. Paddock v. Forrester, 3 Scott (N.R.) 734; 3 Man. & G. 903.

When a negotiation for a compromise is commenced by one letter "written without prejudice," the whole is protected. Harris, Ex parte, Harris, In re, 44 L. J., Bk. 33; 32 L. T. 417; 23 W. R. 531.

Private and Confidential.]—Where a party to an action sends letters marked "private and confidential" to the other party containing threats of committing a contempt of court, he cannot by so marking them impose on the other party, who had refused to hold any personal communication with him, any condition as to the way in which the letters might be used. Kitcat v. Sharp, 48 L. T. 64.

e. Copies and Drafts.

To Prove Sending.]—The fact of copies of letters being kept in a merchant's letter-book, is evidence against the party of the letters having been sent. Sturge v. Buchanan, 2 P. & D. 573; 10 A. & E. 598; 2 M. & Rob. 90; 8 L. J., Q. B. 272.

An entry of a letter in a merchant's letter-book produced by the clerk who copied it, who gave evidence that after copying letters it was the custom in the office to return them to the defendant to seal, and that either he or another clerk always carried the letters to the post-office, but neither of the clerks recollected the particular letter:—Held, that as the letters were, after being copied, returned to the defendant, the entry could not be read in proof of the letter being sent. Toosey v. Williams, M. & M. 129.

An entry of a deceased clerk of a merchant in the letter-book was received in evidence, on proof that it was made in the usual course of business in the merchant's counting-house. Hagedorn v. Reid, 3 Camp. 370; 1 M. & S. 567.

A press copy of a letter proved to have been posted with the right address, was admitted as primâ facie evidence that the letter containing a notice actually reached the party. Futcher v. Hinder, 1 F. & F. 357.

—— Particular Date.]—Where the defendants acknowledged they had received a letter of a particular date from the plaintiff, which upon notice they did not produce at the trial:—Held, that an entry by a deceased clerk of the plaintiff, in a letter-book, professing to be a copy of a letter of the same date from the plaintiff to the defendants, was admissible evidence of the contents of the letter, on proof that, according to the plaintiff's course of business, the letters which he wrote were copied by his clerk, and then sent off by the post, and that in other instances the copies so made by the clerk had been compared with the originals, and always found correct. Pritt v. Fairclough, 3 Camp. 305; 13 R. R. 811.

An entry in a diary kept by an agent is not admissible to prove a fact therein stated, unless it is shewn that it was the duty of the agent to make the whole entry. Trotter v. Maclean, 13 Ch. D. 574, 579; 42 L. T. 118; 28 W. R. 244.

When Admissible as Secondary Evidence.]—In an action to recover the balance on consignments of goods by the defendant to the plaintiffs to be sold in India, it appeared that the transaction took place vivâ voce between him and B., the managing clerk of the plaintiffs, who carried on business in London, Liverpool and Calcutta. B., who was since dead, managed their business at Liverpool. The contention of the defendant being that the transaction was a sale and not a consignment, the plaintiffs put in evidence a copy taken by machine of a letter which was lost, written in the course of business by B. to the plaintiffs, giving an account of the transaction, and inclosing invoices of the goods, and a draft of the defendant. And in order to prove the balance they put in an account current of the sales prepared from the account sale received from their correspondents in India which were lost:—Held, that if the letter was admissible this copy was good secondary evidence. Smith v. Blakey, 8 B. & S. 157; 36 L. J., Q. B. 156; L. R. 2 Q. B. 325; 15 W. R. 492.

On the trial of an action, a copy of a letter written by the plaintiff's agent, and referred to by the plaintiff in his answer to a bill in chancery, and the original of which letter, instead of being filed at the master's office, had, by consent of the parties, been deposited for inspection with the plaintiff's clerk in court in the chancery suit, is admissible on the part of the defendant at law, without reading the answer in chancery. Long v. Champion, 2 B. & Ad. 285.

A letter, setting forth the terms of a contract contained in another letter between the same parties, is evidence to go to the jury of the original contract. Nelson v. Patrick, 2 Car. & K. 641.

The giving in evidence by the one side, without objection raised by the other, a copy-letter from a letter-book, does not waive the right of the party so giving it from objecting to the other side putting in a letter between the same parties from the same book. Shedden v. Patrick, 2 Sw. & Tr. 170; 30 L. J., Mat. 217.

The duplicate of a writing, taken from the autograph at one impression by means of a copying-machine, cannot be read in evidence as an original. Nodin v. Murray, 3 Camp. 228; 13 R. R. 796.

A machine copy of a letter written by the plaintiff to a third party was allowed to be given in evidence as an admission on the part of the plaintiff, though not admissible as a letter. Nathan v. Jacob, 1 F. & F. 452.

A. was examined before commissioners of bankrupt and produced a machine copy of a letter he had sent to R. While A. was before the commissioners the solicitor to the assignees made a copy of such copy:—Held, that in an action by the assignees against A. the last made copy was not admissible against A. without reading his examination, although notice had been given to A. to produce the original copy. Holland v. Reeves, 7 Car. & P. 36.

And see post, col. 795.

Drafts.]—The agent of a plaintiff wrote a letter to a witness abroad, who had been examined under a commission. The agent before he wrote the letter shewed the draft of it to the plaintiff's attorney, who approved of it:—Held, that the draft of the letter was evidence for the defendant, as an act done without producing the letter; but that the answer written by the witness abroad, and sent to the plaintiff's agent, was not receivable. Rawlins v. Desbrough, 8 Car. & P. 321.

f. Construction.

For whom.]—At a trial at Nisi Prius, when the question turns solely on the construction of a single letter, without any other evidence to explain it, the construction and effect of the letter is a question of law to be determined by the court, and ought not in general to be left to the jury. Morrell v. Frith, 3 M. & W. 402; 1 H. & H. 100; 7 L. J., Ex. 172; 2 Jur. 619.

If, however, the evidence consists of several letters, or of a letter in connection with other evidence; or if the question turns on the meaning of a mercantile document, then the whole question ought to be left to the jury. Ib. But see Begg v. Forbes, 3 C. L. R. 336.

—— Notice.] — By agreement under seal between plaintiff and defendant's testator, the latter agreed to grant a lease for sixty years of certain tenements, then in plaintiff's possession, as tenant from year to year. After testator's death defendant repudiated the agreement as being a forgery and recovered judgment in ejectment in the county court. Plaintiff then gave the following notice:—"I hereby give you notice this day that I give up possession of all the land, according to the judge's order that I now hold of the late Mr. J. S. (Signed) G. S." Plaintiff having brought an action in the Court of Exchequer on the agreement, the judge considered it was for him to put a construction on this notice and told the jury that it amounted to an abandonment of all the plaintiff's claim under the agreement, and that if they found that the agreement had been signed by testator he was only entitled to nominal damages:—Held, this was a mis-direction; the meaning of the notice and the amount of damages ought to have been left to the jury. Smith v. Symonds, 1 L. T. 299.

g. Proof by Antiquity.

Custody and Age.]—The defendant produced letters thirty years old, purporting to be addressed to her mother, and proved that she was living with her mother at the time of her death when her papers and keys were given up to her:—Held, that the custody was proper. Doe d. Thomas v. Beynon, 4 P. & D. 193; 12 A. & E. 431; 9 L. J., Q. B. 359.

Letters more than thirty years old, produced from the proper custody, prove themselves. Ib.

It is not necessary that a signature of the writer of a letter above thirty years old should be proved. Where there is no existing direction to such a letter primâ facie, it must be presumed to have been written to the party among whose papers it is found. Fenwick v. Reed, 6 Madd. 7.

2. Brief and Case of Counsel.

Notes on.]—Notes of counsel on his brief at a trial at law, were admitted as evidence in a suit in equity. Cattell v. Corrall, 3 Y. & Coll. 413.

The court will act upon notes on counsel's briefs if they agree, although no entry or corresponding minute appears in the registrar's book. Anderton v. Yates, 15 Jur. 833.

Case.]—A case laid before counsel on behalf of the defendant, which has been produced for the inspection of the plaintiff under the usual order, may be read in support of the plaintiff's motion for a receiver. George v. Evans, 4 Y. & Coll. 211.

In quare impedit against the bishop of M. to recover the presentation to the church of K., the advowson whereof was claimed to be part of the temporalities of the bishopric, a case purporting to be the case stated for the opinion of counsel on the part of A., a former bishop of M., touching the right of presentation to that church, and found in the family mansion of A.'s descendants, was held admissible as against his successor in the same. Meath (Bishop) v. Winchester (Marquis), 4 Cl. & F. 445; 10 Bli. (N.S.) 330. Affirming 3 Bing. (N.C.) 183; 3 Scott, 561.

Opinion.] — Opinion of counsel read as evidence. Brown v. Yerroway, Dick. 353.

3. Cheques and Counterfoils.

Evidence of Payment.]—The steward of a manor appointed C. his deputy to admit a person to a copyhold of the manor which he had purchased; and C. also acted as his solicitor in the purchase. Ten days after admittance the purchaser gave C. a cheque for a sum made up of the lord's fine, the steward's fees, and C.'s professional charges, and this cheque was, at C.'s request, crossed with the name of C.'s bankers. On presentment the cheque was paid by the purchaser's bankers to C.'s bankers, but they retained the money to balance his overdrawn account. In an action by the lord against the purchaser for the fine:—Held, that there was evidence to support a plea of payment, and that payment by the crossed cheque was a mode of payment which discharged the purchaser as soon as the cheque was cashed. Bridges v. Garrett, 39 L. J., C. P. 251; L. R. 5 C. P. 451; 22 L. T. 448; 18 W. R. 815—Ex. Ch.

To prove payment of a debt by the defendant to the plaintiff, a banker's cheque drawn by the defendant on his bankers, and which appeared to have been received by the plaintiff, is evidence to go to the jury of the payment. Egg v. Barnett, 3 Esp. 196. S. P., Boswell v. Smith, 6 Car. & P. 60.

Proof of the delivery and payment of a cheque to the plaintiff is not sufficient evidence of a debt, in order to support a set-off, unless it is shewn upon what consideration, and under what circumstances, the cheque was given. Aubert v. Walsh, 4 Taunt. 293; 12 R. R. 651.

The acceptance by a creditor of a cheque in his favour, drawn by his debtor, operates as payment unless dishonoured. Pearce v. Davis, 1 M. & Rob. 365.

The mere fact of a person's drawing such a cheque in favour of another is not evidence of a debt, but rather evidence of payment. Ib.

The mere circumstance of a cheque being made payable to a person, and his receipt of the money, is not evidence that the drawer gave it to him. Lloyd v. Sandilands, Gow, 13.

Amount.]—A., being indebted to B. in 125*l.* 7*s.* 9*d.* for goods sold and delivered, gave B. a cheque for 100*l.* payable on demand, which B. accepted in satisfaction:—Held, a good accord and satisfaction. Cumber v. Wane (Stra. 426) and Sibree v. Tripp (15 M. & W. 23) observed upon. Goddard v. O'Brien, 9 Q. B. D. 37; 46 L. T. 306; 30 W. R. 549.

Post-dated.]—Semble, that a post-dated cheque is receivable in evidence to prove its own invalidity. Ede v. Knowles, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 172.

When unstamped.]—See infra, IV. 6, cols. 835, et seq.

Counterfoils.]—A managing director of a company was indicted for misapplying to his own use an order for payment of 4,000*l.*, the property of the company. In the course of the trial evidence was given that he had promised to send a cheque for 4,000*l.* to A. on the 16th August. The cheque itself could not be found, but in the counterfoil book was one for 4,000*l.* in favour of A., following a counterfoil dated the 16th August:—Held, that this counterfoil was admissible against the prisoner. Reg. v. Wilkinson, 10 Cox, C. C. 537.

4. Receipts.

Evidence of Payment.]—Under the Railways Clauses Act, 1863, s. 12, where a railway forms a junction with another railway, the company with whose railway the junction is made is empowered to erect such signals and conveniences incident to the junction as may be necessary for the prevention of danger to or interference with the traffic at or near the junction; and the expenses of erecting and maintaining such signals and conveniences, are at the end of each half-year to be repaid by the company making the junction. To prove payment, the plaintiffs' secretary stated that he, on the 25th of February, sent to the persons who did the work a cheque for the amount of their bill, and got from them by return of post (on the 26th) a receipt, and the cashier of the latter stated that he received the cheque at 9 a.m. on the 26th as payment, and sent a receipt:—Held (Bovill, C.J., dissentiente), that the receipt was admissible, with the other facts, to prove payment on the morning of the 26th of February (the action having been brought on that day), without shewing that the cheque was honoured. Carmarthen and Cardigan Ry. v. Manchester and Milford Ry., 42 L. J., C. P. 262; L. R. 8 C. P. 685.

A receipt is not conclusive evidence against the party who signs it. Straton v. Rastall, 2 Term Rep. 366. And see Bauerman v. Radenius, 7 Term Rep. 663; 2 Esp. 653.

A receipt in full is conclusive evidence, when given under a knowledge of all circumstances then depending between the parties. Aliter, when given without such knowledge. Bristow v. Eastman, 1 Esp. 173; Peake, 223; 5 R. R. 728.

The words "settled, Samuel Hughes," at the foot of a bill of parcels, import a receipt and an acquittance. Rex v. Martin, 7 Car. & P. 549; 2 M. C. C. 483.

A receipt is not an estoppel; it is only a primâ facie evidence that the money has been paid, and is open to explanation. Skaife v. Jackson, 5 D. & R. 290; 3 B. & C. 421.

The plaintiff, in order to protect his personal effects from his creditors, delivered the actual possession of them to the defendant; and in order that the latter might appear to be the real owner he made a priced invoice of the articles, and gave a receipt to the defendant for the amount as on a sale:—Held, that the plaintiff, as between himself and the defendant, was not estopped from shewing the real character of the transaction, so as to entitle him to recover back the goods from the defendant. Bowes v. Foster, 2 H. & N. 779; 27 L. J., Ex. 262; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 95; 6 W. R. 257.

A receipt in full allowed to be shewn to have been signed by mistake. Cesarini v. Ronzani, 1 F. & F. 339.

When a receipt has been given under seal it discharges at law all cause of action, and can only be set aside by the equitable jurisdiction of a court of law; but a mere receipt in writing has no such effect; it amounts simply to an acknowledgment of money paid; it cannot be pleaded in answer to an action, and it may be impeached or explained by parol evidence. Lee v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Ry., L. R. 6 Ch. 527; 25 L. T. 77; 19 W. R. 729.

A right is not barred, by merely signing a receipt as a witness, upon payment by the executor to the adverse party, not amounting to a release or fraud. Holmes v. Custance, 12 Ves. 279.

A judge at Nisi Prius has no equitable jurisdiction, and can only look at the strict legal rights of the parties. Therefore, if in an action for goods sold, defendant proves a receipt in full, signed by the plaintiff, evidence cannot be admitted in answer that plaintiff had assigned all his effects for the benefit of his creditors; that the action was brought by his trustees in his name; that no money passed when the receipt was given; and that the plaintiff on the record and the defendant had colluded together to defeat the action; although upon an application to the court in banc, it might have interposed to prevent the defendant from availing himself of a receipt obtained under such circumstances. Auler v. George, 1 Camp. 392. But see Bowes v. Foster, supra.

—— Of Rents.]—Receipts for rents (produced from the proper custody, given by the tenant's father in his own name, after the date of a fine), are admissible to shew an exercise of ownership by him. Davies v. Lowndes, 5 Bing. (N.C.) 161; 7 Scott, 22; 8 L. J., C. P. 73.

T. occupied lands from 1790 to 1815, but had ceased to occupy them before the time of his death. At T.'s death, among his papers were found a series of receipts for the rent of this land from 1790 to 1804, signed by M. P., sen., who died in 1806, and a similar series of receipts for rent from 1806 to 1815, signed by M. P., jun. (the daughter of M. P., sen.), who died in 1826:—Held, in ejectment for these lands, that these receipts were receivable as evidence of the seisin of M. P., sen., and M. P., jun. Doe d. Blayney v. Savage, 1 Car. & K. 487.

On a question relating to the rent paid for a particular property, a statement as to receipts from an agent, signed by a deceased principal, is, as being against interest, equally admissible in evidence with a statement by a deceased agent as to receipts from a tenant. But a rent-roll signed by a deceased solicitor who was paid to audit the accounts by testing the arithmetic, but not by examining with vouchers the truth as to alleged payments, is not admissible in evidence, either on the ground of a pecuniary interest or on the ground of the audit having been made in the ordinary course of business. Vivian v. Moat, 44 L. T. 210; 29 W. R. 504.

To shew a title in lessor, receipts for rent are per se insufficient, especially when he who signed them is living, and has not been examined. Manning v. Lechmere, 1 Atk. 453.

An information on behalf of the poor of the parish of P. stated an agreement, dated in 1634, by the then Earl of Portland, which recited that there lay in his park at R. divers parcels of land, which contained about six and a half acres, and belonged to the poor of the parish of P., for which lands lying dispersed in his said grounds, being theretofore ordained for good and charitable uses, the earl was desirous to give a full yearly rent and satisfaction, and thereby promised and agreed to pay to the churchwardens and overseers of P. for the time being the yearly sum of 6*l.*; and the earl thereby further promised and agreed to make such further assurances thereof as by counsel should be advised, and to set out sufficient land of a better value for performance thereof, which he would either tie for the payment of the said yearly rent, or otherwise assure and convey to such person and persons and their heirs as by the vestry of the said parish should be nominated to be feoffees in trust for the same. No conveyance was shewn to be made in pursuance of this agreement. It appeared from entries in the parish books that the earl and his successors, in the ownership of part of his land (which had since been divided), had paid every year 6*l.*, which was expressed in such entries to be rent of parish land; and that in 1849 a receipt was accepted by the then owner of part of the earl's land for 6*l.*, for "rent of parish land." A receipt, dated 1849, produced from the custody of the owner of part of the earl's estate, and expressed to be for 6*l.* for one year's rent of parish land:—Held, to be evidence against him that parish land was included in the estate in his possession, and that he was tenant of the parish in respect of such land; and held, that he was estopped by such receipt from disputing the title of the parish. Att.-Gen. v. Stephens, 1 Kay & J. 724; 3 Eq. Rep. 1072; 24 L. J., Ch. 694; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1039. And see 6 De G. M. & G. 111; 25 L. J., Ch. 888; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 51; 4 W. R. 191.

A purchaser of land from an owner who had been paying his rent to the parish upon such receipts:—Held, to have notice that part of the land purchased belonged to the parish. Ib.

—— Of Tithes.]—Parson's receipts for tithes evidence for successor. Glynn v. Bank of England, 2 Ves. 38.

—— Of Legacy.]—A. agreed that a legacy given to his wife should be set off against a sum of the same amount, which he owed to the testator on his promissory note, and he and his wife signed a receipt for the legacy, but it did not appear that the executors had delivered up the note to him. A. afterwards died, leaving his wife surviving:—Held, that she was entitled to be paid the legacy, no release having been given for it by her husband. Harrison v. Andrews, 13 Sim. 595; 13 L. J., Ch. 243.

Rebutting Presumption.]—In an action by partners for a debt due to the firm, where the defendant gives in evidence a receipt by one partner in the names of all, evidence is admissible on behalf of the plaintiffs, to shew that the receipt was fraudulently given by the one partner. Farrar v. Hutchinson, 1 P. & D. 437; 9 A. & E. 641; 2 W. W. & H. 106; 8 L. J., Q. B. 107.

The usual acknowledgment in a deed of the receipt of a sum of money may be rebutted by evidence of some subsequent and distinct circumstance; as, for instance, if a cheque was given at the executing of the instrument, and it was dishonoured on presentment. Deverell v. Whitmarsh, 5 Jur. 963.

Where Fraud.]—Where a receipt in full has been obtained by fraud or misrepresentation, it will be considered as a nullity. Benson v. Bennett, 1 Camp, 394, n.

In an action for injuries arising from a railway accident, it was pleaded that the plaintiff had, upon payment of a certain sum, released the company from all further claim. He replied that such release had been obtained by fraudulent misrepresentation of facts, and of the legal effect of the deed of release:—Held, that the fraudulent misrepresentation alleged invalidated the deed. Hirschfield v. L. B. & S. C. Ry., 46 L. J., Q. B. 94; 2 Q. B. D. 1; 35 L. T. 473.

A passenger who was injured by a railway accident sent in a claim for 691*l.* compensation. The traffic manager of the company called upon him, and after some discussion the passenger accepted 400*l.*, and gave a receipt acknowledging it to be in full discharge of his claims. About a year afterwards he commenced an action against the company for further compensation, to which the company pleaded that he had accepted 400*l.* in full satisfaction and discharge of the causes of action. The plaintiff then filed a bill to restrain them from relying on the plea, and from setting up the acceptance of the 400*l.* or the receipt, as a satisfaction or discharge of the damages, except to the extent of 400*l.* The bill did not allege fraud, but that the plaintiff had signed the receipt on the express condition that he should not thereby exclude himself from further compensation if his injuries turned out more serious than was supposed at the time:—Held, that, as the statement in the receipt could be rebutted by evidence that the plaintiff did not receive the money in full satisfaction of all demands, the whole case could be tried at law better than in equity; and that the bill ought to be dismissed. Lee v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Ry., L. R. 6 Ch. 527; 25 L. T. 77; 19 W. R. 729.

The plaintiffs, through the introduction of R., entered into a contract with B. de M. for the supply of goods. During the negotiations for a second contract, R. falsely represented that B. de M. would not complete it without the advance of an extra sum by the plaintiffs, on which R. was also to have a commission. The plaintiffs accordingly paid R. a sum of money in part discharge of what was due for such commission, and gave him a letter undertaking to pay the rest. They subsequently discovered the fraudulent representations, and on R. bringing an action on the letter of undertaking against the plaintiffs, they filed a bill to restrain the action and to make him deliver up the letter of undertaking:—Held, that the fraud could be pleaded in the action, and that a court of law was the proper tribunal, and that there was no equity to compel R. to give up the letter of undertaking. Fennelly v. Ranscelot, 19 W. R. 966.

To an action for compensation for injuries from a railway accident, the company pleaded a receipt in full; the plaintiff then filed a bill alleging the receipt to have been obtained by fraud, and praying that the company might be restrained from setting it up, but for no further relief:—Held, that although the plaintiff might have met the plea by an equitable replication, he was entitled to come to equity for the relief needed for the purposes of his action, and that he had rightly limited the prayer of his bill to such relief. Stewart v. G. W. Ry., 2 De G. J. & S. 319; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 627; 13 L. T. 79; 13 W. R. 907.

In an action by partners for a debt due to the firm, where the defendant tenders a receipt by one partner in the name of all, evidence is admissible on behalf of the plaintiffs, to shew that the receipt was fraudulently given by the one partner. Farrar v. Hutchinson, 1 P. & D. 437; 9 A. & E. 641; 2 W. W. & H. 106; 8 L. J., Q. B. 107.

On Writ.]—A receipt given by the agent, indorsed on the back of a writ issued for the sum claimed, is admissible to prove payment of that sum, between the same parties without calling the agent. Weary v. Alderson, 2 M. & Rob. 127.

By Collector.]—In an action on a bond against a surety of a deceased collector of taxes, conditioned for the due performance of his duty as such, and for delivering to the obligee all books and accounts intrusted to his care; a collecting book received by him from his predecessor (for the faithful delivery of which to the obligee he became surety, and on the death of the principal it was accordingly delivered to such obligee), containing the names of the parishioners residing within the parish for which the collector was appointed, and the sums at which they were rated; and wherein the usual mark was made by him, opposite to some of such names, by which he indicated the receipt of the sums assessed on them:—and receipts signed by him for money paid to him in his official capacity were produced and received in evidence against the surety, on the execution of a writ of inquiry:—Held, on a motion whether such receipts ought to have been admitted, that the circumstances of the case did not warrant either an actual or implied authority by the surety to admit the receipts of the principal as evidence against him. Goss v. Watlington, 6 Moore, 355; 3 Br. & B. 132.

The receipt granted by the collector of quit-rent is evidence of the apportionment of rent. Bowles v. Waller, Hayes, 439.

Stamped as Agreement.]—A receipt for the deposit, duly stamped as an agreement, is sufficient to support a bill for specific performance of the contract. Boun v. Stroud, 21 L. T. 695.

When Unstamped.]—Where a receipt for money has been given on unstamped paper, it may be used by a witness who saw it given, to refresh his memory. Rambert v. Cohen, 4 Esp. 213; 6 R. R. 854.

In an action for a balance of account, the defendant tendered in evidence a piece of paper containing a debtor-and-creditor account, with the balance of 68*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.* struck in favour of the plaintiff. At the bottom of this account was an acknowledgment of the correctness of the account, and a receipt for the balance, signed by the plaintiff. This paper was not stamped; it was not tendered in evidence to prove the payment of the 68*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.*, that item being admitted by the plaintiff, but merely to prove that the plaintiff had acknowledged the correctness of the account:—Held, that this paper should be received in evidence; but it would have been otherwise had the payment of the sum mentioned in the receipt been a question in dispute. Matheson v. Ross, 2 H. L. Cas. 286; 13 Jur. 307.

Where the cases say that an unstamped receipt may be given in evidence to prove a collateral matter, they must be taken to mean a matter wholly unconnected with the fact of payment. Ib. See Holmes v. Sizesmith, 7 Ex. 802.

A document containing all the requisites to make it a valid contract, and purporting to be a receipt, though by reason of its being insufficiently stamped inadmissible as such, may be received as evidence of the contract. Evans v. Prothero, 1 De G. M. & G. 572; 21 L. J., Ch. 772—L. C. But see S. C., 2 Mac. & G. 319; 20 L. J., Ch. 448; 15 Jur. 113—L. C., contra.

On Unstamped Deed.]—A receipt indorsed on the back of a stamped deed may be separately read in evidence, though it is a part of an indorsement requiring another stamp. Odye v. Cookney, 1 M. & Rob. 517.

Foreign.]—An unstamped receipt for 40*l.*, dated at Cologne, was held to be receivable in evidence here, and the fact that such a receipt would not be receivable in evidence at Cologne, until it had been stamped, on payment of a penalty, would make no difference as to its admissibility here, as our courts do not take notice of foreign revenue laws. Bristow v. De Secqueville, 3 Car. & K. 64; 5 Ex. 975.

Inferential Evidence of Contract.]—A master of a steam-tug, of which the defendant was owner, was employed by the plaintiff to tow his smack out of a harbour. In so doing, the smack was stranded through the negligence of the master. The plaintiff had, on previous occasions, hired the steam-tug, and on paying the charge had received a receipt, upon the back of which was printed a notice that the defendant would not be answerable for damage occasioned by any supposed negligence of his servants:—Held, that it was a question for the jury whether the contract was made on the terms printed on the back of the receipts. Symonds v. Pain, 6 H. & N. 709; 30 L. J., Ex. 256.

5. Advertisements.

Notice.]—An advertisement published in several daily newspapers is not evidence of notice to any individual who is not proved to have taken in, or to have been in the habit of reading, one of the newspapers in which it appeared. Boydell v. Drummond, 2 Camp. 157; 10 R. R. 450.

Evidence that an advertisement was inserted in a country newspaper, circulated at the residence of a party, is not admissible as proof of notice to the party of the facts contained in the advertisement, unless it is shewn that he took the newspaper in. Norwich and Lowestoft Navigation v. Theobald, M. & M. 153.

—— Where Fraud.]—A contract was made in June by the defendant's son; in January following it was discovered that, in making the contract, he had been acting for his father:—Held, that an advertisement published by the son in September, and tending to shew fraud in the transaction on the part of the defendant and his son, was admissible against the defendant. Lucas v. Godwin, 3 Bing. (N.C.) 737; 4 Scott, 502; 3 Hodges, 114; 6 L. J., C. P. 205.

The defendant, a money-lender, issued an advertisement headed "Money on easy terms," and containing a statement that money would be advanced on note of hand to, among others, farmers, on easy terms, and on reversions, &c., at 5 per cent. No other rate of interest was mentioned in the advertisement. The plaintiff, a farmer, having seen the advertisement, went to the defendant's office, and applied for a loan of 100*l.* He swore that the defendant's agent then told him he could have it at 5 per cent., and after negotiations agreed to take 4½ per cent., and that he executed a bill of sale, as he believed, to secure 100*l.* with interest at 4½ per cent. by weekly instalments. The bill of sale was in fact a security for the repayment of 150*l.* by weekly instalments of 2*l.* 10*s.*:—Held, in an action to set it aside, that where a man represents to the public by advertisement that he will lend money on easy terms, and afterwards lends it on very hard terms, the onus lies upon him to shew that he has removed from a borrower's mind the impression produced by such representation, and clearly explained to him the terms on which the loan had been made. On the evidence, the court believed the plaintiff's statement and set aside the bill of sale. Moorhouse v. Woolfe, 46 L. T. 374. And see Redgrave v. Hurd, 20 Ch. D. 1; 51 L. J., Ch. 113; 45 L. T. 485—C. A.

—— Tender.]—A circular sent out, as follows:—"We are instructed to offer to the wholesale trade for sale by tender the stock-in-trade of A., amounting as per stock-book to 2,503*l.* 13*s.* 1*d.*, and which will be sold at a discount in one lot: payment to be made in cash: the tender will be received and opened at our offices," does not amount to a contract or a promise to sell to the person who makes the highest tender. Spencer v. Harding, 39 L. J., C. P. 332; L. R. 5 C. P. 561; 23 L. T. 237; 19 W. R. 48.

—— Auction.]—An auctioneer advertised in newspapers that a sale by auction would take place on a particular day in a country town. He also circulated catalogues specifying the articles to be sold. A person attended the sale intending to buy certain articles specified in the catalogue, but on the day of sale they were withdrawn by the auctioneer:—Held, that there was no implied contract by him to indemnify the intended purchaser against the expense and inconvenience which he had incurred. Harris v. Nickerson, 42 L. J., Q. B. 171; L. R. 8 Q. B. 286; 28 L. T. 410; 21 W. R. 635.

6. Family Writings and Papers.

Family Bibles, &c.]—An entry in a father's family Bible, an inscription on a tombstone, or a pedigree hung up in the family mansion, are all good evidence. Goodright d. Stevens v. Moss, Cowp. 591.

But a Bible containing entries of births, deaths, and marriages, which were not shewn to have come to the knowledge of any deceased members of the family, is not admissible. Splents v. Lefevre, 11 L. T. 114—Ex. Ch.

The entry in a family Bible of the births of children, made by their mother shortly after such births, is good evidence, in the absence of other and better testimony, such children having been neither baptized nor registered. Ashcroft v. Powell, 9 L. T. 638; 12 W. R. 301—Ex. Ch.

Entries of pedigree in a family Bible or a Testament, which is produced from the proper custody, are admissible as evidence, without proof of handwriting or authorship. Hubbard v. Lees, 4 H. & C. 418; 35 L. J., Ex. 169; L. R. 1 Ex. 255; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 435; 14 L. T. 442; 14 W. R. 694.

Upon the trial of an ejectment respecting Little Acre, between N. and P., in which it was necessary for N. to prove that he was the legitimate son of T., T. being at that time dead: N., after proving by other evidence that T. was his reputed father, offered to give in evidence an entry in a Bible, in which T. had made such entry in his own handwriting, that N. was his eldest son, born in lawful wedlock, from J., the wife of T., on the first day of May, 1778, and signed by T. himself; and it was proved on the trial, that T. had declared "that he, T., had made such entry for the express purpose of establishing the legitimacy, and the time of the birth, of his eldest son N., in case the same should be called in question, in any case or in any cause whatsoever, by any person, after his death":—Held, that such entry in such Bible (or in any other book, or on any other piece of paper) could be received to prove that N. was the legitimate son of T., as evidence of the declaration of T., in matter of pedigree (but with strong circumstances of suspicion, on account of its particularity). Berkeley's Case, 4 Camp. 401; 14 R. R. 782.

In a claim of peerage, where the question was, whether the deceased peer, the father of the claimant, had been married or not, a prayer-book, found, after the death of the claimant's mother, among her papers, was received, and an entry made in her handwriting, declaring the fact of the marriage, read from it, not as conclusively proving that fact, but as a declaration of it made by one of the parties at the time. Sussex Peerage, 11 Cl. & F. 85; 8 Jur. 793.

The plaintiffs, in order to prove that the person under whom they claimed was descended from H. J., produced an old religious book containing the following entry: "E. J., her book, 15th June, 1680, the gift of H. J., her father." It did not appear by whom the entry was made; but the book contained, in other parts of it, entries of the births of other members of the family, which were proved to be their father's handwriting; and, moreover, the book had been preserved by the family :—Held, that the first-mentioned entry was admissible. Wood v. Beauchamp, 8 Sim. 26.

On a claim of peerage, entries in an old family prayer-book, according to the opinion of persons conversant with MSS. of different ages, written about the period of their dates :—Held, entitled to little weight, especially where the book was unsatisfactorily identified. Tracy Peerage, 10 Cl. & F. 154.

A Bible produced by a woman, aged 67, who said that it was given to her when seven years old by her father, who told her that it belonged to her grandfather, is evidence of itself to be left to the jury to say, whether an entry in it by which it appears that her grandfather was the son of a certain person, is true. Doe d. Cracknel v. Head, 1 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 79.

Pedigrees.]—A pedigree, made by a person with a view to a suit respecting property, is not receivable in a claim of peerage by his son to prove his descent; nor a case, stated for the opinion of counsel, produced from the family papers of a distant relative of the claimant. Slane Peerage Case, 5 Cl. & F. 23.

Entries in a family missal are admitted as evidence of births, deaths, and marriages of members of the family, just like similar entries in a family Bible. Ib.

In 1671, the crown issued a commission to authorise the College of Heralds to receive and record the family pedigrees of all such benefactors as should be willing to contribute sums of money for the rebuilding of the Heralds' College, before then destroyed in the great fire of London. A pedigree so furnished to the college by a member of the family, and the signature to which was proved, was received in evidence, but only as a declaration of a member of the family. Shrewsbury Peerage, 7 H. L. Cas. 1. S. P., Goodright d. Stevens v. Moss, Cowp. 591.

A pedigree, "touching the name and families of Talbots," though proved to be in the handwriting of a former garter king of arms, not being shewn to be a book kept by him in discharging his duty in that office, is inadmissible. Ib.

A paper in the handwriting of B., found in his repositories at his death, and purporting to give a genealogical account of his family, of which it represents C. to have been a member, is admissible for the same purpose, though never made public in B.'s lifetime, though erroneous in various particulars, and professing to be founded chiefly on hearsay. Monkton v. Att.-Gen., 2 Russ. & Mylne, 147. S. C., nom. Robson v. Att.-Gen., 10 Cl. & F. 471.

A written pedigree, coming from the proper custody, relating to the descent of W. L., and signed by him, and purporting to bear date A.D. 1733, is admissible, as a recognition by W. L. of his family descent, though it bears a memorandum in these words, "Collected from parish registers, wills, monumental inscriptions, family records and histories," and although on the face of it it goes back to a fabulous period. Davies v. Lowndes, 7 Scott (N.R.) 141; 6 Man. & G. 471; 12 L. J., Ex. 506—Ex. Ch.

Held, also, that the document being more than thirty years old, must be taken to have been made at the period when dated; and that this period being ante litem motam, it must primâ facie be taken to have been made ante litem motam. Ib.

Old pedigrees, produced from the custody of a person whose ancestor was connected by marriage with the family described in the pedigree, are admissible as evidence to shew the state of that family. Camoys Peerage, 6 Cl. & F. 789.

Other Family Papers.]—Letters addressed to a lady, who had married into a particular family, produced from the custody of a member of that family, who likewise possessed many other family papers and deeds, and held by descent some of the property formerly belonging to the husband of the addressee of the letters, are admissible, to shew in what character she was addressed by members of her own family. Shrewsbury Peerage, 7 H. L. Cas. 1.

A paper writing found among an ancestor's papers in the custody of a stranger in blood, and not signed by the ancestor nor by any of his family, is not admissible to shew the state of the family. Vaux Peerage Case, 5 Cl. & F. 539.

An inscription on an old portrait of one of that family, produced from proper custody, is admissible to shew the state of a family. Camoys Peerage, 6 Cl. & F. 789.

Form of.]—Family memorials to be admissible as evidence of pedigree must be spontaneous, and have originated before any question has been raised. Where, therefore, the document sought to be given in evidence was in the form of an affidavit, although not sworn, it was held to be ipso facto inadmissible. Hill v. Hibbit, 19 W. R. 250.

7. Mural and Monumental Inscriptions.

Monumental Inscriptions.]—The publicity of an inscription on a tombstone gives a sort of authenticity to it, and, if it remains uncontradicted for a great many years, it will, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, be taken to be true. But the rule as to the authority of inscriptions on tombstones cannot be put higher than that. Haslam v. Cron, 19 W. R. 968.

Circumstantial evidence is available only where the circumstances collected are consistent with one state of things and one only. Ib.

An inscription giving an account of the Moreton family on the wall of a chancel in a church called the Moreton chancel, in which some of the family (who had resided and had property in the parish) were buried, is good evidence of pedigree; and the inscription having been effaced, copies of it, one of which had been made in pencil, and was afterwards traced over with ink (but by whom it did not appear), were received as evidence of its contents. Slaney v. Wade, 7 Sim. 595; 1 Mylne & C. 338.

Tombstones.]—A claimant to a peerage, after his case was referred to the House of Lords, and evidence taken on it, presented an additional case, alleging an inscription on a tombstone in a churchyard in Ireland, which, if proved, would sustain the claim. The tombstone could not be produced; several witnesses from the neighbourhood swore positively that they saw the tombstone and inscription about twenty years ago. There was no material discrepancy in their statements, nor were any witnesses called to contradict them :—Held, that the evidence was not sufficient of the existence of the tombstone or of the inscription; and the neglect of the claimant to this material part of his case earlier induced a suspicion of fraud, which could not be removed without the production of the tombstone, or of other witnesses of greater credit from the neighbourhood. Tracy Peerage, 10 Cl. & F. 154.

S. erected in a church a monument to the memory of S., whom he described in the inscription thereon to have been his (S.'s) father. The inscription had been put up after S. had been engaged in a controversy as to the relationship with C., but it did not directly relate to that controversy. It was admitted in evidence. Shrewsbury Peerage, 7 H. L. Cas. 1.

An old collection of monumental inscriptions in country churches is inadmissible to shew what had been the inscription on a partly-defaced tomb. Ib.

An inscription on a tombstone is inadmissible to prove the age of a person. Colclough v. Smyth, 15 Ir. Ch. Rep. 347; 10 L. T. 918. And see Goodright d. Stevens v. Moss, Cowp. 591, supra.

8. Ancient Leases, Agreements, and Title-Deeds.

Assignments.]—The defendant's testator was in possession of premises under the will of Papworth, who took by assignments from Thick:—Held, that a memorial of the assignment from Thick to Papworth, signed by the latter, was evidence against him, and those claiming under him. Wollaston v. Hakewill, 3 Scott (N.R.) 593; 3 Man. & G. 297.

A counterpart of a feoffment by a corporation to an individual of land in a town, produced from among the corporation muniments, was held inadmissible in an action by the lessee of the corporation for tolls; it appearing that no rent was received in respect of the property. Lancum v. Lovell, 6 Car. & P. 441.

Part of an old indenture relating to lands, appearing to have been severed with a sharp instrument, and formerly in the custody of the plaintiff's steward, until litigation commenced between them, and afterwards handed over to the succeeding steward, from whose custody it is produced at the trial, is admissible against the plaintiff in support of the case of the defendant, who derived title from the former steward. Roe d. Trimlestown (Lord) v. Kemmis, 9 Cl. & F. 774.

Leases.]—In ejectment to prove that the land was part of the estate of the plaintiff's ancestor, a counterpart of a lease purporting to demise that land was produced from the ancestor's muniment-room. It was dated in the ancestor's lifetime, and appeared to be executed by the person named as lessee, but by no one else. The lease itself was not produced, nor any excuse shewn for the non-production. No privity appeared between the lessee and the defendant in the ejectment:—Held, that the counterpart was admissible. Doe d. Egremont (Earl) v. Pulman, 3 Q. B. 622; 6 Jur. 1122.

Where an ancient lease (upon which a question arose as to the power to cut turf for sale) is lost, the recitals of the terms of the demise, in a renewal will be taken as evidence of the terms of the demise, even against an alleged user of the rights. Chatterton v. White, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 200.

If user be relied upon, it must be shewn to have been uninterrupted as against the landlord. Ib.

An article of agreement to demise lands executed upwards of thirty years, and produced out of the proper custody:—Held, to be admissible in evidence as an ancient instrument, by proving (not by the subscribing witnesses) the signatures of the parties, that it was in defendant's handwriting, and an indorsement, explaining why possession did not accompany it, its authenticity being thereby established. Aylward v. Kearney, 2 Ball & B. 463.

Title-Deeds.]—Although the title-deeds of a person seised of land are not in general admissible against third persons to prove the truth of the facts therein asserted, yet, where they are offered to shew, not that a certain sum was due and paid for a rent-charge, and not for rent of land in the occupation of those who made the payment, but to shew what the intention in making that payment probably was, and what they supposed their rights and liabilities to be, the deeds are clearly admissible. Att.-Gen. v. Stephens, 6 De G. M. & G. 111; 25 L. J., Ch. 888; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 51; 4 W. R. 191.

On a question whether N. was part of the parish of T., an ancient agreement was produced to shew that it was. The agreement was between the owner of N. and the rector and parishioners of T., and by it all the poor from N. who should be chargeable to T. should be maintained by N., and that N. should be free from poor-rate. This agreement was found in 1858 among the title-deeds of another large estate belonging to a different person in T.:—Held, that it was admissible in evidence as coming from proper custody. Reg. v. Mytton, 2 El. & El. 557; 29 L. J., M. C. 109; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 341; 2 L. T. 12; 8 W. R. 275.

An old grant from the crown, "of grain, hay, and herbage," not shewn to have been acted upon, and under which no enjoyment nor perception of the specific tithe claimed (agistment) was proved:—Held, not to be sufficient proof of the title, in persons claiming under grantee, to the tithe of agistment. Scott v. Lawson, 7 Price, 267.

Old rent rolls admitted as evidence to prove fee-farm rents, there having been an unity of possession for above three hundred years; and being so ancient, it could not be imagined they were fabricated to serve the present purpose. But an inquisition post mortem is not evidence, unless it is proved that a commission was ever issued to support it. Newburgh v. Newburgh, 3 Bro. P. C. 553.

The royal grants and the minister's accounts are, when they so state, usually considered as sufficient evidence that certain premises were parts of a dissolved monastery. Lupton School v. Scarlett, 2 Y. & J. 330.

In quare impedit.]—A deed relating to the same church, brought from the proper custody, is admissible in evidence in a quare impedit suit. Meath (Bishop) v. Winchester (Marquis), 4 Cl. & F. 445; 10 Bli. (N.S.) 330. Affirming 3 Bing. (N.C.) 183; 3 Scott, 561.

A plaintiff in quare impedit, after tracing his title through various steps, and averring the death of W., who had been shewn to be a joint tenant with plaintiff of a term of years in an advowson, alleged, "Whereupon and whereby the plaintiff became, and still is possessed of the said advowson, as of an advowson in gross for the remainder of the said term so theretofore granted." The defendant pleaded that he, as Bishop of M., was seised of the advowson in gross, in right of his see; without this, that the plaintiff was possessed of the advowson in manner and form as the plaintiff alleged:—Held, that a fine of the advowson in question, levied in 1 Jac. 2, by one whose estate the plaintiff had, was not admissible in evidence under this or any similar issue. Ib.

Ancient Entries.]—Ancient entries made by the monks of an abbey, relating to an endowment by them of a vicarage (whether perfect or not), are good evidence (quantum valeant), of their subject matter; although such entries are mixed with extraneous memoranda, and the book is not confined or appropriated to subjects ejusdem generis; and, being admitted, they may be read throughout, for the purpose of proving anything which is material to the issue, provided it is relevant. Bullen v. Michel, 2 Price, 399; 16 R. R. 77.

A declaration of uses by the founder of a charity presumed from an entry in an ancient book purporting to be such declaration, but without a signature or date, the book being kept by the trustees for entering their proceedings, and containing an order by the trustees dated six years after creation of the trust that the declaration of the founder be there entered as a direction to the trustees. Att.-Gen. v. Boultbee, 2 Ves. J. 379.

Inspeximus—Evidence for Person not having Title.]—An abstract of what was termed an inspeximus of certain deeds and writings enrolled in the Chancery of Ireland (contained in a document 200 years old, which appeared to be in the nature of an abstract of title), reciting, amongst other things, two deeds of 15 Ed. 3 and 1 Rich. 2, and concluding by a statement that the Bishop and the Mayor and Corporation of Waterford had affixed their seals to the inspeximus for the better credit and testimony of the same, was produced from plaintiff's muniment room and tendered on his behalf as secondary evidence of the two deeds above mentioned:—Held, inadmissible because (a) the inspeximus related to lands to which plaintiff or his predecessors never had any title, and therefore was not produced from the proper custody; (b) no evidence was produced of the execution of the two deeds referred to. Devonshire (Duke) v. Neill, 2 L. R., Ir. 132.

Evidence of Title.]—Evidence of possession or of receipt of rents by persons claiming a title under a deed will render the deed admissible as evidence of the title, although such deed has been executed by a grantor not in such possession or receipt of rents. Nash v. Ash, 1 H. & C. 160; 32 L. J., Ex. 165; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 998.

Custody.]—See post, DEEDS, col. 710.

9. PLANS AND MAPS.

In an Accident Case.]—In an action for negligently driving, a plan, which is to be put into the hands of the witnesses, should merely shew the street, the pavement, the turnings, corners, &c., and not the supposed position of the carriages; but if it does so, the judge will not allow it to be used. Beamon v. Ellis, 4 Car. & P. 585.

In Ejectment.]—In ejectment, the only case in which a map of property is receivable is, where it is undisputed that, at the time the map was made, the property belonged to the person from whom both parties claim. Doe d. Hughes v. Lakin, 7 Car. & P. 481.

In what case an old map of an estate is good evidence to ascertain the quantities and boundaries of particular lands. Wilkinson v. Allott, 3 Bro. P. C. 684.

In Trespass—Ownership.]—In an action for breaking flood-gates, the defendant justified as lessee of a mill, which he held of a bishop. For the defendant, old leases of the mill, granted by the bishop, were produced from the bishop's registry, and read in evidence; and it was proposed, on the part of the defendant, to put in an old map of the place in question, also brought from the registry:—Held, that the map was not admissible. Wakeman v. West, 7 Car. & P. 479.

On the question whether certain land was part of the plaintiff's estate or waste of the manor, a perambulation of such manor by the lord, including the land in question, is evidence, as shewing an assertion of ownership by the lord, though it is not proved that any person on behalf of the plaintiff was present at the perambulation, or knew of it. Woolway v. Rowe, 1 A. & E. 114; 3 N. & M. 649.

In trespass quare clausum fregit, the defendant, in order to prove that there was a public highway across the locus in quo, put in evidence a copy of a map made by order of a former lord of the manor, of which the land in question formed part. The map had been used, for more than thirty years, by the deceased and present stewards of the manor, for the purpose of defining the copyholds. The map set out a road across the locus in quo, but did not describe it as a highway; and it was proved that other roads, similarly set out, were only occupation roads:—Held, that the map was not admissible as amounting to a declaration by a deceased person as to public right, inasmuch as, first, the map, if a declaration at all, was a declaration only as to the matter in respect of which it had been used, viz. the defining of the copyholds; and, secondly, the map itself did not describe the road as a highway. Pipe v. Fulcher, 1 El. & El. 111; 28 L. J., Q. B. 12; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 146; 7 W. R. 19.

A dwelling-house, with grounds and ornamental water, was demised, together with the control of a plantation (which was on the opposite side of the ornamental water, and belonged to the lessor, but was not demised to the lessee), for the purpose of preventing trespassers thereon, but so as not to interfere with the persons employed by the lessor, his heirs, or assigns. The lease referred to a plan on which the plantation was represented:—Held, that on the construction of the lease as explained by the plan, the lessor was not at liberty, during the term, to destroy the plantation, and an injunction was granted to restrain him from so doing. Nicholson v. Rose, 4 De G. & J. 10.

—— Mines.]—In an action by a lessee of a mine to the north, against the lessee of a mine to the south, of a certain boundary, the lease was produced, and the parcel thereof described the boundary in question as a straight line from Vincent's house to a bound-stone; "which premises are particularly delineated by the map on the back of this sett." On this map the boundary line was drawn from the north-east corner of the house. Parol evidence, however, was admitted, which shewed that the site of Vincent's house was incorrectly laid down on the map; and the judge left the whole case to the jury:—Held, that parol evidence was properly admissible to shew whether the locus in quo was or was not included in the sett; and that the question parcel or no parcel was properly left to the jury. Lyle v. Richards, 35

Held, also, that it was the duty of the judge to ask the jury whether they were satisfied that the existing Vincent's house was in fact the one intended to be described on the map, and if so, then to explain to them the true construction of the lease, and map as part thereof, and to direct them, as a matter of law, that the line must be drawn from the north-east corner of Vincent's house as it stood, notwithstanding its being incorrectly placed on the map. Ib.

An award under an act of parliament defined the southern boundaries of a level colliery thus: "commencing at the point where the level struck the coal, and extending in an eastward direction as deep as the level will drain." There was an old existing excavation (termed by miners a "level"), not horizontal, but running upward into the coal eastward from the point where it struck the coal bed. This excavation was described on the plan annexed to the award as the line of boundary:—Held, that this existing old level was the boundary meant by the award, and not an imaginary mathematical line drawn horizontally eastward from the point where the old excavation struck the coal. Brain v. Harris, 10 Ex. 908; 24 L. J., Ex. 177—Ex. Ch.

Position of House.]—In order to shew that a house was situate in the county of N., the plaintiff tendered in evidence a map printed on paper from an engraved copper-plate, having on the face of it these words, "A new map of the county of S., taken from the original map published by J. K. in 1736, who took an actual and accurate survey of the whole county, now republished with corrections and additions by J. and W. K., sons of the author, 1766, and engraved by J. R." The map was produced by a witness, who was a magistrate of the two counties N. and S., and had bought it twelve years before the trial, and during that time it had been in his possession and had not been altered:—Held, that the map was not admissible. Hammond v. Bradstreet, 10 Ex. 390; 2 C. L. R. 1195; 23 L. J., Ex. 332; 2 W. R. 625—Ex. Ch.

Highways.]—On the trial of an indictment for the non-repair of a highway, a map of the parish, produced from the parish chest, which map was made under an inclosure act (which was a private act, not printed), is not receivable to shew the boundaries of the parish, without proof of the inclosure act; but it being proved by the surveyor who made the map thirty-four years before the trial, that he laid down the boundaries of the parish from the information of an old man, then about sixty, who went round and shewed them to him:—Held, that, on this proof, the map would have been receivable as evidence of reputation, if it had been also proved that the old man was dead at the time of the trial; but that it was not receivable without proof of his death. Reg. v. Milton, 1 Car. & K. 58.

A map attached to an old inclosure award shewing a highway existent at the date of the award is not admissible as evidence of reputation to prove the boundaries of the highway at that date against a person whose property adjoined the highway, but over which the inclosure commissioners have no jurisdiction. Reg. v. Berger, 63 L. J., Q. B. 529; [1894] 1 Q. B. 823; 10 R. 245; 70 L. T. 807; 42 W. R. 541; 17 Cox, C. C. 761; 58 J. P. 416.

A copper-plate map, taken by the direction of the overseers of a parish, on an issue whether a particular spot of ground is a highway or not, is not admissible. Pollard v. Scott, Peake, 19.

Metes and Bounds.]—A map, made under the authority of the king's commission in 1832, setting out the metes and bounds of the level of New Romney, authenticated by the presentment of a jury, who made it part of their return to an inquisition held under the same commission, and practically acquiesced in for nearly sixty years, is evidence of the local limits within which the commissioners of sewers of the level are entitled to exercise their jurisdiction of levying scots or rates. New Romney Corporation v. New Romney Commissioners of Sewers, 61 L. J., Q. B. 558; [1892] 1 Q. B. 840; 56 J. P. 756—C. A.

In Tithe Suit.]—Producing map of lands of which the farm was stated to consist, and proving the accuracy of the description of the lands in the map as compared with them in 1803 (with reference to the time of commencing the suit), is no proof of such farm being ancient, nor sufficient even to raise such a presumption, that it may be capable of further proof, as to furnish ground for giving an opportunity of establishing it by issue. Stuart v. Greenall, 9 Price, 106.

Township Map—Tithe Map.]—A township map, produced from proper custody, made by a competent surveyor (since deceased) who was conversant with the locus in quo, and which map had been recognised by the parish authorities for rating purposes, is admissible in evidence upon an issue raising a question of general or public right in a part of the township. A tithe map is admissible on a similar issue. Wilberforce v. Hearfield (5 Ch. D. 709), distinguished. Smith v. Lister, 64 L. J., Q. B. 154; 15 R. 226; 72 L. T. 20.

Ordnance Map.]—Although the ordnance survey map is not evidence of title, it may be given in evidence when the question, e.g. of boundary, is in dispute, to shew the boundary line as represented on the map when the survey was made. Caton v. Hamilton, 53 J. P. 504.

In an action of trespass to land, the plaintiff gave in evidence a landed estates court conveyance to him of the locus in quo; the defendant tendered a copy of the ordnance map of the premises, which was attached to the conveyance, but not referred to in or by it:—Held, that the map was not admissible in evidence to explain or control the deed. Wyse v. Leahy, Ir. R. 9 C. L. 384.

—— Commonable Rights—Maps in British Museum.]—In an action to establish commonable rights over a piece of land on behalf of all the proprietors and occupiers of lands or tenements in a certain parish, the question raised by the evidence was: whether the land in question was within the parish. The ordnance map, and several other maps, some of which had been kept in the British Museum, were tendered in evidence for the purpose of shewing the position of the boundaries of the parish:—Held, that the maps were not admissible in evidence. Bidder v. Bridges, 54 L. T. 529; 34 W. R. 514.

Form of.]—A map or plan prepared for the purpose of a trial ought not to contain any reference to transactions and occurrences which are the subject-matter of the investigation before the court, and not existing when the survey was made; and if it does, and the objection is taken, the court will not allow the jury to look at it. Reg. v. Mitchell, 6 Cox, C. C. 82.

Where Proved Erroneous.]—A map is a picture of external objects in their relative position; and when it was proved that the site of the house was wrongly placed, the relative position of the house and the boundary line was disturbed, and the question became a further question of fact for the jury, and not of construction for the judge. Semble. Lyle v. Richards, 35 L. J., Q. B. 214; L. R. 1 H. L. 222; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 947; 15 L. T. 1.

10. WILLS.

Antiquity.]—A will more than thirty years old may be read in evidence without proof of its execution, although the testator has died within thirty years, and some of the subscribing witnesses are proved to be still living. Doe d. Oldham v. Wolley, 8 B. & C. 22; 2 Man. & Ry. 195; 3 Car. & P. 402; 6 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 286. S. P., Doe d. Spilsbury v. Burdett, 4 A. & E. 1; 6 N. & M. 259; 6 L. J., K. B. 73.

A will, fifty years old, was produced by the plaintiff's attorney, who stated that he received it from B., and that when this very cause was before an arbitrator, the defendant's attorney, in the presence of the defendant, consented to this will being admitted in evidence, on being then produced by B.:—Held, that this was such evidence of proper custody as would allow the will to be read as evidence for the plaintiff. Doe d. Bowdler v. Owen, 8 Car. & P. 751.

It is no objection to a will more than thirty years old being read in evidence, that possession has not followed it, because the court cannot know how the will directs the possession to go till it is made acquainted with the contents of the will by its being read. Lloyd v. Passingham, 2 Car. & P. 440; 30 R. R. 327.

The thirty years are to be computed from the date of the will, and not from the death of the testator, and are calculated as ending at the time of its production. Man v. Ricketts, 7 Beav. 93.

A will (about seventy years old) executed under seal, and published and attested as a sealed instrument, proved to have been in the keeping of a person entitled under it as tenant for life, and he was shown to have treated it as his title-deed, and, shortly before his death, to have desired a person to read it over in order to see whether he was empowered by it to dispose of the property by his will, is properly received as a document coming from a custody where it may reasonably be expected to be found, notwithstanding its appearance was calculated to lead to a suspicion that it had been cancelled by the testator after its execution. Andrews v. Motley, 12 C. B. (N.S.) 526; 32 L. J., C. P. 128.

A will was thirty years old from the date of execution; it came from the custody of the person in whose favour it was made, and containing a proper attestation clause:—Held, that this was sufficient evidence of the fact of due execution. Orange v. Pickford, 27 L. J., Ch. 808; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 649.

Will, thirty years old, coming from the proper custody, proves itself subject to just exception. Holton v. Lloyd, 1 Moll. 30.

Attesting Witnesses.] — In ejectment, the plaintiff claimed under a deed executed by C., since deceased, by which—reciting that C. was entitled in fee to the premises under the will of S., her deceased husband—the whole estate in the premises was conveyed to the plaintiff. At the trial, the plaintiff, at the instance of the defendant, produced a will of S., by which C. took an estate in the premises for her own life only; and evidence was given on the part of the defendant that C. had, previously to the execution of the deed, admitted the document produced to be the will of S., but the persons named as the attesting witnesses to the will were not called by the defendant, nor was any evidence given of the handwriting of the alleged testator. The plaintiff's counsel called for a direction, but did not ask the judge to leave any question to the jury, and the judge directed a verdict for the defendant, reserving liberty for the plaintiff to move to change the verdict if the court should be of opinion that he ought not to have allowed the alleged will to be given in evidence:—Held, that the will was properly received in evidence. Nagle v. Shea, Ir. R. 9 C. L. 389—Ex. Ch.

Held, secondly, that there was no misdirection. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that, according to the reservation, it was not open to the plaintiff's counsel to contend that it ought to have been left to the jury to say whether the will produced at the trial was identical with that which had been admitted by C. Ib.

—— Proof of Handwriting.]—On proof satisfactory to the court of the handwriting of the two attesting witnesses to a will containing a due attestation clause and executed in France by a testatrix domiciled in that country; and upon evidence that diligent search had been made, but without success, for the two attesting witnesses, it was held that sufficient proof had been given that the requisite formalities attending the due execution of the will had been complied with. Baxendale v. De Valmer, 57 L. T. 556.

—— Copy in Handwriting of.]—A copy of a will in the handwriting of one of the attesting witnesses, who was a solicitor's clerk, was found after a lapse of fifty years among the solicitor's papers tied up with other papers belonging to a client who was one of the executors named in the will:—Held, on proof of due search for the original will, that the copy was admissible. Sly v. Dredge, 46 L. J., P. 63; 2 P. D. 91; 25 W. R. 463.

—— Witnesses Illiterate and Predeceasing Testator — Presumption.]—A holograph will, signed at foot by the testator, and containing an attestation clause, appeared attested by two marksmen. Their names, as subscribed to the will, the attestation clause, and the words "mark—his," which appeared written above and below crosses opposite each of their names, were in the handwriting of the testator. At the date of the instrument, two persons of the names so subscribed as those of the attesting witnesses were in his employment; they were both illiterate, and both predeceased him. The document was found shortly after the testator's death in his house, preserved amongst others of his papers. It purported to give all his property to his widow. He stated to her the night before his death that he had left her all he had—that everything was hers. It did not appear that any fourth person was present at the execution of the will, and no direct evidence of its due execution was given :—Held, that there were reasonable grounds for presuming that the will had been duly executed and attested pursuant to the provisions of the Wills Act, and sufficient to enable the court to pronounce in favour of its validity. Clarke v. Clarke, 5 L. R. Ir. 47—C. A.

—— Presence of Testatrix.]—A testatrix signed a document in the presence of two witnesses, who twenty minutes afterwards subscribed the document in an adjoining room. The door was open, but the testatrix was not aware that they were signing :—Held, that the document was not duly executed. Jenner v. Effinch, 49 L. J., P. 25 ; 5 P. D. 106 ; 42 L. T. 327 ; 28 W. R. 520.

—— Two Papers.]—A will was written twice on different pieces of paper. The two documents were differently worded, but were to the same effect. By mistake one of them was signed by the testator, and the other by the two attesting witnesses :—Held, that the will was not duly attested. Hatton, In goods of, 50 L. J., P. 78 ; 6 P. D. 204 ; 30 W. R. 62 ; 46 J. P. 40.

—— Deaf and Dumb Testator.]—Where a person, who was deaf and dumb, made his will by communicating his instructions to an acquaintance by signs and motions, who prepared a will in conformity with such instructions, which was afterwards duly executed by the testator, the court required an affidavit from the drawer of the will on the nature of the signs and motions by which the instructions were communicated to him, and ultimately refused to grant probate on motion. Owston, In goods of, 2 Sw. & Tr. 461 ; 31 L. J., P. 177 ; 6 L. T. 368 ; 10 W. R. 410.

—— Character of Witnesses.]—Where a will is contested between the heir-at-law and a stranger, the execution of it must be proved by the most clear and unequivocal evidence ; and if contested at the end of some years, when the subscribing witnesses are dead, evidence may be called to their character. Doe d. Walker v. Stephenson, 3 Esp. 284.

—— Practice.]—It has never been laid down as a rule, that a will cannot be proved without examining all the witnesses, though the practice has been to examine all. Powell v. Cleaver, 2 Bro. C. C. 504.

But a party proving a will in solemn form in the Probate Court, is bound to call at least one of the attesting witnesses. Bowman v. Hodgson, 36 L. J., P. 124 ; L. R. 1 P. 362 ; 16 L. T. 392.

Declarations of Deceased Person taking Interest under.]—Declarations of a deceased person, claiming a limited interest under a particular will of property of which he was in possession, are admissible to prove the fact that such will had a legal existence, and that certain persons were named executors therein. Sly v. Dredge, 46 L. J., P. 63 ; 2 P. D. 91 ; 25 W. R. 463.

Loss—Secondary Evidence.]—On proof that a will of lands had been lost, parol evidence of its contents was received from a person who had heard it read over in the presence of the testator's family on the day of his funeral. Anon., 2 Camp. 390. S. P., Sugden v. St. Leonards, 45 L. J., P. 49 ; 1 P. D. 154 ; 34 L. T. 372 ; 24 W. R. 860.

Acknowledgment of Signature.]—A. requested B. to prepare a will for him, by which B. was appointed sole executor, and when prepared it was signed by A. in the presence of B. and two other persons. B. then sent for C. and D., and in A.'s hearing requested them to attest A.'s signature, which they did, and A. thanked them for their trouble :—Held, following Inglesant v. Inglesant (L. R. 3 P. 172), that the signature had been duly acknowledged ; and probate granted. Bishop, In goods of, 30 W. R. 567 ; 46 J. P. 392.

To constitute a sufficient acknowledgment, within s. 9 of the Wills Act, the witnesses must at the time of the acknowledgment see, or have the opportunity of seeing, the signature of the testator, and if such be not the case it is immaterial whether the signature be, in fact, there at the time of attestation, or whether the testator say that the paper to be attested is his will, or that his signature is inside the paper. Hudson v. Parker (1 Robert, 14) followed. Gwillim v. Gwillim (3 Sw. & Tr. 200) and Becket v. Howe (L. R. 2 P. & D. 1) disapproved. Gunstan, In goods of, Blake v. Blake, 51 L. J., Ch. 377 ; 51 L. J., P. 36 ; 7 P. D. 102 ; 46 L. T. 641 ; 30 W. R. 505—C. A.

As to Age.]—A statement in a will of the date of a person's birth is primâ facie evidence of his age. Williams v. Huskisson, 3 Y. & C. 80 ; 2 Jur. 656.

Recital in Deed.]—A recital in a deed of a will of real estate, coupled with a parol admission of the authenticity of a document purporting to be the will, made, ante litem motam, by the grantor, who took an interest under the will :—Held, upon production of the document, sufficient proof of the will against the grantee claiming under the deed. Nagle v. Shea, Ir. R. 8 C. L. 224.

Exemplification.]—Where original will is lost, and from exemplification thereof under seal of prerogative court, there is reason to suspect its validity as to disposition of real estate: such exemplification cannot be admitted as evidence, but party must be left to his remedy at law. Arthur v. Arthur, 3 Bro. P. C. 568.

Production of Original by Officer of Court.]—Order on the registrar of an ecclesiastical court, to deliver an original will, to be produced here, on security given to return it. Lake v. Causfield, 3 Bro. C. C. 263.

Will ordered to be delivered out of ecclesiastical court to the solicitor, on security to return it. Forder v. Wade, 4 Bro. C. C. 476.

Where a man is sole devisee of the real estate, and one of the witnesses to the will resides abroad, upon a commission to examine such witness, the court will make an order that the original will be delivered out of the prerogative office to a person named by the party praying the commission, in order that it may be carried out of the kingdom, the first giving security to return the same to the appropriation of the judge of the prerogative court. Frederick v. Aynscombe, 1 Atk. 627.

The court of chancery, where necessary, will make an order upon the prerogative office, to deliver a will to the registrar's office in Symond's Inn, and lie there till the court of chancery has no further occasion for it. Id. 628.

The prerogative office was ordered to deliver a will to be proved in Gloucestershire, under a commission from chancery, and an officer of the prerogative office was not suffered to attend the execution of the commission. Ib.

Will delivered from prerogative court on approved security. Morse v. Roach, Dick. 65.

Order to registrar of ecclesiastical court should be directed "To the registrar of the court," and security for return of a will to him should be approved of by master. Qualey v. Qualey, 4 Madd. 213.

Order made upon registrar of consistory court, that an original will may be produced for hearing on giving security. Hodson v. ——, 6 Ves. 134. S. P., Ford v. ——, Id. 802.

Court will not direct ecclesiastical court to deliver out original will to be produced here merely to save expense of copy. Wells v. Corbyn, 3 Anstr. 648.

Order was made on registrar of Brecon to deliver a will to defendant's attorney, to be produced at the hearing of the cause, on giving security to return it. Williams v. Floyer, Ambl. 343.

The court will order the registrar of the consistory court to attend with the will in court at the hearing. Wigan v. Rowland, 17 Jur. 816.

Production of an original will, upon security being given, without requiring the attendance of the officer of the registrar. S. C., 10 Hare (App.) xviii. xxxii.; 17 Jur. 816.

Proof by Handwriting.]—The execution of a deed may, on an unopposed petition, be proved under the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 125), s. 26. Mair's Estate, In re, 42 L. J., Ch. 882; 28 L. T. 760; 21 W. R. 749.

A married woman under a power prescribing no particular form appointed new trustees, and the fund vested in the old trustees having been paid into court under the Trustee Relief Act, petitioned for payment out to the new trustees. Upon this petition the question arose whether the proof of her signature by a stranger who had seen her write is sufficient under s. 26 of 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125:—Held, that the application being for payment out of the fund, and not to carry into effect the instrument, the act did not apply; and that inasmuch as the power did not prescribe any special form, the proof was sufficient. Hall, In re, 9 W. R. 776.

Proof by Age.]—Deeds, which being more than thirty years old prove themselves, used at the hearing of a motion for decree, should be inserted in the list of evidence in the decree, although not included in the list of evidence to be read, and not referred to in any affidavit. Boyd v. Petrie, 19 W. R. 221.

All deeds above thirty years old prove themselves, and there is no occasion to prove their execution. Rex v. Farringdon, 2 Term Rep. 471; Marsh v. Collnett, 2 Esp. 665; 5 R. R. 763.

The memorial of a deed upwards of thirty years old, and executed by the grantors, is admissible as primary evidence against persons claiming under them of the facts stated therein without proof of handwriting. Riggs Miller v. Wheatley, 28 L. R. Ir. 144.

—— Execution by Attorney.] — Although the presumption will be made that a deed more than thirty years old, coming from an unsuspected repository, has been validly executed, yet, in the case of the execution by an attorney of a deed purporting to be an appointment under a discretionary power, the court will not assume that the attorney was authorised to and could lawfully make the appointment in the absence of any evidence to that effect. Airey, In re, Airey v. Stapleton, 66 L. J., Ch. 152; [1897] 1 Ch. 164; 76 L. T. 151; 45 W. R. 286.

Inrolment.]—A. being entitled as quasi tenant in tail to a sum of stock, executed a disentailing deed, which was duly inrolled in chancery, and presented a petition for the transfer of the stock. This deed was produced at the hearing of the petition, with the certificate of the clerk of inrolments, indorsed, but no evidence was given of the deed:—Held, that the petitioner's title was not made out by the production of the deed, and that evidence of his execution of the deed ought to be given. Bishop v. De Burgh, 15 L. J., Ch. 35.

The inrolment of a lease under 1 & 2 Geo. 4, c. 52, s. 8, does not dispense with proof of the execution of the instrument. Jenkins v. Biddulph, 1 Ry. & M. 339.

Custody.]—It must be proved that deeds come from such custody as to afford a reasonable presumption that they were honestly and fairly obtained, and preserved for use, and are free from all suspicion of dishonesty. Roe d. Brune v. Rawlings, 7 East, 291; 3 Smith, 254; 8 R. R. 632. S. P., Swinnerton v. Stafford (Marquis), 3 Taunt. 91; Lygon v. Strutt, 2 Anst. 601; 3 R. R. 631. Potts v. Durant, 3 Anst. 789; 4 R. R. 864.

In order to render a document admissible in evidence, it is not necessary that it should come from the most proper place of custody; it is sufficient if it comes from a place where it may reasonably be expected to be found. Croughton v. Blake, 12 M. & W. 205; 13 L. J., Ex. 78; 8 Jur. 275.

An ancient agreement between an owner of land and the inhabitants of a parish that the land should maintain its own poor, is a document which may reasonably be expected to be found among the title-deeds of a large estate in the parish, and is properly receivable to shew that the particular estate is part of the parish. Reg. v. Mytton Overseers, 2 El. & El. 557; 29 L. J., M. C. 109; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 341; 2 L. T. 12; 8 W. R. 275.

In ejectment, by the mortgagee against the son of the mortgagor, he produced a marriage settlement more than thirty years old, made prior to the marriage, whereby the mortgagor conveyed the premises to trustees for himself for life, with remainder to the issue of the marriage. It being proved that the deed was found among the papers of the mortgagor:—Held, that although this was not strictly proper custody, the deed was nevertheless admissible without proof of its execution. Doe d. Neale v. Samples, 3 N. & P. 254; 8 A. & E. 151; 1 W. W. & H. 228; 7 L. J., Q. B. 140; 2 Jur. 841.

The rule as to the proof of custody, which entitles ancient deeds to be so read, is satisfied by proof of their coming out of the possession of any one so connected with them as not to raise any suspicions of fraud. Ib.

Documents more than thirty years old are admissible, without proof of execution, if produced from custody which may be reasonably accounted for, though not the strictly proper legal custody. Doe d. Jacobs v. Phillips, 8 Q. B. 158; 15 L. J., Q. B. 47; 10 Jur. 34. S. P., Slater v. Hodgson, 9 Q. B. 727.

A deed thirty years old, a link in the chain of the defendant's title to the property to recover possession of which the action was brought, was produced by a witness who received it from the defendant's attorney:—Held, on the authority of Doe d. Jacobs v. Phillips, supra, that there was sufficient evidence of proper custody. Johnson v. Tyrrell, 2 L. T. 429.

A suit to establish the will, and administer the estate of a testator, in which his executors and trustees were defendants, was compromised by a deed to which the executors and trustees were parties, re-settling the lands in effect with some variations, to the uses of the will:—Held, that the production of this deed by the solicitors for the trustees and executors was production from proper custody. Riggs Miller v. Wheatley, 28 L. R. Ir. 144.

Upon the expiration of a lease for lives, T. W. was in possession of the premises as tenant from year to year to W., to whom he paid his rent. T. W. obtained the lease from W. and J. (who were not attorneys), and carried it to his landlord W., and took a fresh demise. The amount of rent paid by T. W. was the same as that reserved by the indenture. W. and J. claimed no interest in the document. In an action against T., W.'s tenant:—Held, that the custody of the lease was properly accounted for. Rees v. Walters, 3 M. & W. 527; 7 L. J., Ex. 138; 2 Jur. 378.

A deed more than thirty years old, creating a lease for lives, which had expired, was produced from the custody of W., a land agent of plaintiff, in the following manner:—W. was expected by the attorney of plaintiff to have been at the trial, but left the assize town the evening before, and the deed was taken out of his carpet bag, and produced by the attorney for the plaintiff:—Held, that there was sufficient primâ facie evidence of proper custody. Doe d. Shrewsbury (Earl) v. Keeling, 11 Q. B. 884; 17 L. J., Q. B. 199; 12 Jur. 433.

Recitals.]—Recitals in a deed tendered but not executed were held admissions by the parties on whose behalf the deed was prepared, but capable of being rebutted. Bulley v. Bulley, 44 L. J., Ch. 79; L. R. 9 Ch. 739; 30 L. T. 848; 22 W. R. 779.

Recitals in documents are no evidence of what is there recited, though actual possession, in conformity therewith, would constitute a primâ facie title. Bristow v. Cormican, 3 App. Cas. 641.

A recital in a deed executed in 1739, that, by a separate deed in 1733, A. declared he was seised of the freehold of lands in trust for B., to whom he had on the same day granted a lease of the same lands for one thousand years, is not evidence of the contents of the deed declaring the trust; neither is the receipt of a master, acknowledging such deed to have been lodged with him, evidence of its contents, though it may be of its existence. Kelly v. Power, 2 Ball & B. 236.

A recital shewing that a prior absolute conveyance was in fact a mortgage, was held not to be conclusive on the party claiming the benefit of the prior deed, though he entered under the second, inasmuch as he had not executed it. Tull v. Owen, 4 Y. & Coll. 192; 9 L. J., Ex. Eq. 33; 4 Jur. 39.

Where a purchaser of equity of redemption had the legal estate conveyed to him by deed, dated the 24th August, 1796, in which it was recited that the purchaser had some time since paid to the mortgagee the money due on the mortgage, &c., bill to redeem was filed on the 29th January, 1816:—Held, that the recital was an acknowledgment of the mortgage title within twenty years from the filing of the bill. Price v. Copner, 1 Sim. & S. 347; 1 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 178.

In the absence of evidence of a contrary custom, it will be presumed that a surrender will bar an estate tail in copyholds. Copyholds were sold subject to a condition that all statements and recitals in any of the title-deeds or muniments of title should be considered as satisfactory evidence of the facts stated or recited; and in case any purchaser should not, within fourteen days from the delivery of the abstract, declare his dissatisfaction with the title, and point out some valid objection thereto, the same should be considered as accepted. The first surrender on the abstract was dated in 1801, and was a conditional surrender by A. and J. his wife, "which said J. had then lately been admitted there tenant in tail, according to the custom of that manor." The purchaser objected that there was nothing to show how the estate tail had been barred, and subsequently the purchaser required evidence that the custom of the manor warranted estates tail. In 1815 an absolute surrender in fee was made by the persons who had made the conditional surrender of 1801. The property had, ever since the surrender of 1815, been possessed and enjoyed under that surrender. The purchaser having objected to the title, on the grounds that there was no sufficient evidence of the facts that the custom of the manor warranted estates tail, and that the estate tail of J. had ever been barred:—Held, that the recital in the surrender of 1801 was conclusive evidence under the conditions of sale of the fact that J. had been admitted tenant in tail, but not that this was according to the custom of the manor, because that was not a single fact but rather a deduction from a series of facts:—Held, also, that this recital, coupled with the conditional surrender of 1801, the absolute surrender of 1815, and the subsequent possession, consistently with that title, was sufficient evidence that the custom of the manor did warrant estates tail. Goold v. White, Kay, 683; 2 Eq. Rep. 1100.

In conveyances by lease and release, it seems not to be the practice in Ireland to make lease for year; but recital in release is evidence of lease. Daly v. Kelly, 4 Dow, 435.

Decree for raising money under deed of appointment, though the only copy produced appeared not executed; upon recitals of it in two settlements as a subsisting effectual deed, and evidence, from books of a deceased solicitor, of charges for the preparation and execution of it. Skipworth v. Shilrey, 11 Ves. 64; 8 R. R. 86.

Recitals in a deed-poll made by an ancestor of an owner of pasturage:—Held, admissible to prove marriages, deaths, &c., of ancestors of the owner. Welcome v. Upton, 6 M. & W. 536.

See also ESTOPPEL.

Indorsements.]—To prove the execution of a deed, by which A. conveyed lands to W. upon certain trusts, which deed was alleged to be lost, it is shewn that L. (in whose office W. had been a clerk) had found a draft of a deed of conveyance, with the following memorandum on the back of it, in the handwriting of W.:—"Engrossed J. W.; stamps and parchment, with 1*l.* for lease, 3*l.* 3*s.* 8*d.*":—Held, that this memorandum was not admissible. Doe d. Mather v. Whitefoot, 8 Car. & P. 270.

A document indorsed in plaintiff's handwriting, and which plaintiff had directed a witness to give to defendant, is good evidence on the part of defendant, although the instrument be not between the parties on the record. Agar v. Young, Car. & M. 78.

Copy.]—An old attested copy of a deed of settlement, produced from the proper custody, was received, after proof of unsuccessful searches for the original, and proof that the possession of the estates comprised in the settlement went with it. Fitzwalter Peerage, 10 Cl. & F. 193.

A copy of a deed to lead the uses of a fine, and inrolled for safe custody, allowed to be read as evidence at a trial at law. Combes v. Spencer, 2 Vern. 471. Semble. S. C., id. 591.

Draft.]—Drafts of deeds of which one was objected to on the ground of its being insufficiently proved, and the other on the ground that the deed belonged to the defendant's title, admitted in evidence. Sutcliffe v. James, 40 L. T. 875; 27 W. R. 750.

A draft of articles of partnership, together with stated account, and the payment of money by the acting partner to the others:—Held, sufficient evidence of partnership to ground decree for account. Worts v. Pern, 3 Bro. P. C. 548.

Practice.]—The court will, of course, take the word of counsel as to whether any deed was or was not used by him. Boyd v. Petrie, 19 W. R. 221.

For what purpose admissible—Bond.]—A bond or mortgage is primâ facie good evidence for a debt; but in case fraud appears, the obligee, &c., ought to prove actual payment. Piddock v. Brown, 3 P. W. 289.

A bond for performance of articles, though cancelled, was made an exhibit, and allowed as evidence to prove the execution of the articles, the limitation being inserted and recited in the condition of the bond. Anon., Gilb. 183.

—— Appointment.]—A married woman was alleged to have executed an appointment in 1800, and to have destroyed it. In 1813 disputes having arisen between her and the appointees, she and her husband executed a deed of compromise, which recited the appointment of 1800, and that she had destroyed it:—Held, in a contest between the appointees and a party claiming under her will, that the deed of compromise was admissible in evidence, as was also the draft bill of costs of her solicitor, and a draft of the deed of 1800 found in his possession. Held, also, that this evidence (after a lapse of forty years) established the fact of her execution of the appointment in 1800. Dyne v. Costobadie, 17 Beav. 140; 23 L. J., Ch. 66.

—— Deed not inrolled.]—Whether a deed vesting lands in trustees for a charitable use, not inrolled under the statute 9 Geo. 2, c. 36, and therefore within that act "null and void," is admissible in evidence for the purpose of showing upon what trusts the lands are held, the party having the legal estate admitting that he is a trustee, and claiming no beneficial interest, quære. Att.-Gen. v. Ward, 6 Hare, 482.

Proof of twenty-five years' usage of a dissenters' meeting-house for worship by persons of a certain religious society, is not, under the statute 7 & 8 Vict. c. 45, conclusive evidence that the trusts of the premises are for the benefit of that society, where such trusts are declared upon the face of the deed by which the premises are dedicated to the charitable use, although such deed, not being inrolled, is "to all intents and purposes null and void" under the Mortmain Act. Id. 482.

12. Telegrams.

Production of—Subpœna to Post-Office Officials.]—On a subpœna from the court of bankruptcy to produce all telegrams sent by the bankrupt from a certain date, the secretary of the post-office was ordered to produce the documents sought for, the court intimating that such subpœnas should be prepared so as to meet the convenience of the officials. Smith, In re, 7 L. R., Ir. 286.

The post-office authorities may be ordered to produce specified telegrams. Tomline v. Tyler, 44 L. T. 187.

Privileged Communications by.]—When a communication, libellous in itself, but such that the occasion of it would have rendered it privileged if made by letter to the person alone to whom it was addressed, whereas it was in fact made by means of a telegram, is not privileged, though made bonâ fide, because the mode of conveying the information necessarily involves publication to the post-office clerks:—Held, it was not less a publication because 31 & 32 Vict. c. 110, s. 20, makes the disclosure of the contents of a telegraphic message by any official in the post office a misdemeanour. Williamson v. Freer, 43 L. J., C. P. 161; L. R. 9 C. P. 393; 30 L. T. 332; 22 W. R. 878.

Mistake.]—The defendant wrote a message for transmission by telegraph to the plaintiff, ordering three rifles. By mistake the telegraph clerk telegraphed the word "the" for "three"; and the plaintiffs thereupon, acting upon a previous communication with the defendant to the effect that he might perhaps want as many as fifty rifles, sent that number to him. He declined to take more than three. In an action against him to recover the price of the fifty rifles:—Held, that he was not responsible for the mistake of the telegraph clerk, and that therefore the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover the price of more than three rifles. Henkel v. Pape, 40 L. J., Ex. 15; L. R. 6 Ex. 7; 23 L. T. 419; 19 W. R. 106.

13. Historical, Literary and Scientific Books.

Whether Permissible.]—On the argument of a special case, the counsel for the defendant, with a view to illustrate and explain the object and intention of a provision in an old act of parliament, proposed to read an extract from a printed book found in the Bodleian Library, dated 1706, and professing to contain the rules and regulations of the Company of Mine Adventurers of England; and also a document from the Rolls Chapel, inrolled there as a deed of partnership of the Million Bank, dated 1698. The plaintiff's counsel objecting—the court refused to permit them to be read. Bank of England v. Anderson, 4 Scott, 83.

Counsel at a trial may refer to matters of general history, provided the licence is exercised with prudence, but cannot refer to particular books of history or read particular passages from them to prove any fact relevant to the cause. Darby v. Ouseley, 1 H. & N. 1; 25 L. J., Ex. 227; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 497; 4 W. R. 463.

Works of standard authority in literature may, provided the privilege is not abused, be referred to by counsel at a trial in order to shew the general course of composition, and to explain the sense in which words are used, and matters of a like nature, but cannot be resorted to to prove facts relevant to the cause. Ib.

The ecclesiastical courts may consult ancient authors, historical and theological works, pictures, engravings and other ancient documents, with respect to the practice of the primitive church, the ritual of the eastern and western churches, the position of the lord's table, the position of the celebrant at the table, and like questions which are beyond the reach of living memory. Read v. Lincoln (Bishop), 62 L. J., P. C. 1; [1892] A. C. 644; 67 L. T. 128; 56 J. P. 725—P. C.

14. Photographs.

When Allowed.]—Photographs were allowed to be used on the trial of an indictment for an obstruction to a highway, to shew the nature of the locus in quo. Reg. v. United Kingdom Electric Telegraph Co., 3 F. & F. 73.

So, on an indictment for bigamy, a photographic likeness of the first husband was allowed to be shewn to the witnesses present at the first marriage, in order to prove his identity with the persons mentioned in the certificate of marriage. Reg. v. Tolson, 4 F. & F. 103.

15. Newspapers.

Report.]—A witness in the cause stated, that a certain report in a newspaper of the proceedings at the meeting when the resolution of appropriation was alleged to have been passed was a correct representation of what passed; but the court rejected not only the newspaper, but also the deposition tending to shew the accuracy of the statement in it. Rossmore (Lord) v. Mowatt, 15 Jur. 238.

To Refresh Memory.]—See post, col. 911.

Gazettes.]—See ante, cols. 604, 605.

16. Account Books.

Both Sides must be taken.]—If one side of an account produced by the adversary is used, both must be taken. The account must be adopted altogether, or rejected in toto. The rule is the same in this court as at law. Kilbee v. Sneyd, 2 Moll. 193.

When an account furnished by a party before any suit instituted, is produced to charge him with the items, on the debit side, he is entitled to resort to the credit side in support of his discharge. Boardman v. Jackson, 2 Ball & B. 382.

When Primâ facie Evidence.]—In a suit to administer the estate of a testator who had died in Jamaica in 1825, an account was directed against the surviving executor and the representative of a deceased executor. In taking the account the books of account, which were proved to have been recorded in the Jamaica court, were allowed to be taken as primâ facie evidence of the truth of the matters therein contained, under 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 54, without production of vouchers. Sleight v. Lawson, 3 Kay & J. 292; 26 L. J., Ch. 553; 5 W. R. 89.

Accounts on an information filed for settling a scheme for a charity. Practice not yet settled as to the forum to which a reference will be directed; and semble, special directions as to books of accounts being taken as primâ facie evidence under the 54th section of the act 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, will not be given at the hearing. Att.-Gen. v. Attwood, 1 W. R. 64.

A trustee under the will of a testator who died in 1834, kept the trusts accounts open to be inspected by the cestuis que trustent, who all lived near together and in communication. In 1855 an examination of the books of account was made on behalf of two of them. The court allowed the books to be taken as primâ facie evidence of accounts till that examination. Banks v. Cartwright, 15 W. R. 417.

Circumstances under which books of account were allowed to be taken as primâ facie evidence under 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 54. Hardwick v. Wright, 15 W. R. 953.

Books of account, kept by a trustee and her agents, were tendered as evidence of disbursements in reference to the trust estate. The chief clerk, as the trustee could not produce strict vouchers, admitted the books as evidence; and a motion to vary the certificate was refused, with costs. Cookes v. Cookes, 3 N. R. 97; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 843; 11 W. R. 871.

The meaning of the act 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 54, is, that where vouchers have been lost, or the accounts cannot be taken in the ordinary way, the court may give special directions; but such directions will not be given unless it appears that the ordinary evidence cannot be had, not merely to save expense. Lodge v. Pritchard, 3 De G. M. & G. 906.

Semble, that by the ordinary rules of the court partnership books are admissible in evidence for and against all the partners and their estates. Ib.

Semble, that the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 18, s. 54, does not operate retrospectively. Ib.

A suit was instituted to be relieved against a bond given to a deceased obligee, on the ground of a subsisting account. The plaintiff relied upon a paper in the handwriting of the obligee, to show that an account was open between them. This paper was entered in evidence. The decree directed the accounts to be taken:—Held, that the master had properly allowed the paper to be used in evidence on behalf of the obligee as well as against him. Dickin v. Ward, 4 De G. & Sm. 266; 20 L. J., Ch. 211; 15 Jur. 834.

The provision in the 54th section of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, which enacts "that it shall be lawful for the court, in any case where an account is required to be taken, to direct that in taking the accounts the books of account in which the accounts required to be taken have been kept, or any of them, shall be taken as primâ facie evidence of the truth of the matters therein contained, with liberty to the parties interested to take such objections thereto as they may be advised" :—Held, to apply to an account directed to be taken by a decree made before the act came into operation; but :—Held, that the power given to the court by the provision is not to be exercised until the court is satisfied that the means of obtaining the ordinary legal evidence has been substantially exhausted. Ewart v. Williams, 3 Eq. R. 476; 24 L. J., Ch. 414; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 409; 3 W. R. 348. And see S.C., 7 De G. M. & G. 68; 3 Eq. R. 171; 24 L. J., Ch. 366; 3 W. R. 46.

The books of a manufactory being kept by B. while O. was manager:—Held, not binding on O.; but O. having free access to the said books, they were to be taken as primâ facie evidence, with liberty to O. to surcharge and falsify. Ogden v. Battams, 1 Jur. (N.S.) 791. See also Orrett v. Corser, 1 Jur. (N.S.) 882.

Where, under a decree directing accounts to be taken, no order was obtained under the 54th section of the statute 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, that the books of account should be taken as primâ facie evidence, but the judge's chief clerk so admitted them and granted his certificate, the court of appeal, upon a motion to discharge the certificate, refused the same, but without costs. Newberry v. Benson, 23 L. J., Ch. 1003; 2 W. R. 648—L.JJ.

On an inquiry into very remote transactions, accounts kept by a deceased party at the time directed to be taken as primâ facie evidence, throwing on the other side the onus of impeaching them. Chalmer v. Bradley, 1 Jac. & Walk. 65; 20 R. R. 216.

Of Deceased Person.]—An account book of a former vicar, produced by a witness who deposed that he got it from his aunt, who resided with his father, who was the son of the vicar; and that he had frequently seen the book in his aunt's possession, and had heard her say it belonged to his grandfather:—Held, not admissible evidence. Thompson v. Perryman, 1 Younge, 598.

Secondary Evidence.]—Where the account was of twenty years' standing, the defendant was allowed to prove his account upon his own oath for what he could not prove by books or cancelled bond. Peyton v. Green, 1 Ch. Rep. 146.

And where the account had been delivered fourteen years, and no objection taken, the defendant had lost his books by seizure in a foreign country:—Held, that defendant should not be charged beyond his own oath. Holtscomb v. Rivers, 1 Ch. Ca. 127.

An account settled explains sufficiently want of care in the safe keeping of vouchers. If a settled account is opened in the absence of fraud, a great latitude is given to the admission of secondary evidence. Kilbee v. Sneyd, 2 Moll. 193, 4.

To prove Agency.]—The question being whether rent paid by the plaintiff to J. B. had been received by him on his own account, or as agent for defendant, it was proposed by defendant to give in evidence certain accounts rendered to him by J. B., in which he charged himself as agent for defendant, with receipt of the rent. J. B. was living at the time of the trial. The accounts were held inadmissible. Spargo v. Brown, 9 B. & C. 935; 4 M. & R. 638; 8 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 67.

D. PAROL EVIDENCE TO EXPLAIN DOCUMENTS.

(See CONTRACT.)

1. AMBIGUITY.

General Rule.]—Parol evidence may be received to explain a written instrument. Rex v. Laindon, 8 Term Rep. 379. S. P., McCollin v. Gilpin, 6 Q. B. D. 516; 44 L. T. 914; 29 W. R. 408; 45 J. P. 828—C. A.

But not unless there is some latent ambiguity. Coker v. Guy, 2 Bos. & P. 565.

And parol evidence cannot be admitted to contradict or vary the terms of an agreement in writing. Meres v. Ansell, 3 Wil. 275. S. P., Ogilvie v. Foljambe, 3 Mer. 53; 17 R. R. 13.

When the document is unambiguous, evidence is not admissible. De la Warr (Earl) v. Miles, 50 L. J., Ch. 754; 17 Ch. D. 535; 44 L. T. 487; 29 W. R. 809.

Parol evidence is admissible to explain the terms of an ambiguously written agreement, but not to extend it. Stokes v. Moore, 1 Cox, 219; 1 R. R. 24.

Under certain circumstances, parol evidence is admissible to explain the nature of an agreement in writing, and to shew the conduct of the parties concerning it. Eden v. Bute (Earl), 3 Bro. P. C. 679.

In what manner a written agreement may be affected by parol evidence; and upon what grounds the court proceeds in admitting or rejecting such evidence. It cannot be admitted for the purpose of varying the agreement, although it may for the purpose of raising an equity founded on the agreement, by proof of collateral circumstances. Davis v. Symonds, 1 Cox, 402; 1 R. R. 63.

An agreement in writing cannot be qualified or altered by subsequent conversations, or a presumed intended departure from the terms of the original agreement. Boun v. Stroud, 21 L. T. 695.

Where an agreement is created by letters, no evidence aliunde is admissible; but otherwise, where the letters are produced only as evidence of the agreement. Brice v. Bletchley, 6 Madd. 17.

For Court or Jury.]—Where a document produced in evidence is ambiguous on the face of it, the ambiguity is to be explained by the judge. Smith v. Thompson, 8 C. B. 44; 18 L. J., C. P. 314.

But where an expression in a document produced becomes ambiguous by reason of extrinsic evidence, it is for the jury to construe that ambiguity. Ib.

Where the meaning of a document depends upon its terms, and not on matters of fact dehors the document, the question will be for the judge, even although the terms are technical and scientific; but where an ambiguity is raised by evidence dehors the document, which is plain upon the face of it, the ambiguity being as to a term which imports one thing in a scientific sense and another in a commercial sense:—Quære, whether it is for the judge or the jury. Hills v. London Gas Light Co., 27 L. J., Ex. 60.

Where parol evidence has been improperly received to explain a supposed latent ambiguity in a written document, the court will decide upon the construction of the instrument, without regard to the finding of the jury upon such evidence. Bruff v. Conybeare, 13 C. B. (N.S.) 263; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 78; 6 L. T. 647. But see S. C., 17 L. T. 664—Ex. Ch.

Parol evidence is always admissible to shew what existing thing corresponds to any particular description in a document; but when the thing answering the particular description is ascertained, the question whether that description, as used in any particular instrument, is so controlled and limited as to comprise a part only of that which the uncontrolled description would embrace, is a question of construction and therefore for the court. Devonshire (Duke) v. Neill, 2 L. R., Ir. 132.

In an action on a policy of insurance, if the evidence discloses a latent ambiguity in the policy requiring a resort to parol evidence, the question at issue ceases to be one of construction for the court, and becomes one of fact for a jury. Hordern v. Commercial Union Insurance Co., 56 L. J., P. C. 78; 56 L. T. 240—P. C.

Date.]—When a written instrument shews no date, parol evidence is admissible to shew the time of its operation. Davis v. Jones, 25 L. J., C. P. 91; 17 C. B. 625; 4 W. R. 248.

Semble, that if a letter, written by a bankrupt to bring him within 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 131, be without a date, the time when it was written cannot be proved by parol evidence. Hubert v. Moreau, 2 Car. & P. 528.

Punctuation.]—When the meaning of a clause in an instrument is doubtful, the court may insert punctuation, as a means of shewing what construction the words are capable of; and if by such aid the court is enabled to see that the language can bear an interpretation which will make the whole instrument rational and self-consistent, it is bound to adopt that interpretation in preference to another which would attribute to the parties an intention utterly capricious, insensible, and absurd. Denny's Trusts, In re, Ir. R. 8 Eq. 426.

Patent Ambiguity.]—A bill of exchange purported, in the body of it, to be drawn for "two hundred pounds," but the figures at the top were 245*l.*; the stamp was for the larger amount:—Held, that, as this was a patent ambiguity, evidence was not admissible to shew that it was the intention of the parties to draw the bill for the larger amount, and that the sum mentioned in words in the body of the bill was that for which it must be taken to be drawn. Saunderson v. Piper, 7 Scott, 408; 5 Bing. (N.C.) 425; 2 Arn. 58; 8 L. J., C. P. 227; 3 Jur. 773.

Where Fraud.]—No weight is to be given to parol testimony which is contrary to the obvious construction of written documents confirmed by the acts of the parties and their acquiescence, although hardly any length of time would bar them from redress against fraud if proved. Attwood v. Small, 6 Cl. & F. 232. See Redgrave v. Hurd, 51 L. J., Ch. 113; 20 Ch. D. 1; 45 L. T. 485.

Fraud in procuring a deed under the circumstances attending it, may be proved by parol evidence. Blake v. Marnell, 2 Ball & B. 35; 4 Dow, 248; 12 R. R. 68.

Under a power to appoint among several subjects, each must have a share; and by the rule in equity, as to illusory appointment, a substantial share, unless a good reason appears, as another provision by the person executing the power, not from any other quarter. Under such a power, an appointment of a fund, nearly 1,900*l.*, among three children, the objects, 10*l.* to one, 50*l.* to another, and the remainder to the third, all having other provisions aliunde, was set aside as illusory. Evidence that an appointment was improperly obtained, being executed by a will regularly proved, was rejected. Kemp v. Kemp, 5 Ves. 849; 5 R. R. 182.

Estate settled on marriage upon the husband and wife for their lives, remainder to such child or children as the husband, with the consent of the trustees, should appoint, and in default of appointment to the first and other sons in tail; the father, with the consent of the surviving trustee, appointed to his youngest son. Bill by the eldest son to set aside the appointment for misrepresentation and imposition on the trustee; the trustee's evidence was read to prove the imposition; but the father's evidence, to prove no misrepresentation or imposition, was rejected. Scroggs v. Scroggs, Ambl. 272.

Defendant at the request of M. signed the following order which M. also signed: "Insert my advertisements for one year in Hotson's (the plaintiff's) local time tables, 'The Great Northern' (and six others, naming them). Charge per insertion to be 10*s.* each monthly book." Plaintiff's time tables consisted of separate books published monthly, one for each of the seven railways. M. was not employed by plaintiff to obtain orders for him, but upon such orders as he obtained, provided they were approved of by plaintiff and the advertisements inserted, the latter allowed him a commission. M. brought defendant's order to plaintiff, who approved of it and allowed M. his commission, and, having inserted the advertisements for one year in each of the seven books, brought this action to recover from defendant 70*s.* per month. At the trial it was proposed to ask defendant what representations M. had made to him to induce him to enter into the written contract; the defence being that defendant was liable only for 10*s.* per month as for one advertisement in one book:—Held, that the order having been adopted in terms by plaintiff, the effect of the evidence was to vary a written contract and was inadmissible. Held, also, that if the issue had been whether defendant was induced to sign the contract by the fraud of plaintiff's agent (assuming M. to have been plaintiff's agent) the evidence would have been admissible. Hotson v. Browne, 9 C. B. (N.S.) 442; 30 L. J., C. P. 106; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 633; 9 W. R. 233.

Plaintiff having prevented the fulfilment of an agreement in favour of the defendant, M., for purchasing the assignment of a mortgage, by obtaining himself an advance after notice, not allowed to take advantage of it, being mala fides; evidence, therefore, of a parol agreement read against him under these circumstances. Scott v. Merry, 1 Ves. 2.

Declaration of a party to a deed, previous to the execution, admitted, in support of the deed, against imputations of fraud. Declarations subsequent, impeaching the deed, were rejected. Conolly v. Howe (Lord), 5 Ves. 700.

As to Intention.]—In an action for refusing to accept a cargo of linseed, which the plaintiff had sold to the defendant, and which was to arrive by a vessel, fourteen days to be allowed for the delivery of it, and evidence was offered dehors the contract to shew what the parties intended by the period assigned for the delivery of the cargo:—Held, that, in the absence of any usage or evidence to raise an ambiguity as to the terms of the contract, such evidence was properly rejected. Sotilichos v. Kemp, 3 Ex. 105; 18 L. J., Ex. 36.

The defendant occupied premises under a written agreement:—Held, that parol evidence was not admissible to show an understanding between the parties that the rent should commence from a later day than that named in the agreement. Henson v. Cooper, 3 Scott (N.R.) 48.

F. agreed to let, and S. to hire, land and premises at a fixed surface rent, for the purpose of brickmaking. S. was to pay 3*s.* per load for the bricks, and to make at least 4,000,000 a year, or payment equal thereto, and was not to excavate beyond the depth of eight feet, without special licence. A company having taken the land, S. made a claim for compensation, which was submitted to arbitration. Both parties requested the umpire to decide what estate S. had in the premises. The umpire stated the facts, set out the agreement, and adjudged that S. was tenant from year to year only:—Held, that the umpire was right in refusing to admit evidence to shew that, by the custom of the trade of brickmaking, brick-land is always let for a longer period than from year to year. Stroud, In re, 8 C. B. 502; 1 L. J., C. P. 117.

Where there is a covenant to pay a certain share of all such money as coal should sell for at the pit's mouth, evidence of the lessee's having accounted with the lessor, and paid him a share of money produced by the sale of coal elsewhere, is not admissible to explain the intention of the parties. Clifton v. Walmesley, 5 Term Rep. 564.

Parol evidence admitted on part of defendant, to shew that agreement was intended to be, that several persons should give a joint and not several bonds. Gordon v. Hertford, 2 Madd. 106; 17 R. R. 195.

Will.]—Parol evidence as to the intentions of a testator by the attorney who made the will. Scawin v. Scawin, 1 Y. & C. 65.

Parol evidence to explain a will rejected. Wilson v. Squire, 1 Y. & C. 654.

A testator, having two nephews named Morgan Morgan, one of whom only resided at Mothvey, gave certain premises after the death of his wife to his nephew Morgan Morgan and afterwards certain other premises "to Morgan Morgan of the village of Mothvey":—Held, that a latent ambiguity was raised sufficient to admit parol evidence in explanation. Doe d. Morgan v. Morgan, 1 C. & M. 235; 3 Tyr. 179; 2 L. J., Ex. 88.

Devise of the "close in the occupation of W." It appeared that W. was in the occupation of two closes:—Held, a latent ambiguity letting in parol evidence to prove which close was known as "the close." Evidence was given by the attorney who prepared the will, which shewed that the testator wished land in Kirton occupied by Watson to go to the devisee:—Held, not admissible. Richardson v. Watson, 1 N. & M. 567; 4 B. & Ad. 787; 2 L. J., K. B. 134.

A tenant for life of an estate settled in strict settlement, buys up some of the charges on the estate, and has them assigned to a trustee; he next purchases the ultimate remainder, and has it conveyed to him subsequent to the subsisting charges; he then devises the estate subject to the charges that might be thereon at his decease; the intermediate remainders fail at his death. The charges so purchased are merged, and parol evidence is admissible to prove that the testator so intended. Astley v. Milles, 1 Sim. 298; 27 R. R. 190.

In construing a will, nothing contained in a letter from a solicitor to the testator, written about the time of the execution of the will, is admissible as evidence of the construction of the will. Wilson v. O'Leary, 41 L. J., Ch. 342; L. R. 7 Ch. 448; 26 L. T. 463; 20 W. R. 501.

As to Dealings.]—In an action for a breach of warranty on the sale of goods upon a written contract, parol evidence is not admissible to shew that the seller's agent, at the time of the sale, represented the goods to be of a particular quality. Harnor v. Groves, 15 C. B. 667; 3 C. L. R. 406; 24 L. J., C. P. 53; 3 W. R. 168.

By an agreement between an African merchant and an African captain, the latter was to have a commission of "6*l.* per cent. on the net proceeds of the homeward cargo, after deducting the usual charges":—Held, that parol evidence was not admissible to shew that under this kind of contract, according to the course of dealing between African captains and African merchants, the captain was entitled to his commission on the whole amount for which the cargo had been sold, and not merely on the net sum that had come to the hands of the merchant as the result of the sale. Caine v. Horsfall, 2 Car. & K. 349.

A broker gave the following bought and sold notes:—1. "We have this day bought for your use from J. O. B., 100 tons dry palm oil, at 31*l.* 10*s.* per ton, to be taken from the quay at landing weights, with customary allowances, &c., in cash, at fourteen days from delivery, less 2½ per cent. discount: the above oil to be delivered from the 'Speedy' or 'Charlotte,' expected to arrive about November or December next." 2. "We have this day sold for your use, payment in fourteen days by cash, less 2½ per cent. discount, from delivery, 100 tons dry palm oil, at 31*l.* 10*s.* per ton, ex 'Speedy' and 'Charlotte,' to arrive":—Held, that evidence of mercantile usage was admissible to explain all the variances between these notes; and that, being so explained, the variances were not material, and did not avoid the contract. Bold v. Rayner, 1 M. & W. 343; 2 Gale, 44; 1 Tyr. & G. 820; 5 L. J., Ex. 172.

The defendant's traveller entered and signed in the plaintiff's order book a contract in the following terms:—"Of E. Y., 39 pockets Sussex hops, Springett's 5 pockets Kenwards, 78*s.*, Springett's to wait orders." In an action by the purchaser for non-delivery of the thirty-nine pockets:—Held, that parol evidence of the course of dealing between the parties was not admissible to shew that the sale was at a credit of six months. Ford v. Yates, 2 Scott (N.R.) 645; 2 Man. & G. 549; 10 L. J., C. P. 117.

Evidence of former transactions between the parties can be received for the purpose of explaining the terms used in their written contract. Bourne v. Gatcliff, 11 Cl. & F. 45.

As to Items of Account.]—On reference to the prothonotary he, by accident, having omitted to inspect an account book which was material in support of the answers for which the parties had been reported in contempt:—Held, that he not having declared himself dissatisfied or that he required any explanation as to the items contained in the book, parol testimony of the clerk by whom the entries had been made, was inadmissible. Isaacson, In re, 1 Bing. 272 ; 8 Moore, 214.

As to Premises.]—By a written agreement, the plaintiff undertook to do work for the defendant on the houses "in South-street and Southampton-street." At the date of the agreement the defendant had land and houses in South-street, but had nothing in Southampton-street :—Held, that the agreement being unambiguous, evidence was not admissible to shew that the word "and" was inserted by mistake, and that it was a misdirection to leave it to the jury to say what was the intention of the parties. Hitchin v. Groom, 5 C. B. 515 ; 17 L. J., C. P. 145.

A., by agreement, promised to surrender into the hands of the lord "all those brickworks, copyhold of inheritance, then in the possession of A., with full liberty," &c., to the use of B. & C. No surrender was made, but B. & C. entered upon the premises. B. afterwards surrendered his interest to C. The question being whether the locus in quo was comprised in the agreement, B. was called by the defendant to prove, by parol declarations of the plaintiff, that the locus in quo was so comprised. His evidence was objected to, because it was not competent to the defendant to extend by parol evidence the terms of the agreement to premises not in the possession of A. at the time : Held, that the terms of the agreement, being ambiguous, might be explained by parol testimony. Paddock v. Fradley, 1 C. & J. 90.

On an agreement for a lease of "a furnished house and premises, with gardens, pleasure-grounds, coach-houses, and stabling thereto belonging" :—Held, that by these words a meadow adjoining the premises did not pass to the lessees, and that evidence that it should pass was inadmissible. Minton v. Geiger, 28 L. T. 449.

Deed—Discrepancy between Granting Part and Habendum.]—M., possessed of two contiguous plots of ground, assigned one of them to T., "together with the right to use the walls on the north side" (i.e. on the adjoining plot) for building purposes. T. afterwards assigned the plot so purchased by him to the defendant by deed, the granting part of which was silent as to "right, members and appurtenances," habendum "with the rights, members and appurtenances thereto belonging"; and, subsequently, M. assigned the adjoining plot of ground to the plaintiff :—Held, in an action for trespassing upon the walls, that the right to use them for building purposes passed with the plot of ground to the defendant. Renwick v. Daly, Ir. R. 11 C. L. 126.

The holder of an estate for life in realty granted the land to A., his executors, administrators and assigns, habendum from a future date for the term of the grantor's life :—Held, to pass an estate for life. Boddington v. Robinson, 44 L. J., Ex. 223 ; L. R. 10 Ex. 270 ; 33 L. T. 364 ; 23 W. R. 925.

The rule is, that where there is an express grant in the premises of a deed, that grant cannot be prejudiced by the invalidity of the habendum, but where the premises contain only an implied grant, and the habendum is invalid, the conveyance fails. Ib.

—— Intention of Parties—Latent Ambiguity in Reddendum.]—The plaintiff, in 1868, granted by deed license and authority to use an invention, of which the patent was vested in him, for breech-loading rifles, to the defendants, "yielding and paying unto the licensor the royalty of one shilling for every gun, rifle or breech action manufactured, produced or sold under the powers hereby granted." The exemption of the crown from royalties for the use of patents, laid down by Feather v. Reg. (6 B. & S. 257), was at that time generally believed to extend to government contractors ; but by Dixon v. London Small Arms Co. (1 App. Cas. 632), this exemption was limited to the use of the immediate servants of the crown ; upon which the plaintiff brought an action to recover royalties under the deed for the rifles manufactured by the defendants for the government. The jury found that the defendants intended the deed should not apply to government contracts, and that the plaintiff knew this was their intention, and purposely abstained from mentioning the subject in order that they might be bound contrary to their intention :—Held, that the words of the reddendum suggested a latent ambiguity which admitted extrinsic evidence to shew the intentions of the parties : and that the plaintiff under the circumstances could not recover. Roden v. London Small Arms Co., 46 L. J., Q. B. 213 ; 35 L. T. 505 ; 25 W. R. 269.

Held, also, that the defendants were entitled to equitable relief from the plaintiff's claim. Ib.

—— Parcels.]—In 1861, Plowman, a common predecessor in title of both the plaintiff and the defendant, being possessed of twenty-seven rods of land, conveyed to the defendant's predecessor in title "all that piece of garden-ground containing by estimation twenty rods, bounded on the south by other land, or garden-ground belonging to Plowman." In 1866, Plowman conveyed the residue of the property to the plaintiff's predecessor in title, describing it as "fifteen rods more or less ;" the result being that if the measurement of the deed of 1861 was accurate, the defendant took under it twelve rods instead of twenty, while if the measurement of the deed of 1866 was accurate, the plaintiff took under it seven rods instead of fifteen. The plaintiff brought ejectment for the eight rods in dispute :—Held, that the parol evidence of Plowman was admissible to shew that he had conveyed twelve and not twenty rods by the deed of 1861. Jervey v. Styring, 29 L. T. 847.

—— Beneficiaries.]—By deeds, dated in 1704, estates in York were conveyed by Lady Hewley to trustees, and the trusts were declared as follows—that the trustees should, out of the rents, pay such sums of money to such and so many poor and godly preachers, for the time being, of Christ's holy gospel, and to such poor and godly widows, for the time being, of poor and godly preachers of Christ's holy gospel, as the trustees for the time being should think fit, and employ and dispose of such sums of money, and in such manner, for the encouraging and promoting the preaching of Christ's holy gospel in such poor places as the trustees should think fit ; and also, employ and dispose of such sums of money, for exhibitions, towards the educating of such young men designed for the ministry of Christ's holy gospel, never exceeding five, as the trustees should think fit; and, as to the remainder of the rents, that the trustees should employ and dispose of the same, in and for relieving of such godly persons in distress, being fit objects of the Dame S. H.'s and the trustees' charity, as the trustees should think fit. By deeds in 1707 an almshouse and additional lands were conveyed by Lady H. to the trustees, and the trusts were declared as follows—that the almshouse should be used as an hospital for poor people, in such manner as the same then was, subject to the regulations thereinafter mentioned; and that the trustees should, out of the rents, raise a yearly sum of 60*l.*, and distribute and dispose of the same for the benefit and support of the poor people placed, or which the trustees should from time to time place, in the hospital, in such proportions, and to such purposes, as Dame S. H. should declare, in any writing signed by her, or in any rules appointed by her, for the choosing and government of poor people; and that the trustees should place to the number of ten poor persons in the hospital, whereof nine to be poor widows, or unmarried women, and the tenth person to be a sober and pious poor man. By the rules and regulations provided by the foundress of the almshouse, it was declared that none of evil fame or report should be admitted, but such as were poor and piously disposed, and of the Protestant religion; that every almsbody should be one that could repeat by heart the Lord's Prayer, the Creed, and Ten Commandments, and Mr. Edward Bowles's Catechism; and that all the almspeople, when not disabled by weakness, should duly repair to some religious assembly of the Protestant religion every Lord's day, forenoon and afternoon, and at other opportunities, to attend the ordinances of God:—Held, first, that extrinsic evidence was not admissible for the purpose of determining who were entitled, under the terms "godly preachers of Christ's holy gospel, godly persons," and the other descriptions contained in the deeds of 1704 and 1707, to the benefit of the charity. Shore v. Wilson, 9 Cl. & F. 355; 5 Scott (N.R.) 958.

Held, secondly, that the trusts of those deeds were applicable to all ministers, congregations, and poor persons, being Protestant Trinitarian Dissenters. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that in construing the deed of 1704, the provisions of the deed of 1707 were not to be referred to. Ib.

Held, fourthly, that upon the true construction of the deeds of 1704 and 1707, ministers or preachers of what is commonly called Unitarian belief and doctrine, and their widows, and members of their congregations, and persons of what are commonly called Unitarian belief and doctrine, were excluded from being objects of the charities of those deeds. Ib.

Parol evidence not admissible to raise an equity, that a pension granted by the crown to the defendant was in trust for the plaintiff, against the oath of the defendant in his answer. Fordyce v. Willis, 3 Bro. C. C. 577.

2. Particular Words, Terms, and Phrases.

Meaning of Words—What amounts to Custom.]—In order to establish a custom in a trade controlling the meaning of words, it must be shewn that the words are used in that trade, and are understood in a defined sense; and a habit of affixing a special meaning to words, when used in one class of contracts, does not amount to a custom in the trade. Abbott v. Bates, 43 L. J., C. P. 150; 30 L. T. 99; 22 W. R. 488.

If a word has acquired a particular meaning in a trade, that meaning will be applied to it in construing a written contract respecting the trade; but it must be distinctly proved that the word has acquired that particular meaning. Taylor v. Briggs, 2 Car. & P. 525; M. & M. 28.

—— Averments on Record.]—General evidence as to the meaning of words of a contract ought not to be admitted without a distinct averment on the record as to the particular words to which evidence is to be directed, and the precise technical or trade meaning which is intended to be attributed to them. Per Watson (Lord), Sutton v. Ciceri, 15 App. Cas. 144; 62 L. T. 742.

—— Trade Term in Deed.]—In determining the meaning of a word that has both a primary and a secondary signification, the court will admit evidence as to, and will look at, its primary meaning alone, and will not admit technical evidence, unless satisfied that it is to be construed in its secondary sense. Holt v. Collyer, 50 L. J., Ch. 311; 16 Ch. D. 718; 44 L. T. 214; 29 W. R. 502.

Terms Insensible in ordinary Meaning.]—If a mercantile document is insensible when read according to the ordinary sense of the words used therein, it is a question for the jury whether the language thereof has not acquired a definite meaning by mercantile usage. Ashworth v. Redford, 43 L. J., C. P. 57; L. R. 9 C. P. 20.

—— Term of Credit.]—A plaintiff sold to the defendants goods; the invoice was dated the 1st of May, and at the foot of it were written the words, "Terms—Net cash, to be paid within six to eight weeks from date hereof." The goods not having been paid for, the plaintiff issued a writ to recover the price on the 18th of June, scarcely seven weeks from the 1st of May. At the trial the judge left to the jury the question whether the credit had expired on the 18th of June according to mercantile usage. The jury having found that the action was not brought too soon:—Held, that the direction to the jury was proper, and that the plaintiff was entitled to the verdict. Ib.

"Summerleazes"—"After Grass."]—When by a lease the plaintiff had the use of cows to be depastured on lands described as "summerleazes" and "after grass" respectively from 2nd February to 17th November, evidence was tendered at the trial of a custom in the country that a lessor should, notwithstanding such a lease, put cattle of his own on the lands called "summerleazes" up to 12th May:—Held, that such evidence being in effect evidence of the meaning of the technical word "summerleazes," was admissible to shew what rights passed to the plaintiff under the lease. Tudgay v. Sampson, 30 L. T. 262.

"Freehold Equities."]—S. signed a written contract with R. to purchase a brickfield for "17,000*l.*," to be paid as follows:—16,000*l.* in cash and 1,000*l.* in freehold equities; to pay on the 1,000*l.* 12 per cent. per annum." Before signing, S. had made out and given to R. a list of freehold houses in which he was entitled to the equity of redemption, but this document was not in any way referred to in the contract:—Held, that such list was admissible by way of parol evidence to explain the meaning of freehold equities in the contract. Roots v. Snelling, 48 L. T. 216.

"Arrival in Port."]—By a charterparty, made at Riga, the ship was to proceed, with a cargo of timber, to Liverpool, and to deliver at such dock there as ordered on arrival. On arrival at Liverpool the ship duly entered into dock, but, in consequence of the crowded state of the dock, was unable for some days to obtain a berth alongside the quay from which she was allowed to discharge:—Held, that in an action for demurrage evidence was admissible tending to shew that, by the custom of the port of arrival, timber ships were not considered to have arrived until they had obtained a discharging berth within the dock. Steamship Co. "Norden" v. Dempsey, 45 L. J., C. P. 764; 1 C. P. D. 654; 24 W. R. 984.

"Forthwith."]—On a written agreement for the hire of a vessel to be made ready to take on board "forthwith," evidence is inadmissible to shew that the parties agreed that the vessel should be ready in two days. But evidence of the known circumstances of the vessel is admissible to shew how soon she might reasonably be expected to be ready. Simpson v. Henderson, M. & M. 300.

Time of Sailing.]—Commercial men may be called as witnesses to prove the meaning of any particular expression used in a letter on a commercial subject. Chaurand v. Angerstein, Peake, 43.

Therefore, if it said in a letter that a ship will sail from St. Domingo in the month of October, it is generally understood that she will not sail till the 25th of the same month. Ib.

"Shop-front."]—A. by an agreement in writing, let to B. a house at the rent of 60*l.* a year, to be paid quarterly; and B. agreed, within three calendar months, to erect a shop-front, and otherwise repair, paint, paper and whitewash the house. And, if B. did not erect the shop-front within three months, it should be lawful for A. or his agents to retake possession of the premises, and the agreement should be null and void. B. continued in possession of the premises and enlarged the window; but, as A. contended, did not erect a shop-front. It appeared that, after a quarter's rent had become due, and after the expiration of three months from the date of the agreement, A.'s son, the father being too ill to attend to business, made a demand of a quarter's rent, which B. offered to pay if he would indemnify him for a sum which he had paid as a penalty to A.'s lessor for carrying on a trade in the premises, which was refused. At the trial, B. contended that he had made a shop-front which answered the purposes of his trade; and he offered to show that A. held the premises under a lease from C., which contained a clause imposing a penalty upon the lease if he allowed a trade to be carried on upon the premises; from which it was to be inferred that the words "shop-front," in the agreement, were used in a peculiar sense; but this evidence was rejected:—Held, that such evidence was clearly inadmissible to explain the meaning of the words "shop-front" in the agreement. Doe d. Nash v. Birch, 1 M. & W. 402; 1 Tyr. & G. 169; 5 L. J., Ex. 185.

"Privilege."]—By the contract between the owners and captain of an India ship, the latter was to receive a certain compensation in lieu of privilege and primage; a conversation between the parties previously to the contract is evidence to shew in what sense they intended to use the word "privilege." Birch v. Depeyster, 1 Stark. 210; 4 Camp. 385.

"Building."]—A., by an agreement in writing, agreed to win stones, "for the purpose of building" certain cottages. Parol evidence cannot be given to explain the sense in which the word "building" is used. Charlton v. Gibson, 1 Car. & K. 541.

"Across a Country."]—In a memorandum respecting a horse race, the run being described as "four miles across a country," evidence is admissible to show that "across a country" means that the riders are to go over all obstructions and not at liberty to avail themselves of an open gate. Evans v. Pratt, 3 Man. & G. 759; 4 Scott (N.R.) 370; 11 L. J., C. P. 87.

"Cwt."—"Pocket."]—In an action upon a sold note as follows:—"Sold to Mr. S. 18 pockets Kent hops, viz. 10 pockets Burton East Kent, 8 pockets Springall, Goodhurst, at 100*s.*"—parol evidence is admissible either to supply the term "cwt." or to shew that the term "pocket" meant cwt. Spicer v. Cooper, 1 Q. B. 424; 1 G. & D. 52; 10 L. J., Q. B. 241; 5 Jur. 1036.

"Ware" Potatoes.] — The defendant by a written contract agreed to sell the plaintiff sixty tons of "ware potatoes," at 5*l.* a ton. In the neighbourhood three qualities of potatoes were known, "wares, middlings and chats," wares being the largest and best:—Held, that evidence was not admissible to show that the plaintiff had in fact contracted for the sale to him of a particular kind of ware potatoes, viz. "Regent's Wares," while those offered to him by the defendant were of an inferior kind, viz. "Kidney Wares." Smith v. Jeffryes, 15 M. & W. 561; 15 L. J., Ex. 325.

"Level."]— When an expression used in a written instrument has a technical meaning, parol evidence is admissible to show that it has been used in that sense, and not in its ordinary meaning in common parlance, although that may be perfectly clear and unambiguous in itself; therefore, where the lessee of a coal mine covenanted to get the whole of the mines "not deeper than or below the level of the bottom of the mine at a particular point," parol evidence of the understanding amongst miners is admissible to shew that the word "level" had a particular technical meaning, different from its ordinary signification of "horizontal line." Clayton v. Greyson, 4 N. & M. 602; 5 A. & E. 302; 1 H. & W. 159. See S. C., 6 N. & M. 694.

Chemicals.]—The construction of a specification, as the construction of all other written instruments, belongs to the court; but the explanation of the words or technical terms of art, the phrases used in commerce, and the proof and results of the processes which are described (and in a chemical patent the ascertainment of chemical equivalents) are matters of fact upon which evidence may be given, and contradictory testimony may be adduced, and upon which it is the province and right of a jury to decide. Hills v. Evans, 31 L. J., Ch. 457; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 525; 6 L. T. 90.

"Same Ground."]—Lace merchants, carrying on business by means of travellers over certain districts in England, verbally agreed with the defendant, who was already in their service in another capacity, to travel for them over one of the districts, which they designated the "midland district," it being at the time understood that the terms of the engagement were to be reduced into writing. A few weeks after the defendant had started on the journey, the following agreement was sent to him, and he signed and returned it: "To H. & W. Mumford. In consideration of my entering upon your employ at a salary to commence with at 50*l.* a year, I herewith agree to do so with the understanding that, in the event of my wishing to travel, and doing so for any other house in the same trade, on any part of the same ground, to pay you 50*l.*" :—Held, that extrinsic evidence was properly admitted to explain the nature of the employment, and what was intended by "the same ground," that such evidence being admitted, the contract was not void as an unreasonable restraint of trade, that even without the evidence to explain the contract, there was ample consideration for the defendant's promise, and that a forfeiture of the 50*l.* was incurred by the defendant's travelling for another house in the same line, "over the same ground," after he had left the service of the plaintiffs. Mumford v. Gething, 7 C. B. (N.S.) 305; 29 L. J., C. P. 105; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 428; 1 L. T. 64; 8 W. R. 187.

"Premises."]—In order to construe a term in a written instrument, when it is used in a peculiar sense, differing from its ordinary meaning, evidence is admissible to prove the peculiar sense, differing from its ordinary meaning; evidence is admissible to prove the peculiar sense in which the parties understood the term, but evidence is not admissible to contradict or vary what is plain. Beacon Life and Fire Assurance Co. v. Gibb, 1 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 73; 1 N. R. 110; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 185; 7 L. T. 574; 11 W. R. 194.

The word "premises," although in popular language applied to buildings, in legal language means the subject or thing previously expressed. Ib.

Brokers' Notes — Memoranda of Terms.] — Metal brokers, employed by B. & Co., purchased for them of N. & Co., a quantity of pig iron. They signed bought and sold notes, which only differed in these particulars, that the bought note contained the terms "Deposit, 5*s.* per ton; brokerage, 0 per cent.;" and the sold note contained the terms "Deposit (blank); brokerage, ½ per cent.:"—Held, that parol evidence was admissible to shew that the terms as to deposit and brokerage were, in fact, merely memoranda of the terms on which they were employed as brokers by the buyer and seller, and that when so explained, the bought and sold notes contained no material variance. Kempson v. Boyle, 3 H. & C. 763; 34 L. J., Ex. 191; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 832; 14 W. R. 15.

"Lace Buyer."]—P., who was known to be acting in the capacity of a lace-buyer, was engaged by M., a lace dealer, under the following memorandum:—"M. agrees to engage P. for three years, from Monday, the 15th of August, 1859, at the yearly salary of 500*l.*, payable monthly, P. to give the whole of his services, and to be advised and guided by M., if necessary." In an action by P. against M. for a wrongful dismissal, pending the term, on the ground of disobedience of lawful orders: — Held, that evidence was admissible to shew the capacity in which P. was engaged, viz. as lace buyer, and that it was properly left to the jury to say whether or not the orders which he was alleged to have disobeyed were such as a person in that position was bound to obey. Price v. Mouat, 11 C. B. (N.S.) 508.

3. REFERENCE TO OTHER DOCUMENTS.

Admissibility — Parcels.]—Where an agreement expressly refers to a plan as an existing document, forming a term in the contract, parol evidence is admissible for the purpose of identifying the plan. Hodges v. Horsfall, 1 Russ. & Mylne, 116.

Where the issue between purchasers of two lots at a sale was, as to parcel or no parcel, a handbill, describing the lots, which was circulated in the auction-room at the time of the sale, is admissible, in order to apply the language in the deed of conveyance, which described the premises as those now in the occupation of A., with all buildings &c. known or reputed to be parcel thereof. Murley v. M'Dermott, 3 N. & P. 356; 1 W. W. & H. 226; 8 A. & E. 138.

In an action by a lessee of a mine to the north, against the lessee of a mine to the south, of a certain boundary, the lease was produced, and the parcel thereof described the boundary in question as a straight line from Vincent's house to a boundstone; "which premises are particularly delineated by the map on the back of this sett." On this map the boundary-line was drawn from the north-east corner of the house. Parol evidence, however, was admitted, which shewed that the site of Vincent's house was incorrectly laid down on the map; and the judge left the whole case to the jury:—Held, that parol evidence was properly admissible to show whether the locus in quo was or was not included in the sett; and that the question parcel or no parcel was properly left to the jury. Lyle v. Richards, 35 L. J., Q. B. 214; L. R. 1 H. L. 222; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 947; 15 L. T. 1.

Where a person agrees to purchase "the mill property, including six cottages in E. village," parol evidence is admissible to identify "the mill property," part of which was neither in the village nor parish, and the contract is good within the Statute of Frauds. M'Murray v. Spicer, 37 L. J., Ch. 505; L. R. 5 Eq. 527; 18 L. T. 116; 16 W. R. 332.

When a deed purported to grant all the coal mines in the lands in the occupation of widow K. & Son, and the grantor had not at the time any lands in the occupation of widow K. & Son; and the deed was founded upon a contract of sale executed some months before, to which the grantor's land steward was the subscribing witness:—Held, that for the purpose of explaining the latent ambiguity in the deed, letters written by the latter to the grantees, respecting the sale of them by the grantor of the coal mines in the deed, and purporting to be written by his directions, were admissible, without showing an express authority from the grantor to write them. Beaumont v. Field, 1 B. & Ald. 247 ; 2 Chit. 275 ; 19 R. R. 308. And see Doe d. Malden v. Miller, 1 B. & Ald. 699 ; 19 R. R. 427.

When Document referred to not Produced.]—An Irish railway company contracted with the plaintiff to carry certain pigs from a station in Ireland through to London, part of the journey being performed on the London and North Western Railway. In an action against the Irish company for breach of contract in failing to carry the pigs to London within a reasonable time, a letter from I. T., an agent of the London and North Western Railway Company, to the plaintiff, was admitted in evidence, subject to the defendant's objection, which stated: "Mr. S., the defendant's traffic manager, writes that 'the pigs arrived at Dublin on the 29th of October, but as the company' (the defendants) 'only advised us about half an hour before they arrived, and having more on hand than could be shipped that day, they were not sent forward until the 30th of October:'"—Held, 1st, that the letter was properly received, although the written document to which it referred was not produced ; 2ndly, that the letter was evidence of unreasonable delay in the carriage. Ruddy v. Midland Great Western Ry., 8 L. R. Ir. 224.

Statute of Frauds.]—The plaintiff had signed a memorandum setting forth the terms of a contract by which the plaintiff agreed to let a carriage to the defendant for the period of a year. The defendant in a subsequent letter to the plaintiff signed by him referred to "our arrangement for the hire of your carriage." There was no other arrangement for the hire of a carriage than that the terms of which were contained in the memorandum signed by the plaintiff:—Held, that the defendant's letter sufficiently referred to the document containing the terms of the contract, to constitute a good memorandum of the contract within the Statute of Frauds, s. 4. Cave v. Hastings, 50 L. J., Q. B. 575 ; 7 Q. B. D. 125 ; 45 L. T. 348 ; 46 J. P. 56. And see Shardlow v. Cotterill, 20 Ch. D. 90, infra.

Of Written Agreement to Explain Deed.]—If parties have made an executory contract which is to be carried out by a deed afterwards executed, the real completed contract between the parties is to be found in the deed, and you have no right to look at the contract although it is recited in the deed, except for the purpose of construing the deed itself. You have no right to look at the contract, either for the purpose of enlarging or diminishing or modifying the contract which is to be found in the deed itself. Leggott v. Barrett, 15 Ch. D. 306 ; 28 W. R. 962—C. A.

Where, after marriage settlement was prepared but not executed, the parties agreed that the husband should supply a defect of the deed by giving a note, promising that the wife should enjoy the profits of the estate to her separate use, parol evidence cannot be admitted to explain the agreement between the parties ; but as to the occasion of signing the note, it may. Tyrrell v. Hope, 2 Atk. 560.

Contemporaneous Documents.]—If one of two contemporaneous documents is ambiguous in its terms, and the other is clear, force is to be given to the document whose terms are clear, so as to interpret the one containing ambiguous terms. Phœnix Bessemer Steel Co., In re, 44 L. J., Ch. 683 ; 32 L. T. 854.

Contemporaneous documents may be read together, for purposes of explanation, and if they can be read so as to agree in meaning, they are to be so read. Ib.

The defendants sent to the plaintiff the prospectus of a company, for whom they acted as agents, on the faith of which the plaintiff took shares in the company. A few days afterwards the defendants sent the plaintiff a circular containing other statements concerning the company, but the plaintiff did not receive it till after he had taken the shares:—Held, that the circular could not be taken as a contemporaneous document with the prospectus, and could not be read for the purpose of explaining it. Smith v. Chadwick, 51 L. J., Ch. 597 ; 20 Ch. D. 27 ; 46 L. T. 702 ; 38 W. R. 661—C. A. Affirmed 53 L. J., Ch. 873 ; 9 App. Cas. 187 ; 50 L. T. 697 ; 32 W. R. 687 ; 58 J. P. 644—H. L. (E.)

Licence to explain Grant.]—The plaintiff tendered in evidence, for the purpose of showing the meaning of a particular phrase in a grant, a letter of licence from the crown, in 1676, to one of its grantees, to alien the subject matter of the grant:—Held, that the licence was admissible for that purpose. Bain v. Whitehaven and Furness Ry., 3 H. L. Cas. 1.

Libellous Placard — Anonymous Letters.]—An information for a libel stated that the prosecutor had received certain anonymous letters, and that of and concerning those letters the defendant published a libellous placard. The defendant was proved to have caused the placard to be published. In the placard it was asked if the prosecutor had not received certain warning. The prosecutor stated that he understood that to refer to the letters, and that he should not have understood the meaning of the placard if he had not received the letters:—Held, that the letters might be read in evidence as explanatory of the placard, without proof of the handwriting of them. Rex v. Slaney, 5 Car. & P. 213.

Letters to Vary Subsequent Written Contract.]—If the terms of a contract are proposed and accepted by letters, but are afterwards varied by the contract as drawn up, the construction of the contract cannot be affected by the letters. Farquharson v. Barston, 4 Bligh (N.S.) 560.

Parol Evidence to Connect two Documents—Statute of Frauds.]—See Oliver v. Hunting, 59 L. J., Ch. 255 ; 44 Ch. D. 205 ; 62 L. T. 108 ; 38 W. R. 618.

4. As to Subject-matter of Contracts.

Identification of Property.]—The plaintiff claimed specific performance of a contract to purchase a house and premises sold by auction. After the sale the auctioneer signed the following memorandum at the foot of the conditions: "The property duly sold to A. S., and deposit paid at close of sale," and he also signed this receipt, "P., March 29th, 1880. Received of A. S. the sum of 21*l.* as deposit on property purchased at 420*l.*, at Sun Inn, P., at above date, Mr. G. C., owner." The Statute of Frauds was set up in defence. The conditions contained no description of the property sold, but posters had been put up describing the property to be sold on the 29th March, at the Sun Inn:—Held, that the word "purchased" was enough to connect the receipt with the conditions of sale, though not with the poster, and that the Statute of Frauds was satisfied. Shardlow v. Cotterill, 51 L. J., Ch. 353; 20 Ch. D. 90; 45 L. T. 572; 30 W. R. 143—C. A.

A vendor of leaseholds wrote a letter to her solicitor, stating "I have closed with Mr. W. for this place":—Held, a sufficient memorandum in writing within the Statute of Frauds, and that parol evidence was admissible to show what "this place" was. Waldron v. Jacob, Ir. R. 5 Eq. 131.

On an agreement for a lease of "a furnished house and premises, with gardens, pleasure-grounds, coach-house, and stabling thereto belonging": — Held, that, by these words, a meadow adjoining the premises did not pass to the lessees, and that evidence to show that it was the intention of the parties that the meadow should so pass was inadmissible. Minton v. Geiger, 28 L. T. 449.

In an action between the parties to an agreement in writing for the purchase of oaks growing on certain lands, "together with all other trees growing through the oak plantations, and mixed with oak," the question in dispute being what trees besides oaks were included in the agreement: — Held, that evidence of conversation between the parties in reference to the sale, prior to the agreement, was properly received in order to identify the subject-matter of the contract. Chambers v. Kelly, Ir. R. 7 C. L. 231.

Specific Matter.] — The plaintiff, in a conversation with the defendant's agent, stated that the plaintiff had some wool for sale, partly his own clip, partly what he had purchased from other farms, amounting in the whole to 2,300 stones, 100 stones more or less; and offered the whole for sale to the defendant. The plaintiff afterwards wrote to the agent, saying that two of the small clips had been sold, but that the plaintiff had got the promise of another clip of about 550 stones, which would go with his other wool. The defendant's agent afterwards wrote to the plaintiff, saying that the defendant "desires me to offer you for your wool 16*s.* per stone, delivered in Liverpool"; which offer the plaintiff, in writing, accepted. The plaintiff shipped to Liverpool 2,542 stones of his wool, which the defendant refused to accept. In an action against him for not accepting:—Held, that the conversation between the plaintiff and the defendant's agent was admissible to show what was meant by the expression "your wool" in the subsequent letter by such agent. Macdonald v. Longbottom, 1 El. & El. 977; 29 L. J., Q. B. 256; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 724; 2 L. T. 606; 8 W. R. 614—Ex. Ch.

Extrinsic evidence is admissible to explain what is the subject matter of a contract where the contract relates to some specific thing. Chadwick v. Burnley Corporation, 12 W. R. 1077.

Where there was a contract by which parties were empowered to obtain from a quarry "all the stone of whatever description they may require in the enlargement of the Old Compensation Reservoir":—Held, first, that extrinsic evidence was admissible to show what particular scheme of enlargement was in the contemplation of the parties at the date of the contract. Ib.

Held, secondly, that it was not admissible to limit the quantity of stone which might be taken for that purpose. Ib.

To a declaration for not accepting Surat cotton which the defendant bought of the plaintiff "to arrive ex 'Peerless' from Bombay," the defendant pleaded that he meant a ship called the Peerless which sailed from Bombay in October, and the plaintiff was not ready to deliver any cotton which arrived by that ship, but only cotton which arrived by another ship called the Peerless, which sailed from Bombay in December:—Held, that the plea was a good answer. Raffles v. Wichelhaus, 2 H. & C. 906; 33 L. J., Ex. 160.

Description in Catalogue.]—In an action by an auctioneer, for the price of a dressing-case sold by auction for less than 10*l.*, and described in the catalogue as having silver fittings, whereas, in fact, they were only plated:—Held, that he might give in evidence declarations made by him at the time of the sale in the hearing of the buyer, that the catalogue was incorrect in describing the fittings to be silver, and that the dressing-case would be sold as having plated fittings only, though no alteration was made in the catalogue. Eden v. Blake, 13 M. & W. 614; 14 L. J., Ex. 194; 9 Jur. 213.

Time of Performance.]—The general rule of law is, that where a contract has been reduced into writing; the written document alone is the contract; and therefore where P. agreed in writing to engage E. to play a certain part in a drama "during the run of the piece," parol evidence is not admissible to show that in conversations that took place before the contract was reduced into writing, it was guaranteed by the defendant that the run of the piece should last for at least eight weeks, there being no such proviso in the written agreement. Emery v. Parry, 17 L. T. 152.

Incomplete Contract.]—A contract, which was not required by law to be in writing, had been entered into, and its terms had been reduced into writing; but the writing, by itself, did not form the complete contract:—Held, that parol testimony was admissible to supplement written evidence of the contract. Loibel v. Strampfer, 16 L. T. 720.

Intention.]—In order to show that land had been bought for certain purposes, it was proposed to adduce as evidence the minutes of the proceedings of the vendees:—Held, that the conveyance having been executed, the minutes of the proceedings were inadmissible as evidence showing the purposes for which the land was bought. Prison Commissioners v. Middlesex (Clerk of the Peace), 51 L. J., Q. B. 433; 9 Q. B. D. 506; 46 L. T. 864; 30 W. R. 881—C. A.

A. entered the service of his employers under a written agreement in the following terms:—"13th April, 1871. I agree to accept the situation as foreman of the works of Messrs. Roe, flock and shoddy manufacturers, and to do all that lays in my power to serve them faithfully, and promote the welfare of the firm, on my receiving a salary of 2*l.* per week, and house to live in from 19th April, 1871":—Held, that this was primâ facie a weekly hiring, and that oral evidence was inadmissible to show that it was intended that the hiring should be for a year. Evans v. Roe, L. R. 7 C. P. 138; 26 L. T. 70.

To show Contract merely Colourable.]—By written agreement between a man and a woman, the latter was engaged as servant to the former at a wage. Before the making of the agreement she and her master had carried on an improper intercourse. That intercourse was continued during the service, but she acted in other respects as a servant. On a question as to her settlement:—Held, that evidence was admissible, notwithstanding the written contract of service, to show that such contract was merely colourable, and that the real contract was for the improper intercourse. Rex. v. North Wingfield, 1 B. & Ad. 712; 9 L. J. (O.S.) M. C. 57.

Ready for Shipment.]—In an action for not accepting twenty tons of lead bought of the plaintiff under a written contract, by which the lead was to be deliverable in the river Thames: the defendant pleaded that the plaintiff was not ready to deliver within a reasonable time, on which issue was joined. The evidence was, that the broker who made the contract for the plaintiff, stated at the time that the lead was then ready for shipment; that the usual ports of shipment for London were either Gloucester or Liverpool, but that the lead was unavoidably delayed in its transit to Gloucester:—Held, that the parol representation of the broker that the lead was ready for shipment, was admissible not to vary the written contract, but as one of the data from which the reasonableness of the time was to be determined. Ellis v. Thompson, 3 M. & W. 445; 1 H. & H. 131; 7 L. J., Ex. 185.

5. As to Parties.

To Charge Principal.]—C., the defendant's broker, offered to buy cotton of the plaintiff, but the latter declined to deal, unless C. disclosed his principal, which he accordingly did. The sold note was made out in the broker's name, and the cotton was charged to him in the plaintiff's books, and the plaintiff applied to him first for payment:—Held, that parol evidence was admissible in order to charge the principal, and that the evidence did not show that the plaintiff elected to make the broker exclusively liable. Calder v. Dobell, 40 L. J., C. P. 224; L. R. 6 C. P. 486; 25 L. T. 129; 19 W. R. 409, 978—Ex. Ch.

—— Custom not Inconsistent with Document.]—M. & W., fruit brokers in London, being employed by the plaintiffs, merchants in London, to sell for them, gave them the following contract note, addressed to the plaintiffs:—"We have this day sold for your account to our principal" so many tons of raisins. (Signed) "M. and W., brokers." The defendants' principal having accepted part of the raisins, and not having accepted the rest, the plaintiffs brought an action on the contract against the defendants, and they sought to make the defendants personally liable by giving evidence that, in the London fruit trade, if the brokers did not give the names of their principals in the contract, they were held personally liable, although they contracted as brokers for a principal; and evidence was also given of a similar custom in the London colonial market:—Held, that the evidence of the custom in the same trade was admissible, as not inconsistent with the written contract, and that the evidence of a similar custom in the colonial market was admissible, being evidence in a similar trade in the same place, and as tending to corroborate the evidence as to the existence of such a custom in the fruit trade. Fleet v. Murton, 41 L. J., Q. B. 49; L. R. 7 Q. B. 126; 26 L. T. 181; 20 W. R. 97.

Where a corn factor in London received a commission to sell oats of a certain quality, free on board, on account of a principal in Ireland, and sold them on the same day in London in his own name, and sent a sale note to his principal, as "sold on account of his principal":—Held, in an action by the corn factor against the principal to recover damages for the oats not answering the description, and to cover the loss which the corn factor in London had sustained by selling in his own name, that evidence of a custom in the corn trade for the corn factors in London to sell in their own name was admissible. Johnson v. Usborne, 3 P. & D. 236; 11 A. & E. 549.

Where a defendant, on the face of a charter-party, contracts as principal, it is competent to him, by way of equitable plea to an action against him on the charter-party, to show that, in fact, he signed as agent for a third party; that the plaintiff verbally agreed that he should not be responsible as principal, and is inequitably taking advantage of a mistake in drawing the charter-party, so as to make the defendant personally liable. Wake v. Harrop, 1 H. & C. 202; 31 L. J., Ex. 451; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 845; 7 L. T. 96; 10 W. R. 626—Ex. Ch.

To Charge Agent.]—When a person contracts in the body of a charter-party and signs "as agent," his principal being undisclosed, evidence is admissible to show a custom that he shall be personally liable if he does not disclose his principal's name within a reasonable time. Hutchinson v. Tatham, 42 L. J., C. P. 260; L. R. 8 C. P. 482; 29 L. T. 103; 22 W. R. 18.

A person signing a contract in his own name, without qualification, is not exempted from liability on the contract by merely describing himself in the body of the contract as agent for a named principal, without words expressly or by necessary implication showing that he only signs as agent. Paice v. Walker, 39 L. J., Ex. 109; L. R. 5 Ex. 173; 22 L. T. 547; 18 W. R. 789.

Walker & Strange signed a contract for the sale of wheat in the following form:—"Sold A. J. Paice, Esq., London, about 200 quarters wheat (as agents for John Schmidt & Co., of Danzig). Signed Walker and Strange":—Held, that they were personally liable upon the contract. Ib.

A broker signed and sent to the plaintiffs a note of a contract in the following terms:—"Messrs. Southwell,—I have this day sold by your order and for your account to my principals five tons of anthracene, payment in cash in fourteen days after delivery, less 2½ per cent. discount and 1 per cent. brokerage. W. A. Bowditch." In an action for goods sold and delivered:—Held, that in the absence of usage making the broker personally liable, he was not personally liable upon the contract. Southwell v. Bowditch, 45 L. J., C. P. 630; 1 C. P. D. 374; 35 L. T. 196; 24 W. R. 838—C. A.

Fruit brokers in Liverpool gave a fruit merchant the following sold-note:—"We have this day sold to you, on account of James Morand & Co., Valencia, 2,000 cases Valencia oranges, of the brand James Morand & Co., at 12*s.* 9*d.* per case free on board, shipment from commencement of season to not later than the 7th of December next," and signed it without any addition. The purchaser having brought an action against the brokers for non-delivery of the oranges :—Held, that the words "on account of James Morand & Co." shewed an intention to make the foreign principals, and not the brokers, liable, and that the brokers were not liable upon the contract. Gadd v. Houghton, 46 L. J., Ex. 71 ; 1 Ex. D. 357 ; 35 L. T. 222 ; 24 W. R. 975—C. A.

By articles of agreement under seal between J. A. & Co. and Y. & Co., Y. & Co. agreed to do certain work for which J. A. & Co. were to make certain payments, and the agreement contained this clause : "It is further understood between the parties to this contract that J. O. Schuler guarantees payment to Y. & Co. of all moneys due to them under this contract." The attestation clause was "signed and delivered by the said J. A. & Co. in the presence of C. T.," and Schuler, acting under a power of attorney, signed as follows : "P. P. A.—J. A. & Co., J. O. Schuler." Y. & Co. sued Schuler as guarantor, and evidence was given at the trial of statements by Schuler at the time of execution that he intended to sign on his own behalf as well as on that of A. & Co. A verdict was found for the plaintiffs. Schuler moved for a new trial on the ground that he had not signed the guarantee :—Held, that evidence that Schuler intended to sign in his own right as well as on behalf of A. & Co. did not contradict the document, and was admissible, and that Schuler must be taken to have signed as a contracting party. Young v. Schuler, 11 Q. B. D. 651 ; 49 L. T. 546—C. A.

To relieve.]—Parol evidence is admissible to shew that a person whose name appears at the head of an invoice as vendor, is not in fact a contracting party. Holding v. Elliott, 5 H. & N. 117 ; 29 L. J., Ex. 134 ; 1 L. T. 381 ; 8 W. R. 192.

Where a party has entered into a written contract, which states him to be the owner, evidence is not admissible, in an action upon the contract by his principal, to shew that he was agent, not owner. Humble v. Hunter, 12 Q. B. 310 ; 17 L. J., Q. B. 350 ; 12 Jur. 121.

Action on a contract alleged to have been made by the defendant to charter a ship to the plaintiff. Proof, that the defendant made a memorandum of a charter-party in B.'s name, and purporting to be signed by the defendant as agent for B. ; that the defendant had no authority to contract for B., and knew that he had none ; and that B. refused to adopt the contract :—Held, that the defendant was not liable as principal in an action on the contract itself. Jenkins v. Hutchinson, 13 Q. B. 744.

The plaintiff and the defendants were desirous of starting a company, to take the plaintiff's premises and stock-in-trade. The plaintiff sent a written proposal to the defendants for the sale of his extra stock, and they sent the plaintiff a written acceptance thereof ; the proposal was directed to and accepted by the defendants "on behalf of the proposed G. R. A. H. Co. (Ld.)." The company was not then in existence. The plaintiff brought an action on this agreement :—Held, that as the company was non-existent at the time of the agreement, the defendants were personally liable, and that parol evidence was inadmissible to shew a contrary intention. Kelner v. Baxter, 36 L. J., C. P. 94 ; L. R. 2 C. P. 174 ; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 1016 ; 15 L. T. 313 ; 15 W. R. 278.

A. and B. join in a bond to secure money, borrowed by B. for the use of a third person ; as between A. and B., A. is only a surety. Parol evidence may be given to shew, as between the two co-obligors in a bond, that one of them was only a surety for the other. Bolton v. Cook, 3 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 87.

To Identify.]—Where an attorney encloses an unsigned bill of costs in a letter signed by him, and the bill does not, on the face of it, shew who is the party chargeable therewith, the letter may be referred to, to supply that defect. Taylor v. Hodgson, 3 D. & L. 115 ; 10 Jur. 355.

To shew Partnership.]—D. & W., being general partners under the firm of D. & Co., and D. & Co. taking a share with three others in a particular adventure, which D. & Co. managed and insured for the account of D. & Co., it is a latent ambiguity, to be explained by evidence, whether the D. & Co., for whose account the insurance is made, means D. & W. only, or all who are partners of D. in that particular adventure. Carruthers v. Sheddon, 6 Taunt. 14 ; 1 Marsh. 416.

Admissibility of evidence of a parol contract as to the continuance of a partnership where real estate is concerned. Essex v. Essex, 20 Beav. 442.

6. To Vary or Explain Operation of Contracts.

To vary.]—Neither a plaintiff nor a defendant can at law avail himself of a parol agreement to vary or enlarge the time for performing a contract previously entered into in writing, and required so to be by the Statute of Frauds. Hickman v. Haynes, 44 L. J., C. P. 358 ; L. R. 10 C. P. 598 ; 32 L. T. 873 ; 23 W. R. 871.

The defendant agreed in writing to buy of the plaintiff iron, of which twenty-five tons were to be delivered in June. The defendant in that month verbally requested the plaintiff to allow the delivery of the twenty-five tons to stand over, to which he verbally assented. On the 1st of August the plaintiff wrote to ask when the defendant would take delivery, and after some correspondence the defendant on the 9th asked for further time. The plaintiff waited a reasonable time before he commenced an action :—Held, that as the delivery was postponed for the defendant's convenience, the plaintiff was entitled to treat the contract as broken by the defendant at the end of June, and to have the damages assessed with reference to the value of the iron at the expiration of a reasonable time after the 9th of August. Ib.

Where the vendor of a piece of land, of which he was himself in occupation, contracted to sell the land under conditions of sale, by one of which it was provided that the purchaser should be entitled "to the possession or the receipt of the rents and profits" of the land from a specified date :—Held, that evidence was not admissible to prove an alleged contemporaneous parol agreement by which the vendor was to retain possession of the land to a later date, paying the purchaser in the meantime, by way of rent, interest on his purchase-money. Anker v. Franklin, 43 L. T. 317 ; 44 J. P. 830.

In an action on a policy of marine insurance, the declaration set out certain correspondence, shewing that the plaintiff intended to insure the loss of his profit by the ship being lost before arriving at Quebec, and alleged that the correspondence and the nature of the risk intended to be covered were explained to the defendant before signing the policy, and that the premium was at a higher rate than would have been charged for an insurance from Quebec homewards or on goods for the voyage:—Held, that these facts could not be looked at to alter the nature of the contract. Halhead v. Young, 6 El. & Bl. 312; 25 L. J., Q. B. 290; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 970; 4 W. R. 530.

The plaintiffs brought an action against the defendant, one of five joint and several sureties, to recover the balance of the sum guaranteed. The plaintiffs had previously by letter, without the defendant's knowledge or consent, agreed to release another of the sureties from "all debts due" by him:—Held, that evidence of a verbal agreement, prior to the letter of release, to reserve rights against the sureties, was not admissible, and that parol evidence was not admissible to alter the ordinary legal construction of a document. Mercantile Bank of Sydney v. Taylor, [1893] A. C. 317; 1 R. 371; 57 J. P. 741—P. C.

A written agreement to sell a business may be altered by parol testimony. Mansfield v. Cheslyn, 2 L. J., K. B. 85.

To shew previous Parol Promise.]—When a written contract has been executed, containing all the terms agreed upon between the parties, a previous parol promise relating to the same subject-matter is invalid. Angell v. Duke, 32 L. T. 320; 23 W. R. 548.

The defendant let a house and furniture to the plaintiff by a written agreement; evidence of a previous parol promise by the defendant to put in more furniture was tendered at the trial and rejected:—Held, that the rejection was right.

To establish collateral Parol Contract.]—A tenant entered on lands on the understanding that a lease should be signed at a future time. When the lease was presented to him for signature he refused to sign unless the landlord would undertake to destroy the rabbits. This the landlord by word of mouth promised to do, and the tenant thereupon signed. The lease contained a clause by which the tenant agreed not to shoot, hunt, or sport on the land, or destroy any game, but to use his best endeavours for the preservation of the same, and to allow his landlord or friends at any time to hunt, shoot and sport on the land. In an action by the tenant against the landlord, for breach of agreement in not destroying the rabbits:—Held, that this agreement was collateral to, and did not alter or vary the written contract, and that therefore evidence of such agreement was admissible. Morgan v. Griffiths, 40 L. J., Ex. 46; L. R. 6 Ex. 70; 23 L. T. 783; 19 W. R. 957.

Rule, that written agreement within the Statute of Frauds cannot be varied by parol, does not affect a subsequent distinct collateral agreement. Rich v. Jackson, cited 6 Ves. 337, 338, n. See 4 Bro. C. C. 514.

When a security is taken, which may be supposed, by postponing the time of payment, to restrict the right of suing within that time, and so to release the surety, parol evidence is admissible to prove that there was an agreement that such security should not have that operation. Wyke v. Rogers, 1 De G. M. & G. 408; 21 L. J., Ch. 611. And see Pearson v. Pearson, infra.

Date.]—Parol evidence is admissible to shew that a written contract which has no date was not intended to operate from its delivery, but from a future uncertain period. Davis v. Jones, 17 C. B. 625; 25 L. J., C. P. 91; 4 W. R. 248.

Condition.]—In an action for non-fulfilment of a written agreement, parol evidence is admissible to shew that the defendant signed the document upon the understanding between the parties that it was not to operate as an agreement unless a certain condition was performed. Pym v. Campbell, 6 El. & Bl. 370; 25 L. J., Q. B. 277; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 641; 4 W. R. 528.

The plaintiff declared upon an agreement by the defendant to transfer to him a farm which the defendant held under S. The defendant pleaded that the agreement was made subject to the condition that it should be null and void if S. should not, within a reasonable time after the making of the agreement, consent and agree to the transfer of the farm to the plaintiff:—Held, that it was competent to the defendant to prove by extraneous evidence this contemporaneous oral agreement, such oral agreement operating as a suspension of the written agreement, and not in defeasance of it. Wallis v. Littell, 11 C. B. (N.S.) 369; 31 L. J., C. P. 100; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 745; 5 L. T. 489; 10 W. R. 192.

Parol evidence is not admissible to vary the terms of an agreement in writing where such exists; but is admissible to shew that a signed document purporting to be such an agreement is not a contract at all, no contract having, in fact, been concluded between the parties. Pym v. Campbell (6 El. & Bl. 370; 25 L. J., Q. B. 277), Gudgen v. Besset (6 El. & Bl. 986; 26 L. J., Q. B. 36), and Furness v. Meek (27 L. J., Ex. 34) followed. Pattle v. Hornibrook, 66 L. J., Ch. 144; [1897] 1 Ch. 25; 75 L. T. 475; 45 W. R. 123.

The plaintiff signed an agreement to take a lease of a house from the defendant. The defendant subsequently signed it, but without intending to bind himself till he should be satisfied of the plaintiff's responsibility, and ultimately, not being so satisfied, let the house to another person. The signed document had not been delivered to the plaintiff:—Held, that the defendant might shew that no contract had been arrived at between the plaintiff and himself. Ib.

By the terms of a written agreement J. agreed to lease to W. "a shop and premises which are to be built at a cost not to exceed 400*l.*, at the annual rental of 75*l.*" J. expended 750*l.* in building, and refused to grant W. a lease at a rent of 75*l.* In an action by W. against J. for specific performance, the defendant set up as a defence a contemporaneous parol proviso to the agreement to the effect that if the outlay exceeded 400*l.* the rent was to be raised in proportion:—Held, that such parol proviso did not contradict, but merely explained, the terms of the written contract, and that the evidence was admissible. Williams v. Jones, 36 W. R. 573.

Where a plaintiff declares upon an agreement in writing, the defendant cannot in pleading rely upon oral matter introducing a qualification of the contract declared on, or shew that it was made subject to conditions which do not appear upon the face of it. Canham v. Barry, 15 C. B.

The court will compel an attorney to perform an absolute written undertaking, notwithstanding a parol agreement that it should not be enforced except upon a contingency. Wills v. Warner, 1 D. P. C. 680; 2 L. J., Ex. 174.

A bankrupt, previous to his bankruptcy, gave a bond to trustees for the payment of 5,000*l.* and interest, as a provision for his daughter on her marriage. The trustees having proved the amount under the commission, a petition was presented to expunge the proof, the bankrupt alleging that, when the bond was given, it was understood between him and the obligees, that it was only to be available in the event of the success of a certain speculation:—Held, that such parol evidence was not admissible to control the absolute effect of the bond. Morley, Ex parte, 2 Deac. & C. 50.

Intended to be inoperative.]—Evidence to shew, not that an agreement in writing was a mere blind, and never intended to have any operation at all, but that it was only to have a partial operation, is inadmissible, as in effect altering by parol the terms of the written agreement. Fenwick v. Brinkworth, 2 F. & F. 86.

For purpose of rectification.]—Letters offered in evidence to shew that during negotiations for a sale the vendor had declined to enter into a proposed covenant not to solicit the old customers, were admissible, not to construe the agreement, but as shewing a collateral verbal agreement which would be a defence to an action for specific performance, the defendant also seeking by counter-claim rectification of the agreement. Pearson v. Pearson, 54 L. J., Ch. 32; 27 Ch. D. 149—C. A.

—— But not to construe.]—Parol evidence is admissible where you have a case of specific performance with compensation, but an express bargain to make a good title cannot be modified by parol evidence. Such evidence would be admissible in an action to reform the contract, but is not admissible for the purpose of construing it. Cato v. Thompson, 9 Q. B. D. 620—C. A.

Application for cancellation.]—Where it is sought to cancel a lease, or executed conveyance, upon equitable grounds, parol evidence is admissible, even where there has been an antecedent agreement in writing for the lease or conveyance. Gun v. M'Carthy, 13 L. R., Ir. 304.

As to State of Document when signed.]—A. signed a proposal for a contract in a certain form. B. then altered it, and signed it in the altered form, and brought it to A. Parol evidence having been given in an action against A. that he verbally agreed that the altered document should be the contract:—Held, that such evidence was rightly admitted, as shewing what was the state of the document when it became an agreement. Hudson v. Stuart, 43 L. J., C. P. 204; L. R. 9 C. P. 311; 30 L. T. 333; 22 W. R. 534.

To limit Application of restrictive Covenant.]—A railway company having taken for the purposes of their railway lands on the north of C. street belonging to a corporation, and having constructed their railway in an open cutting, afterwards covered over the top of the cutting so as to restore the surface of the lands, and entered into an agreement to let part of this surface on a building lease. It was provided by their act that the railway company should not take any lands belonging to the corporation without their consent in writing, and this provision was not complied with in taking the lands on the north of C. street. Subsequently an agreement was, in July, 1869, made between the corporation and the railway company, whereby the corporation were to take immediate possession of all the land on the north side of C. street not used for the railway, except a small piece of land immediately adjoining the railway in that street, and which the company had agreed to let, together with the whole of the land over their railway, for building purposes, but that in the lease of such land the railway company were to insert a covenant that the premises should not be used for the sale of meat or poultry. At the date of this agreement the company had let part of the excepted land to K., and afterwards they let another part of it, to which they thought the restrictive covenant did not apply, to S., who immediately began to build butchers' shops on it. This fact was known in September to the corporation, who, however, took no steps to interfere with the building till the following January:—Held, that parol evidence of what took place at a meeting between deputations from the corporation and the railway company, at which meeting the terms of the agreement, which was afterwards reduced to writing, were discussed, was not admissible to shew whether the restrictive covenant was intended to apply to the whole of the land on the north side of C. street which the railway company had taken from the corporation, or only to that part of it which they had let to K., and that such parol evidence being inadmissible, the restrictive covenant applied to the whole of the land. London Corporation v. Sandon, 26 L. T. 86—L.JJ.

Imperfect Contracts.]—When a document appears on the face of it to contain the terms of a written agreement, parol evidence is admissible to shew that it was not intended to be an agreement, but was written for some other purpose, and the question whether this is so or not is for the jury. Clever v. Kirkman, 33 L. T. 672; 24 W. R. 159.

The defendant gave the plaintiff a paper stating, "The terms upon which I agree to sell you the business . . . are as follows: . . .," addressed to the plaintiff, signed by the defendant. The plaintiff afterwards wrote below, "I agree to the above terms, and accept the same," and signed. In an action for not selling, the defence was that the paper was not meant to be a contract of sale. The judge left it to the jury whether the defendant signed the paper as an agreement or an offer to the plaintiff, or as a memorandum of terms on which the plaintiff might offer the business for sale to a purchaser:—Held, a proper direction. Ib.

When letters contain certain terms which may form the basis of a contract, it is necessary to ascertain from the letters whether the terms are finally arrived at, and, if they are not, verbal evidence is admissible to shew that a different contract has been entered into. Johnson v. Appleby, 43 L. J., C. P. 146; L. R. 9 C. P. 158; 30 L. T. 261; 22 W. R. 515.

To add Terms to Written Agreement.]—At the time of hiring a horse, a note of the agreement was made, stating the time and the price:—Held, that the plaintiff was not precluded from proving, by parol evidence, additional terms of agreement. Jeffery v. Walton, 1 Stark. 267.

When a written memorandum of the terms on which work is to be done does not shew where it is to be done, nor by measurement or otherwise identify the work or define the quality of work to which it applies, parol evidence is admissible to explain it in this respect, and shew to what it refers. Pharoah v. Lush, 2 F. & F. 721.

A trader being indebted to various persons, procured from A. an advance of 200*l*., for which he verbally agreed to give a bill of sale of all his property, if called upon to do so. On receiving the money he gave to A. a promissory note for 200*l*., a memorandum of agreement to assign some property expectant on the death of his wife's father, together with a policy of insurance; and also another memorandum of agreement to pay 10*l*. yearly as a bonus:—Held, that evidence of the original verbal agreement was admissible, inasmuch as the subsequent written agreement did not contain, and was not intended to contain, the whole agreement between the parties. Harris v. Rickett, 4 H. & N. 1; 28 L. J., Ex. 197.

A., by parol, made arrangements with a railway company to convey cattle for him to K. station; he at the same time, without noticing its contents, signed a consignment note, by which the cattle were directed to be taken to E., an intermediate station on the line to K.:—Held, that parol evidence was admissible to shew that the company agreed to carry on the cattle to K., as it did not contradict, but only supplemented, the written contract. Malpas v. L. & S. W. Ry., 1 H. & R. 227; 35 L. J., C. P. 166; L. R. 1 C. P. 336; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 271; 13 L. T. 710; 14 W. R. 391.

Not only contrary to the Statute of Frauds, but to the common law before the statute, to add anything to an agreement in writing by parol evidence. Parteriche v. Powlet, 2 Atk. 383.

A. and B. carried on business together. B. agreed to buy A.'s share, the consideration being the payment by B. to A. of an annuity, based upon the estimated profits of the business. The date when the annuity was to commence was not specified. It was subsequently agreed that the annuity should commence from the date when the profits were last divided, such annuity to be in lieu of profits. B. afterwards agreed to sell to A. his share of the business upon the same terms upon which he had previously agreed to purchase. Upon taking an account of the profits, it was found more advantageous for B. to receive the profits than to have the annuity from the date of the last settlement of accounts. A. filed a bill for specific performance on the terms of the annuity being payable from the date of the settlement of accounts:—Held, that this was no part of the original contract; and the bill was dismissed. Bonville v. Bonville, 6 Jur. (N.S.) 414.

Surrounding Circumstances.]—Extrinsic circumstances not only may but must always be looked at, because an agreement can never be made intelligible unless the persons and subject-matter with which the parties are dealing can be identified. Brown v. Fletcher, 35 L. T. 165.

Parol evidence to explain the circumstances under which a guarantee to a bank for advances was given, is admissible to aid the court in construing the document. Grahame v. Grahame, 19 L. R., Ir. 249.

Parol evidence is admissible to shew under what circumstances deed or bond is executed. Stratford v. Powell, 1 Ball & B. 14.

Parol evidence of the attorney admitted to prove a party to a settlement had notice of a proper incumbrance. Shelburne v. Inchiquin, 1 Bro. C. C. 340.

Sale of Lease—Payment for Licence.]—On the sale by auction of a lease, containing a covenant against alienation without the consent of the lessor, the auctioneer announced that the landlord would give his consent for a certain sum, then mentioned, which the vendor verbally agreed to pay; and the auctioneer, on the day of the sale, signed and delivered to the purchaser a memorandum of the names of the vendor and purchaser, the price and the amount to be paid for the landlord's consent, containing a stipulation that the latter sum should not be charged to the purchaser. A deed of assignment, not specifying by whom the sum requisite to obtain the landlord's consent should be borne, having been executed, the purchaser was compelled, by the default of the vendor, to pay it, in order to render his title valid:—Held, that the memorandum was a sufficient note of an agreement by the vendor, collateral with the deed of assignment, and not merged therein, to pay the sum necessary to obtain the landlord's consent to the assignment, and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the amount which he had paid for that purpose from the defendant. Carrigy v. Brock, Ir. R. 5 C. L. 501.

Accord.]—Upon a negotiation between the plaintiff and the defendant for the sale of the fixtures, furniture and goodwill of a business (the agreement for which was afterwards reduced into writing), a distinct and separate promise was made by the defendant, in consideration of the plaintiff's signing the agreement, that the defendant would settle an action pending against the plaintiff at the suit of C.:—Held, that evidence of this prior oral agreement was admissible, notwithstanding the written agreement contained an authorisation to the defendant to settle C.'s action out of the purchase-money. Lindley v. Lacey, 17 C. B. (N.S.) 578; 34 L. J., C. P. 7; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1108; 11 L. T. 273; 13 W. R. 80.

To an action for goods sold, the defendant pleaded that it was agreed that, in consideration of his giving up possession of a public-house and stock-in-trade, the plaintiff should pay the defendant 100*l*., and give up and discharge him from all debts and the goods, and averred payment of the 100*l*., and delivering up of possession of the premises:—Held, that evidence of a parol agreement by way of accord and satisfaction was admissible in support of the plea, although to enforce a delivery of possession it might be necessary to shew a contract in writing to satisfy the 4th section of the Statute of Frauds. Lavery v. Turley, 6 H. & N. 239; 30 L. J., Ex. 49.

A written document, from which a particular contract would in ordinary cases be implied, may be shewn by parol to have been made under circumstances which exclude such implication. Bartlett v. Parnell, 6 N. & M. 299; 4 A. & E. 792; 5 L. J., K. B. 169.

Therefore, in an action for goods sold at an auction, evidence of prior declaration by the plaintiff, that the defendant was entitled to a legacy of 100*l.*, and that she might buy to that amount, and have it set off against her legacy, is admissible. Ib.

Acceptance.]—A. sold a pianoforte to B. for 15*l.* 10*s.*, and delivered it at B.'s shop. B. kept it, but refused to pay for it, alleging that it was delivered upon an agreement that it should remain as security for payment of certain outstanding bills of exchange which he had discounted for A. In an action for the price of the pianoforte:—Held, that there was a sufficient acceptance within the 17th section of the Statute of Frauds, and that parol evidence was admissible to shew the terms of the bargain. Tomkinson v. Staight, 17 C. B. 697; 25 L. J., C. P. 85; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 354; 4 W. R. 299.

Suretyship.]—M. and D. about to advance 400*l.* to A. on mortgage, the parties met their solicitor, G., who was to act for them all, and draw up an agreement and prepare the securities. The agreement set forth that of the money to be advanced M. was to be liable for only 100*l.* and D. for 300*l.*, and M. and D. accordingly drew bills on each other, which were discounted and the proceeds advanced to A. Afterwards D. became insolvent, and G., being a creditor of D. got the bills indorsed to himself, G., and sued M. for the whole amount:—Held, on the trial of an issue whether G. had not been retained by M. as his solicitor to prepare proper securities to protect M. against liability beyond the amount of 100*l.*, it was competent to prove by parol that at the time the written agreement was made and executed, M. gave directions to G. so to prepare such securities, for this was not an attempt to vary a written instrument by parol evidence. Gemmill v. Macalister, 9 Jur. (N.S.) 825; 7 L. T. 841; 11 W. R. 486—H. L.

A company borrowed from a bank a sum of money, to be repaid with interest, and deposited a lease as a security. Afterwards a document was drawn up by the company, stating that the lease had been deposited as a security for the loan, without mentioning interest. The bank refused to give up the deed until the whole of the interest as well as the loan had been repaid:—Held, in an action of detinue for the lease, that the written document was not conclusive against the bank as to the terms of the loan, and that parol evidence was rightly admitted to shew that the lease had been intended as a security as well for the interest as the principal. Pentreguinny Fuel Co. v. Young, 12 Jur. (N.S.) 56.

To modify Collateral Document.]—The principle that parol testimony cannot be received to contradict or modify the terms of a written contract does not apply to a document which forms no part of the contract, and cannot be used to exclude parol evidence of the circumstances attending the signature of one of the parties to such document. Bank of Australasia v. Palmer, 66 L. J., P. C. 105; [1897] A. C. 540—P. C.

To rebut Equity.]—Parol evidence may be admitted on the part of the defendant (there being no written agreement between him and the plaintiff) to establish a fact to rebut the equity set up by the bill, the case not being affected by the Statute of Frauds. Walker v. Walker, 2 Atk. 98.

And see CONTRACT.

7. AS TO CONSIDERATION.

In Deeds.]—The consideration expressed in a deed of conveyance was 28*l.*, but parol evidence was admitted to prove that 30*l.* was the real consideration. Rex v. Scammonden, 3 Term Rep. 474; 1 R. R. 442.

Where there is one consideration stated in a deed, proof may be given of any other consideration which did take place, and which is not in contradiction to the instrument; and it is not in contradiction to the instrument to prove a larger consideration than that which is stated. Clifford v. Turrell, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 138; 14 L. J., Ch. 390.

Where a deed purports to be made "in consideration of esteem for A. T., and for divers other good considerations," evidence is admissible that it was made in consideration of an intended marriage with A. T. Tull v. Parlett, M. & M. 472; 31 R. R. 751.

A conveyance to husband and wife and their heirs as joint tenants, "in consideration of 200*l.* now in hand duly paid by husband and wife," may be explained by extrinsic evidence, shewing that the money belonged to the wife only, so as to defeat the claim of the husband's assignees under 21 Jac. 1, c. 15, s. 5. Doe d. Bainbridge v. Statham, 7 D. & R. 141.

Parol evidence not admissible to shew that the consideration for a deed of conveyance of property, not in settlement, by a father to his second son (an object of a power of appointment contained in his father's marriage settlement) was the relinquishment by the son of his right, as one of the issue male under the settlement. Barron v. Barron, 2 Jones, 226.

A grant of an annuity to the grantor's sister, though expressed to be made for natural love and affection, may be proved to have been made in consideration of her marriage, and will entitle her to rank as a specialty creditor of the grantor. Tanner v. Byne, 1 Sim. 160; 5 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 125.

To add to Consideration.]—By an agreement in writing G. agreed that Y. should receive all the money that was then due, and which should become due, to G. upon the winding-up of a society, Y. paying to G. out of such money the sum of 100*l.* The consideration was stated to be, "In consideration of a sum of money this day paid," &c.:—Held, that evidence was admissible to shew that, in addition to the consideration expressed, there was another consideration, namely, that Y. should vote for the winding-up of the society. Barnstaple Second Annuitant Society, In re, 50 L. T. 424.

To reduce Commission.]—Where A. employs a broker, B., to procure a charter-party on a commission of 5 per cent., to be paid whether the contract be executed or abandoned, A. cannot under a plea of payment of a smaller sum and non assumpsit ultra, give evidence of a subsequent agreement to accept 2½ per cent. only on account of the abandonment of the contract; but where the terms of the original contract are only inferred from the usage of the trade, a conversation, in which B. agrees to take 2½ per cent. only on account of the abandonment of the contract, is admissible, to shew that such reduction was, as a contingent reduction, part of the original contract. Broad v. M'Calmer, 5 N. & M. 413.

Amount.]—An order for advertisement sent to a monthly magazine dated September 29th, 1856, stated the date of appearance of the advertisement as 1856, October to October, the number of insertions as one, and the price as 4*l.* 10*s.* :—Held, by Williams, Camden and Willes, JJ., that even if this was a contract which was doubtful, its meaning was that 4*l.* 10*s.* was to be paid for each advertisement. Per Byles, J., that it was not a contract, but if it was that was the true interpretation of it. Quære, per Williams, J., whether if it was a contract, parol evidence was admissible to shew what the price intended was. Baillie v. Jay, 7 W. R. 283.

To ascertain Balance.]—A deed whereby it was agreed to pay a balance then unascertained, stipulating for the accounts being taken by arbitration. Held, sufficient to take the case out of the Statute of Limitations, and extrinsic evidence admitted to ascertain the sum due. Cheslyn v. Dalby, 4 Y. & Coll. 238 ; 10 L. J., Ex. Eq. 21.

Payment—In Goods.]—Although evidence is not admissible to shew, contrary to the terms of a deed, that by the contract the consideration was not to be paid, as stated in the deed, but in goods, such evidence is admissible to shew that, in point of fact, the consideration was so paid, and that goods were accepted in payment. Smith v. Battams, 26 L. J., Ex. 232.

In Contract for Annuity.]—Upon the construction of certain letters, aided by parol evidence :—Held, that a testator, for valuable consideration, contracted to grant an annuity for the lives of certain persons. Moneypenny v. Mascall, 2 Coll. 212.

Contract in Restraint of Trade.]—In contracts in restraint of trade which are partly verbal and partly in writing, parol evidence is admissible to shew what was the consideration therefor. Cooper v. Southgate, 63 L. J., Q. B. 670 ; 10 R. 552.

In Bills and Notes.]—In an action by a payee against the maker of a promissory note, though it is not competent to him to controvert or vary by parol the contract that appears on the face of the note, he may shew that there was no consideration, or that the consideration has failed. Abbott v. Hendricks, 2 Scott (N.R.) 183 ; 1 Man. & G. 791 ; 1 Drink. 31 ; 10 L. J., C. P. 51 ; 4 Jur. 1113.

It is an inflexible rule not to admit parol evidence to contradict a written instrument, unless the consideration is illegal, and, therefore, where a testatrix gave in her lifetime to the plaintiff a promissory note to pay him or order "on demand the sum of 100*l.* for value received and his kindness to me," with a verbal engagement on the part of the plaintiff that the note should not be demanded until after her death :—Held, in an action upon the note, that parol evidence could not be received to shew that it was not given for a valuable consideration. Woodbridge v. Spooner, 3 B. & Ald. 233 ; 1 Chit. 661 ; 22 R. R. 365.

On the 8th of August, 1881, the defendant agreed with S., her partner in a business, (1) that S. should retire as from the 31st of July, 1881 ; (2) that the defendant should pay S. 2,000*l.* within three years, with interest at 5 per cent. on the same, or the instalments thereof for the time being remaining unpaid computed from the said 31st of July ; (3) that S. should accept the 2,000*l.* in full satisfaction for all his share in the stock, credits, and effects of the partnership ; (4) that a proper deed should be executed to carry the agreement into effect. Subsequently in September the defendant by a promissory note dated the 31st of July, 1881, promised to pay S. on demand 2,000*l.* with interest at 5*l.* per cent. In an action on the note by the executrix of S. parol evidence of the circumstances under which the note was given was admitted subject to objection, and thereupon the jury found that the 2,000*l.* and interest covered by the note were the same moneys as those covered by the agreement of the 8th of August, and that the note was given by the defendant to S. and accepted by him subject to the conditions of the agreement of the 8th of August :—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover, as there was a good consideration for the promissory note ; for that where there is a debt existing in presenti, but payable within a period of time and not on a day fixed in futuro, so that the debtor is entitled to pay the sum owed at any time at his option, there is good consideration for a promissory note payable on demand given by the debtor and accepted by the creditor for the amount of that debt ; and that such a case falls within the principle of the decision in Currie v. Misa (L. R. 10 Ex. 153), and that the alleged collateral agreement between the defendant and S. could not be taken into consideration. Stott v. Fairlamb, 53 L. J., Q. B. 47 ; 49 L. T. 525—C. A.

To contradict Note.]—A parol agreement contemporaneous with a promissory note, to the effect that the note, though on the face of it payable on demand, should not be enforced for three years, is immaterial and inoperative to contradict the terms of the note. Ib.

To an action by payee against the drawer of a bill payable twelve months after date, he pleaded that he drew the bill and delivered it to the plaintiff for the accommodation of the acceptor and as surety for him ; that it was agreed between the plaintiff and himself and the acceptor that the acceptor should deposit with the plaintiff securities, to be held by the plaintiff as security for the due payment of the bill, and that, in case the bill should not be duly paid, the plaintiff should sell the securities and apply the proceeds in liquidation of the bill, and that until the plaintiff should have so sold the securities, he should not be liable to be sued on the bill. The plea then went on to aver that the securities were deposited with the plaintiff by the acceptor, but that he had not sold but still held them :—Held, that oral evidence of the agreement alleged in the plea was not admissible, inasmuch as it contradicted or varied the express written contract on the face of the bill. Abrey v. Crux, 39 L. J., C. P. 9 ; L. R. 5 C. P. 37 ; 21 L. T. 327 ; 18 W. R. 63.

In an action by payee against the maker of a note, parol evidence is inadmissible to prove an agreement that he should not be liable if the assets of a third party should be sufficient to pay the debt for which it was given. M'Dougall v. Field, Ir. R. 6 C. L. 185.

Parol evidence is inadmissible to prove a note expressed to be a security for 500*l.* and interest, to have been intended to secure the interest only. Hill v. Wilson, 42 L. J., Ch. 817 ; L. R. 8 Ch. 888 ; 29 L. T. 238 ; 21 W. R. 757.

It is not competent to an acceptor of a bill of exchange to set up a parol contract inconsistent with the contract on the face of the bill. Besant v. Cross, 10 C. B. 895 ; 2 L. M. & P. 351 ; 20 L. J., C. P. 173 ; 15 Jur. 828. S. P., Adams v. Wordley, 1 M. & W. 374 ; 2 Gale, 29 ; 1 Tyr. & G. 620 ; 5 L. J., Ex. 158.

In Guarantees.]—Where the terms of a guarantee apply equally to a past as to a future consideration, evidence of the circumstances of the parties at the time when the guarantee was made, is admissible to explain its meaning. Bainbridge v. Wade, 16 Q. B. 89 ; 20 L. J., Q. B. 7 ; 15 Jur. 572.

The plaintiffs wrote to the defendant, "We are doing business with B., and require a guarantee to the amount of 200*l.*, and they refer us to you." The defendant wrote an answer, "I have no objection to become security for B., and subjoin a memorandum to that effect." The memorandum subjoined was, "I hereby engage to guarantee to Messrs. Colbourn, ironmasters, 200*l.* for iron received from them for B., as annexed": —Held, that these three documents were to be read together, and that the words, "we are doing business," taken with the rest, shewed that the consideration for the defendant's undertaking was, that the plaintiff should continue to supply B. with goods, and that if the last document alone had constituted the contract, parol evidence would have been admissible to construe the words, "for iron received." Colbourn v. Dawson, 10 C. B. 765 ; 20 L. J., C. P. 154 ; 15 Jur. 680.

A guarantee, purporting to be given in consideration of Messrs. E. giving credit to Mr. D. J., is good, as those words may apply to future as well as to past credit, and evidence is therefore admissible in an action on such a guarantee to shew that it was intended to apply to future credit. Edwards v. Jevons, 8 C. B. 436 ; 19 L. J., C. P. 50 ; 14 Jur. 131.

A guarantee was in these terms addressed to the plaintiff: "Sir, In consideration of your having this day advanced to our client Mr. V. D. 780*l.*, secured by his warrant of attorney, payable on the 22nd August next, we (the defendants) undertake to pay the same on default. Dated this 22nd day of June, 1840. Yours," &c. :— Held, that evidence was admissible to shew that the guarantee had in fact been executed on the 22nd of June, simultaneously with the payment of the money by the plaintiff to the party guaranteed. Goldshede v. Swan, 1 Ex. 154 ; 16 L. J., Ex. 284.

Since 19 & 20 Vict. c. 97.]—Since 19 & 20 Vict. c. 97, parol evidence, though it may supply the consideration for a guarantee, cannot explain the promise. Holmes v. Mitchell, 7 C. B. (N.S.) 361 ; 28 L. J., C. P. 301 ; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 73.

Therefore, a letter from the defendant to the plaintiff, relating to a proposed mortgage of leasehold property belonging to A. and B., who were desirous to borrow 400*l.* on the security thereof from the plaintiff, in these words, "I will take any responsibility on myself respecting it, should there be any," is not sufficient to satisfy the Statute of Frauds, because the whole promise cannot be made out without the aid of extrinsic parol evidence. Ib.

8. Usages and Customs of Country.

Usage—Question for Jury.]—Evidence of usage is admissible to explain an ambiguous grant, and the construction of such a grant is for the jury, and not for the judge. Doe d. Kinglake v. Beviss, 18 L. J., C. P. 128.

All ancient grants may be explained by evidence of modern usage upon a question as to what passed by such documents. Beaufort (Duke) v. Swansea Corporation, 3 Ex. 413.

Where a charter is ancient and ambiguous in its language, evidence of usage is admissible to explain it. Newcastle-upon-Tyne (Master, Pilots, and Seamen) v. Bradley, 2 El. & Bl. 428 ; 16 Jur. 494.

Where parcels are described in old documents by words of a general nature or of doubtful import, evidence of usage is proper to be received to shew what they comprehended. Waterpark (Lord) v. Fennell, 7 H. L. Cas. 650 ; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1135 ; 7 W. R. 634.

Where a right of election is given by an old deed to any number of persons, usage is admissible evidence as to its construction and meaning. Withnell v. Gartham, 1 Esp. 322 ; 6 Term Rep. 388 ; 3 R. R. 218.

In the construction of a deed, parol evidence of prior, contemporaneous and subsequent enjoyment of a right claimed is admissible to shew the condition of the property, so as to place the court in the position of the parties to the instrument. Baird v. Fortune, 4 Macq. H. L. 127 ; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 926 ; 5 L. T. 2 ; 10 W. R. 2—H. L. (Sc.).

To explain an ambiguous award of a road under an inclosure act, evidence of contemporaneous acts of the occupiers of the land may be received. Wadley v. Bayliss, 5 Taunt. 752 ; 15 R. R. 645.

Long usage is of no avail against plain statutory enactments, and it can be binding only as the interpreter of a doubtful law, and as affording a contemporaneous exposition. Dunbar (Magistrates) v. Roxburghe (Duchess), 3 Cl. & F. 335.

Where a statute, expressive as to some points, is silent as to others, usage may well supply the defect, if not inconsistent with the express directions of the statute. Ib.

Custom to control Covenant.]—A custom to control the words of a covenant in a deed must be one which both parties to the covenant can know, and must be certain and invariable. Abbott v. Bates, 43 L. J., C. P. 150 ; 30 L. T. 99 ; 22 W. R. 488. Affirmed, 33 L. T. 491 ; 24 W. R. 101.

Custom—Varying Documents.]—A custom cannot vary or alter the construction of written documents. Menzies v. Lightfoot, 40 L. J., Ch. 561 ; L. R. 11 Eq. 459 ; 24 L. T. 695 ; 19 W. R. 578.

——Excluded by express Terms.]—The express terms of a lease cannot be controlled by the custom of the country ; but if the lease is entirely silent as to the time of quitting, evidence of the custom of the country may be given to fix the time. Webb v. Plummer, 2 B. & Ald. 746 ; 21 R. R. 479. And see as to the custom of the country, Dalby v. Hirst, 1 Br. & B. 224 ; 3 Moore, 536 ; 21 R. R. 577. Roxburghe (Duke) v. Robertson, 2 Bligh, 156 ; 21 R. R. 60. Senior v. Armytage, Holt, N. P. 197 ; 17 R. R. 627. Wigglesworth v. Dallison, 1 Dougl. 207. Hutton v. Warren, 1 M. & W. 466 ; 2 Gale, 71 ; 1 Tyr. & G. 646 ; 5 L. J., Ex. 234.

—— Manuring.]—In an action by a landlord against an incoming tenant, the declaration stated, that, in consideration that the landlord would give up to the tenant possession of the farm, on which manure had been laid, and would permit him to have the benefit of the manure, he promised to pay the landlord for the same according to the custom of the country. Breach, non-payment. In support of this custom, the landlord put in evidence a written agreement, which stated that the land had been manured with eight loads of manure per acre, and that the tenant agreed to leave the land, when given up by him, in the same state, or to allow a valuation to be made:—Held that the written agreement excluded the custom of the country, as being inconsistent with it, and that there was a variance between that agreement and the one stated in the declaration. Clarke v. Roystone, 13 M. & W. 752; 14 L. J., Ex. 143.

—— As to Straw.]—By the terms of a farm lease for seven years, expiring at Michaelmas, the tenant agreed to cultivate the land according to the custom of the country, and "during the term to consume with stock on the farm all the hay, straw and clover grown thereon, which manure shall be used on the farm"; and the landlord agreed to let the tenant occupy part of the homestead until Midsummer-day after the expiration of the term, if necessary, "to end the cropping of the tenant grown on the premises": —Held, that the lease did not exclude the custom of the country, by which the tenant, having paid for straw on his incoming, was entitled to be paid for straw on his quitting; and that an action was maintainable against the succeeding tenant for the straw left by the outgoing tenant on the farm, at the expiration of the term. Muncey v. Dennis, 1 H. & N. 216; 26 L. J., Ex. 66.

—— Selling Flints—Reservation of Mines and Minerals.]—By an agreement for a lease the tenant agreed to cultivate the land according to the most approved system of husbandry and to use it for agricultural purposes only, and to commit no waste. The lessor reserved "all mines and minerals, sand, quarries of stone, brick-earth and gravel pits." The farm was in a district where large numbers of flints came to the surface in the ordinary course of ploughing, and it was necessary to remove them in order to cultivate the land effectually. The tenant removed the flints which came to the surface in the ordinary course of agricultural operations and sold them, and there was evidence that it was the custom of the country for tenants to do so, when not prohibited by their leases:—Held, that such a custom was reasonable and good. Tucker v. Linger, 51 L. J., Ch. 713; 21 Ch. D. 18; 46 L. T. 894; 30 W. R. 578—C. A. Affirmed, 52 L. J., Ch. 941; 8 App. Cas. 508; 49 L. T. 373; 32 W. R. 40; 48 J. P. 4—H. L. (E.)

Held, further, that the reservation of minerals in the agreement did not indicate an intention to exclude the custom so as to deprive the tenant of his right. Ib.

In ascertaining the nature of an agricultural custom regard is to be had not so much to what the witnesses state to be their opinion as to the extent of the custom, as to what they prove to have been publicly done throughout the district. Ib.

—— Counting Rabbits.]—In a lease it was provided that at the end of the term, the tenant should leave not less than 10,000 rabbits on the premises, to be taken and paid for by the landlord, at the rate of 60*l.* "per 1,000":—Held, that evidence was admissible to shew that the custom of that part of the country, in counting rabbits, was to allow six score to the hundred. Smith v. Wilson, 3 B. & Ad. 728; 1 L. J., K. B. 194.

—— Particular Estate—Knowledge.]—The rule of law, as to importing into the terms of a tenancy the custom of the country, does not admit of evidence of the usage of a particular estate, or the property of a particular individual, however extensive it may be, it not being shewn that the tenant was aware of it. Womersley v. Dally, 26 L. J., Ex. 219.

—— Right to let down Surface.]—To a statement of claim for working mines under the plaintiff's land without leaving sufficient support for the surface, the defendant pleaded in his statement of defence that he was the lessee of the mines from the lord of the manor; that the plaintiff's land had, previously to the passing of an inclosure act under which the waste of the manor was inclosed and allotted, formed part of such waste; that the lord of the manor from time immemorial had been accustomed to work the mines under the waste without leaving sufficient support for the surface, and without making any compensation for injury so caused; that by the Inclosure Act it was provided that the lord of the manor, his successors or assigns, might hold all mines and quarries lying under the waste, together with liberty of searching for, winning and working the same as fully and freely as he or they might have had and enjoyed the same in case the act had not been passed, and that without making or paying any satisfaction for so doing; and that it was further provided by the act that compensation for damage caused to any person's allotment by such working of the mines should be assessed by a justice of the peace, and should, when so assessed, be paid by the occupiers of the other allotments in the same township:—Held, that the statement of defence was good, on the ground that, whether any valid custom such as alleged in the statement of defence existed previously to the act or not, the act expressly gave to the lord of the manor and his assigns the right to let down the surface by mining without making any compensation. Beckett v. Bradley (31 L. J., Q. B. 65) not followed. Gill v. Dickinson, 49 L. J., Q. B. 262; 5 Q. B. D. 159; 42 L. T. 510; 28 W. R. 415; 44 J. P. 587.

9. Usages and Customs of Trade.

a. Principle of Admissibility.

In General.]—In all mercantile contracts and adventures, parol evidence of usage in such cases allowed. Parol evidence in the above case as to usage and custom on the written articles taken on behalf of the plaintiffs, but, not being read by them at the hearing, allowed to be called for and used by the defendants. Parol evidence on one side called for by the other. So at law, though to prove matter in writing. On mercantile contracts, evidence of merchants allowed. Blunt v. Cumyns, 2 Ves. 331.

All contracts relating to matters of trade shall be expounded by usage of trade. Baker v. Paine, 1 Ves. 459.

When the terms of a contract are plain, usage can little affect the construction to be placed upon it, but when it is ambiguous, the usage for a long time may influence the judgment of the court, by shewing how it was understood by the original parties to it. Boldero v. East India Co., 26 Beav. 316.

A witness may be examined as to mercantile usage, or as to the meaning of a term of art; but he must not be asked, even upon cross-examination, to construe a written document. Kirkland v. Nisbet, 3 Macq. H. L. 766.

Number of Instances.]—Mercantile usage is provable by the multiplication or aggregation of a great number of particular instances, shewing a given course of business, and a general, established understanding respecting it. Mackenzie v. Dunlop, 3 Macq. H. L. 22; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 957; 4 W. R. 815.

If A. gives an iron scrip note to B., and B. sells it to a third party, that third party may prove that the document has, in the usage of trade, an import not expressed on the face of it. Ib.

But such third party cannot put a special construction on the document by proving that, in the contract between A. and B., there was a specialty not actually appearing on the face of the document. Ib.

In order to prove that a particular usage exists in a trade carried on at A., evidence that the usage prevails at B., where the same trade is carried on, is admissible, provided it is in the vicinity of A., and there is an interchange of the trade in question between the two places. Plaice v. Allcock, 4 F. & F. 1074.

In order to prove a usage in a particular trade, it must be shewn that the usage is certain and reasonable, and so universally acquiesced in that everyone engaged in the trade knows it, or might know it if he took the trouble to inquire. Ib.

In an administration action a horsedealer made a claim for charges connected with the purchase and sale of horses for the testator, pursuant to agreement. He alleged that he had not sold the horses on commission as agent, but on the terms that he should pay the testator a fixed sum for each horse, and sell it again on his own account, retaining any difference as profit; and that this was the custom of all horsedealers of good standing:—Held, that evidence of the course of dealing of other horsedealers was admissible to show that the alleged agreement not unreasonable. Leigh, In re, Rowcliffe v. Leigh, 6 Ch. D. 256; 37 L. T. 557; 25 W. R. 783.

New Usage.]—In respect to evidence of mercantile usage, to support such a ground there needs not either the antiquity, the uniformity, or the notoriety of custom, which in respect of all these grounds becomes a local law. The usage may be still in course of growth; it may require evidence for its support in each case; but in the result it is enough if it appears to be so well known and acquiesced in, that it may be reasonably presumed to be an ingredient imported by the parties into their contract. Juggomohun Ghose v. Manickchund, 7 Moore, Ind. App. 263.

Particular Place.]—Evidence of the usage of a particular place, to add to or in any manner to effect the construction of a written contract, is admitted only on the principle that the parties who made the contract were both cognisant of the usage, and are presumed to have made the agreement with reference to it. Kirchner v. Venus, 12 Moore, P. C. 361; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 395; 7 W. R. 455.

No such presumption arises, if one of the parties is ignorant of such usage or custom. Ib.

Goods were shipped at Liverpool for Sydney. By a bill of lading the goods were made deliverable to the shipper's order or assigns, "he or they paying freight for the goods here as per margin"; and in the margin the stated amount for freight was made payable in Liverpool to M. (who was not the shipowner) one month after the sailing of the vessel:—Held, that, as against an indorsee for value of the bill of lading, the master could not detain the goods at the port of delivery on the ground of non-payment of the freight, although the jury found that, by the usage of Liverpool, the shipowner does not lose his lien for the freight by making it payable at the port of shipment. Ib.

Such a local usage cannot bind a bonâ fide holder for value without notice. Ib.

Reasonableness.]—A custom or usage of trade, to be binding, must be reasonable, and is not so if it is such as honest and rightminded men would deem unfair and unrighteous. Paxton v. Courtnay, 2 F. & F. 131.

To explain, not vary.]—Evidence of general usage in the trade to which a contract refers is admissible to interpret the contract. But, to vary the ordinary meaning of plain words, such evidence must be clear and irresistible. Lewis v. Marshall, 7 Man. & G. 729; 8 Scott (N.R.) 477; 13 L. J., C. P. 193; 8 Jur. 848.

A custom cannot vary or alter the construction of written documents. Menzies v. Lightfoot, 40 L. J., Ch. 561; L. R. 11 Eq. 459; 24 L. T. 695; 19 W. R. 578.

b. What Customs.

Bankers Selling Stock.]—Evidence of the course of business and custom of London bankers is admissible, to explain the authority meant to be given to a London banker by a power of attorney to sell stock sent through a country broker. Adams v. Peters, 2 Car. & K. 723.

Broker's Commission.]—The defendant, a shipowner, being desirous of chartering a vessel, the plaintiff, a shipbroker, introduced him to S., another broker, who introduced the defendant to L., who mentioned to B. that the charter was wanted, and through the negotiations of B. with the defendant, D. chartered the vessel. The plaintiff sued for commission, alleging that an "introducing broker" was entitled by custom to a share of the commission. The plaintiff's counsel proposed to ask a witness the following question, "What is the custom with regard to payment of broker's commission, when a broker introduces another broker to a shipowner, who subsequently negotiates with the broker introduced?"—Held, that the evidence was properly rejected. Gibson v. Crick, 1 H. & C. 142; 31 L. J., Ex. 304; 6 L. T. 392; 10 W. R. 525.

The defendants, who were shipbrokers, being employed by an agent of the French government to procure for them the charter of two ships, L., who was also a shipbroker, informed the defendants of two ships, called the "New York" and the "Glasgow," which might be chartered. After some negotiation and correspondence between L., the defendants, and the owners of the ships, the "New York" was chartered for six months, and the defendants wrote to L. stating, that, "in consideration of his having assisted them in procuring the charter of the 'New York' they engaged to pay him a commission of 2½ per cent." The "Glasgow" was afterwards chartered, and the charter of the "New York" was renewed for another six months, and L. then claimed commission at the same rate on the charter of the "Glasgow," and also on the renewed charter of the "New York":—Held, first, that evidence was admissible of a custom among shipbrokers that an "introducing broker" should receive renewed commission on every renewal of a charter effected through him, since such a custom was not inconsistent with the written agreement. Allan v. Sundius, 1 H. & C. 123; 31 L. J., Ex. 307; 6 L. T. 359; 10 W. R. 648.

Held, secondly, that it should have been left to the jury to say whether the agreement to pay commission extended also to the Glasgow. Ib.

Terms of Hiring.]—By a written contract the plaintiff agreed to perform at the defendant's theatre, and the defendant agreed to engage her for three years and pay her a salary of 5*l.*, 6*l.* and 7*l.* per week in those years respectively:—Held, that parol evidence was admissible to shew that, according to the uniform usage of the theatrical profession, the plaintiff was to be paid only during the theatrical season, i.e. during the time when the theatre was open for performance in each of those years. Grant v. Maddox, 15 M. & W. 737; 16 L. J., Ex. 227.

Where, by a written contract, a workman engages to work at a particular trade for a year, parol evidence may be given, that, by the custom of the trade, the workman is entitled to certain holidays in the course of the year, for as the contract is in general terms, and does not specify the particular times of service, such evidence explains and does not contradict the written contract. Reg. v. Stoke-upon-Trent, D. & M. 357; 5 Q. B. 303; 13 L. J., M. C. 41; 8 Jur. 34.

An agreement was entered into between A. and B. in the following terms:—"A. engages to serve B. as agent or representative, at the salary of 150*l.* per annum; also provided, at the end of the year, B. finds A. has done sufficient business to justify him in recompensing, by making up his salary to 180*l.* to do so, being a donation of 30*l.* to his present stipulated amount of 150*l.*" It being proved at the trial that, by a general custom of the trade, a yearly hiring is determinable by a month's notice at any time:—Held, that there was nothing in the proviso to exclude the application of the custom to the particular case. Parker v. Ibbetson, 4 C. B. (N.S.) 346; 27 L. J., C. P. 236; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 536; 6 W. R 519.

In an action upon the agreement charging a wrongful dismissal within the year, the judge left it to the jury to say whether the proviso was meant by the parties to exclude the custom:—Held, a misdirection, there being no ambiguity in the contract, and its construction being for the court. Ib.

Usage of Stock Exchange—Unreasonableness.]—An alleged usage of the Stock Exchange, relied upon as authorising stockbrokers who are entitled to sell stock or shares of a customer for the realisation and payment of money due to them by such customer, to take over to themselves, at the price of the day, stock or shares of the customer, for which there is an inadequate demand, or where a forced sale would lower the selling price:—Held, unreasonable, and incapable of being supported against a customer who was not proved to be acquainted with the existence of such alleged usage. Hamilton v. Young, 7 L. R., Ir. 289.

The defendant, a stockbroker, who had undertaken to sell shares of a joint stock bank for the plaintiff, a shareholder, sold them to a jobber on the Stock Exchange and sent an advice-note of such sale to the plaintiff, but in accordance with the custom of the Stock Exchange, the bought and sold notes between the defendant and the jobber omitted to state the name of the registered proprietor of the shares, as required by 30 and 31 Vict. c. 29, s. 1, by reason of which the contract for sale was void, and the bank having stopped, and an order for its winding-up having been made before the day on which the jobber was entitled to name the person willing to be the purchaser, the contract for sale was repudiated, and the plaintiff remained the holder of the shares:—Held, that the defendant had committed a breach of duty in not making a valid contract for sale, notwithstanding the custom of the Stock Exchange to disregard the said statute, as such custom was both unreasonable and illegal, and that for such breach of duty the plaintiff was entitled to recover from the defendant by way of damages the price at which the shares had been sold. Neilson v. James, 51 L. J., Q. B. 369; 9 Q. B. D. 546; 46 L. T. 791—C. A.

—— To explain Charter as to Primage.]—A charter of Jac. 2 granted to the corporation of the master pilots and seamen of Newcastle-on-Tyne primage described in the charter as an ancient duty upon goods brought by ship into the Tyne, or any of the creeks of Newcastle, of which Sunderland was to be rated and accounted, in manner and form following; that is to say, aliens and strangers born and all other persons arriving with ships in Newcastle within any of the creeks, and not belonging to the same, to pay before they departed with their ships, and every free merchant and inhabitant of Newcastle arriving in the Tyne with a ship within ten days after landing the goods. The charter also granted to the corporation all other perquisites, ancient duties and profits which they had heretofore lawfully had and enjoyed; and also provided that the sums granted by the charter should be in lieu of all other duties theretofore received:—Held, first, that the charter was not inconsistent with the claim of primage in respect of goods imported into Sunderland by merchants resident there; secondly, that evidence of usage was admissible in support of the claim. Bradley v. Newcastle (Pilots, &c.), 2 El. & Bl. 427; 23 L. J., Q. B. 35.

c. As to Parties to Contracts.

Bill Brokers—Liability.]—It being proved to be the common and almost invariable practice of bill brokers in the city of London, not to indorse each bill of exchange which they have discounted for a customer when they re-discount it with their bankers, but to give to the bankers a general garantee for all bills which they re-discount with them :—Held, that when an accommodation bill is drawn and accepted for the purpose of raising money for the drawer and the acceptor, the drawer in discounting the bill with bill brokers in the city of London has an implied authority from the acceptor to deal with them in the ordinary course of their business, and, consequently, that the bill brokers have an implied authority from the acceptor to make themselves liable on the bill under their guarantee to their bankers, and are, in the event of the bankruptcy of the acceptor, entitled to prove against his estate for what they have paid to the bankers in respect of the bill under their guarantee. Bishop, Ex parte, Fox, In re, 50 L. J., Ch. 18 ; 15 Ch. D. 400 ; 43 L. T. 165 ; 29 W. R. 144—C. A.

Held, also, that the bill brokers are entitled to prove against the estate of the acceptor for interest upon the amount which they have paid under their guarantee. Ib.

Petre v. Duncombe (2 L. M. & P. 107) and Hitchman v. Stewart (3 Drew. 271) approved and followed. Ib.

Principal or Agent—Fruit Market.]—M. and W., brokers, being employed by P., to purchase raisins, sent the following, addressed to F. and D. :—"We have this day sold for your account to our principal to arrive per steamer from Trieste 50 to 70 tons of good sound Chesne raisins, usual market terms. Customary allowances. M. and W., brokers." A portion of the raisins was accepted and paid for by M. and W. on behalf of P., whose name was declared before delivery. P. having subsequently made default in accepting the residue :—Held, in an action by F. and D. against M. and W. for not accepting the residue, that evidence of a custom in the fruit market, that if the principal's name is not declared on the contract, the broker is personally liable on default of the principal, was admissible. Fleet v. Murton, 41 L. J., Q. B. 49 ; L. R. 7 Q. B. 126 ; 26 L. T. 181 ; 20 W. R. 97.

Held, also (dubitante Cockburn, C.J.), that evidence of an analogous usage in the colonial trade was properly admitted to prove the usage in the fruit trade. Ib.

—— Hide Market.]—A written contract made by brokers on behalf of undisclosed principals for the sale of hides provided that "if any difference or dispute shall arise under this contract, it is hereby mutually agreed between the sellers and buyers that the same shall be settled by the selling brokers, whose decision in writing should be final and binding on both sellers and buyers." In an action against the brokers in respect of inferior hides delivered under the contract, the buyers made a claim for the breach against the brokers as principals by custom of the trade :—Held, that evidence of a custom of the trade that a broker who does not disclose his principal is personally responsible for the performance of the contract and liable for the breach was rightly rejected, as such custom was inconsistent with the arbitration clause, which would, if the custom were incorporated, make the brokers judges in their own cause. Barrow v. Dyster, 13 Q. B. D. 635 ; 51 L. T. 573 ; 33 W. R. 199.

—— Hop Market.]—The defendants, who were hop-brokers, gave to the plaintiffs the following sold-note : "Sold by Ongley & Thornton (the defendants) to Messrs. Pike, Sons, & Co., for and on account of owner, 100 bales . . . hops . . . (Signed) for Ongley & Thornton, S. T." In an action for non-delivery of hops according to sample, the plaintiffs sought to make the defendants personally liable on the above contract, and tendered evidence to shew that by the custom of the hop trade, brokers who do not disclose the names of their principals at the time of making the contract are personally liable upon it as principals, although they contracted as brokers for a principal. No request was made by the plaintiffs to the defendants to name their principal :—Held, that the custom gave a remedy against the brokers as well as against the principals, that it was not in contradiction of the written contract, and that evidence of the custom was properly admitted at the trial. Hutchinson v. Tatham (L. R. 8 C. P. 482) considered. Pike v. Ongley, 56 L. J., Q. B. 373 ; 18 Q. B. D. 708 ; 35 W. R. 534—C. A.

—— Charter-party.]—An agent contracting and signing, as such, for an undisclosed principal, may be rendered personally liable on the contract, if a custom among merchants in the course of ordinary trade constantly entering into similar contracts, can be shewn to exist, that an agent so signing shall be personally liable in the event of his not disclosing his principal's name within a reasonable time, and evidence is admissible to prove the existence of such a custom, and, by inference, the implied presence of such a term in the written contract—a liability so incurred not being considered as inconsistent with the general terms of such a contract. Hutchinson v. Tatham, 42 L. J., C. P. 260 ; L. R. 8 C. P. 482 ; 29 L. T. 103 ; 22 W. R. 18.

In an action upon a charter-party expressed to be made between the shipowners, and T. & Co., "as agents to merchant," and signed "T. & Co., as agents for merchant" :—Held, that although T. & Co. were primâ facie not personally liable upon this contract, yet that parol evidence was admissible to prove a custom of trade rendering agents who enter into such an agreement for an unnamed principal themselves personally liable if the name of their principal was not disclosed within a reasonable time, and that the jury was justified in finding a delay of two months before the name of the principal was given, unreasonable. Ib. See also Jones v. Jackson, 22 L. T. 828.

—— London Dry Goods Market.]—According to the usage of the London dry goods market, a broker who buys for an undisclosed principal is personally liable to the seller for the price of the goods. Imperial Bank v. London and St. Katharine's Dock Co., 46 L. J., Ch. 335 ; 5 Ch. D. 195 ; 36 L. T. 233.

—— Liverpool Wool Market.]—A usage in the wool trade in Liverpool, that, when a broker is employed to buy wool, he may either contract in the name of his principal, or, at the request of the seller, may (without communicating the fact to his principal) make himself personally responsible for the price :—Held, a good and reasonable usage. Cropper v. Cook, L. R. 3 C. P. 194 ; 17 L. T. 603 ; 16 W. R. 596.

—— Oil Market.]—D. M. & Co., brokers in London, being employed by S. to purchase oil, dealt with T. & M., brokers, who were employed by the plaintiff to sell oil, without either broker disclosing the names of their principals. D. M. & Co. delivered to T. & M. a note as follows:—"Sold this day for Messrs. T. & M. to our principal, ten tons of oil," specifying the terms and price, which was above 10*l*. This note was signed D. M. & Co., brokers. Quarter per cent. brokerage to D. M. & Co. D. M. & Co. did not disclose the name of their principal, S., till after the lapse of an unreasonable time, when S. had become insolvent. The plaintiff sued D. M. & Co. for not accepting the oil, laying the sale as by himself to D. M. & Co. D. M. & Co. denied the contract; on the trial, the plaintiff proved a custom in the trade that, when a broker purchased without disclosing the name of his principal, he was liable to be looked to as principal:—Held, that evidence of the custom was admissible, as not contradicting the written instrument, but explaining its terms, or adding a tacitly implied incident; and that the note thus explained was a sufficient memorandum of the contract sued upon, to satisfy the Statute of Frauds, and that the action lay. Humfrey v. Dale, El. Bl. & El. 1004; 27 L. J., Q. B. 390; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 191; 6 W. R. 854—Ex. Ch.

d. Mode, Amount and Time of Payment.

Imperfect Contract.]—The defendant ordered goods by letter, which did not mention any time for payment; the plaintiff sent the goods and an invoice:—Held, that parol evidence was admissible to shew that the goods were supplied on credit, the letter not being a valid contract within the Statute of Frauds. Lockett v. Nicklin, 2 Ex. 93; 19 L. J., Ex. 403.

"During next Two Months."]—A contract was entered into between the plaintiffs and the defendants, on the 17th June, 1872, whereby the latter agreed to supply the former with a certain quantity of puddled iron, "for immediate delivery, or say during the next two months." The defendants did not deliver any iron in June or July, but on the 15th August they sent a small portion of iron to the plaintiffs, and on the 21st of the latter month the plaintiffs, acting on the notion that under the contract the time for the delivery had expired on the 17th of that month, wrote to the defendants that as the time for delivery had expired, they would receive no more iron, and they afterwards commenced the present action for breach of contract in not delivering the iron on or before the 17th August. At the trial the judge received evidence that in the iron trade a usage or custom prevails whereby the entire months of July and August would be included in the terms "during the next two months":—Held, that the evidence was properly admissible. Bissell v. Beard, 28 L. T. 740.

Delivery upon Payment.]—In a contract for the sale of thirty bales of goats' wool, containing the following stipulation:—"Customary allowance for tare and draft, and to be paid for by cash in one month less 5 per cent. discount"; evidence is inadmissible, to shew that by the usage of the trade vendors are not bound under similar contracts to deliver wool without payment, for such evidence seeks to annex to the contract an incident inconsistent with its terms. Spartali v. Benecke, 10 C. B. 212; 19 L. J., C. P. 293. Overruled in part, Field v. Lelean, infra.

Measurement.]—The plaintiffs contracted (in writing) to build for the defendant the front and back walls of a house "for the sum of 3*s*. per superficial yard of work nine inches thick, and finding all materials, deducting all lights." The lower part of the walls, to the height of eleven feet, was of stone two feet thick, the remainder of brick, fourteen inches thick:—Held, that evidence of the usage of builders at the place to reduce brickwork for the purpose of measurement to nine inches, but not to reduce stonework unless exceeding two feet in thickness, was admissible, and that the proper construction of the contract was that it provided only for the price of the brickwork, leaving the stonework to be paid for on a quantum meruit. Symonds v. Lloyd, 6 C. B. (N.S.) 691.

Weekly Accounts.]—In a contract under seal, by which a plaintiff contracted to build for the defendant a house and premises, it was provided that "no alterations or additions should be admitted unless directed by the defendant's architect, by writing, under his hand, and a weekly account of the work done thereunder should be delivered to the architect every Monday next ensuing the performance of such work." In an action on the contract:—Held, that parol evidence was admissible to shew that by the usage of the building trade "weekly accounts" meant accounts of the day work only, and did not extend to extra work capable of being measured. Myers v. Sarl, 30 L. J., Q. B. 9; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 97; 9 W. R. 96.

Warehouse Rent.]—A written contract for the sale of goods was silent as to the time for which warehouse room rent was allowed by the seller to the purchaser:—Held, that it was competent for either party to shew by parol evidence what time is allowed in such transactions by general custom, but not to shew that the parties themselves agreed by word of mouth that a certain time should be allowed. Fawkes v. Lamb, 31 L. J., Q. B. 98; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 385; 10 W. R. 348.

Sale of Shares.]—A broker in mining shares sold to another broker certain of them, under this sold note:—"June 18, 1859.—Sold 250 shares in Wheal Charlotte, at 2*l*. 5*s*. per share; 562*l*. 10*s*.; for payment, half in two months and half in four months." The bought note agreed mutatis mutandis. In an action by the vendor against the vendee for not accepting the shares, evidence of the usage of mining sharebrokers, that on such contracts for sales the delivery of the shares is to take place at the time fixed for the payment of the price, and at no other time, is admissible. Field v. Lelean, 6 H. & N. 617; 30 L. J., Ex. 168; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 918; 4 L. T. 121; 9 W. R. 387—Ex. Ch.

Re-exchange.]—A custom as to allowing a fixed percentage by way of liquidated damages in lieu of exchange, re-exchange, and other charges, when bills are returned from the colonies dishonoured, however valid in law, does not apply in the absence of an agreement, express or implied, to allow re-exchange. Willans v. Ayers, 47 L. J., P. C. 1; 3 App. Cas. 133; 37 L. T. 732—P. C.

In an action against the drawer of a bill of exchange drawn and indorsed in England, and payable abroad, and dishonoured, evidence is not admissible to prove a usage among merchants here to entitle the holder, at his option, to demand from the drawer the amount of re-exchange, or the sum which he gave for the purchase of the bill—this being a usage which in terms contradicts the written instrument. Suse v. Pomp, 8 C. B. (N.S.) 538; 30 L. J., C. P. 75; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 166; 3 L. T. 17; 9 W. R. 15.

Interest.]—Neither by the English nor Hindoo law, unless there is a mercantile usage, can interest be imported into a contract which contains no stipulation to that effect. Juggomohun Ghose v. Kaisarcechund, 9 Moore, Ind. App. 256.

Sale of Timber—Duty.]—By the custom of trade, when timber is sold in bond at a sale by auction in London, the buyer contracts to buy at a price including the duty payable, and he may, by giving notice on the following day so to do, elect to take the timber in bond, and if he does so, he is then only bound to pay the price less the duty. On the 10th February, 1860, the defendant bought timber in bond at a sale by auction at a price including duty, the contract to be completed within fourteen days, and the Chancellor of the Exchequer on the evening of that day gave notice that a resolution would be moved to reduce the duty on timber, and he accordingly moved and carried out such resolution on the 8th March. An act of parliament passed to that effect on the 5th May, the reduction commencing from the 8th March. On the 11th February the defendant gave notice to the seller that he elected to take the timber in bond, and on the 24th February offered the price less the then duty, which the seller refused to take, and he also refused to give a delivery order for the timber. In an action by him to recover the price of the timber:—Held, that the custom was admissible, and that the defendant was entitled to judgment. Clarke v. Smallfield, 4 L. T. 405.

Sales by Sample.]—In an action for the price of tobacco sold, evidence is admissible to shew that, by the established usage of the tobacco trade, all sales are by sample, although not so expressed in the bought and sold notes. Syers v. Jonas, 2 Ex. 111.

e. Quality and Description of Goods.

Implied Contract that Goods are of Vendor's make, if he be a Manufacturer.]—On the sale of goods by a manufacturer of such goods, who is not otherwise a dealer in them, there is, in the absence of any usage in the particular trade or as regards the particular goods to supply goods of other makers, an implied contract that the goods shall be those of the manufacturer's own make. The plaintiffs, who were manufacturers but not dealers in iron, by a written contract, on the margin of which was their trade-mark (a crown with their initials), contracted to sell to the defendants, who thereby contracted to buy of the plaintiffs, 2,000 tons of ship-plates of the quality known as "crown," to pass Lloyd's survey to be delivered monthly at the defendants' shipyard. The contract contained a strike clause by which the supply of the iron contracted for might be suspended during the continuance of any strike of workmen; but it had no express stipulation that the plates should be of the plaintiffs' manufacture. Before the contract was completed the plaintiffs closed their works, and proposed to complete the contract by delivery of ship-plates of the quality mentioned in the contract made by another firm. The defendants having refused to accept these, the plaintiffs sued them for breach of contract. At the trial the defendants tendered evidence to shew that in the iron trade there is a custom that, under a contract between a manufacturer of iron plates and a customer for the supply of them, the seller must, in the absence of stipulation to the contrary, supply plates of his own make, and that the purchaser is entitled to reject other plates if tendered, though of the quality contracted for. The learned judge at the trial rejected this evidence, and gave judgment for the plaintiffs:—Held, that such evidence was improperly rejected. Johnson v. Raylton, 50 L. J., Q. B. 753; 7 Q. B. D. 438; 45 L. T. 374—C. A.

Meaning of "Best Oil."]—The plaintiff sold to the defendant "fifty tons best palm oil, expected to arrive, per the Chalco, at 40*l.* 10*s.* per ton; wet, dirty, and inferior oil, if any, at a fair allowance." The oil, on arrival, contained one-fifth only of best oil. In an action for not accepting the oil, oral evidence is admissible to shew that, according to mercantile usage, the contract was satisfied if the oil delivered contained a substantial portion of "best oil"; and such evidence is for the jury. Lucas v. Bristow, El. Bl. & El. 907; 27 L. J., Q. B. 364; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 68; 6 W. R. 685.

"Savannah Timber."]—The plaintiff sold to the defendant, "deliverable in London, ex Ion, from Savannah, 400 loads of pitch pine timber, the timber warranted of fair average quality, to be taken of fair average of the cargo." Evidence was given that pitch pine timber is an article which comes from several parts in Central America, and that pitch pine timber from Darien has more heart in it, being better butted, and with fewer holes than that from Savannah:—Held, that the evidence was admissible to explain the contract, and that upon this evidence the contract must be construed as for timber of a fair average of Savannah pitch pine timber. Jones v. Clark, 2 H. & N. 725; 27 L. J., Ex. 165.

Wheat.]—By a contract made at S., between A., who resided at S., and B., who resided in London, B. sold to A. a cargo of St. Gilles Marais wheat free on board at a French port. The grain was unknown at S., but is known elsewhere in the trade to contain a mixture of barley. The judge rejected evidence to prove this, unless it could also be proved that this fact was well known at S.:—Held, that the ruling was wrong. Ryder v. Woodley, 10 W. R. 294.

Gambier.]—Upon a contract for the sale of bales of gambier, expected to arrive by a particular ship, evidence is admissible to shew, that, by usage of the trade, a bale of gambier is understood to mean a package of a particular description. Gorrissen v. Perrin, 2 C. B. (N.S.) 681; 27 L. J., C. P. 29; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 867; 5 W. R. 709.

f. Invoices, Bills of Lading, Charter-parties and Insurance Policies.

Invoices.]—An invoice worded to sell goods at "2*l.* 10*s.* per cent. monthly," may be explained by parol evidence, shewing the meaning of the words by the custom of the trade. Schreiber v. Horsley, 11 Jur. (N.S.) 675.

So, to shew that a person whose name appears at the head of an invoice as vendor is not in fact a contracting party. Holding v. Elliot, 5 H. & N. 117; 29 L. J., Ex. 134; 1 L. T. 381; 8 W. R. 192.

Receipt for Goods.]—Evidence of the usage of trade is admissible to shew the meaning of ambiguous words in a packer's receipt for goods. Bowman v. Horsey, 2 M. & Rob. 85.

Bills of Lading—Custom of Liverpool—Discount.]—In an action for freight by a shipowner against the indorsee of a bill of lading, to whom goods had been delivered at Liverpool, and who had accepted them, the bill of lading making them deliverable, "he paying freight for them five-eighths of a penny sterling per pound, with 5*l.* per cent. primage and average accustomed": —Held, that evidence was admissible that by the custom of Liverpool the shipowner was entitled to a deduction of three months' discount from the freight; though such custom applied only to goods coming from ports in the southern states of America. Brown v. Byrne, 3 El. & Bl. 703; 2 C. L. R. 1599; 23 L. J., Q. B. 313; 18 Jur. 700; 2 W. R. 471.

There was a custom at Liverpool of allowing a discount of three months on freights payable on all bills of lading from ports in North America; when Texas was annexed to the United States of America, 1846, the custom was in practice extended to ports in that territory:—Held, that this was evidence from which a jury might infer that the custom extended to ports in California after that country was also annexed. Falkner v. Earle, 3 B. & S. 360; 32 L. J., Q. B. 124; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 847; 7 L. T. 672; 11 W. R. 307.

—— Custom of London—Discharge of Goods.]—Goods were shipped under a bill of lading at Calcutta to be delivered in like good order and condition from the ship's tackles at the port of London. On arrival in the port of London the consignees demanded overside delivery into lighters immediately from the ship's tackles. The shipowner landed them on the dock wharf, and was ready to deliver them thence into the consignee's lighters, but the consignee carted them away, thereby becoming liable to certain dock charges, which he paid. In an action by the consignee to recover the amount so paid, the jury found that there was a custom for steamships having a general cargo (the defendants' ship being such) coming into the port of London and using the docks, to discharge the goods on the quay, and thence into lighters:—Held, that the custom found was not inconsistent with the terms of the bill of lading, and that the shipowner was entitled to discharge the goods on to the quay, and was not liable for the charge sought to be recovered. Marzetti v. Smith, 49 L. T. 580; 5 Asp. M. C. 166—C. A. Affirming 1 Cab. & E. 6.

A bill of lading stipulated (inter alia) that "the merchandise shipped thereunder was to be received on the quay at London, and delivered therefrom by the person appointed by the steamship's agents, &c., the merchandise to be received and delivered according to the customs and usages of the respective ports." A custom was proved with regard to grain cargoes coming to London, that if the merchant does not demand delivery of the grain within twenty-four hours after the ship's arrival, the ship is entitled to discharge the goods on the quay. The merchant did not demand delivery of the cargo within the twenty-four hours, and it was landed on the quay:—Held, that the custom was not inconsistent with the terms of the bill of lading, and that therefore the merchant was bound to pay the expenses incurred in weighing out the cargo and the quay rates. Aste v. Stumore, 1 Cab. & E. 319—C. A.

Rate of Freight.]—By a bill of lading of wool from Odessa, freight was to be paid in London, on delivery, at the rate of 80*s.* per ton of 20 cwt. gross weight, tallow, and other goods, grain or seed, in proportion, as per London Baltic printed rates:—Held, that extrinsic evidence was admissible to shew that, by the usage of the trade, the meaning of the bill of lading was, that 80*s.* per ton of 20 cwt. of tallow was to be taken as the standard by which the rate of freight on all other goods was to be measured. Russian Steam Navigation Trading Co. v. Silva, 13 C. B. (N.S.) 610.

Charter-parties—Measurement of Cargo, how ascertained.]—By a charter-party it was agreed that "a ship should load a cargo, and proceed to a port in Great Britain, and deliver the same on being paid freight at and after the rate of 35*s.* per 180 English cubic feet taken on board, as per Gothenburg custom":—Held, that the freight was to be ascertained by measuring the cargo, according to the method used at Gothenburg, and not according to the method used at the port of discharge. The Skandinav, 51 L. J., P. 93—C. A.

In an action upon a charter-party for freight upon goods shipped at Bombay for London, stating that cotton was to be "calculated at fifty cubic feet per ton":—Held, that evidence was admissible, first, on the part of the defendant to shew a usage in the trade, that the measurement was to be calculated when the cotton was taken from a screw at Bombay, though it appeared that it afterwards expanded considerably before it was shipped, and again when it was unloaded at the port of delivery; secondly, on the part of the plaintiff, to shew that the captain of the vessel refused to receive the cotton according to such measurement, and that he measured it when on board, and delivered an account of such admeasurement to the shippers. Bottomley v. Forbes, 6 Scott, 816; 5 Bing. (N.C.) 121; 1 Arn. 481; 8 L. J., C. P. 85; 2 Jur. 1016.

—— Freight.]—A., a shipbroker, engaged with a shipowner, to have a full cargo for the ship, the rates of freight for which would average 40*s.* per ton, and at least nine cabin passengers, passage-money to average 75*l.* The contract was fulfilled as to the cabin passengers, but the average rate of freight for goods put on board by A. amounted to 32*s.* only per ton; he shipped on board, however, several steerage passengers for the voyage, the passage-money paid by whom, after deducting the expense of their diet, &c., when added to the freight of the cargo properly so called, made the average earnings of the whole ship, per ton, amount to more than 40*s.*:—Held, that, as this was an unusual contract, evidence was not admissible to shew that the terms "cargo" and "freight," used with reference to the voyage on which the ship was engaged, would, by the general usage and course of the trade, be considered to comprise steerage passengers and the net profit arising from their passage-money. Lewis v. Marshall, 7 Man. & G. 729; 8 Scott (N.R.) 477; 13 L. J., C. P. 193; 8 Jur. 848.

—— Packing.]—A ship was chartered to bring home a cargo of wool, tallow, bark, or other legal merchandise: bark not to exceed fifty tons, tallow and hides not to exceed eighty tons, "and to deliver the same, on being paid freight as follows:—for wool, one penny half-penny per pound pressed, and one penny halfpenny and one-eighth of a penny per pound unpressed"; for the other three articles separate rates were fixed, and the captain was to sign bills of lading at any rate of freight, without prejudice to the charter-party. The ship returned with a full cargo, consisting of a small portion only of wool, and the residue, tallow, bark, hides and other legal merchandise:—Held, that there was no ambiguity upon the face of the charter-party to admit parol evidence for the purpose of shewing who was to pay for pressing any wool that might be shipped. Cockburn v. Alexander, 6 C. B. 791; 18 L. J., C. P. 74; 13 Jur. 13.

By a charter-party the charterer agreed to load on board a vessel at Trinidad a full and complete cargo of sugar, molasses, and other produce. It was the custom at Trinidad to load sugar in hogsheads and molasses in puncheons, in which mode they were carried more conveniently and with less loss to the merchant, and that a full and complete cargo of sugar and molasses meant a cargo so packed:—Held, that the custom was admissible in evidence; for it was applicable to such a charter-party, and did not control but only explained the contract, which ought to be construed with reference to the usage at the port of lading, and that the custom was reasonable and good in law. Cuthbert v. Cumming, 11 Ex. 405; 24 L. J., Ex. 310; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 686; 3 W. R. 553—Ex. Ch.

—— State of Corn Trade.]—By a charter-party it was agreed that the good ship the "Elizabeth," A 1, then bound to Havre, should with all convenient speed sail and proceed to the north of England for coals, and thence proceed to Limerick, where the charterer engaged to put on board a full cargo of grain or other lawful merchandise for London. The charter-party contained the usual exception of the act of God, the Queen's enemies, fire, and all and every other dangers and accidents of the seas, rivers and navigation. In consequence of sea perils the vessel was so long delayed on her voyage to the north of England, that she did not arrive at Limerick until the grain export trade from that place was over, and she had in the meantime run out of her letter. In an action against the charterer for not loading a cargo:—Held, that there was no warranty that the ship should continue A 1; that evidence as to the state of the corn trade at Limerick was irrelevant and inadmissible; and that the exception as to the dangers of the seas, &c., was inapplicable. Hurst v. Usborn, 18 C. B. 144; 25 L. J., C. P. 209; 4 W. R. 458.

—— Duty of Agent—Commission.]—A declaration stated that by charter-party it was agreed between the owner of a ship called the "Maggie," being in the London Docks, and the plaintiffs, that the ship should load a cargo, and therewith proceed to Hong Kong and deliver the same on being paid freight, "the ship to be consigned to the charterers' agents in China free of commission on this charter." Averments, that according to the custom of merchants in London, whenever a ship chartered in London for China is agreed to be consigned to the charterers' agents, whether consigned free of commission on that charter or not, it is the right and duty of such agents, as the consignees of the ship, to procure a charter or cargo for the ship for any voyage from such port, and they are entitled to be paid the usual broker's commission on the amount of freight payable under such contract, unless excluded by special contract; but in case the owners of the ship procure a charter or a cargo for the ship for a voyage from such port without any default of the consignees, the consignees are entitled to the broker's commission on any freight payable under such charter-party, unless such right is excluded by special contract. Breach, that although the ship was loaded and arrived in China, and the plaintiffs' agents, as consignees performed their duty free of commission on the outward voyage and cargo, and were ready to procure a charter or a cargo from Hong Kong, and although the plaintiffs performed all conditions precedent, the defendant would not permit the plaintiffs' agents to procure a charter or cargo for any voyage from Hong Kong, and the defendant, without any default of the plaintiffs' agents, procured a cargo to the United Kingdom, the usual broker's commission on which amounted to a large sum, yet the defendant had not paid or allowed the same to the plaintiffs or their agents, whereby the plaintiffs were obliged to pay their agents a compensation in respect thereof:—Held, that the declaration was bad, since the custom did not explain or annex an incident to the contract, but added a new term to it. Phillipps v. Briard, 1 H. & N. 21; 25 L. J., Ex. 233; 4 W. R. 486.

—— Unloading—Custom of Port.]—Where a vessel is chartered to proceed with cargo to a "safe port . . . as ordered, or as near thereunto as she can safely get, and always lay and discharge afloat," the master is not bound to discharge at a port where she cannot, by reason of her draught of water, "always lie and discharge afloat" without being lightened, even if she can be lightened with reasonable dispatch and safety in the immediate vicinity of the port or in the port itself. A vessel was chartered to proceed with a cargo of grain from Baltimore to Falmouth for orders, "thence to a safe port in the United Kingdom as ordered, or as near thereunto as she could safely get, and always lay and discharge afloat." The vessel was ordered to Lowestoft. Her draft of water, when loaded, was such that she could not lie afloat in Lowestoft harbour without discharging a portion of her cargo, but the discharge of cargo might have been carried on with reasonable safety in Lowestoft roads. The consignee offered at his own expense to lighten the vessel in the roads, but the master refused to proceed to Lowestoft to discharge, and went to Harwich as the nearest safe port, and there discharged the cargo:—Held, that the consignee could not recover damages against the shipowner for the refusal of the master to discharge at Lowestoft. The Alhambra, 50 L. J., P. 36; 6 P. D. 68; 43 L. T. 636; 29 W. R. 655; 4 Asp. M. C. 410—C. A.

Held, also, that evidence that it was the custom of the port of Lowestoft for vessels to be lightened in the roads before proceeding into the harbour was not admissible. Ib.

By a charter-party the vessel was to deliver at H., "or so near thereto as she could safely get"; to discharge as customary; the cargo to be brought to and taken from alongside the ship at merchant's risk and expense. The draft of water of the vessel with the cargo on board was too great to allow her to reach H. The nearest point to which she could safely get was S., where the merchant refused to accept delivery of any part of the cargo. In order to lighten the vessel, part of her cargo was discharged into lighters at S. and sent in them to H. Her owner having sued the charterer to recover the lighterage expenses:—Held, that a defence alleging that by the custom of the port of H. the defendant was not bound to take delivery elsewhere than at H. was bad on demurrer, inasmuch as it sought to set up a custom inconsistent with the written contract, and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the lighterage expenses. Hayton v. Irwin, 5 C. P. D. 130; 41 L. T. 666; 28 W. R. 665—C. A.

A charter-party contained two clauses, "cargo to be taken from alongside at merchant's expense," and "to be discharged according to custom of the port":—Held, that these clauses were not contradictory, and therefore evidence of custom was inadmissible to charge the shipowner with the cost of unloading. The Nifa, 62 L. J., P. 12; [1892] P. 411; 1 R. 540; 69 L. T. 56; 7 Asp. M. C. 324.

—— Turn of loading and delivering.]—The duty of providing, and making proper use of, sufficient means for the discharge of a cargo, when a ship, which has been chartered, arrives at its destination, and is ready to discharge, lies upon the charterer. But that general duty may be qualified by words in the charter-party, and by the circumstances of the case. If, by the terms of the charter-party, the charterer has agreed to discharge the ship within a fixed period of time, that is an absolute and unconditional engagement, for the non-performance of which he is answerable, whatever may be the nature of the impediments which prevent him from performing it. If there is no fixed time, the law implies an agreement, on his part, to discharge the cargo within a reasonable time. Postlethwaite v. Freeland, 49 L. J., Ex. 630; 5 App. Cas. 599; 42 L. T. 845; 28 W. R. 833—H. L. (E.)

Per Lord Hatherley: When the covenant merely engages that the merchant shall with all dispatch, according to the custom of the port, unload the vessel, he will fulfil his contract if he employs all the usual methods of dispatch at the port Ib.

A charter party was entered into by which a vessel was to take on board a cargo of steel rails and fastenings, and proceed therewith to the port of East London, in South Africa. In the charter-party was this stipulation: "The cargo is to be discharged with all dispatch according to the custom of the port." The discharge of such a cargo could only be effected there by a warp and lighters. These were under the absolute control of a company, to which the governmental authorities had transferred all their powers. The company allowed vessels the use of the warp and lighters in turn, making no exception in favour of any vessel except mail steamers, which on arriving were provided for to the exclusion of other vessels, whether of the government or of private individuals. The ship on arriving at the port, found a great number of vessels there, the number of lighters was insufficient, and the ship could not obtain its "turn" until more than thirty-one working-days had elapsed after its arrival. There was no delay attributable to the master or crew except what was thus occasioned by the custom of the port:—Held, that in this case the shipowner was not entitled to maintain an action against the charterer for demurrage. Ib.

A ship being chartered to take coals to Algiers, it was stipulated in the charter-party that the ship should be unloaded, weather permitting, at a certain rate per diem, to reckon from the time of the vessel being ready to unload, and in turn to deliver. In an action by the owner against the charterers for an alleged detention, they proved that the coals were for the use of the French marine, who made special regulations with all their contractors with respect to the turn to deliver; that, according to these regulations, the delivery was in turn, and that these regulations formed part of the general regulations of the port:—Held, that the charterers had a right to prove that the contract was entered into with reference to a known recognised use of the words "in turn to deliver" among persons conversant in the trade. Robertson v. Jackson, 2 C. B. 412; 15 L. J., C. P. 28; 10 Jur. 98.

By a charter-party it was agreed that the plaintiff's vessel should proceed to the river Tyne, and on arrival there be ready forthwith "in regular turns of loading," to take on board by spout or keel, as directed, a full cargo of four keels of coal, and the remainder coke. In an action for detention in not loading the vessel with coke in a reasonable time, the judge at the trial construed the words "in regular turns of loading" to mean that the coal was to be loaded first and the coke afterwards, and he rejected evidence of usage at the port of the Tyne to enter a vessel on the fitter's list for her turn for coke, and to load coke accordingly:—Held, that such evidence was admsssible, and ought to have been received to explain the words "in regular turns of loading," as these words presented an ambiguity, and were not confined to the meaning given to them by the judge. Schultz v. Leidemann, 14 C. B. 38; 2 C. L. R. 87; 23 L. J., C. P. 17; 18 Jur. 42; 2 W. R. 35.

The defendant chartered a ship from Sunderland to Carthagena, engaging that she should "with all possible dispatch load in the South Dock, in the customary manner, from the defendant's agents, a full and complete cargo of coke, to be loaded in regular turn." In an action for not loading the ship in regular turn, pursuant to the charter-party:—Held, that evidence was not admissible to shew that, according to the custom of the port of Sunderland, under such a contract, the shipowner was bound to wait his turn according to a list kept by a coke manufacturer not named in the contract, but mentioned at the time the contract was entered into, provided reasonable dispatch was used. Hudson v. Clementson, 18 C. B. 213; 25 L. J., C. P. 234.

Insurances—Practice of Average Adjusters.] Where a ship is compelled to put into port to repair damage occasioned by a general average sacrifice, the expenses of warehousing and reshipping cargo, necessarily unloaded in order to repair, and the port and pilotage charges and other expenses on leaving the port, are the subject of a general average contribution. Attwood v. Sellar, 49 L. J., Q. B. 515; 5 Q. B. D. 286; 42 L. T. 644; 28 W. R. 604—C. A.

who prepare their statements according to the law as laid down by the courts is no evidence of such a custom or usage of trade as can be impliedly incorporated in a contract between a shipowner and owner of cargo. The defendants, who were the owners of cargo, in an action against them by the shipowner to recover a general average contribution in respect of expenses caused by the ship putting into a port of refuge, landing, storing, and reshipping the cargo, and leaving the port, alleged a custom of trade that in such a case the expenses incurred in and about warehousing the cargo were apportioned among the owners of the cargo alone, and the expenses of reshipping the cargo, port dues, &c., were borne by the owners of the ship and freight. Several witnesses were called who gave evidence to the effect that for sixty or seventy years the practice of average adjusters had been as stated by the defendants, but that, in consequence of the decision in Attwood v. Sellar (5 Q. B. D. 286), some average adjusters had altered their mode of adjustment in such a case:—Held, that this was not evidence of a custom of trade which could be left to the jury. Svenden v. Wallace, 46 L. T. 742; 30 W. R. 841; 4 Asp. M. C. 550.

A policy of assurance contained a stipulation that freight was warranted free from average under 5*l.* per cent. unless general. The interest assured was described as money advanced to the assured as owner of the ship, on account of the freight of the cargo loaded on board and subject to the risk of the voyage. Plea, that the policy was made in London, and that by custom there, insurers, on money advanced on account of freight, are not liable to make good a general average:—Held, that the custom set up in the plea was inconsistent with the terms of the written policy, which expressly stipulated that the assurer should be liable to make good such a loss, and was therefore inadmissible. Hall v. Janson, 4 El. & Bl. 500; 3 C. L. R. 737; 24 L. J., Q. B. 97; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 571; 3 W. R. 213.

—— Custom of Lloyd's that Amount should be Payable in London.]—The plaintiff, owner of a vessel belonging to the port of Belfast, instructed N., a Belfast insurance agent, to effect a policy of insurance on the vessel; the insurance agent, through his London agent R., effected the policy in London with the defendants, and the owner paid N. the premium in Belfast, and there received the policy from him. The defendants alleged that they carried on business at Lloyd's, in the city of London only; that they neither accepted risks, received premiums, paid losses, or had any agents out of London; that the policy was underwritten at Lloyd's in consequence of a proposal made by R. at Lloyd's; that the premium was paid and the policy delivered by and to R. in London; that they did not, nor did N. or any other person on their behalf, receive the premium or deliver the policy at Belfast, and that, in accordance with a well-known custom of Lloyd's, any money which might become due under the policy was payable at Lloyd's, and not elsewhere. The plaintiff alleged that he had no notice or knowledge of that custom before effecting the policy. The defendants refused to pay the amount of the policy to the plaintiff:—Held, that the plaintiff, who had no knowledge or notice of the alleged custom before effecting the policy, was not bound thereby, that the defendants were bound to pay the amount (if any) due on the policy to the plaintiff in Belfast, that the non-payment constituted a breach of their contract with the plaintiff, within the jurisdiction, and that he was entitled to an order for leave to serve a writ to recover the amount of the policy on the defendants out of the jurisdiction. Ward v. Harris, 8 L. R., Ir. 365—C. A.

—— As to Set-off.]—The usage of practice of Lloyd's Coffee-house, that persons insuring there are bound to admit payment of a loss to them, made by way of set-off, between their broker and underwriter, of the premiums due to the underwriter, against the loss, does not apply where they are not shewn to be personally cognisant of such usage. Sweeting v. Pearce, 7 C. B. (N.S.) 449; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 753. Affirmed on appeal, 9 C. B. (N.S.) 534; 30 L. J., C. P. 109; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 800; 5 L. T. 79; 9 W. R. 343—Ex. Ch.

—— As to Deck Cargoes.]—A custom that underwriters are not liable, under the ordinary form of policy, for general average in respect of the jettisons of goods stowed on deck, is a valid custom, and does not contradict the terms of the policy. Miller v. Tetherington, 6 H. & N. 278; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 214; 3 L. T. 893; 9 W. R. 437. Affirmed on appeal, 7 H. & N. 954; 31 L. J., Ex. 363; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 1039; 9 L. T. 231; 10 W. R. 356—Ex. Ch.

10. As to Terms of Deed.

Parcels.]—In 1861, Plowman, a common predecessor in title of both the plaintiff and defendant, being possessed of twenty-seven rods of land, conveyed to the defendant's predecessor in title, "all that piece of garden ground, containing by estimation twenty rods, bounded on the south by other land or garden ground belonging to Plowman." In 1866, Plowman conveyed the residue of the property to the plaintiff's predecessor in title, describing it as "fifteen rods more or less"; the result being that if the measurement of the deed of 1861 was accurate, the defendant took under it twelve rods instead of twenty, if the measurement of the deed of 1866 was accurate the plaintiff took seven rods instead of fifteen. The plaintiff brought ejectment for the eight rods in dispute:—Held, that the parol evidence of Plowman was admissible to shew that he had conveyed twelve and not twenty rods by the deed of 1861. Jervey v. Styring, 29 L. T. 847.

Where parcels are described in old documents by words of a general nature or of doubtful import, evidence is admissible to shew the meaning of the words used. Waterpark (Lord) v. Fennell, 7 H. L. Cas. 650; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1135; 7 W. R. 634.

A demise of premises in Westminster, late in the occupation of A., particularly describing them, part of which was a yard, does not pass a cellar situate under that yard which was then in the occupation of B., another tenant of the lessor; and the lessor, in an ejectment brought to recover the cellar, is not estopped by his deed from going into evidence to shew that the cellar was not intended to be demised. Doe d. Freeland v. Burt, 1 Term Rep. 701; 1 R. R. 367.

Where a deed purports to convey a messuage with the appurtenances, purchased at an auction, neither the conditions of sale at the auction, signed by the purchaser, nor his own declarations as to the extent of his purchase, are admissible, to shew that a garden, which had been usually enjoyed with the messuage, is expressly excepted from the sale. Doe d. Norton v. Webster, 4 P. & D. 270; 12 A. & E. 442; 9 L. J., Q. B. 373; 4 Jur. 1010.

Parol inadmissible to prove that particular estate was left out of lease, under agreement between parties. Lawson v. Laude, Dick. 346.

Parol evidence admissible upon a latent, but not upon a patent, ambiguity; to rebut equities grounded upon presumption, and perhaps to support presumption, to oust an implication, and to explain what is parcel of the premises granted or conveyed. Druce v. Denison, 6 Ves. 397.

In the case of the loss of the map or plan referred to in an agreement, extrinsic evidence to prove the parcels mentioned in the agreement admitted. Andrew v. Andrew, 1 Jur. (N.S.) 885.

To Shew Intention.]—In order to shew that land had been bought for certain purposes, it was proposed to adduce in evidence the minutes of the proceeding of the vendees:—Held, that the conveyance having been executed, the minutes were inadmissible as evidence shewing the purposes for which the land was bought. Prison Commissioners v. Middlesex (Clerk of the Peace), 51 L. J., Q. B. 433; 9 Q. B. D. 506; 46 L. T. 864; 30 W. R. 881—C. A.

On a question of construction of a deed, parol evidence is inadmissible to shew the intention of the parties thereto. Palmer v. Newell, 20 Beav. 32.

Although parol evidence cannot be used to add to or detract from the description in a deed, or to alter it in any respect, it is admissible to shew the condition of the property, and all other circumstances necessary to place the court, when it construes an instrument, in the position of the parties to it, so as to enable it to judge of the meaning of the instrument. Baird v. Fortune, 4 Macq. H. L. 127; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 926; 5 L. T. 2; 10 W. R. 2—H. L.

Parol evidence is admissible to enable the court rightly to understand in what sense words are used in a deed, just as evidence is afforded by a dictionary which enables one to translate a foreign language, or by a book of science, which gives the meaning of words of art; but where the aid of parol evidence is invoked for the purpose of contradicting the express provisions of a deed, such evidence is inadmissible. Att.-Gen. v. Clapham, 4 De G. M. & G. 591; 3 Eq. R. 702; 24 L. J., Ch. 177; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 505; 3 W. R. 158.

Settlement, on marriage, of stock belonging to the wife in trust, after death of the wife, if the husband survived, for him for life; if no issue, the whole to revest in the wife with power of appointment; if none, to her next of kin: the wife eloped and lived in adultery. On the bill of the husband to have the dividends paid to him during their joint lives, evidence of such intent, or that they should be to the separate use of the wife, refused, but held to belong to the husband for the mutual support of both. Decreed, that the costs, and also the expenses of the husband in a groundless suit instituted against him by the wife in the Ecclesiastical Court, should be paid out of the accumulation, and, the only surviving trustee appearing not to be indifferent, that the future dividends should be paid into court. Ball v. Montgomery, 2 Ves. J. 191; 4 Bro. C. C. 339; 2 R. R. 197.

Evidence to prove the intention of the parties to a settlement, refused. Brydges v. Chandos (Duke), 2 Ves. J. 417.

If a creditor execute a deed of compromise with the principal debtor, he thereby discharges the surety; not so, if it be stipulated, in the deed of composition, that the remedies against the sureties shall be reserved. Parol evidence of the understanding of the parties to the deed, that the remedies against the sureties should be reserved, cannot be admitted. Glendinning, Ex parte, Buck. 517. See Carstairs, Ex parte, Ib., 560.

A husband in his lifetime gave a bond in trust to secure to his wife 400*l.* in case she survived him. Parol evidence, to shew it was intended in lieu of dower, and that the wife acknowledged it to be so, cannot be allowed. Tinney v. Tinney, 3 Atk. 8.

In the conveyance of an estate there was a covenant that the premises were free from incumbrances, except particular leases. Quære, whether these would affirm the leases, and whether parol evidence is admissible to shew it was so intended. Doe v. Roberts, 4 Doug. 306.

To Determine the Meaning of a Trade Term.]—In determining the meaning of a word that has both a primary and a secondary signification, the court will admit evidence as to, and will look at its primary meaning alone, and will not admit technical evidence unless satisfied that it is to be construed in its secondary sense. Holt v. Collyer, 50 L. J., Ch. 311; 16 Ch. D. 718; 44 L. T. 214; 29 W. R. 502.

Custom to control Covenant.]—A custom to control the words of a covenant in a deed must be one which both parties to the covenant can know, and must be certain and invariable. Abbot v. Bates, 43 L. J., C. P. 150; 30 L. T. 99; 22 W. R. 488. Affirmed, 33 L. T. 491; 24 W. R. 101.

Rent—Arbitration—Subsequent Agreement.]—A. let premises by deed, stipulating that the rent should be ascertained by two valuers, who were appointed, but who never ascertained the rent; but the defendant occupied the premises, and, after the death of A., a parol agreement was made between A.'s administrator and the defendant that the valuation should not be carried out, but that the defendant should pay a certain sum for his occupation, and that neither would call upon the other to execute the stipulations of the deed:—Held, that such parol agreement did not conflict with the terms of the deed, and that there was a good consideration for the defendant's promise. Nash v. Armstrong, 10 C. B. (N.S.) 259; 30 L. J., C. P. 286; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 1060; 9 W. R. 782.

Written Agreement to explain Deed.] — If parties have made an executory contract which is to be carried out by a deed afterwards executed, the real completed contract between the parties is to be found in the deed, and you have no right to look at the contract although it is recited in the deed, except for the purpose of construing the deed itself. You have no right to look at the contract, either for the purpose of enlarging or diminishing or modifying the contract which is to be found in the deed itself. Per James and Brett, L.JJ. Leggott v. Barrett, 15 Ch. D. 306; 43 L. T. 641; 28 W. R. 962—C. A.

Articles previous to settlement cannot, in general, be read to construe the settlement, unless the bill is brought to rectify the settlement, or the settlement refers to them. Pritchard v. Quinchant, Ambl. 147.

The effect of an instrument under seal cannot be altered by a memorandum not under seal. Wenham v. Fowle, 3 D. P. C. 43.

Parol Evidence to rebut Deed.]—In an action for trespass to a several fishery, evidence of fishing by the public as of right was admitted in derogation of the plaintiff's title. Smith v. Andrews [1891], 2 Ch. 678 ; 65 L. T. 175.

In ascertaining the meaning and effect of a charter, contemporaneous documents, proceedings in causes relating to it, and parol testimony may be resorted to, in order to explain and give to the charter a construction, but not to contradict it. Scarlet v. Lucton School, 4 Cl. & F. 1 ; 10 Bli. (N.S.) 592.

Affidavits held inadmissible to control the operation of a deed. Cowlishaw v. Hardy, 25 Beav. 169.

A rent-charge till a debt paid granted by a tenant for life having a power to raise, by sale or mortgage, a certain sum for payment of his debts ; a good execution of the power, though referable to his interest, as well as to his power. Parol evidence to show that the deed was not intended to be in execution of his power, inadmissible, as going to contradict it. Blake v. Marnell, 2 Ball & B. 35 ; 12 R. R. 68. Affirmed, 4 Dow. 248.

Where a deed is in writing, it cannot be altered by parol evidence. Ib. 47.

Where the terms of a demise are sufficiently explicit to pass the lands in question, no ambiguity as to its meaning will be raised by collateral facts. Doe d. Templeman v. Martin, 4 B. & Ad. 771 ; 1 N. & M. 512.

Parol Evidence to modify Terms of Mortgage Deed.]—Where the appellant had deposited with the respondent bank his title-deeds to certain property in order to secure a cash credit, and afterwards executed an absolute conveyance thereof to the bank in pursuance of an agreement recited therein to the effect that the price paid should be by deducting 400*l.* from the amount due :—Held, that, although collateral evidence was admissible to shew that notwithstanding the plain terms of the deed, the relationship of mortgagee and mortgagor still subsisted between the parties, yet in this case it was wholly insufficient to overcome the presumption that the deed of conveyance truly stated the transaction. Barton v. Bank of New South Wales, 15 App. Cas. 379—P. C.

Parol evidence not admitted of agreement between A. and B., that the remainder in tail of B. (who had joined in mortgaging the estate tail as surety for A.) should be resorted to in case of A.'s personal estate. Robinson v. Gee, 1 Ves. 251.

Where a married woman mortgages her separate estate, her husband being a party to the deed, and thereby covenants to pay the money, parol evidence is admissible to shew the true nature of the transaction. Gray v. Dowman, 27 L. J., Ch. 702 ; 6 W. R. 571.

Costs.]—No evidence dehors deeds can be received in deciding on their effect ; but on the question of costs, such evidence may be taken into consideration. Stewart v. Stuart, 1 L. J., (O.S.) Ch. 61.

11. Judicial Proceedings and Records.

In what Cases.]—In an action between A. and B. it became a question whether damages had been recovered in a previous action against A. by a third party in respect of certain acts. A., to prove the affirmative, produced the record in the previous action, which shewed counts on different causes of action, one count being only on the acts now in question. The damages were entered on all the counts, and damages entered generally on all. Evidence that the damages had in fact been given for the matters in the one count only, is receivable as explaining the former record and not contradicting it. Preston v. Peeke, El. Bl. & El. 336 ; 27 L. J., Q. B. 424 ; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 613 ; 6 W. R. 591.

Oral evidence as to what had taken place on the occasion of an issue being directed by the Court of Chancery is not admissible to explain it, the minutes of the decree or order directing the issue being alone the proper evidence. Green v. Alston, 1 F. & F. 12.

And see ante, B. Judicial Documents, cols. 648 et seq.

12. Erasures or Alterations.

Explanation, when Allowed.]—The defendant became tenant to the plaintiff of a farm from year to year, by parol, but afterwards signed an agreement containing stipulations as to the mode of tillage. In an action by the landlord for breaches of these stipulations, the agreement, on being produced, contained an erasure in the term of years mentioned in the habendum, which was altered from seven to fourteen :—Held, that in this action the agreement might be received in evidence without any explanation of the erasure, the term of years being immaterial to the parol contract between the parties to hold from year to year, subject only to the terms of the agreement as to the cultivation of the land. Falmouth (Earl) v. Roberts, 9 M. & W. 469 ; 1 D. P. C. 633 ; 11 L. J., Ex. 180.

Presumption.]—As a deed cannot be altered after execution without fraud or wrong, the presumption, if an alteration appears, is, that it was made before execution. Doe d. Tatham v. Cattamore, 16 Q. B. 745 ; 20 L. J., Q. B. 728 ; 15 Jur. 728.

But this presumption does not apply to a will, which may be altered by the testator without fraud or wrong. Ib.

The presumption is, that an alteration apparent on the face of a will was made after the will was executed. Doe d. Shallcross v. Palmer, 16 Q. B. 747 ; 20 L. J., Q. B. 367 ; 15 Jur. 836.

Therefore the party who seeks to derive an advantage from such an alteration must adduce some evidence from which the jury may infer that the alteration was made before the will was executed. Ib.

Evidence of previous declarations by the testator, that he intended to dispose of his property in the manner in which it is disposed of by the will in its altered form, is receivable. Ib.

In ejectment by heir-at-law against devisee, declarations by the testator, before the execution of the will, that he intended to make provision by his will for the defendant, coupled with the fact, that without the alteration in question the will, which disposed of the whole of his property, real and personal, made no provision for him, are admissible to rebut the presumption that the alteration was made after the will was executed. Ib. And see also ante, cols. 590—592.

E. SECONDARY EVIDENCE AS TO DOCUMENTS.

1. When Originals Necessary.

Notice to Pay.]—By a joint and several bond A. and B. became sureties for the payment of any balance not exceeding a given amount, due from C. The defeasance provided that it should be void if A. and B. or either of them should pay such balance within one calendar month next after notice in writing requiring payment should have been given to A. and B. or their representatives:—Held, in an action against the executors of A., upon a replication denying notice to them and B., that a duplicate of the notice served upon B. was not admissible, and that B. should have been subpœnaed to produce the original he received, or it should have been shewn to have been lost or destroyed. Robinson v. Brown, 3 C. B. 754; 16 L. J., C. P. 46.

Letters.]—Where a letter, which had been in the possession of the defendant, was filed in the Court of Chancery pursuant to an order of that court:—Held, that secondary evidence of its contents was not admissible, it being in the power of either party to make an application to that court to produce it. Williams v. Munnings, R. & M. 18.

A witness produced a copy of a letter which he said was made by him, and he swore that he should in the ordinary course of business have posted the original:—Held, that this was evidence of posting, and that, the original not being produced, the copy was good secondary evidence. Trotter v. MacLean, 49 L. J., Ch. 256; 13 Ch. D. 542; 42 L. T. 677; 28 W. R. 722.

The defendant, as surety for N., having received and promised to pay an account which he was informed had been agreed to by N., and refusing to produce it on the trial of an action brought against him by the plaintiff, the employer of N.:—Held, that without calling N., the plaintiff might prove by the witness who produced a duplicate, that that was the account N. had gone over, and that he had said it was correct. Ward v. Suffield, 5 Bing. (N.C.) 381; 7 Scott, 352; 2 Arn. 4; 8 L. J., C. P. 207.

The plaintiff in an injunction case relied on the defendants' knowledge of the fact, said to have been communicated to them in a letter, of which no copy was kept, but the receipt of which the defendants admitted. The defendants denied that it contained the statement alleged, but did not produce the letter or satisfactorily account for its non-production:—Held, under these circumstances, that the plaintiff's representation must be taken to be true. Lumley v. Wagner, 1 De G. M. & G. 604; 21 L. J., Ch. 898; 16 Jur. 871.

Agreed Account.]—A witness called to prove the terms of a verbal agreement stated that he was in company with the plaintiff and defendant when it was entered into, and referred to an entry which he made a few hours afterwards to refresh his memory. This entry was made by him from a paper written in pencil by the plaintiff during the interview between the parties, and read by him to the defendant, as embodying the terms of their agreement. The defendant assented to this; but he neither signed nor was asked to sign it, nor was it shewn to him:—Held, that it was not necessary to produce this paper as constituting the real agreement. Trawhitt v. Lambert, 3 P. & D. 676; 10 A. & E. 470; 3 Jur. 629. See Hope v. West, 7 Scott, 876.

Defendant Setting up Contract.]—Where a plaintiff closes his case without its appearing that there is any written contract relating to the subject-matter of the action, the defendant, if he means to set up that there is such a contract, must produce it, properly stamped, so as to be receivable in evidence; and it makes no difference that the plaintiff has had notice to produce the document. Magnay v. Knight, 2 Scott (N.R.) 64; 1 Man. & G. 944; 1 Drink. 13; 4 Jur. 1088.

Invoices.]—A merchant in Spain agreed to consign to an agent in London all the raisins which should be shipped by him for this country, to sell them for a certain commission on the invoice price. In an action to recover the amount of the commission on two shipments consigned by the merchant, in breach of his agreement, to third persons:—Held, that it was competent to the agent to shew the proximate value of the consignments upon which he claimed commission without producing the invoices. Plank v. Garila, 3 C. B. (N.S.) 807; 6 W. R. 210.

Memoranda of Sale.]—The defendants were sued for the price of growing trees, which they had bought, cut down, and removed from the spot where they stood: at the trial an admission by one of them that something was due, and a promise to pay, was proved. At the time the trees were sold, written memoranda of the transaction were made; one of which (being an item in a book of accounts, and neither stamped nor signed with the name of the parties) was not produced in evidence; in consequence of which the plaintiff was nonsuited, and the court on motion refused to set it aside. Teal v. Auty, 4 Moore, 542; 2 Br. & B. 99; 22 R. R. 656.

In an action for work and labour, the plaintiff having proved the value of the work done, and closed his case, one of the defendant's witnesses swore that there was a memorandum in writing containing an estimate at which the work was to be performed, and produced a copy in the plaintiff's handwriting unstamped, and not signed either by him or the defendant:—Held, that the plaintiff was not thereby precluded from recovering on the common counts, as it did not appear whether the original memorandum was in existence, and as the defendant had given him no notice to produce it; or that, at all events, the testimony should have come from one of the plaintiff's witnesses on cross-examination. Stevens v. Pinney, 2 Moore, 349; 8 Taunt. 327.

Foreign Bill.]—The plaintiff declared on a promise by the defendants to pay over to him the proceeds of a foreign bill, negotiated by them for his account:—Held, that he might give parol evidence of its contents; and that he was not bound to produce either the bill itself or a notarial copy of it. Hunt v. Alewyn, 1 M. & P. 433; 6 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 103.

As to Tenancy.]—Parol evidence of the fact of tenancy is admissible, although the tenant hold under a written agreement. Rex v. Holy Trinity (Inhabitants), 7 B. & C. 611; 1 M. & Ry. 444; 6 L. J. (O.S.) M. C. 24; 31 R. R. 267.

Quære, whether in an action for an injury done to the reversionary interest of the plaintiff, it can be proved orally, when it appears that the premises are in the possession of a tenant who holds them under a written agreement, which is not produced. Strother v. Barr, 5 Bing. 136; 2 M. & P. 207; 6 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 245; 30 R. R. 545.

The facts of occupation and payment of rent will be sufficient to raise a presumption, that the person who so occupied and paid was the tenant, and for the purpose of raising merely this presumption, those facts may be ascertained by parol, although the tenancy was under a written agreement, which is not produced. But if it is sought to carry this presumption any further, or to alter it by shewing either the terms of such tenancy, or that the person who so appeared to be tenant, was tenant with others, the written agreement must be produced. Rex v. Rawden, 8 B. & C. 708 ; 7 L. J. (O.S.) M. C. 35.

Where in trespass qu. cl. fr., plaintiff and defendant held of the same landlord, lands abutting on opposite sides of a lane, and defendant's lease was not produced :—Held, that the declaration of the landlord "that he had let the lane jointly to the plaintiff and the defendant, as much to one as to the other," was admissible. Noye v. Reid, 1 Man. & Ry. 63 ; 6 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 5.

—— Under 59 Geo. 3, c. 50.]—Upon a question of settlement since 59 Geo. 3, c. 50, the term as well as the fact of the tenancy becomes material ; and, therefore, where the tenancy is the subject of a written agreement between the parties, and the agreement is in existence, parol evidence of the tenancy is inadmissible. Rex v. Merthyr Tydvil, 1 B. & Ad. 29 ; 8 L. J. (O.S.) M. C. 114.

Banker's Clearing Book.]—The cashier of a banking-house, upon his examination as a witness, stated that he had ascertained from the clearing book, kept by him in his own handwriting, that a certain sum of money was paid in notes of a particular description. The statement was founded solely on the witness's knowledge of the book, and of his own handwriting, and not from any recollection of the fact deposed to, and the book was not produced :—Held, that under these circumstances the statement could not be received as evidence of the fact deposed to, though it might serve as a ground for further inquiry. Dupuy v. Truman, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 341.

Written Appraisement.]—If a broker speak of the value of goods from recollection, he need not put in a written appraisement on a stamp. Stafford v. Clark, 1 Car. & P. 24.

Extract from Colonial Register.]—As to the reception of an extract from the register of deaths kept at the consulate of Madeira, and verified by the signature of the consul and the seal of the consulate. Forbes, In re, 9 Hare (App.) xx. n ; 1 W. R. 32.

Acknowledgment of Title.]—Parol evidence of the acknowledgment of title rejected. Incorporated Society for Protestant Schools v. Richards, 1 Dr. & War. 258 ; 1 Con. & L. 58 ; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 177.

Service.]—The case of the plaintiff (a claimant under a bequest by a testator to servants on his domestic establishment at the time of his decease) was proved by a written document as well as by the examination of a witness, who was also examined in chief by the defendants, and in the course of such examination referred to the document. The plaintiff relied on the document before the Vice-Chancellor, but on appeal before the Lord Chancellor, rested his case upon the examination of the witness only :—Held, that it was competent for him to do so, and that the defendant's objection to the reception of this evidence as secondary could only be supported by his producing the written document. Ogle v. Morgan, 1 De G. M. & G. 359 ; 16 Jur. 277.

Refusal to Produce.]—Where a written document is in the possession of a witness who is not compellable to produce it, and refuses to do so, secondary evidence of the contents is admissible. Newton v. Chaplin, 10 C. B. 356 ; 19 L. J., C. P. 374.

Where therefore a person not party to a suit attends on a common subpœna, and is called as a witness, and refuses to permit the production of a document which his attorney has brought into court in obedience to a subpœna duces tecum, but which the latter also declines to produce ; the plaintiff, having done everything that could be done to make apparent the impossibility of using the primary means of proof, is entitled to resort to secondary evidence of the contents, and is not precluded from so doing by his omission to serve the client with the subpœna duces tecum. Ib.

In an action upon a lease, executed on behalf of the lessor under a power of attorney, there being notice to the defendant to produce the power, but no subpœna duces tecum to the party who executed the lease :—Held, that the power of attorney was the property of the party who executed the lease under its authority, and that secondary evidence of its contents was not admissible. Hibberd v. Knight, 2 Ex. 11 ; 17 L. J., Ex. 119 ; 12 Jur. 162.

Where an attorney's clerk is called upon to produce an instrument known to have been in his possession, and to which he was the attesting witness, and he refuses, alleging that the document is out of his possession and in that of his employer. Quære, can secondary evidence be given of the contents ? Houlditch v. Cauty, 4 Bing. (N.C.) 411 ; 6 Sc. 209 ; 7 L. J., C. P. 217.

On Interlocutory Application.]—On interlocutory applications which are necessarily heard upon affidavits the court does not dispense with the rule that on disputed points the best evidence in the power of the parties must be given ; and, therefore, it is not sufficient for a party to state, upon affidavit, the purport and effect of a document which he has the means of producing. Stamps v. Birmingham, Wolverhampton, & Stour Valley Ry., 7 Hare, 255. And see S. C., 2 Ph. 673 ; 17 L. J., Ch. 431.

Waiver.]—Under a commission to take evidence abroad in an action, copies of certain documents and answers of witnesses with regard to the contents of such documents were received by the commissioners in evidence on behalf of the plaintiff, without objection on the part of the defendant who joined in the commission. The copy documents were appended to the depositions and returned by the commissioners :—Held, that the secondary evidence of the documents having been taken under the commission, without objection on the part of the defendant, was receivable before an arbitrator to whom the action was referred, and that it was too late then to take objection on the ground that the original documents were not produced. Robinson v. Davies, 49 L. J., Q. B. 218 ; 5 Q. B. D. 26 ; 28 W. R. 255.

2. WHEN ORIGINALS LOST OR DESTROYED.

Insurance Policy.]—In an action on a policy of insurance it was necessary for the plaintiffs to prove that the policy had been executed, and to prove that they tendered a document which had been sent them as a copy of the policy by the defendant's brokers; the defendant objected that the judge ought, before admitting the copy, to decide whether an original had existed or not; the judge refused to decide this question, and admitted the document in evidence:—Held, that, as the objection was not that the evidence was defective in some collateral matter, but was an objection which, if allowed, might have decided the very case itself, the judge was right in the course he had taken. Stowe v. Querner, 39 L. J., Ex. 60; L. R. 5 Ex. 155; 22 L. T. 29; 18 W. R. 466.

A loss having been settled on a policy against fire six years ago, the plaintiff in an action for a libel charging him with fraud respecting such loss, not being able to produce the original policy, called the agent of the company, who stated that the policy was returned to him after the fire; and that, on the loss being settled, it became a useless paper; it was also proved, that it was not in the plaintiff's possession, although a diligent search had been made for it:—Held, that this evidence was sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to give secondary evidence of its contents. Brewster v. Sewell, 3 B. & Ald. 296; 22 R. R. 395.

Deeds.]—On loss of a deed, &c., the same rule of evidence here as at law. Loss of a deed can only be made out by circumstances. The destruction of a deed, &c., by affidavit. Askew v. Poulterers' Co., 2 Ves. 89.

Where the deed creating a rent was lost, so that it could not appear what sort of rent it was, a bill was sustained for payment of twelve years' arrears, upon proof that it had been constantly paid before that time. Collet v. Jaques, 1 Ch. Ca. 120.

Deed lost, person swearing he saw the deed, not sufficient; he must swear he saw it sealed and delivered. Cary, 31. See also Benson v. Olive, 1 Barnard. K. B. 348.

Evidence may be given at law of a lost deed; sed secus of a bond lost, for a profert in curia must be made. Snellgrove v. Bailey, 3 Atk. 214.

When secondary evidence of the contents of a deed is admissible. Parkhurst v. Lowten, 2 Swanst. 213; 19 R. R. 63.

Where deed is wilfully destroyed, everything is to be presumed against the party in odium spoliatoris, and, therefore, parol evidence of the person who prepared the draft, though at the distance of several years, is admissible to prove the general contents of it. Delany v. Temson, 3 Bro. P. C. 659.

The contents of a deed destroyed, and the destruction of it admitted to be proved. Saltern v. Melhuish, Ambl. 247.

Where a deed is destroyed, in order to have the benefit of it, the contents of it must be proved. Ib.

The best evidence to be given which the nature of the thing admits. Cole v. Gibson, 2 Ves. 505.

All deeds, &c., must be proved, unless in the hands of adverse party, or destroyed; then parol evidence of contents allowed. Ib.

Evidence of the loss of a deed and of its contents, though not strictly formal:—Held, to be sufficient. Green v. Bailey, 15 Sim. 542; 11 Jur. 258.

The word "and" in the last sentence of the 21 Geo. 3, c. 11, s. 8 (the act for validating recoveries after twenty years, notwithstanding the deed making the tenant to the præcipe should be lost and not appear), is to be read "or"; and it is not necessary, in order to bring a case within that statute, to give strict proof of the loss of the deed. Townsend v. Kingston (Earl), 6 Ir. Eq. R. 118.

Evidence the same in equity as at law on a casual destruction of deeds; but otherwise where a spoliation. Cookes v. Hellier, 1 Ves. 234.

A deed lost may be proved by circumstances, first shewing that it once existed, and next, that it is lost, or cannot be come at. Whitfield v. Fausset, 1 Ves. 389.

To admit secondary evidence of a deed, it is not sufficient that the attorney who prepared it swears that he delivered it to A. and B. and believes it to be lost. Horlock v. Priestley, 1 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 73.

Permission to exhibit an interrogatory as to the loss of a deed omitted to be proved by mistake, given to the plaintiff at the hearing under the circumstances. Cox v. Allingham, Jac. 337.

—— Bond.]—Mode of proof in bankruptcy, in case of loss of security. Gen. Ord. 14th May, 1836, 2 Mont. & Ayr. App. 33. Wallas, Ex parte, Humbly, In re, 2 Mont. & Ayr. 586; 1 Deac. 496.

Where a creditor, who proved a bond debt, had subsequently lost the bond, the court made an order that he might receive the dividends on his debt, without producing the bond, upon affidavit of the facts, and indemnifying the assignees. Robins, Ex parte, 1 Deac. 587.

Where a bond is burnt or cancelled by accident or mistake, or where it is procured to be delivered up by fraud, equity will set it up against a surety, though extinguished at law. Skip v. Huey, 3 Atk. 93.

—— Settlements.]—A suit was instituted for the appointment of new trustees of a marriage settlement. The settlement was lost, but the husband and wife swore directly to the circumstances under which it was executed; to the execution of it by them; and to the contents of it. The solicitor who prepared the settlement was dead; but, in addition to the evidence of the husband and wife, there was the indirect testimony of several other parties to the same effect:—Held, that there was sufficient evidence for the court to assume that the settlement was actually executed and to the effect contended for. Hall v. Dawson, 7 L. T. 519.

The husband had become insolvent after the marriage, and his assignee subsequently objected that no sufficient notice of the settlement had been given to the proper party. That party was the trustee of the husband's father's settlement, and the family solicitor; but he was dead. The husband made an affidavit, stating that certain verbal communications had passed, both before and after his marriage, between him, his father, and the solicitor, as to the settlement:—Held, sufficient evidence of due notice had been given. Ib.

In 1860 a husband, through the intervention of his wife, obtained possession of their marriage settlement from the trustee. The husband, in order to raise money upon the property comprised in it, destroyed the settlement, mortgaged part of the settled property, and was proceeding to sell other parts of it. In 1864 the trustee filed a bill to restrain the intended sale, and prayed a declaration that the cancelled settlement should be established, and the trusts of it carried into effect. The husband did not deny the fact of his having destroyed the settlement; but the trustee and the wife denied many of his allegations, especially those with respect both to the circumstances under which the settlement was obtained by her from the trustee, and the precise contents of it. No draft or other copy of the settlement was produced to the court; but there was the evidence of the trustee and the wife on the one side, and that of the husband and other persons who were not parties to the settlement, but who had subsequently read it, on the other. There was also the evidence of the solicitor who had prepared the settlement, and who had acted as solicitor to the husband in the mortgage transaction, and in the proposed sale of part of the settled property:—Held, that, upon a full consideration of all the evidence in the case, the trustee was entitled to the relief which he sought. Brandon v. Barlow, 13 L. T. 6.

A pre-nuptial agreement to settle property on a wife will be enforced even though the letters which constituted such agreement have been lost, if the loss can be proved to have occurred through an unforeseen and an inevitable accident, and if the existence and substance of the letters can be clearly established by the evidence. Gilchrist v. Herbert, 26 L. T. 381; 20 W. R. 348.

A wife, who in ignorance of her right in equity to enforce a pre-nuptial agreement for a settlement accepted a settlement of a far inferior sum, is not by doing so debarred from enforcing her claim to the full amount of property agreed to be settled upon her. Ib.

—— Of Apprenticeship.]—An expired indenture of apprenticeship sometimes remains with the master and sometimes with the apprentice, but the more proper custody is with the apprentice; and although shortly after the expiration of the apprenticeship search might be required amongst the papers of both, yet, after the lapse of some years, proof of search among the papers of the apprentice is sufficient to warrant justices in admitting secondary evidence of its contents. Reg. v. Hinckley, 3 B. & S. 885; 32 L. J., M. C. 158; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1054; 8 L. T. 270; 11 W. R. 663.

Proof that an indenture of apprenticeship twenty-five years old, to pay for the stamp of which the overseers of a parish had advanced money, was sent to those overseers and is not to be found in the parish chest, is sufficient to raise a presumption of the loss of the indenture, and to entitle such parish in a settlement case to give secondary evidence of its execution and contents. Rex v. Stourbridge, 8 B. & C. 96; 2 M. & Ry. 43; 6 L. J. (O.S.) M. C. 65.

Will.]—The contents of a lost will, like those of any other lost instrument, may be proved by secondary evidence. Sugden v. St. Leonards (Lord), 45 L. J., P. 49; 1 P. D. 154; 34 L. T. 372; 24 W. R. 860—C. A.

Will destroyed, plaintiff decreed to enjoy the land. Hayne v. Hayne, Dick. 18.

A. devises lands to several persons, and after his death, one who was a friend to the heir-at-law snatches the will out of the executor's hands, and tears it in pieces; the pieces being gathered up and stitched together, a bill is brought to establish the will, and decreed the devisees to hold and enjoy, and the heir to convey to them. Haines v. Haines, 2 Vern. 441.

Newspaper.]—In an action for a libel in a newspaper, after proof of the publication by the production of a copy of the paper, a witness was called, who said that a newspaper bearing the same title, and so far as he could judge from a glance, containing the libel, had been sent to the reading-room of a literary institution of which he was the secretary, by a person unknown; and that it had since been taken away by some of the members, and never returned:—Held, first, that sufficient proof of the loss of that copy had been given to let in secondary evidence of its contents. Gathercole v. Miall, 15 M. & W. 319; 15 L. J., Ex. 179; 10 Jur. 337.

Held, secondly, that there was evidence to go to the jury that the newspaper sent to the reading-room was a copy of the number which contained the libel. Ib.

Bill of Exchange.]—Upon a plea of non acceptavit, in an action by indorsee against acceptor of a bill of exchange, the plaintiff proving that the bill is destroyed, secondary evidence of its contents is admissible. Blackie v. Pidding, 6 C. B. 196.

In an action for money had and received, where it is shewn that the defendant admitted that he had received a bill drawn on a third party, to which the plaintiff was entitled, and that he had paid it into his banker's on his own account, the banker's clerk cannot be called to prove that the defendant received benefit from a bill of similar description, the bill itself not being produced, nor its absence accounted for. Atkins v. Owen, 4 N. & M. 123; 2 A. & E. 35; 4 L. J., K. B. 15.

Note.]—So, in an action on a note not negotiable, where the issue is only on the plea of non fecit, after proof of the loss of the note, the plaintiff is entitled to give secondary evidence of its contents. Charnley v. Grundy, 14 C. B. 608; 2 C. L. R. 822; 23 L. J., C. P. 121; 18 Jur. 653.

Where an original note is lost, and a copy of it is offered in evidence, sufficient probability that the original note was genuine must be shewn before the copy will be allowed to be read. Goodier v. Lake, 1 Atk. 446.

Warrant.]—In an action for a malicious arrest, where parol evidence was given of the loss of the information and warrant upon which the plaintiff was arrested:—Held, that he was at liberty to go into secondary evidence of their contents. Freeman v. Arkell, 3 D. & R. 669; 2 B. & C. 494; 1 Car. & P. 135, 326; 2 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 64.

Where a warrant is issued against a bankrupt for non-compliance with an order of the court, and the warrant is lost, the court will renew the warrant, or grant a copy of it, as a matter of course. Giles, Ex parte, 3 Deac. & C. 620.

Petition.]—A petition presented at the Rolls was afterwards heard by the Lord Chancellor, who made an order upon it, but before the order was passed the original petition was lost. The Lord Chancellor allowed a copy of it, certified by the under-secretary at the Rolls to be a true copy, to be filed, in pursuance of the 27th of the Orders of December, 1833, instead of the original petition. Sanderson v. Walker, 1 Myl. & C. 359.

Commission of Lunacy.]—On the accidental loss of a commission of lunacy, after inquisition found, order for a duplicate commission, and the inquisition, which was recovered, to be annexed to it. Rain, Ex parte, 19 Ves. 589.

Possession of Foreign Government.]—In order to justify the reception of secondary evidence of an agreement, it was proved that A., in whose possession it was, on landing at New York, was arrested on suspicion of being the bearer of secessionist despatches, and deprived of all his papers (amongst which was the agreement, which had reference to shipments in this country of goods intended to run the blockade at Charleston); that all were subsequently restored to him except the agreement; and that, on his making inquiry for it of the agents of the federal government at New York, he was told that it had been sent to Washington, the seat of government:—Held, that it was sufficiently shewn that reasonable efforts had been made to procure the original agreement, and that therefore a copy was properly received. Quilter v. Jorss, 14 C. B. (N.S.) 747; 11 W. R. 888. S. C., at nisi prius, 3 F. & F. 644.

3. Proof of Search.

Hearsay Answers to Inquiries.]—In order to shew that a sufficient search has been made for a lost deed to admit of secondary proof of its contents, evidence is admissible of inquiries made of persons who would be likely to have the documents in their possession, and of the replies given by them to such inquiries, without affidavits or depositions of those persons themselves as to the extent and result of the searches made by them. Smith v. Smith, Ir. R. 10 Eq. 274; But see 1 L. R. Ir. 206—C. A.

To allow secondary evidence of a document, hearsay evidence of the answers given by persons of whom inquiry was made for it, and who were likely to have it, is receivable for the purpose of shewing that a bonâ fide diligent search has been made for the documents in the proper place, and with the proper parties, and its failure. Reg. v. Kenilworth, 2 New Sess. Cas. 66; 7 Q. B. 642; 14 L. J., M. C. 160; 9 Jur. 898.

Where an attesting witness to a deed cannot be found, after strict and diligent inquiry, evidence of his handwriting is admissible. In accounting for the absence of an attesting witness, or loss of a written instrument, general answers to inquiries, that nothing is known concerning them, are admissible in evidence, but not declarations as to particular facts, if the party making them is capable of being called. Doe d. Johnson v. Johnson, 2 Chit. 196.

Reasonable Efforts.]—To render secondary evidence admissible in proof of the contents of a lost document, it is sufficient to prove that every reasonable search for the document has been made, although every possible search may not appear to have been made. Hart v. Hart, 1 Hare, 1; 11 L. J., Ch. 9; 5 Jur. 1007.

In order to render secondary evidence of a private document admissible, it is necessary and sufficient to shew that all reasonable efforts have been made to procure the original. Boyle v. Wiseman, 10 Ex. 647; 3 C. L. R. 482; 24 L. J., Ex. 160; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 115; 3 W. R. 206.

But the degree of diligence to be used in searching for a deed must depend on the importance of the deed, and the particular circumstances of the case. Gully v. Exeter (Bishop), 4 Bing. 290; 12 Moore, 591; 29 R. R. 565. See Brewster v. Sewell, ante, col. 779.

Date.]—In order to let in secondary evidence of a document, it is not necessary that the search for that document should have been recent, or made for the purpose of the cause. Fitz v. Rabbits, 2 M. & Rob. 60.

Place.]—Proof of search for a document will not let in secondary evidence thereof when it is not shewn that the document was ever deposited where the search was made. Reg. v. St. Mary's, Islington, 1 W. R. 34.

Circumstances.]—What is a sufficient search for witnesses to prove handwriting to allow secondary evidence to be given, must depend on the circumstances of each case. Miller v. Miller, 2 Scott, 123; 2 Bing. (N.C.) 76; 1 Hodges, 187; 4 L. J., C. P. 259.

Mortgage.]—Where an assignment of turnpike tolls had been executed by way of mortgage to A.:—Held, in an action, by his personal representative, after his death, against the trustees for arrears of interest, that a search for the security in the office of A.'s solicitor,—where his papers had been deposited, except some deposited, in a suit against A.'s representative, in the office of one of the masters in chancery,—and also in the latter office, without finding the security among any of such papers, was sufficient evidence of its loss to let in secondary evidence. Pardoe v. Price, 13 M. & W. 267; 14 L. J., Ex. 212.

Marriage Settlement.]—By a marriage settlement lands were limited to E. B., the settlor, for life, remainder to trustees for a term of years to secure a jointure and younger children's portions, remainder to the sons of E. B., in tail, remainder to the heirs of E. B. The estate descended to the heirs of E. B., all the prior limitations being spent. On a bill filed by the representatives of the surviving younger child, an alleged copy of the settlement was produced, and an ineffectual search proved among her papers for the original, and that the copy was found there; a witness believed that part of the document was in the handwriting of W. B., who was clerk to his father, the solicitor in the cause, and had died twenty years before; he had never seen W. B. write, but believed the writing to be his, by comparison, and also an indorsement, "compared, W. B.," but did not know when it had been made. The original deed was registered and the memorial of it was proved:—Held, that the copy was not admissible in evidence, no search having been made among the papers of the trustees of the term, or of the inheritor, and the handwriting of W. B. not having been sufficiently proved. Cruise v. Clancy, 6 Ir. Eq. R. 552.

Bond.]—The respondents, on appeal, proved that a deceased rated inhabitant had stated several times to the pauper that the appellant parish had taken a bond from A. touching the support of a child of the pauper's wife; and that the rated inhabitant had the bond in his possession. This person did not appear ever to have been a parish officer. Notice had been given to the appellants to produce the bond; but it did not appear that any search had been made among the papers of the deceased, nor were his representatives examined:—Held, that parol evidence of the contents of the bond was not admissible. Rex v. Hinckley, 9 L. J. (o.s.) M. C. 75.

Affidavit.]—A party in whose possession an affidavit was, by proving that he had made diligent search and could not find it, renders secondary evidence of its contents admissible. Harper v. Cook, 1 Car. & P. 139.

Letters.]—To admit evidence of the contents of letters, it is not enough to shew that the party in whose possession they are, has searched in a particular box in which he thought they were, without having looked into any other place, although he was of opinion that they were in his possession. Bligh v. Wellesley, 2 Car. & P. 400.

Appointment of Executor.]—Where a search for a document was made among the papers in the custody of an executrix of a person who had acted as executor of another person:—Held, sufficient for the purpose of considering the person who had so acted, to have been, in law, the executor, although the probate was not produced. Rex v. Witherly, 4 M. & R. 724; 8 L. J. (o.s.) M. C. 43.

Lease.]—The muniment-chest of the lessor and his assigns is the proper custody for an expired lease. Plaxton v. Dare, 5 M. & R. 1.

Warrant of Distress.]—To prove the warrant of distress made by the mayor of a borough under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, for the non-payment of borough rates, the high constable of the borough, who had been served with a subpœna duces tecum, was called. He stated that he had deposited a warrant in his office; that he had searched for it but could not find it, that he did not know what had become of it, and that the town clerk had access to his office:—Held, that secondary evidence might be given of the contents of the warrant. Fernley v. Worthington, 1 Man. & G. 491; 10 L. J., M. C. 81.

In trover against the sheriff, the warrant under which goods were seized under a fi. fa. was not produced at the trial, nor was notice to produce it given. The bailiff who made the levy was proved to have delivered the warrant to his son; the son could only state his belief that he had either returned it to his father or to the sheriff's officer. It was alleged to be the custom to deliver the warrant to the auctioneer, to be by him forwarded, together with the auction-sheet, to the supervisor of the district, whose duty it was to transmit them to the head office of excise in London. Search had been made for it among the bailiff's papers, and at the sheriff's office; as also among the auctioneer's papers, and at the head office of excise; but the supervisor was not called, and no proof was given of a search among his papers:—Held, that sufficient proof was given from which the loss of the warrant might be inferred, so as to let in secondary evidence to connect the sheriff with the act of the bailiff. Minshall v. Lloyd, 2 M. & W. 450; M. & H. 125; 6 L. J., Ex. 115; 1 Jur. 336.

Cheques.]—A cheque drawn on account of a parish was delivered to A., who was then the paying clerk of the parish. It was shewn that the bankers of the parish, on the same day, paid a sum of that amount, and that their custom was to return the cancelled cheques to the paying clerk, and that they were deposited in an apartment of the workhouse. A. having gone out of office, application was made to his successor at that place for inspection of the cheques. He handed to witness several bundles, which he searched, without finding the cheque:—Held, a sufficient search to let in secondary evidence of its contents. M'Gahey v. Alston, 2 M. & W. 206; 2 Gale, 238; 6 L. J., Ex. 29.

Apprenticeship Deed.]—A pauper proved, that, on the expiration of his apprenticeship, his master told him the deed was in the possession of the parish officers. The latter proved that they had searched for it among the parish papers, but could not find it:—Held, not sufficient to admit parol evidence of the contents, as the master, who was alive, ought to have been produced to prove delivery to the parish officers. Rex v. Denio, 7 B. & C. 620; 1 M. & Ry. 294. Sub nom., Rex v. Rhodegeidio, 6 L. J. (o.s.) M. C. 10.

Appellants against an order of removal relied on the settlement of a deceased party by apprenticeship; and to let in parol evidence of the indenture, they called the widow of the deceased, who stated that her husband, in his last illness, told her, that he got his indentures from his master at the end of his apprenticeship, and wore them out in his pocket. The sessions confirmed the order subject to the opinion of this court as to the admissibility of the evidence:—Held, that without further proof of inquiry after the indentures, evidence of this conversation was not admissible, and they refused to send the case back to be re-stated. Rex v. Rawden, 2 Ad. & E. 156; 4 N. & M. 97.

The pauper was bound apprentice, there being but one indenture which was taken by the master. He failed, and his books and papers came into possession of an attorney, who examined such of them as related to accounts. At that time he saw no indenture. Thirty years afterwards, upon a question as to the pauper's settlement, the foregoing facts were given in evidence, and it also appeared that the master was dead, but his widow was living. No application had been made to her for the indenture:—Held, not enough to let in secondary evidence. Rex v. Piddlehinton, 3 B. & Ad. 460; 1 L. J., M. C. 43.

The appellants against an order of removal set up a settlement of the pauper by apprenticeship under an indenture, which had been lost. To prove proper search they proposed to ask certain witnesses what inquiries they had made of, and what answers they had received from, parties who were likely to have the document in their possession; but the parties themselves were not called. The sessions refused to allow the questions to be put:—Held, that the evidence was admissible, upon the preliminary inquiry whether proper search had been made, though it might not be admissible as evidence in the main issue before the court; and the case was sent back to be re-heard. Reg. v. Braintree, 1 El. & El. 51; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1238; 7 W. R. 48.

Reasonable diligence in searching for an indenture of apprenticeship thirty-seven years old, and supposed to be lost, is sufficient to let in secondary evidence. Rex v. East Farleigh, 6 D. & R. 147; 3 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 172.

Justice's Warrant.]—Where ineffectual search has been made for a justice's warrant, parol evidence may be given of its contents. Weatherall v. Watson, 1 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 2.

Person to whose Possession Document traced must be called.]—A plaintiff is not at liberty to give secondary evidence of the contents of a document, if his witnesses trace it to a person who is not connected with the cause, without calling that person. Freeman v. Arkell, 3 D. & R. 669; 2 B. & C. 494; 1 Car. & P. 135, 326; 2 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 64.

A deed, alleged to be a conveyance of freeholds and leaseholds to two trustees, was delivered by the grantor to a witness, who stated that he afterwards, at the request of the grantor, who was also a cestui que trust, re-delivered it to her. A fruitless search was made for it among her papers after her death. One of the trustees was also dead, having left an executrix, who had taken possession of all his papers. The surviving trustee and the heir of the other only were called, and they negatived all knowledge of the existence of the deed:—Held, that the circumstances did not dispense with an inquiry in all the places of custody; and that as the executrix of the deceased trustee had not been called, sufficient search had not been made, so as to admit secondary evidence. Doe d. Richards v. Lewis, 11 C. B. 1035; 20 L. J., C. P. 177; 15 Jur. 512.

An agreement having been traced to the possession of P., a witness was called, who stated that he went to P. and asked him whether there was any agreement between himself and the pauper respecting a house. P. said, "I cannot say for a certainty; I will search," and then directed his clerk to search. The witness and the clerk then searched P.'s office, and could not find the agreement. P. was not called as a witness. The sessions held that there was no sufficient proof of search without calling P. The court refused to interfere with the decision. Reg. v. Saffron-Hill (Liberty), 1 El. & Bl. 93; 22 L. J., M. C. 22.

Where a letter has been traced to be in the hands of A., evidence that the defendant employed B. to search in all places where he kept letters, is not sufficient primâ facie evidence of loss, so as to let in secondary evidence of its contents. Parkins v. Cobbett, 1 Car. & P. 282.

Objection, when to be Taken.] — A party objecting to the production of a copy, on account of due search not having been made for the original, must make the objection at the time of the trial, distinctly on that ground; if he does not, the court will not afterwards entertain it. Williams v. Wilcox, 8 A. & E. 314.

4. Proof of Stamp.

See post, IV. 6, c. (cols. 840 et seq.)

5. Originals not Capable of Production.

Banners at Meetings.] — Parol evidence of inscriptions and devices on banners and flags displayed at a meeting is admissible without producing the originals. Rex v. Hunt, 3 B. & Ald. 566; 22 R. R. 485. S. P., Jones v. Tarlton, 1 D. (N.S.) 625.

Posted Placards.] — The plaintiff and the defendant agreed by charter-party that the plaintiff's ship should, after discharging her outward cargo, proceed to Galatz or Ibralia, as ordered at Constantinople by the charterer's agents, and there receive a full cargo of wheat, and, being so loaded, should therewith proceed to Cork for orders to discharge at a safe port in the United Kingdom, and deliver the same agreeably to bills of lading, and so end the voyage (restraints of princes and rulers, the dangers of the seas or navigation, fire, pirates, or enemies during the voyage, always mutually excepted). The ship, after discharging her outward cargo, proceeded to Constantinople, and, in consequence of orders there given by the defendant's agent, the master took the ship to Ibralia. Before her arrival there, a proclamation had been promulgated by the Russians, who had invaded Wallachia, prohibiting the exportation of wheat:—Held, that a copy of a printed placard, with the name of the Russian commander attached to it, and posted on the walls of Ibralia, was admissible as evidence of the prohibition. Bruce v. Nicolopulo, 11 Ex. 129; 3 C. L. R. 775; 24 L. J., Ex. 321; 3 W. R. 483.

A great number of placards announcing a public meeting having been printed, a party, who was indicted for treason, took twenty-five of them away from the printer's:—Held, that one of the remaining placards might be read without any preparatory evidence as to the original manuscript, and without any notice to produce the twenty-five copies, the whole impression being duplicates in the nature of originals. Rex v. Watson, 2 Stark. 129.

In an action for shooting a dog, brought against the owner of a plantation and his gamekeepers, it appeared that in the plantation in which the dog was shot, there was fixed on a pole, a board on which was painted, "All dogs found trespassing in this plantation will be shot":—Held, that a copy of that which was painted on the board might be given in evidence without notice to produce the original board. Bartholomew v. Stephens, 8 Car. & P. 728.

Monument.]—So, where a vicar brings ejectment, claiming in right of his vicarage, a witness for him may be asked as to what is inscribed on a tablet fixed up in the church. Doe d. Coyle v. Cole, 6 Car. & P. 359.

Letter Destroyed.]—A letter containing the intimation of an aunt's intention to benefit her niece was destroyed by the niece, in pursuance of a direction contained in it:—Held, that the verbal evidence of the niece and a person who had seen the letter, was sufficient to satisfy the court as to its contents. Beecher v. Major, 6 N. R. 284.

Original filed in a Foreign Court.] — To let in secondary evidence of a document filed in a foreign court, it should be proved that an unsuccessful application for it has been made to the person who has the legal custody of the document, viz. to the court. Application to an inferior officer of the court, though he may have the actual custody of it, is insufficient. Crispin

v. Doglioni, 3 Sw. & Tr. 44; 32 L. J., P. 109; 11 W. R. 500.

Matrices de Roles.]—The Matrices de Roles or assessments to the land-tax of the year 1791, the primary evidence required by the convention No. 7, for the purpose of ascertaining the value of the confiscated estates, not being forthcoming, it was held by the judicial committee that the commissioners for liquidating the claims of British subjects in France were at liberty to adopt any other evidence which might appear to them most satisfactory in respect to the estate which was to be valued, such as the original purchase-money; the valuation of the parties themselves in any subsequent transactions; where there was a lease, the rack-rent; the rent allowing a certain number of years' purchase; or the sum for which the property had been sold at the time of the confiscation. Wall's (Count de) Case, 6 Moore P. C. 216; 12 Jur. 145.

Privilege.]—When a document cannot be produced by reason of privilege, independent secondary evidence of it is admissible. Reg. v. Leatham, 3 El. & El. 658; 30 L. J., Q. B. 205; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 674; 3 L. T. 777; 9 W. R. 334; 8 Cox, C. C. 498. S. P., Lloyd v. Mostyn, 10 M. & W. 478; 2 D. (N.S.) 471; 12 L. J., Ex. 1.

In an action against a mortgagor, the attorney of the mortgagee who has the mortgage deed, cannot be compelled to produce it, if he objects to do so, nor can he be compelled to give evidence of its contents; but (he may be asked for what purpose the money was raised, and) secondary evidence may be given of the contents of the deed. Murston v. Dawnes, 6 Car. & P. 381.

6. What is Good Secondary Evidence.

No Degrees.]—There are no degrees of secondary evidence; but where a party is entitled to give secondary evidence at all, he may give any species of secondary evidence within his power. Doe d. Gilbert v. Ross, 7 M. & W. 102; 8 D. P. C. 389; 4 Jur. 321; 10 L. J., Ex. 201. S. P., Brown v. Woodman, 6 Car. & P. 206.

Deeds—Counterparts and Copies.]—Counterparts of old leases from the repository of a lord of a manor are evidence of the demise of premises without proof of enjoyment. Clarkson v. Woodhouse, 3 Dougl. 189; 5 Term Rep. 412, n.

Though there are more parts of a deed than one which is in the defendant's possession, but who does not produce it after notice, the plaintiff is not obliged to produce in evidence one of the originals, but may give a copy in evidence. Doxon v. Haigh, 1 Esp. 409.

Possession by one party of the other party's part of a deed is presumptive evidence that the counterpart had been executed. East India Co. v. Lewis, 3 Car. & P. 358.

In trover for an expired lease by the lessor, the lease (or counterpart executed by the lessor) not being produced by the defendant, upon notice, the lessor may give parol evidence of the contents without producing the counterpart executed by the lessee. Hall v. Bull, 3 Man. & G. 242; 3 Scott (N.R.) 577; 10 L. J., C. P. 285. And see Paul v. Meet, 2 Y. & J. 116; 31 R. R. 559.

An examined copy of the registry of a deed, in the registry of the county of Middlesex, is admissible as secondary evidence of its contents. Doe d. Ubele v. Killnes, 2 Car. & P. 289. But see Collins v. Maule, 8 Car. & P. 502; Doe d. Loscombe v. Clifford, 2 Car. & K. 448; and Doe d. Padwick v. Wittcomb, 4 H. L. Cas. 425.

In an action for rent on a demise, the plaintiff produced a deed properly stamped as a counterpart lease, and proved it to have been executed by the defendant:—Held, that although there was no evidence of any lease having been executed by the plaintiff, the presumption was that there was such; and the deed produced was therefore rightly admissible. Hughes v. Clark, 10 C. B. 905; 15 Jur. 430.

In an action for rent upon an indenture of lease, the defendant pleaded non demisit:—Held, that the counterpart lease was sufficient evidence of the demise. Houghton v. Koenig, 18 C. B. 235; 25 L. J., C. P. 218.

In 1763, lands were conveyed upon trust for a charitable corporation, and in 1783, the corporation granted a lease of part of such lands to G. for 99 years at a peppercorn rent. In 1877 the corporation commenced an action against K., who was in possession of the demised lands, on the ground that the lease being voidable under 13 Eliz. c. 10, they had the option to determine it at any time during its continuance, and that the Statute of Limitations did not commence to run against them until they exercised such option:—Held, that in the absence of evidence to the contrary, the counterpart lease was prima facie evidence of the title in fee of the corporation, and that the defendant being admittedly in possession of land included in the lease, the presumption, in the absence of proof to the contrary, was that he was in possession under some title derived through G. Magdalen Hospital v. Knotts, 47 L. J., Ch. 726; 8 Ch. D. 709; 38 L. T. 624; 26 W. R. 646.

An engrossment and draft of a settlement made in 1845 had been both destroyed in a fire. The court directed that a copy proved to have been examined with the draft and engrossment, and made an exhibit in the cause should be inrolled, and that the trusts of the settlement should be carried into effect. Barnett v. Dickens, 10 W. R. 794.

A document, more than thirty years old, purporting to be a copy of a lost instrument, and coming out of the proper custody, is not made evidence by an indorsement in the handwriting of a deceased family solicitor of the person claiming under the lost instrument, that he has compared the copy with the instrument, and knows the handwriting of the witnesses to the original, and of one of the parties to be genuine. Kerin v. Davoren, 12 Ir. Ch. R. 352.

A claim under a lost deed allowed on the production of an unauthenticated copy of it coupled with its being recited and recognised in other deeds and instruments, and its being memorialised in the register for the West Riding of Yorkshire, where the lands alleged to be comprised in the lost deed were situate, and the long acquiescence of parties interested in disputing the claim. Tunstall's Case, 3 Sim. 308.

A counterpart may be read if an original deed be lost; and if no counterpart, a copy, and if no copy, parol evidence of the manner of its being lost; if destroyed by fire, or lost by any unforeseen accident, they are of themselves sufficient excuses. Villiers v. Villiers, 2 Atk. 71.

Quære, whether the court will order the counterpart of an assignment of a bankrupt's estate to be inrolled, on an affidavit that the original was lost. Robson, Ex parte, Ambl. 180.

The production of a paper, purporting to be an attested copy, may, with other evidence, have considerable weight. Ward v. Garnons, 17 Ves. 140.

Memorials.]—The memorial of a conveyance that has been registered is not evidence of the contents of such conveyance, unless notice has been given to the opposite party to produce the conveyance. Molton v. Harris, 2 Esp. 549.

A memorial admitted as secondary evidence of an indenture. Sadleir v. Biggs, 4 H. L. Cas. 435.

A registered memorial of a lost deed is good secondary evidence. Carthrow v. Eade, 4 De G. & S. 527.

A memorial is good secondary evidence of a lost deed. Allen v. Allen, 1 Con. & L. 427; 2 Dr. & War. 307; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 472.

A memorial of articles for a settlement held to be good secondary evidence of those articles, possession having been shewn to have gone along with them, and that execution of the memorial by the grantee was sufficient to satisfy the statute. Peyton v. M'Dermot, 1 Dr. & Wal. 198.

On the question whether a person, found a lunatic, was sane at a particular time, a memorial of registry, executed by him before the time in question, is admissible in evidence, though the deed is not produced or not accounted for. And orders and reports made in the matter of the lunacy are admissible to shew that such orders and reports were made upon the grounds stated therein, but not as evidence of the truth of the facts therein mentioned. Creagh v. Blood, 2 Jo. & Lat. 509; 8 Ir. Eq. R. 434.

To prove a conveyance for value within s. 25, the defendant, who was the eldest son of H., offered in evidence, as proof of a lost deed, a memorial in the registry of deeds office of a deed, to which H., A., M. and G. were parties, whereby H. conveyed the lands to M. and G. upon certain trusts, which were not, however, disclosed by the memorial. It was also proved that in the same year in which the deed bore date a marriage was solemnized between H. and A.; and that H. until his death in 1862, and thenceforward the defendant, had been continuously in possession and in receipt of the rent for their own use and benefit:—Held, that it might be inferred that the lost deed was a settlement executed on the marriage of H. and A., under which H. took a life estate, and the defendant an estate in remainder, and that under it the defendant was a purchaser for value. Smith v. Smith, Ir. R. 10 Eq. 273.

An examined copy of a memorial of a purchase deed registered in Middlesex, is only receivable as secondary evidence of the deed against the parties to the deed, and all persons claiming under them; and the fact that A. mortgaged the property to B., and delivered this deed to B., as mortgagee, is not sufficient to make it secondary evidence against A. Doe d. Loscombe v. Clifford, 2 Car. & K. 448.

Inrolment.]—The inrolment of a lease under 1 & 2 Geo. 4, c. 52, s. 8, which enacts that a deed so inrolled, "shall be as good and available in law, and of the like force and effect in all respects, as if the same had been inrolled in any of his majesty's courts of record at Westminster, or as if a memorial of any such deed had been entered or registered in the office or offices appointed for registering deeds and other conveyances of lands and tenements in the counties in which the same are situate," is not admissible as evidence of the deed, without proof of the execution. Jenkin v. Biddulph, R. & M. 339.

An inrolment in the office of the Duchy of Cornwall of a lease purporting to be granted by the king, vacante ducatu, is primary evidence of such lease. Row v. Brenton, 3 M. & Ry. 214; 8 B. & C. 765.

So is an inrolment of a lease purporting to be granted by the Duke of Cornwall. Ib.

A copy of an inrolment of a deed of bargain and sale requiring inrolment is secondary evidence of the deed. Devonshire (Duke) v. Neill, 2 L. R., Ir. 132.

Abstracts.]—An abstract which has been compared with the deed of feoffment is good secondary evidence of the contents, no proof being given on either side of the existence of any copy of the deed. Doe d. Rowlandson v. Wainwright, 5 A. & E. 520; 1 N. & P. 8; 2 H. & W. 391; 6 L. J., K. B. 35.

A. being seised in fee in 1797, afterwards became bankrupt. A conveyance in 1815 from his assignees, and certain mortgagees, recited several deeds affecting the property, the greater number of which were missing. The vendor produced an old abstract of the missing deeds, from which it was said the deed of 1815 was drawn; the recitals in the conveyance of 1815, coupled with the production of the abstract, are sufficient secondary evidence of the missing deeds. Moulton v. Edmonds, 29 L. J., Ch. 181; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 305; 1 L. T. 391; 8 W. R. 153.

An abstract of a deed not admitted as secondary evidence of the deed. Lewis v. Leatham, 11 L. J., Ch. 176; 6 Jur. 501.

The abstract of a deed is no evidence, and much less an attested copy of such abstract. Peterborough (Earl) v. Germaine, 3 Bro. P. C. 539.

Drafts.]—Where proof was given of the loss of a written instrument the court received as secondary evidence a draft of such written instrument, produced at the hearing with such a stamp as the instrument itself required, although the instrument appeared to have been only lost by the party sought to be charged, and was not proved to have been fraudulently destroyed by him. Blair v. Ormond, 1 De G. & Sm. 428; 11 Jur. 665.

Held, that drafts produced from the proper custody and bearing indorsement in the handwriting of W., shewing that the deeds were engrossed from them, and were duly executed and stamped, and the diary of a deceased clerk containing entries in his handwriting made in the regular course of his business, and shewing that he had drawn the drafts, and had attended the execution and stamping of the deeds, were good secondary evidence of the mortgages. Waldy v. Gray, 44 L. J., Ch. 394; L. R. 20 Eq. 238; 32 L. T. 531; 23 W. R. 676.

In an action for recovery of land, drafts of deeds in the possession of the defendant and which he refused to produce were admitted as secondary evidence. Sutcliffe v. James, 40 L. T. 875; 27 W. R. 750.

Letters as to Deeds.]—And letters between the defendant or his solicitor and the solicitors of his predecessor in title were also admitted on such evidence thereof. Ib.

Solicitor's Copies.]—An attorney stated that after the execution of a deed, which he held for his client, a document was delivered out of his office to the defendant as a copy. The attorney having refused to produce the deed:—Held, that the document so delivered was not admissible as secondary evidence of its contents. Volant v. Soyer, 13 C. B. 231; 22 L. J., C. P. 83.

An action on a bond of indemnity stood for trial at the Flintshire assizes. The bond was in the possession of W., who held it as the representative of a former attorney of the obligors, and was himself the defendant's general attorney, and who had undertaken to produce it at the trial, if the judge should think he was bound to do so. Before the assizes the bond had been sent by W. to the defendant's attorney in the action, in London, for the purpose of inspection and admission; and the plaintiff's attorney had there taken a correct copy of it. At the trial, W. had the bond in court, but objected to produce it, on the ground of privilege; and the objection was allowed:—Held, that the copy so taken by the plaintiff's attorney was admissible as such evidence, notwithstanding the objection of privilege. Lloyd v. Mostyn, 10 M. & W. 478; 2 D. (N.S.) 476; 12 L. J., Ex. 1.

Entry in Bill of Costs.]—The entries in the bill of costs of a deceased attorney:—Held, to be good secondary evidence of the execution of deeds. Skeffington v. Whitehurst, 3 Y. & Coll. 1; 7 L. J., Ex. Eq. 65. Affirmed 9 Cl. & F. 219.

Extract—Foundation Deed of Charity.]—An extract of the foundation deed of a charity, purporting to be signed by the founder, which had been hung up in the board-room of the charity for many years, and on its cessation was given into the care of one of the governors and secretary of the charity, was admitted as evidence of its trusts. Hospital for Incurables, In re, 13 L. R. Ir. 361.

Of Agreement—Reference in Affidavit.]—In a claim for specific performance of an agreement, which is not produced nor proved by plaintiff, and the only evidence respecting which is a reference in an affidavit of the defendant's solicitor, himself one of the defendants, to the "agreement in the plaintiff's claim set forth," and a correspondence between the solicitors of plaintiff and defendants, the court may be satisfied that the agreement in the terms so set forth was executed, though it has not been proved according to the strict rules of evidence. Tynte v. Buller, 23 L. J., Ch. 504; 2 W. R. 309.

—— Replevin — Admission of Terms of Holding.]—In replevin, the admissions of the plaintiff are evidence to shew the terms upon which he held the premises, though he held under an agreement in writing that is not produced. Howard v. Smith, 3 Scott (N.R.) 574; 3 Man. & G. 254; 10 L. J., C. P. 245. S. P., Slatterie v. Pooley, 6 M. & W. 664; 10 L. J., Ex. 8.

Tolls.]—Where an assignment of turnpike tolls had been executed by way of mortgage, entries in a book of the trustees, indorsed "Mortgage Book," containing an abstract of the names of the creditors, the amounts of their securities, and the interest due upon them, are good secondary evidence of such security. Pardoe v. Price, 13 M. & W. 267; 14 L. J., Ex. 212.

Printed copies of the statements of the annual accounts of a turnpike trust, produced from the office of the clerk of the peace (to which the originals, signed by the chairman at the annual general meeting, had been returned pursuant to 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, c. 78), are not admissible in an action against the trustees, without shewing the originals to have been lost or destroyed. Pardoe v. Price, 13 M. & W. 267; 14 L. J., Ex. 212.

Chancery Decrees.]—In support of a custom of a manor that the lord was entitled to take only one heriot from each tenant, whatever number of tenements he might hold, an old decree of the Court of Chancery in a suit between copyholders and the lord, and establishing the custom produced by a witness who succeeded his brother as lord of the manor, and who stated that he found it amongst his brother's papers, is admissible against a subsequent lord of the manor, as a copy of the original, for which an ineffectual search has been made. Price v. Woodhouse, 3 Ex. 616; 18 L. J., Ex. 271.

So secondary evidence is admissible of an office copy of the decree delivered by a prior lord to a tenant, when asked by him for evidence to prove the customs of the manor, when a proper but an ineffectual search for it has been made. Ib.

Will.]—A copy of a will produced from the Prerogative office was received, after proof of unsuccessful searches for the original, and that the practice in the office at the time of the date of the will was to give out the original wills after taking copies. Fitzwalter Peerage, 10 Cl. & F. 946.

Declarations of a testator are admissible, whether made before or after the execution of his will, in the event of its loss, as secondary evidence of its contents. Sugden v. St. Leonards (Lord), 45 L. J., P. 49; 1 P. D. 154; 34 L. T. 369; 24 W. R. 479—C. A. S. P., Anon., 2 Camp. 390.

Where original will is lost, from the exemplification thereof under seal of Prerogative Court, there is reason to suspect its validity as to disposition of real estate, such exemplification cannot be admitted as evidence, but party must be left to his remedy at law. Arthur v. Arthur, 3 Bro. P. C. 568.

Scotch wills registered in the Court of Session are retained there, and if it is necessary to prove any such wills in England a certified copy is given out, and is admitted to probate in the English ecclesiastical courts; the Lords' Committees for privileges will not, on claims of peerage, receive such copy, unless it is shewn that the original will cannot be produced. Wharton Peerage, 12 Cl. & F. 295.

An office copy of a will relating to real estate only, will be admitted by the court as sufficient proof of the will itself. Danby v. Poole, 5 L. T. 240; 10 W. R. 240.

Report — Notice to Produce.] — Action to restrain an alleged libel, to the effect that the plaintiff was infringing the patent rights of the defendant, a rival tradesman. The defendant, in cross-examination, stated that he had been in the habit of consulting A., an engineer (one of his witnesses), as to his patents, and had received from him a written report. The plaintiff had not required from the defendant an affidavit of documents, and on the twelfth day of the trial notice by leave was given to the defendant to produce the report next day. The report not being produced next day, the plaintiff's counsel, after the evidence for the defendant was closed, asked leave to recall the defendant or A., to be examined as to the contents of the report, or that A. might produce a copy of it. The court refused to allow parol evidence to be given at that stage of the trial, with respect to a document as to which no proper notice to produce had been given. Sugg v. Bray, 54 L. J., Ch. 132; 51 L. T. 194.

Minutes of Contract made by Third Party.]—The production of an entry of the minutes of a contract made by a third party, in the presence of and by the direction of two contracting parties, but not signed by either of them, is not the only medium of proving the contract, unless there is evidence that the writing in fact constituted the agreement, and was taken to be so, and assented to as such by the parties; parol evidence of the terms of the contract is, therefore, admissible without accounting for the non-production of the written minutes. Rex v. Wrangle, 4 N. & M. 375; 2 A. & E. 314; 1 H. & W. 41; 4 L. J., M. C. 43.

Copy—Accompanying Letter.]—A copy of a document sent by the plaintiff to the defendant, with a letter stating it to be a copy, is receivable for the defendant, where the document itself would be so, without production of or accounting for the original. Ansell v. Baker, 3 Car. & K. 145.

Letters.]—A copy of a document, taken by a machine worked by the witness, who produces it, is admissible as secondary evidence. Simpson v. Thoreton, 2 M. & Rob. 433.

See also Everingham v. Roundell, 2 M. & Rob. 138; 2 Lewin, C. C. 157.

Admission under a judge's order of the copy of a letter with notice to produce the original, does not dispense with proof of the original. Sharp v. Lamb, 11 A. & E. 805; 3 P. & D. 454; 9 L. J., Q. B. 185; 4 Jur. 965.

Where a person examined before commissioners of bankruptcy produced a machine copy of a letter sent to a third party and the solicitor of the assignees made a copy of it, in an action against that person by the assignees:—Held, that the last made copy was not admissible without reading his examination, although notice had been given to A. to produce the original copy. Holland v. Reeves, 2 Car. & P. 36.

And see cases, ante, cols. 686, 687.

Act of Parliament.]—As secondary evidence of a contract there was produced an office copy of a special verdict, returned upon the trial of a feigned issue in H. T. 13 & 14 Car. 2, wherein the jury found, that, at a parliament, &c., holden, &c., it was enacted, &c. The act was then set out:—Held, that the special verdict being res inter alios acta, was not admissible per se, and that it was not receivable as containing an authenticated copy of the act, inasmuch as it was strictly the finding of a matter of fact, not professing to set forth a copy of the act according to its tenor, not stating the title of the act so as to identify it with the lost act. Doe d. Bacon v. Brydges, 6 Man. & G. 282; 7 Scott (N.R.) 333; 13 L. J., C. P. 209.

Rules of Court.]—Where a court prints and circulates copies of its rules, for the guidance of its officers, the production of one of these copies is good evidence of the rules which the officers are to act on, though the original rules are kept under the seal of the court and the copy is not shewn to have been examined with the original. Dance v. Robson, 1 M. & M. 294.

Note.]—Copies of a note, bill of sale, and stated account, if attended with concurring circumstances of undeniable credit, will be admitted as evidence. Lloyd v. Wynne, 2 Bro. P. C. 377.

Copy of a note taken by one who had been entrusted with the note, and was since dead, under which was written an acknowledgment that nothing was due, allowed to be read as evidence, though not proved to be a true copy, and though the defendant had sworn there was no such acknowledgment under the note, it appearing, when the note was produced, that the bottom of it was torn off. S. C., 2 Vern. 603.

—— When Lost.]—See supra, 2.

Debenture.]—A suit having been instituted in the Court of Chancery in England, to carry into execution the trusts of a deed executed by D., in 1799, for the benefit of creditors holding debentures. The assignees of a bankrupt firm under two debentures, which had been deposited with the firm, for the balances due, and to become due to them, went in under the decree to prove their claim. The master reported as to one of the debentures, No. 26, that the sum secured by it was due under the deed of trust, but that there was not sufficient proof to establish the right of the claimants. Pending this suit, a bill was filed in the Court of Chancery in England, for the administration of the estate of a bankrupt firm, in which, by an order of court, a receiver of that estate was appointed. In this state of the proceedings, and while the creditors' suit in England was pending, a bill was filed in the Court of Chancery in Ireland, by the assignees of the bankrupt firm and the receiver, for the same purpose as the suit then pending in England, viz. the execution of the trusts of the deed of 1799, and payment of the creditors holding debentures. In this suit proof was given before the master of the execution and assignment of the debenture No. 26, of the search for and loss of the original, and of an examined copy. Upon this proof a decree was made, declaring the right of the assignees for payment of a certain portion of the sum due upon the debenture to the receiver in the English suit. This decree was affirmed on appeal. Donegal v. Salt, 8 Bli. (N.S.) 853.

Order to pay Money.] — Defendant being indebted to plaintiff in 150*l.*, and being employed by T. to perform work for which he was receiving a percentage, wrote an order to T. to pay plaintiff 150*l.* out of the first monies due to defendant. Afterwards, being indebted to B. in 997*l.*, he executed a deed reciting the above facts, assigning and transferring to B. such sums as then were or should become due to him, defendant, from T. in trust first to pay plaintiff 150*l.*, and then to retain the residue towards payment of the 997*l.*, with covenants that he should not receive the money nor revoke, &c. Afterwards defendant received 150*l.* from T., and plaintiff sued him for money had and received and on an account stated:—Held, that plaintiff was entitled to give secondary evidence of the order, upon proof of a bonâ fide search for the original among plaintiff's papers only, and that such secondary evidence was furnished by a paper, admitted by defendant's attorney to be a true copy of an affidavit sworn, but not filed, by defendant in proceedings against another party, such paper stating the order to have been written by defendant, and setting it out, though no evidence was given that the attorney had compared the paper with the original affidavit or order. Pooley v. Goodwin, 4 Ad. & E. 94; 5 N. & M. 466.

Construction of Contents on Admission.]—Where a written instrument has been lost, and parol evidence of its contents has been received, its construction is still for the court, and not for the jury. Berwick v. Horsfall, 4 C. B. (N.S.) 450; 27 L. J., C. P. 193; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 615; 6 W. R. 471.

After Notice to Produce.]—See ante, col. 778; and post, cols. 830, 831.

Primary or Secondary Evidence.]—See Lucas v. Williams, 61 L. J., Q. B. 595; [1892] 2 Q. B. 113; 66 L. T. 706.

IV. PRODUCTION AND ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

1. In General.

a. Function of Judge.

To determine Admissibility.]—All questions relative to the admissibility of evidence, and all preliminary matters of fact, are to be determined by the judge, not by the jury. Bartlett v. Smith, 11 M. & W. 483; 12 L. J., Ex. 287; 7 Jur. 448.

If evidence is tendered to shew that evidence primâ facie admissible ought to be rejected, it is the duty of the judge to receive the evidence so tendered, and decide upon it himself. Ib.

A judge will reject evidence in itself illegal, notwithstanding the admissions or omissions of the litigants. Shaw v. Roberts, 2 Stark. 455.

A court of justice cannot delegate its jurisdiction, and ought not to be guided by any foreign opinion upon a question of law, e.g. the admissibility of evidence. Dunbar v. Harvie, 2 Bligh, 351.

It is the province of the judge at Nisi Prius to decide all preliminary questions of fact upon which the admissibility of the evidence depends. Boyle v. Wiseman, 11 Ex. 360; 3 C. L. R. 1071; 24 L. J., Ex. 284; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 894; 3 W. R. 577.

In an action of libel the plaintiff, in order to prove the publication of the libel, tendered secondary evidence of the contents of a letter written by the defendant. On the part of the defendant a document was produced as the original:—Held, that the judge was, at that stage of the cause, bound to hear the evidence on both sides, and to decide whether the document offered was the original or not, and that if it was, the secondary evidence was inadmissible. Ib.

A judge is bound to try a collateral issue, where the reception of evidence depends on a preliminary question of fact. Cleave v. Jones, 7 Ex. 421; 21 L. J., Ex. 105.

The court, and not the witness, is to judge of the reasonableness of an excuse for withholding papers of which production is required under a subpœna duces tecum. Amey v. Long, 9 East, 473; 6 Esp. 116; 1 Camp. 16, 180, a.; 9 R. R. 589.

When the grounds of privilege are before the court, it is for the court, and not the witness, to decide as to their sufficiency. Aston, Ex parte, 28 L. J., Ch. 631; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 615; 7 W. R. 539.

Where a valid objection is taken to the admissibility of evidence, it is discretionary with the judge whether he will allow the objection to be withdrawn. Barbat v. Allen, 7 Ex. 155; 21 L. J., Ex. 155; 16 Jur. 339.

On a motion for a new trial, no objection to the admission of evidence can be taken into account except those made at the hearing. Essex (Earl) v. Hodgson, 15 W. R. 960.

—— Where Preliminary Question Identical with Main Issue.]—As to the duty of the judge where a question of fact preliminary to the admissibility of evidence happens to be identical with the main issue to be tried in the case, see Doe d. Jenkins v. Davies, 10 Q. B. 314; 16 L. J., Q. B. 218; and Stowe v. Querner, 39 L. J., Ex. 60; L. R. 5 Ex. 155.

To prevent Production of Public Document.]—It is the duty of a judge, if it is sought to produce any official document of state at the trial of an action, to interpose and prevent its being produced or any secondary evidence of it being given. Chatterton v. Secretary of State for India, 64 L. J., Q. B. 676; [1895] 2 Q. B. 189; 14 R. 504; 72 L. T. 858; 59 J. P. 596—C. A.

To prevent Exclusion of Admissible Evidence.]—Where a party tendered evidence primâ facie admissible:—Held, that the other party ought not to be allowed to interpose with evidence for the purpose of excluding it; but that it should be received and expunged, if afterwards shewn not to be properly receivable. Jones v. Fort, M. & M. 196.

To determine Stage for Admitting Evidence.]—The court will not interfere on the suggestion that the judge at Nisi Prius has admitted evidence at an improper stage of the cause, if the evidence is not in itself inadmissible, unless it appears that an irregularity has occurred causing actual injustice. Doe d. Nicoll v. Bower, 16 Q. B. 805.

It is in the discretion of the judge, subject to the reviewal of the court, to determine in what stage of the cause evidence may be produced. Wright v. Willcox, 9 C. B. 650; 19 L. J., C. P. 333; 14 Jur. 746.

—— False Imprisonment.]—In an action for false imprisonment, the defendant pleaded that the plaintiff had stolen the defendant's chaff; he also pleaded that his chaff had been stolen, and that he had reasonable ground to suspect the plaintiff. The plaintiff gave evidence, in the first instance, to account for her possession of chaff. The defendant's witnesses proved that the chaff in the plaintiff's possession was similar in quality to that lost by the defendant, and that in both there was linseed:—Held, that the judge had rightly exercised his discretion in allowing the plaintiff to call a witness in reply to account for the presence of linseed in the chaff found in the plaintiff's possession. Ib.

Power to call Witness.]—Where an order for an issue, from chancery, directs all witnesses to be examined, but the plaintiff declines to call some, conceiving his case made out, it seems the judge will himself call the others. Groom v. Chambers, 2 Mont. & Ayr. 742.

—— Right of Parties to Cross-examine.]—A judge at trial may, for the discovery of truth, himself call a witness and examine him, and neither side may cross-examine such witness without leave of the judge. Coulson v. Disborough, [1894] 2 Q. B. 316; 9 R. 390; 70 L. T. 617; 42 W. R. 449; 58 J. P. 784—C. A.

—— Court of Appeal.]—The Court of Appeal has jurisdiction under s. 39 of the statute 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, to require the production and examination before itself of a party to a cause, although he may not have been orally examined in the court below. The expression "upon the hearing" in the 39th section means whenever or wherever a cause is heard. Hope v. Threlfall, 2 Eq. Rep. 307; 23 L. J., Ch. 631. And see Jacobson, Ex parte, Pincoffs, In re, infra.

Evidence Vivâ Voce.]—The making of an order under r. 3 of the General Order of the 5th of February, 1861, to take evidence vivâ voce at the hearing of a cause, is a matter within the discretion of the judge who has the conduct of the cause, and his decision upon an application to have the evidence so taken cannot be appealed from. Ohlsen v. Terrero, 44 L. J., Ch. 155; L. R. 10 Ch. 127; 31 L. T. 811; 23 W. R. 195.

To order Admission of Documents.]—The court has no jurisdiction under r. 20 of Hilary Term, 4 Will. 4, to order the admission of documents; but if a judge at chambers desires parties coming before him under that rule to go before the court, they will be heard; but the court will pronounce no judgment, leaving that to be done by the judge at chambers. Smith v. Bird, 3 D. P. C. 641.

Agent or bailiff, confounding his principal's property with his own, charged with the whole, except what he can prove to be his own; and, in this instance, viz. the case of a breach of the terms upon which the court dissolved an injunction, the inquiry was directed with costs. The court refused in such a case a prospective direction to admit books, not legal evidence; usual in a fair case, as where, from want of notice of an adverse claim, a strict account cannot be given: merely giving liberty to apply upon any question of evidence. Lupton v. White, 15 Ves. 432; 10 R. R. 94.

To refuse Contradictory Evidence.]—Where a party in a first cause has examined a great number of witnesses to establish a particular point, the court will never suffer him, in a second, to contradict what he attemptad to prove in the first. Bennet v. Lee, 2 Atk. 531.

Right to decide without hearing Evidence.]—If a judge of first instance is prepared to decide in favour of a defendant or respondent without hearing his evidence, his counsel is entitled to insist that the evidence shall be heard before the decision is given. Jacobson, Ex parte, Pincoffs, In re, 22 Ch. D. 312; 48 L. T. 197; 31 W. R. 554—C. A.

If, however, the counsel does not exercise that right, but accepts the decision in his favour on his opponent's evidence, the Court of Appeal has still power to allow the evidence to be heard before reversing the decision. Ib.

To refuse Evidence where Statement of Claim Admitted.]—The statement of claim in salvage actions should contain such facts as, if admitted, will constitute the whole of the plaintiff's case as the court will decline to admit evidence at the hearing, except on special grounds, where the facts alleged in the statement of claim are admitted. The Hardwick, 53 L. J., P. 23; 9 P. D. 32; 50 L. T. 128; 32 W. R. 598; 5 Asp. M. C. 199.

To leave Subsidiary Questions of Fact to Jury.]—In an action for malicious prosecution, when the plaintiff makes out a primâ facie case the judge, in order to enable himself to determine the issue of reasonable and probable cause, may leave subsidiary questions of fact to the jury; in which case the onus of proving the existence of such facts as go to establish reasonable and probable cause lies upon the plaintiff. Abrath v. North-Eastern Ry., 52 L. J., Q. B. 620; 11 Q. B. D. 440; 49 L. T. 618; 32 W. R. 50; 47 J. P. 692—C. A.

Right to decide without consulting Jury.]—Where a fact is distinctly sworn to upon a trial, which is not contradicted by other evidence, and there is no doubt cast upon the credibility of the witnesses who attest it, the judge need not take the opinion of the jury upon it, though he may be requested to do so. Michell v. Williams, 11 M. & W. 205; 12 L. J., Ex. 193.

Rules of Evidence.]—The rules as to evidence are the same in equity as at law. Manning v. Lechmere, 1 Atk. 453; Glynn v. Bank of England, 2 Ves. 41.

—— Best Evidence.]—A shorthand writer having been allowed to refer to his notes as to the testimony of witnesses at the trial of an indictment:—Held, that such evidence was improperly received, as the witnesses themselves ought to have been called. Willans v. Taylor, 3 M. & P. 350; 31 R. R. 379.

—— Legal Evidence.]—On the trial of an issue, the jury is confined to legal evidence, and evidence which is not legal cannot be admitted. But the Chancellor, although he performs the office of a jury in trying questions of fact arising before him, is not confined, as a jury is, to legal evidence. Kilbee v. Sneyd, 2 Moll. 493.

b. Facts in Issue or Relevant to the Issue.

In issue on the Pleadings.]—Action for libel alleging that the plaintiff, a theatrical critic, had endeavoured to extort money by threatening to publish defamatory matter concerning a deceased actress. Defence, that the allegation was true:—Held, that even assuming that evidence of rumours before the publication of the libel that the plaintiff had committed the offences charged, and of particular facts tending to show misconduct in the plaintiff as a theatrical critic, was material; it was rightly rejected, for the particular facts were not stated or referred to in the pleadings as required by Ord. 19, r. 4. Scott v. Sampson, 51 L. J., Q. B. 380; 8 Q. B. D. 491; 46 L. T. 412; 30 W. R. 541.

The evidence of facts not put in issue on the record is inadmissible. Blake v. Marnell, 2 Ball & B. 47. Affirmed 4 Dow, 284. And see Brown v. Chambers, Hayes, 597.

It is most material in equity pleading, that all the evidence intended to be relied on at the hearing should be founded on some allegation, distinctly put on record, of fact, which it is calculated to support, or otherwise it will not be admitted on the hearing. Hall v. Maltby, 6 Price, 240.

Application for leave to exhibit interrogatories in the master's office, for the examination of an executor, the object being to charge him with a breach of trust not raised by the pleadings, refused with costs. Ford v. Bryant, 9 Beav. 410; 15 L. J., Ch. 261; 10 Jur. 484.

Evidence not admitted of facts, not alleged in the pleadings. Gordon v. Gordon, 3 Swanst. 472; 19 R. R. 230.

Bill brought by wife for maintenance, on suggestion of cruel usage by the husband: and on the part of the defendant, as an excuse for his ill usage, depositions were offered to prove a criminal conversation; unless it is expressly charged by the answer, the court will not suffer such depositions to be read. Watkyns v. Watkyns, 2 Atk. 96.

Answer, charging the wife had behaved in an indecent manner, will entitle the husband to read evidence against her of criminal conversation. Ib.

Plaintiff having in ignorance and mistake set out by his bill a supposed defect in his title, which was as lessee with covenant for renewal, and praying that his lease might be declared valid, and the covenant binding notwithstanding the defect, and a decree for specific performance, Lord Chancellor, being clear that the defect was fatal, and that the bill must be dismissed with costs, it was discovered before order made that the supposed defect in the plaintiff's title did not exist:—Held, that evidence of the true state of the title may be received, although, strictly speaking, it is evidence of a fact not in issue on the pleadings, and even contrary to the statement, there being no surprise, the parties having equal means of knowledge; the counterpart of the instrument of demise creating the title being in the hands of the defendant. Sadler v. Lovatt, 1 Moll. 162.

Evidence of a distinct substantive fact, without an allegation on the record, not received. Smith v. Clarke, 12 Ves. 477; 8 R. R. 359.

Depositions to a fact not put in issue, not permitted to be read. Clarke v. Turton, 11 Ves. 240.

Evidence of a declaration by a plaintiff, that when a lease was about to be executed, he had contrived to introduce a deed instead of the lease, and the grantor, under the impression he was executing the lease, executed the deed, rejected; the declaration not being put in issue by an averment in the answer, "that the deed has been executed under circumstances of gross fraud and imposition practised by the plaintiff": for the defendant ought to have stated in his answer, the declaration, as evidence of the fact, constituting the fraud and imposition he relied on; whereby the plaintiff would have had an opportunity of impeaching the testimony of the witnesses, by cross-examination, or by producing witnesses to contradict him. The defendant did not prove he was ignorant of the declaration when he put in his answer. Mulholland v. Hendrick, Beat. 277.

Evidence cannnot be read even on behalf of an infant as to a fact not stated in the bill, unless it is put in issue by his answer. Powys v. Mansfield, 6 Sim. 565.

On a bill filed to set aside the sale of an estate on the ground of fraud practised by the defendant on the plaintiff, the plaintiff is not at liberty to give evidence of the defendant's having stood in the relation of his attorney at the time of the sale, with the view of raising an inference that he had acted fraudulently by taking advantage of that character, the fact of his having been such an attorney not being stated, nor put in issue by the bill. Williams v. Llewellyn, 2 Y. & J. 68.

A decree directed an inquiry whether certain younger children had made any and what assignments of their shares, and under what circumstances. One of the defendants, claiming to be an assignee of a share, carried into the master's office a state of facts setting forth the assignment under which he claimed. A co-defendant (one of the children) carried in a counter state of facts, impeaching the assignment as having been executed for an inadequate consideration, and without legal assistance. A motion to suppress interrogatories filed in support of the counter state of facts, as relating to the question in dispute between co-defendants only, and not in issue in the cause, was refused. Lennard v. Curzon, 1 De G. & Sm. 350.

Whether evidence of conversations with the parties, or those under whom they claim, which are not specifically put in issue by the pleadings, will be received, is a question to be decided according to the circumstances of each case, and there is no inflexible rule upon the subject. Incorporated Society v. Rose, 3 Ir. Eq. R. 257.

Where the fact of bankruptcy is not put in issue by the bill, evidence of it is not admissible at the hearing of the cause. Archbold v. Charitable Bequests Commissioners for Ireland, 2 H. L. Cas. 440.

A party after failing in the defence set up by his answer, cannot be permitted to try another defence depending on matters not put in issue by the answer, and which, therefore, his adversary had no means of disproving. Persse v. Persse, 7 Cl. & F. 279; West. 110.

A defendant cannot avail himself of a matter in defence which appears only upon his evidence, and was not stated in his answer. But if plaintiff, upon his own case, is not entitled to the relief prayed, the court will not assist him. Stanley v. Robinson, 1 Russ. & M. 527.

In a suit for the administration of a trust, where the parties beneficially interested are before the court, the trustees, although plaintiffs, ought not to enter into evidence as to facts relating to or shewing the respective rights of the cestuis que trustent. Girdlestone v. Creed, 8 Hare, 208.

Parol evidence cannot be received of acts which are not properly put in issue by the pleadings. Attwood v. Small, 6 Cl. & F. 232; 2 Jur. 200, 226, 246.

It is a rule to be observed in all courts, that a party complaining of an injury and suing for redress, can recover only secundum allegata et probata. Malcolmson v. Clayton, 13 Moore, P. C. 198.

Circumstances allowed to be proved by evidence by defendant, which he had not put in issue by his answer. Hodgson v. Thornton, 1 Eq. Abr. 228.

Documents not put in Issue.]—A. brought bill against B. for specific performance of covenants in a lease, and particularly a covenant to leave a certain quantity of alum on the premises at end of term; B., by answer, insisted covenant was not intended to be performed, but at hearing produced a paper, purporting to be a receipt for the alum from the lessor:—Court held, that no regard ought to be paid to this paper, not only because it had a suspicious appearance in itself, but because it was not insisted on in the pleadings. Ward v. Buckingham (Duke), 3 Bro. P. C. 581.

A party having been examined as a witness in a former cause:—Held, that his depositions were sufficiently put in issue to entitle them to be read by a general reference in the pleading to his deposition. Houlditch v. Donegal (Marquis), 1 Moll. 366.

Documentary evidence may be read at the hearing, although not put in issue by the pleadings. Fitzgerald v. O'Flaherty, 2 Moll. 394.

It is not the rule that no letter nor document can be produced in evidence that has not been put in issue by the pleadings. A party may prove his case by parol, or by written evidence, and is under no restriction in respect of one more than the other: evidence of substantive extrinsic facts, therefore, whether parol or documentary, need not be put in issue; but evidence of admissions of conclusions of law must be put in issue, and that equally, whether such admissions be in writing or otherwise. S. C., 1 Moll. 350. S. P., Blacker v. Phepoe, 1 Moll. 354.

In a bill for an account, the plaintiff, in general terms, charged errors in the accounts between him and the defendant; and stated, that they appeared in a certain report of an accountant; but the bill did not state the report, nor specifically point out the errors:—Held, that the plaintiff could not, on this record, give evidence of the report, or of such errors; and that notwithstanding the defendant had stated the report in his cross-bill, and had explained some of the errors. Shepherd v. Morris, 4 Beav. 252.

A plaintiff claiming under a deed, not stated particularly by him, and not particularly and explicitly admitted by the defendant, cannot be entitled to a judgment or decree founded upon such deed against such defendant, without producing and proving such deed. Berney v. Moore, 2 Ridgw. P. C. 323.

Documentary evidence of confessions is not inadmissible in equity, merely because it is not specifically put in issue. M'Mahon v. Burchell, 2 Ph. 127; Coop. C. C. 457. Varying 3 Hare, 97.

Any documents which could be used at law as admissions to prove an agreement pleaded, may be used in evidence in equity for the same purpose, though not notice, in the bill; subject to inquiry, if the defendant be taken by surprise; but such a mode of proving a case may effect the costs of the suit. Crosbie v. Thompson, 11 Ir. Eq. R. 404.

A document not in issue by the bill, and a motion for the introduction of which, by amendment, has been refused, cannot be used at the hearing. Swift v. M'Tiernan, 11 Ir. Eq. R. 602.

A deed not mentioned in the pleadings, some of the facts referred to in which were sworn to in one answer and denied in the other and also in the bill, was permitted to be read as part of the transaction spoken to by a witness who was examined, and who was an attesting witness to it. Jillard v. Edgar, 13 Jur. 1114.

To warrant the reading of a document at the re-hearing, it must have been put in issue by the pleadings. It is not sufficient to have put in issue the fact intended to be proved by the document. Lysaght v. Callinan, Hayes, 141.

An application by relators (after the information set down for hearing, upon notice of motion) to be at liberty to produce and read, at the hearing, as evidence, a will not stated in the pleadings, refused; as, if evidence, the party might use it, and if not, it could not be made evidence by interlocutory motion. Att.-Gen. v. Fishmongers Co., 4 Myl. & C. 1. See S. C., C. P. Cooper, 385.

Where, in a suit to raise an incumbrance, a defendant omitted to put in issue by her answer a deed of a certain date, under which she claimed an annuity, and upon motion founded upon an affidavit stating that the omission arose from inadvertence, but not stating any of the circumstances under which the deed was executed, she obtained an order that she should be at liberty to prove the deed, and to rely on it at the hearing, although it had not been put in issue in the cause:—Held, that under that order, evidence that the deed was executed upon a day different from that on which it bore date was inadmissible at the hearing; and that the evidence of its execution merely could then be received. The court, however, inserted in the decree a declaration that the defendant should be at liberty to rely, before the master, on the deed in relation to such rights as she might claim. Ramsay v. Huffington, 13 Ir. Eq. R. 185.

—— Letters.]—Letters of the plaintiff in the hands of the defendant may be proved and used as evidence of facts, although not as naked admissions, without being put in issue. Houlditch v. Donegal (Marquis), 1 Moll. 364.

Letters proved in the cause, but not referred to in the pleadings, are inadmissible in evidence, even on the question of costs. Whitley v. Martin, 3 Beav. 226.

Letters proved, but not particularly mentioned in the pleadings, are not therefore admissible: but if the production of such evidence would operate as a surprise on the other party, the court will not give effect to it without giving the party to be affected by it an opportunity of controverting it. Malcolm v. Scott, 3 Hare, 39. And see S. C., 14 L. J., Ch. 57; 8 Jur. 1059.

Specific Allegation—Notice through Solicitor.]—A statement in a bill "that the defendant was aware and had notice of," &c., is sufficiently specific to let in evidence that the defendant had notice through his solicitor. McMahon v. McElroy, Ir. R. 5 Eq. 1.

Relevancy—Evidence as to Collateral Facts.]—In an action brought in respect of a nuisance alleged to be caused by the construction and maintenance of a hospital for infectious diseases, the plaintiffs proposed to call evidence as to the effect of other similar hospitals on the surrounding neighbourhoods. Per Lord Selborne, L.C.: Evidence of facts by which the effect (or absence of effect) of such hospitals could be either positively or approximately ascertained, would be admissible and material. Metropolitan Asylum District Managers v. Hill, 47 L. T. 29—H. L. (E.)

Per Lord Watson: Evidence relating to collateral facts is only admissible when such facts will, if established, afford a reasonable presumption as to the matter in dispute, and when such evidence is reasonably conclusive. Ib.

Proof by other Instances.]—To prove that a publican was supplied with good beer by a brewer, it is not sufficient merely to shew that the beer supplied at that time to other publicans was good. Holcombe v. Hewson, 2 Camp. 391; 11 R. R. 746.

On the trial of an action by the plaintiff against the defendant for work done and materials supplied to certain houses on the orders of a third person, the defendant denying that he is the owner of the houses or the real principal, evidence is admissible that other persons had received orders from the defendant to do work at the same houses, without shewing that the plaintiff knew of these orders at the time he did his work. Woodward v. Buchanan, 39 L. J., Q. B. 71; L. R. 5 Q. B. 285; 22 L. T. 123.

In a question between landlord and tenant, whether rent was payable quarterly or half-yearly, evidence of the mode in which other tenants paid is not admissible. Carter v. Pryke, 1 Peake, 130.

Where the defendant defamed the plaintiff in his business of a schoolmaster, by stating that the scholars were ill fed and badly lodged, and which he justified as being true; to rebut which the plaintiff's counsel asked, how boys were treated at another particular school, or as to the manner of their education:—Held, that such questions were improperly put, and were not required to be answered. Boldron v. Widdows, 1 Car. & P. 65.

If, in an action for goods sold, the question is whether the credit was given to the defendant's wife or to her father, evidence that other persons had given credit to the father is not receivable. Smith v. Wilkins, 6 Car. & P. 180.

Where in an action it is required to be proved that L. had committed a felony by hiring a pianoforte, and selling it immediately:—Held, that evidence could not be given respecting optical instruments which were alleged to have been obtained by L. from another tradesman. Wilton v. Edwards, 6 Car. & P. 677.

If A. and B. rent a ready furnished bedroom jointly, and both are taken into custody in the bedroom, charged with jointly stealing feathers from the bed, and, on a search, pawnbroker's duplicates are found on one of them:—Held, that these duplicates are receivable in evidence against the other, on a plea of justification to an action for false imprisonment brought by that other. Atkinson v. Warne, 6 Car. & P. 687.

Where special damage is alleged, that C. declined to deal with the plaintiff because his bill was dishonoured, the letter C. received announcing to him the dishonour of the bill may be read in evidence to shew that he received such a letter, but is no proof of the statements contained in it:—Held, also, that C. might be asked questions, to shew that other causes in addition to the letter induced him to cease from dealing with the plaintiff, and that other witnesses might be asked whether other bills of the plaintiff's had not been dishonoured, but that they could not be asked as to any particular bill without its being produced. Whitaker v. Bank of England, 6 Car. & P. 700.

On an issue ordered, whether the bankrupt had lost 20*l.* on a particular day, evidence cannot be given of gaming on another day. Fife, Ex parte. Phibbs, In re, 2 Mont. & Ayr. 577.

—— Custom at School.]—In an action for a quarter's salary for taking away a child from a school without a quarter's notice, evidence was given, on the part of the plaintiff, that a prospectus was given to the defendant when he came to inquire the terms of the school, and that it was usual to send a prospectus of the terms of the school with each child who went home for the holidays; and it was proposed on the part of the defendant, to call a witness to prove that she, the witness, had taken her children from the plaintiff's school without notice, and without being called on for the quarter's salary:—Held, that this evidence was not admissible; but that the witness might be asked whether she had ever received any prospectus when the children came home for the holidays. Delamotte v. Lane, 9 Car. & P. 261.

—— Choking up of Harbours.]—Where the question was whether an embankment had the effect of choking up a harbour:—Held, that evidence might be given that other harbours similarly situated, where there were no embankments, had begun to be choked and filled up. Folkes v. Chadd, 3 Dougl. 157.

—— Nuisance — Rubbish by Roadside.]—The plaintiff's horse shied at a heap of road-scrapings placed by the defendants by the side of a public highway on land belonging to them, and personal injuries were, in consequence, sustained by the plaintiff's wife. Upon the trial of an action brought in respect of such injuries, evidence that other horses had shied at the same heap on the same day was rejected, and judgment of non-suit entered. Upon motion for a new trial:—Held, that such evidence was admissible; for if the heap was of such a nature as to be likely to cause horses to shy, it was a public nuisance, and, accordingly, whatever shewed it to be likely to cause horses to shy was evidence for the plaintiffs. Brown v. Eastern and Midlands Ry., 58 L. J. Q. B. 212; 22 Q. B. D. 391—C. A. Affirming 60 L. T. 266; 53 J. P. 342.

—— Customs of different Manors.]—Where in each of several manors belonging to the same lord, and part of the same district, it appeared that there was a class of tenants answering the same description, and to whom their tenements were granted by similar words:—Held, that evidence of what rights had been enjoyed by those tenants in one manor might be received to shew what were their rights in another. Rowe v. Brenton, 8 B. & C. 758; 3 M. & Ry. 143.

Upon a question as to right of minerals between the lord of the manor and his tenants holding by a peculiar customary tenure pervading a district which has several manors held for many centuries by the same lord in capite, and during that time governed and administered by persons acting under one commission, issued by the lord at stated intervals, and extending to the whole district, acts of ownership exercised over the minerals in a customary tenement in another manor within the district are admissible, although within the time of legal memory the manors may have been held by different lords and under a subject. Ib.

Where, in an action for digging gravel on the waste, the defendant justifies under an usage for the tenant of a particular copyhold tenement to dig gravel, he will not be allowed to give evidence of a general usage to that effect in all the copyholders. Wilson v. Page, 4 Esp. 71.

Where, in an action for pulling down a wall, the issue was, whether certain common land was the soil and freehold of the lord of the manor, on which the plaintiff was entitled to a right of common, or the soil and freehold of the plaintiff:—Held, that leases of minerals granted by the lord to other persons, in other parts of the uninclosed waste land, were not receivable, unless it was first shewn that the locus in quo formed part of one entire waste to which those leases were applicable. Tyrwhitt v. Wynne, 2 B. & Ald. 554; 21 R. R. 398.

In a dispute between lord of manor and his tenants as to a custom, deeds between lords and tenants of neighbouring manors are admissible evidence as to custom. Lowther v. Raw, 2 Bro. P. C. 451.

—— Particular Parish.]—Where to an action quare clausum fregit, the defendant pleaded a custom applicable to all farms within the parish which were not exempt by special agreement or otherwise, and the plaintiff traversed the custom generally:—Held, that it was not competent for him to prove that his particular farm was exempted by special agreement or otherwise. Evans v. Ogilvie, 2 Y. & J. 79.

—— Similar Contracts.] — In an action for goods sold and delivered, the question being whether the sale was absolute or subject to a condition:—Held, that it was not competent to the defendant to call witnesses to prove that the plaintiff had made contracts with other persons, subject to the condition suggested. Hollingham v. Head, 4 C. B. (N.S.) 388; 27 L. J., C. P. 241; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 379; 6 W. R. 442.

But the judge allowed the plaintiff to be asked, on cross-examination, whether he had not made such conditional contracts with others, with a view of testing his credit or the accuracy of his memory. Ib.

Credit — To whom given.] — In an action brought by a contributor to a newspaper against one who was registered as the sole proprietor, his counsel, for the mere purpose of proving an admission by one S., that he was the real proprietor, proposed, on cross-examination, to ask the editor, whether he had not agreed with S. that the whole expense of editing the paper should not exceed a certain sum. The judge ruled the question to be irrelevant, and refused to allow it to be put:—Held, that it was properly disallowed. Watts v. Lyons, 7 Scott (N.R.) 1000; 6 Man. & G. 1047; 13 L. J., C. P. 91.

The contest in a cause was, as to whether the order which formed the subject-matter of the action was given by A. as a principal, or as an agent for the defendant. A. was called as a witness by the defendant, and he stated that he gave the order as principal. He was then asked the following question: "At the time of your bankruptcy how was the balance of account between you and the defendant?" And he answered, "The balance was against me to a considerable amount":—Held, admissible. Gerish v. Chartier, 1 C. B. 13; 14 L. J., C. P. 84; 9 Jur. 69.

In an action for goods sold, the question being whether the credit was given to the defendant or to her uncle, who lived in the same house, and who had brought the plaintiff on one occasion a bill of exchange for the sum due on account:—Held, that the plaintiff could not be asked what the uncle said to the plaintiff on that occasion. Justice v. Elstob, 1 F. & F. 256.

Nor could the plaintiff be asked what the uncle had said, nor what the servants at the house said on occasions when applications were made on the part of the plaintiff for money. But evidence was admitted that the defendant had been sued on the bill. Ib.

In such an action evidence was admitted on the part of the plaintiff to shew that the defendant, and not the uncle, was rated as occupier of the house. Ib.

In an action for goods sold, the question being whether credit had been given to the defendant or to a third party, a letter relating to the sale, written by the plaintiff to his agent, who made the contract, and not communicated to the defendant, is inadmissible for the plaintiff. Smethurst v. Taylor, 15 M. & W. 545; 14 L. J., Ex. 86.

Act of Party to Fraud.]—In trover by the assignees of a bankrupt, it appeared that the goods had been assigned by the bankrupt, to B., who assigned them to C., to whom the purchase-money, as was contended, was advanced by the plaintiff, to whom C. subsequently transferred the goods by bill of sale. In order to shew that these transactions were fictitious, evidence was adduced, and a question was asked, whether C. had not made a claim to those goods after the bankruptcy:—Held, that the question could properly be asked, as the claim was an act done by one of the parties to the alleged fraud. Ford v. Elliott, 4 Ex. 78; 18 L. J., Ex. 447.

Circumstantial Evidence.]—In dealing with circumstantial evidence, we have to consider the weight which is to be given to the united force of all the circumstances put together. You may have a ray of light so feeble that by itself it will do little to elucidate a dark corner. But, on the other hand, you may have a number of rays, each of them insufficient, but all converging and brought to bear upon the same point, and, when united, producing a body of illumination which will clear away the darkness which you are endeavouring to dispel—per Lord Cairns. Belhaven and Stenton Peerage, 1 App. Cas. 278.

Circumstances forming pieces of evidence, which, taken, separately, are not conclusive, cannot become so by being united. Hume v. Burton, 1 Ridgw. P. C. 210.

Knowledge of Lunacy.]—Upon the trial of an action for the recovery of a sum of money paid as a deposit on the purchase of an estate upon the ground that the plaintiff was, at the time of the transaction, a lunatic, and incapable of contracting, which the defendant knew, the sole issue being whether, at the time of such transaction, the defendant knew the fact of the plaintiff's insanity:—Held, that the conduct of the plaintiff upon various occasions, both before and after the date of the transaction, was admissible to shew that the plaintiff's malady was of such a character as would make itself apparent to the defendant at the time he was dealing with him. Beavan v. M'Donnell, 10 Ex. 184; 23 L. J., Ex. 326.

Accident — Statements of Bystanders.] — A married woman was a passenger in an omnibus, and whilst on her journey a concussion took place, which nearly upset the omnibus, and threw her from her seat, and caused her serious injury. Upon her getting out, one of the other passengers was standing outside; and upon the trial it was proposed by her counsel to ask her if anything was then said by this person about the accident, and if the omnibus conductor made any reply. This being objected to, the judge ruled that it could not be put, and as there was no other evidence of how the accident happened, she was nonsuited. Had the question been put it would have been as follows:—"Did anyone say anything about the accident?" To which the reply would have been—"A bystander who had got out of the omnibus, said, alluding to the driver, 'By Jove, this fellow's conduct must be reported!'" whereupon the conductor said, "Sir, he has been reported, for he has been off the points five or six times to-day: he is a new driver":—Held, that the question was properly rejected, for it did not form part of the res gestæ, nor, if it did, did it explain the actual cause of the collision. Agassiz v. London Tramway Co., 27 L. T. 492; 21 W. R. 199.

c. Burden of Proof.

Proof of Issue.]—To prove an issue it is not necessary to prove every fact or conclusion on which the issue depends. From every fact proved legitimate and reasonable inferences may be drawn. In deciding, therefore, whether there is evidence to go to the jury, the court has only to consider whether, assuming the facts proved to be true, and adding to them the inferences which a jury might reasonably draw from them, there is sufficient evidence to support the issue. Parfitt v. Lawless, 41 L. J., P. 68; L. R. 2 P. 462; 27 L. T. 215; 21 W. R. 200.

Affirmative of the Issue.]—The party upon whom the affirmative of an issue lies, must call the witness who proves that affirmative. Palmer, Ex parte and In re, 1 Deac. & C. 372.

A plea of purchaser without notice is a bar to the discovery, as well as the relief; but if not insisted on by the defendant, he must answer, and confess the notice, or the plaintiff may except to the answer; but if he does not except, the affirmative of proving notice will be on him, comme semble. Eyre v. Dolphin, 2 Ball & B. 303; 12 R. R. 94.

Presumption.]—Where the law presumes the affirmative of any fact, the negative of such fact must be proved by the party averring it in pleading. So, where any act is required to be done by one, the omission of which would make him guilty of a criminal neglect of duty, the law presumes the affirmative, and throws the burden of proving the negative on the party who insists on it. Williams v. East India Co., 3 East, 192; 6 R. R. 589.

Where the issue is on the life or death of a person once existing, the proof lies on the party asserting the death. Wilson v. Hodges, 2 East, 312; 6 R. R. 427.

Where a servant is in the habit of receiving sums of money for his master, and by the established course of dealing the servant pays these over to the master from time to time, without any written vouchers passing between them, the presumption of law is, that all sums so received by the servant are regularly paid over to the master. Evans v. Birch, 3 Camp. 10.

Where there is primâ facie evidence of any right existing in any person, the onus probandi is always upon the person calling such right in question. Banbury Peerage, 1 Sim. & S. 155; 24 R. R. 159.

Where a creditor holds his debtor's title-deed, with a written and signed proposal of the debtor that he shall hold that deed as security for the debt, a strong presumption arises in favour of the creditor that he holds the deed for the purpose mentioned in the proposal, and the burden of proof lies on the debtor, who disputes the deposit by way of security. Chapman v. Chapman (13 Beav. 308) observed upon. Burgess v. Moxon, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1059.

And see supra, II.

On Plaintiff or Defendant.]—A plaintiff is to prove his case to the satisfaction of the jury; and if he leaves it doubtful, either from the circumstances which surround it, or from the character of his witness, the defendant is entitled to the verdict. Long v. Hitchcock, 9 Car. & P. 629.

The onus may at the hearing be thrown on a defendant, which, on interlocutory motion for injunction, lies on the plaintiff. Welch v. Knott, 4 Jur. (N.S.) 330.

Appeal.]—On appeal, the burden lies upon the appellant. He must shew the order appealed against to be clearly wrong. Lloyd v. Trimleston (Lord), 2 Moll. 81.

Fulfilment of Condition.]—Where G. S., being in partnership with J. S., signed an agreement on behalf of both, to pay the plaintiff 100*l.* in consideration of his not consigning any herrings of a particular description to the London market, and in particular to the house of M., for the space of one year; and the plaintiff declared against the executors of J. S., who had survived G. S., and averred that he had not consigned any herrings to the London market, and in particular to the house of M., within the year; and in support of such averment, proved that he had not consigned any herrings to that house:—Held, that such evidence was sufficient to entitle him to recover, as it was incumbent on the defendants to have shewn that herrings had been consigned by the plaintiff to the London market. Calder v. Rutherford, 3 Br. & B. 302; 7 Moore, 158.

In assumpsit for refusing to allow plaintiff to proceed with certain work according to agreement, defendant pleaded that the work was to be done to the satisfaction of A.; and that part of it which was done was not done to his satisfaction, and that, therefore, he discharged the plaintiff:—Held, that upon this issue it was not necessary for defendant to call A. Doe v. Roberts, 4 Doug. 306.

Validity of Deed.]—Where an instrument is shewn to be false, it lies upon the party claiming benefit under it to support it. Watt v. Grove, 2 Sch. & Lef. 502.

Acting on Deed not duly executed.]—The onus of shewing that both parties had acted on the terms of an agreement which had not been, in due form, executed by either, lies upon the party who rests his case on that circumstance. Brogden v. Metropolitan Ry., 2 App. Cas. 666.

Undue Influence.]—If the feme covert insists upon the exercise of undue influence by the husband, she must prove it, and it is for the plaintiff to prove a negative. Field v. Sowle, 4 Russ. 112.

Fraud.]—In a suit by principal against agent, involving charges of fraud against the defendant, the latter was held to lie under the burden of disproving several particulars of the plaintiff's case, although the truth of those particulars was not directly proved, but rested on circumstantial evidence only. Barker v. Harrison, 2 Coll. 546.

Discharge.]—A bond from the owner of an estate charged, to the person entitled to the charge, who signed a receipt for the amount, is not a substitution for the charge, but merely an additional security, and the estate not thereby released; it is not incumbent on the creditor to prove that it was not the intention of the parties to this transaction that the bond should be a substitution of the charge, but it is on the owner of the estate to make out that the estate is discharged. Saunders v. Leslie, 2 Ball & B. 509; 12 R. R. 114.

Suit to set aside Release of Equity of Redemption—Misrepresentation.]—In a suit by the respondent (lately an insolvent) to set aside on the ground of misrepresentation or mutual mistake a release by the official assignee of the respondent's equity of redemption of a certain mortgage, for accounts against the appellants, the mortgagees, and in effect to have the benefit of a subsequent resale by the releasee's purchaser, it appeared that the official assignee had in the release admitted the truth of the representations made to him, and that the respondent had thereafter taken a conveyance from him of all the estate vested in him under the insolvency:—Held, that the onus was upon the respondent, who was primâ facie bound by the admissions under seal of his vendor to prove the falsehood of the representations, and not upon the appellants to establish their truth. Melbourne Banking Corporation v. Brougham, 51 L. J., P. C. 65; 7 App. Cas. 307; 46 L. T. 603; 30 W. R. 925—P. C.

Indemnity.]—Two ladies intrusted much of the management of their affairs to A., who was not a professional person. In the course of business, A. became bound with them in a bond for 10,000*l.* given on their account. On the same day they executed a bond to A. for 12,000*l.* The survivor of the two ladies afterwards, by her will, left a legacy of 2,000*l.* to A. The bond for 12,000*l.* was, on the face of it, a simple money bond, unless impeached by evidence which shewed that it was partly for indemnity, and that the burden of proving it to be an indemnity bond lay on the party impeaching the bond. Nicol v. Vaughan, 1 Cl. & F. 49; 6 Bligh (N.S.) 104.

Legitimacy.]—The privilege to husband or wife protecting them from answering any questions as to access or non-access applies to a case where the child, whose legitimacy is disputed, is born only three months after marriage. In such a case where the husband takes no step to repudiate the child, the burden of proof lies upon those who dispute its legitimacy. Anon. v. Anon., 23 Beav. 273.

Survivorship.]—The testator and his wife were shipwrecked and drowned at sea, one wave sweeping both of them together into the water, after which they were never seen again; on the question being raised between the next of kin of the testator and J. W., who claimed under the limitations of the will:—Held, first, that the onus of proof that the husband was the survivor was upon J. W. Wing v. Angrave, 8 H. L. Cas. 183; 30 L. J., Ch. 65. S. C., sub nom. Underwood v. Wing, 19 Beav. 459; 4 De G. M. & G. 633; 3 Eq. R. 794; 24 L. J., Ch. 293; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 159; 2 W. R. 641.

Under Sailing Rules.]—If a ship bound to keep her course, under the 18th sailing rule of 1863 justifies her departure from that rule under the 19th rule, she takes upon herself the obligation of shewing not only that her departure was at the time it took place necessary, in order to avoid immediate danger; but also that the course adopted by her was reasonably calculated to avoid that danger. The Agra and Elizabeth Jenkins, 4 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 435; 36 L. J., Adm. 16; L. R. 1 P. C. 501; 16 L. T. 755; 16 W. R. 735.

Accounts—Prima Facie Evidence.]—See supra, col. 716.

Usury.]—Distinction between a charge of usury in bankruptcy and in courts of law and equity; where it must be established by legal evidence, or in equity by admission, with an offer to pay the real debt. In bankruptcy the proof is imposed upon the creditor; and if it fails, the debt is wholly expunged. Scrivener, Ex parte, 3 Ves. & B. 14.

In Particular Cases.]—See SPECIFIC TITLES.

d. In Reply.

Evidence in Reply to Counter-claim.]—The issues of fact on the claim and the counter-claim being identical:—Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to adduce fresh evidence in reply on the counter-claim. Green v. Sevin, 13 Ch. D. 589; 41 L. T. 724.

When allowed to rebut Defendant's Evidence.]—The plaintiff rested his case partly on an alleged conversation between himself and the defendant at the plaintiff's house on a certain evening in the presence of plaintiff's wife. Plaintiff's wife was cross-examined as to the substance of the alleged conversation, but not as to the fact of the defendant having been in the house on that occasion. The defendant having in his examination in chief denied that he was in the house at all on the evening in question; leave was given to the plaintiff, after the evidence on both sides was closed, to call further evidence to rebut the defendant's denial. Rogers v. Manley, 42 L. T. 585.

In an action to restrain the defendants from erecting a urinal in Old Burlington Mews, the statement of claim alleged that the soil of the mews was vested in and was the absolute property of three of the plaintiffs. The statement of defence did not admit this allegation, but alleged that the mews had long been a highway dedicated to the public, and belonged to the parish as one of the public streets thereof. At the trial of the action several witnesses were examined on both sides; and at the close of the defendants' evidence the plaintiffs applied for leave to call evidence in reply, to shew that the soil of the mews had not been dedicated to the public:—Held, that as the plaintiffs were distinctly apprised by the pleadings before the trial of the action what the nature of the defence would be, the application must be refused. Vernon v. St. James' Vestry, 49 L. J., Ch. 130; 42 L. T. 82.

Mere Confirmation.]—Any evidence that is a confirmation of the original case cannot be given as evidence in reply; and the only evidence that can be given in reply is that which goes to cut down the defence, without being any confirmation of the original case. Rex v. Hilditch, 5 Car. & P. 299.

In a claim of peerage, where evidence has been produced for the purpose of establishing a certain point, the party who has produced it will not, should the Crown call evidence of a contradictory kind, be allowed to produce additional evidence confirmatory of the first. Before the claimant's junior counsel summed up the evidence previously to the opening of the case on the part of the Crown, the counsel for the Crown were required by the committee to declare whether they would or would not call evidence on a question of foreign law, so as to enable the claimant's counsel to determine whether they would then (as they could not afterwards) produce any additional evidence on that question. Sussex Peerage, 11 Cl. & F. 85; 8 Jur. 793.

Contradiction.]—Where, in an action to try the right to work certain mines, the plaintiff at the trial relies upon his possession, and then calls upon the other side to shew title, and afterwards goes into evidence to shew his own title, the defendant may go into evidence to rebut such title. Rowe v. Brenton, 3 M. & Ry. 301; 8 B. & C. 758.

In ejectment to recover garden ground, it was proved by the plaintiff that the defendant had been let into possession of the garden by M., who had paid rent to the plaintiff. The defendant's case was, that M. had rented a part of his garden of the plaintiff, and that that had been given up, and that the defendant had the residue of the garden, which was now in dispute, devised to him by his father's will in 1791. The plaintiff proposed to give evidence in reply, to shew that from 1794 the plaintiff and his father received rent for the piece of ground in question:—Held, receivable. Doe d. Sturt v. Mobbs, Car. & M. 1.

A plaintiff in an action gave as confirmatory evidence of the defendant having committed the tort proved at Layton, proof that he was seen near the spot at the time in question; and the defendant called witnesses who swore that the defendant was at Richmond at the time. The plaintiff was allowed to give in reply additional evidence of the defendant being at Layton, such evidence being a direct contradiction of the new fact of the defendant being at Richmond. Briggs v. Aynsworth, 2 M. & Rob. 168.

Declarations.]—In an action for an infringement of a patent taken out in 1849, the defendant, in support of a plea that the invention was not new, gave evidence that O., who was dead, had in 1846 used a process identical with that in the patent. On the cross-examination of the witnesses it appeared that, if O. used the invention, and sold the product before the date of the patent, it was only in very small quantities, and that it was not brought into general use; and one of the witnesses was asked in cross-examination whether O. had not sold some of the product to S., and said he had. The plaintiff in reply called S., who gave evidence that in 1850 or 1851, O. sold him a small quantity of the product, and at the time of the sale said that it was a new article, that he did not wish it to be publicly known, and that he would sell him all he could manufacture:—Held, that evidence of what O. said at the time of that sale was not admissible in reply, as it would not have been admissible in chief on an issue whether O., before 1849, used the invention. Hyde v. Palmer, 3 B. & S. 657; 32 L. J., Q. B. 126; 11 W. R. 433.

Action for timber sold and delivered. The plaintiff proved that the timber was supplied by him, upon the order of the defendant, for finishing some houses; and the defence was, that the houses belonged to F., and that the plaintiff had contracted with the defendant as agent of F.:—Held, that the plaintiff could not give, in reply, evidence of declarations by the defendant that the houses were his, because such evidence went to the very point in question between the parties. Darch v. Toser, 13 Jur. 959.

Recall of Plaintiff's Witness—Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, s. 23.]—Where a defendant, who claimed to be the owner of a mill, denied on cross-examination that he had ever stated that he was tenant only, the plaintiff was allowed, under the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 125), s. 23, to call a witness to prove that on a certain occasion the defendant had described himself as such, though the same witness had previously been called and examined. Sykes v. Haig, 44 L. T. 57.

Jurisdiction of Judge to allow further Evidence.]—A judge may at any period in a case allow further evidence to be called by either party for his own satisfaction, even though it is doubtful whether it is admissible on the request of the party desiring it as of right. Budd v. Davison, 29 W. R. 192.

Surprise.]—Where a party is taken by surprise by a point made against him at the hearing, the judge may, if he thinks right, at any stage of the trial allow him to produce rebutting evidence; and if such permission is refused, the Court of Appeal will, in a proper case, permit the fresh evidence to be taken on the appeal. Bigsby v. Dickinson, 46 L. J., Ch. 280; 4 Ch. D. 24; 35 L. T. 679; 25 W. R. 89—C. A.

In a suit for an injunction to restrain a nuisance caused by a chemical manufacture, the plaintiff's counsel applied at the close of his speech for liberty to adduce evidence to explain (as the plaintiff's witnesses had had no opportunity of doing) certain evidence of the defendant's witnesses as to noxious vapours arising from a material (asphalt) stated to be used in the manufacture of varnish made by the plaintiff, and to shew that the word "asphalt" had a double meaning:—Held, that the evidence should be admitted. Ib.

e. Summing up.

Under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125, s. 18.]—Under this enactment counsel who has not announced his intention to adduce evidence, in consequence of which the party who began sums up his case, cannot be allowed afterwards to alter his mind and adduce evidence. Darby v. Ouseley, 1 H. & N. 1; 25 L. J., Ex. 227; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 497; 6 W. R. 463.

The right of the party who begins, to sum up the evidence at the trial, is confined to the case where the judge holds that there is evidence to go to the jury. Hodges v. Ancrum, 11 Ex. 214; 24 L. J., Ex. 257; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 547; 3 W. R. 518.

After the counsel for the plaintiff had commenced his summing up, the defendant was allowed to be called. Rockcliffe v. Pearce, 1 F. & F. 300.

The defendant's counsel, in addressing the court a second time after calling evidence, has only a right to sum up that evidence on his own side, and not to comment generally on the case. Gilford v. Davis, 2 F. & F. 23.

Order.]—Where, at the trial of an action with witnesses, the leading counsel has opened his case, and put in his evidence, either the leading counsel or his junior may sum up the evidence, but so that only one counsel shall be heard after the evidence has been put in. Metzler v. Wood, 47 L. J., Ch. 139; 37 L. T. 523; 26 W. R. 125.

Mistake by Judge.]—If a judge mistakes the evidence in summing up a case, the party complaining should correct the misstatement at the time, as a mistake in a matter of fact, which is no ground for a new trial on the ground of misdirection. Payne v. Ibbotson, 27 L. J., Ex. 341.

2. Where Evidence in Writing.

How proved.]—The circumstances which are necessary to make a document evidence must be proved aliunde, and cannot be gathered from the document itself. Davis v. Morgan, 1 C. & J. 587; 1 Tyr. 457; 9 L. J. (O.S.) Ex. 153.

In an action for use and occupation, one of the plaintiff's witnesses, on cross-examination, said that he had heard from the plaintiff's attorney that there was an agreement in writing:—Held, that this was no evidence of the existence of an agreement, so as to render its production by the plaintiff necessary. Watson v. King, 3 C. B. 608.

C., having applied for shares in a company, received a letter of allotment, and thereupon paid a deposit into the banking-house of the company, and received the following document:—"London and Westminster Water Company:—London, Feb. 8, 1841. Received 100*l*., to be placed to the account of W. C., T. D., J. P. and J. W. For Messrs. Jones, Lloyd & Co., 100*l*.—A. P. This receipt not transferrable. The party to whom these shares are allotted is requested to attend immediately at the offices of the company, No. 7, St. Martin's-lane, Trafalgar-square, with this receipt, to sign the parliamentary contract, when the receipt will be exchanged for the shares":—Held, in an action brought by C. against one of the directors to recover his deposit, in consequence of the company abandoning the scheme, that he was bound to produce the letter of allotment, as it shewed the terms of the contract on which the money had been paid. Clarke v. Chaplin, 1 Ex. 26; 16 L. J., Ex. 246. Affirmed 4 Ex. 403—Ex. Ch.

A plaintiff claiming under a deed, not stated particularly by him, and not particularly and explicitly admitted by the defendant, cannot be entitled to a judgment or decree founded upon such deed, against such defendant, without producing and proving such deed. Berney v. Moore, 2 Ridgw. P. C. 323.

An order had been obtained to read, inter alia, the examinations of A. taken before the commissioners under C.'s bankruptcy; they cannot be read unless proved in the cause that there were such examinations so taken. Eade v. Lingood, 1 Atk. 203.

Objection to Reading.]—An objection to the reading of documents, because they have not been proved against the party objecting, must be made when they are tendered; and this rule is equally applicable to the case of a minor as of an adult defendant. Stoughton v. Crosbie, 5 Ir. Eq. R. 451.

Lease.]—In an action against a sheriff for negligence in not levying under a fi. fa., the defence was, that the sheriff had withdrawn on notice from the landlord that rent was due. At the trial the landlord stated that rent was due, but on cross-examination it appeared that the execution debtor held under a lease, which was not produced:—Held, that the fact of rent being due could not be proved without production of the lease, and that the plaintiff was entitled to a verdict. Augustin v. Challis, 1 Ex. 279; 17 L. J., Ex. 73.

A plaintiff declared upon an agreement by the defendant to transfer to him a farm which he (the defendant) held under Lord Sydney, "upon the terms and conditions of the agreement under which the same was held by the defendant under Lord Sydney":—Held, that, in support of his claim to damages for a refusal on the defendant's part to perform the contract, it was not necessary for the plaintiff to produce the agreement under which the defendant held. Wallis v. Littell, 11 C. B. (N.S.) 369; 31 L. J., C. P. 100; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 744; 10 W. R. 192.

Where two leases are set up, you cannot read one of them until you have proved possession under it. Manning v. Lechmere, 1 Atk. 453.

Board and Lodging.]—A witness for the plaintiff, in an action for board and lodging, having stated that he had never heard of an agreement in writing respecting the board and lodging, the agreement was put into his hands, and he was asked by the defendant whether he had seen an agreement respecting the subject-matter of the action; he replied, "Never before I came into court":—Held, that the defendant, if he wished the agreement read, must put it in as his own evidence. Keys v. Harwood, 2 C. B. 905; 15 L. J., C. P. 207.

Bills of Exchange.]—In an action by indorsee of a bill against acceptor, he pleaded only new matter by way of confession and avoidance, but failed to establish the matter of avoidance:—Held, that the plaintiff could not recover interest upon the bill from the date of its maturity, as stated in the declaration, without producing it. Hutton v. Ward, 15 Q. B. 26; 19 L. J., Q. B. 293.

In an action to recover the amount of a cheque, where the defendant does not deny giving the cheque, but pleads that it was given for a gambling transaction, the plaintiff is not bound to make it part of his case, nor to produce it for the purpose of the defendant giving it in evidence, unless he has received notice to produce it. Reeves v. Gambell, 5 N. & M. 433; 1 H. & W. 567.

Where an account for goods sold is settled, and the party gives a bill of exchange for the amount, in an action on it the party cannot go into evidence to impeach the charges in the account. Knox v. Whalley, 1 Esp. 59; and see Bacon v. Chesney, 1 Stark. 192.

Other Contracts.—In an action for the price of goods, supplied under a written contract which referred for the terms of payment to an arrangement in writing, which could not be produced for want of being stamped:—Held, that the plaintiff could not recover, as he could not prove the terms of payment. Delay v. Alcock, 4 El. & Bl. 660; 24 L. J., Q. B. 68; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 498.

In an action for contribution or for money paid upon a written contract, there being evidence of an authority to the plaintiff to enter into it on the part of the defendant, and of the work being done under it, and the money paid; it is not necessary for the plaintiff to put in the contract, at all events if there is evidence of the defendant being informed of and not objecting to the amount. Chappell v. Bray, 6 H. & N. 145; 30 L. J., Ex. 24; 3 L. T. 278; 8 W. R. 17.

A notice to determine an agreement may be received in evidence, though the agreement has not been put in, where such notice has been acted on by both parties. Reg. v. Annett, 1 F. & F. 89.

Practice.]—If counsel, in opening for the plaintiff, reads a letter of the defendant's, merely as introductory to the plaintiff's case, the letter is not to be considered as given in evidence by the plaintiff, but must afterwards be proved by the defendant as part of his own case, if he means to rely upon it. Aliter, if the plaintiff's counsel reads it as part of the plaintiff's case. Willis v. Dyson, 1 Stark. 164.

Whole must be read.]—At the trial of a cause, if the party who offers in evidence a paragraph from a book or a paper reads but a portion of it, the opposite party may insist on the whole being read as the evidence of the party producing it; but if the opposite party means to rely on anything else in the same book or paper relating to the subject-matter he must put it in evidence himself. Darby v. Ouseley, 1 H. & N. 1; 25 L. J., Ex. 227; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 497; 4 W. R. 463. See also Cooke v. Hughes, R. & M. 122.

At law, a party producing a letter or other document in evidence, cannot use it partially, but makes the whole evidence. Boardman v. Jackson, 2 Ball & B. 386.

If the entire of a correspondence be not produced, no reliance ought to be placed upon detached parts of it. Blennerhasset v. Day, 2 Ball & B. 120.

If a party uses a document as evidence in a court of justice, the whole of it will be evidence against him on a subsequent occasion. Hamilton v. Patten, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 341.

In a suit by the assignees of an uncertificated bankrupt, for the recovery of property fraudulently delivered by him to the defendants, the plaintiffs read the examination of one of the defendants taken before the commissioners on the first day, but declined to read the examination taken on the second day: ruled that the whole must be read. A plaintiff cannot read the cross-examination of one of the defendant's witnesses, if the defendant declines to read the examination in chief. The evidence of a bankrupt, which, in one respect, is in his own favour, but in another respect against himself, is receivable. Smith v. Biggs, 5 Sim. 391.

A plaintiff may give in evidence answers to interrogatories exhibited by the defendant in the cause; but if he does so, he cannot object that some of them are not evidence, on account of their appearing to state the contents of written papers. M'Intyre v. Layard, 1 R. & M. 203. S.C., 1 Car. & P. 606.

Admissions in Pleadings.]—Bill setting forth a settlement, and to compel the execution of it by defendant, a trustee; defendant by answer, said that he believed there was such a deed as in the said bill is set forth. At the hearing, plaintiff would have read this deed, though not proved, supposing it to have been confessed by the answer; but the court would not permit it, because the confessing went no farther than what was set forth in the bill, and would not warrant the reading of the deed produced, though it had such clauses in it. Anon, 2 Vent. 361.

A will admitted in answer under which defendant claims, and where nothing turns on it, may be read from the bill, although the answer refers to the will for certainty. Owen v. Jones, 2 Anstr. 505.

A document which is stated in the bill, and which the answer admits and refers to, cannot be read from the bill at the hearing, but must be produced. Cox v. Allingham, Jac. 339.

An admission in an answer of a document as stated in the bill, qualified by a reference to the document itself for greater certainty, will not authorise the reading of the document from the bill. Dowling v. Legh, 9 Ir. Eq. R. 413; 3 Jo. & Lat. 716.

An admission in the answer that the defendant's solicitor wrote a letter "to some such effect as that in bill stated; but for certainty as to the contents thereof, the defendant begs leave to refer thereto, when produced and proved," does not authorise the plaintiff to read the passage in the bill referred to, in order to shew what were the contents of that letter. Kent v. Roberts, 3 Ir. Eq. R. 279.

A deed mentioned in the answer of a defendant is admissible in evidence on a motion for decree against such defendant, without notice of his intention to use it. Semble. Cousins v. Vasey, 9 Hare (App.) xxxi.

The usual reference in a bill to a document itself, part of which alone is stated, does not entitle the plaintiff, on demurrer, to read the parts of the document which are not set out. Harmer v. Gooding, 3 De G. & Sm. 407; 13 Jur. 400.

Deed set out in a defendant's answer made evidence for the plaintiff generally. Att.-Gen. v. Higham, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 634.

—— Document not identified.] — The bill stated a deed which was admitted by answer. On hearing on bill and answer, the plaintiff offered to read a deed corresponding with that stated in the bill, but which had not been identified with it:—Held, that it could not be read. Hughes v. Cowley, 5 Ir. Eq. R. 588.

Onus of producing Document.]—Where a party has made out and closed a primâ facie case, in doing which it does not appear that there was any written agreement, the other side cannot, when they go into their case, and shew that there was a written agreement, throw upon the first party the onus of producing that agreement. Rex v. Padstow (Inhabitants) 4 B. & Ad. 218; 1 N. & M. 9; 2 L. J., M. C. 15.

Production at the Hearing.]—If a plaintiff has proved a document in a defendant's possession, the latter must produce it at the hearing, although he has not been served with an order to that effect. Wheat v. Graham, 7 Sim. 61.

Defendant proved a deed in the cause, and referred to it in his deposition. Plaintiff cannot compel him to produce the deed at the hearing, the reference thereto not making it part of his deposition. Hodson v. Warrington (Earl), 3 P. W. 34.

Document produced by a party, as evidence in his behalf, must be accompanied with proof of the custody whence he derived it, to satisfy court of its authenticity: otherwise it will not be permitted to be read. Randolph v. Gordon, 5 Price 312; 19 R. R. 633.

In a suit to restrain the sale of pirated copies of a print, where the answer did not suggest that the prints complained of were not pirated copies, a decree was made, under the particular circumstances, though the prints which had been exhibited to the witness who proved the offence were not produced at the hearing. Where the plaintiff is entitled to have the injunction made perpetual, the defendant will have to pay the costs of the suit, however trivial the subject matter of the suit may be, if he did not, after the injunction was granted, tender the costs up to that time. Fradella v. Weller, 2 Russ. & M. 247.

It is the duty of the parties to have in court at the hearing the originals of all material documents in the cause. Gallemore v. Gill, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1178.

A document was made an exhibit in the cause, but not produced at the hearing. The signature to it and the contents of it were admitted by the answer:—Held, that it need not be produced at the hearing. M'Gowan v. Smith, 26 L. J., Ch. 8; 4 W. R. 690.

3. Notice to Produce Documents.

See Discovery.

a. When Necessary.

Purpose.]—The principle on which notice to produce a document is required by law, is, merely to give a sufficient opportunity to the opposite party to have the document in court to produce if he likes, and so secure the best evidence of its contents, and, if he does not, to enable his adversary to give secondary evidence. Dwyer v. Collins, 7 Ex. 639; 21 L. J., Ex. 225; 16 Jur. 569.

Therefore, where a party to a suit, or his attorney, has a document with him in court, he may be called on to produce it without previous notice, and, in the event of his refusing, the opposite party may give secondary evidence. Ib.

As Proof of Handwriting.]—In an action on a bill against the acceptor, the acceptance was traversed. No evidence was offered by the plaintiff on this point, but the bill and a letter were produced at the trial, in accordance with a notice by the defendant to produce, in which notice the bill was described as the bill accepted by the defendant, and the letter as being a letter of the defendant's:—Held, that as the jury had an opportunity of comparing the handwriting if they had thought it necessary, there was some evidence of the defendant's handwriting. Beard v. Jackson, 24 W. R. 159.

Action on Bill of Exchange.]—In an action by drawer against acceptor of a bill of exchange he pleaded that, at the time of the acceptance, he was a bankrupt, and indebted to the plaintiff in a certain sum, which debt was provable by the plaintiff under the fiat, and was barred by the defendant's certificate, since obtained; and that the defendant accepted the bill as part payment of the debt due to the plaintiff, in consideration that the plaintiff would prove his debt under the fiat. Replication, that defendant did not accept the bill by way of part payment of any debt provable under the fiat:—Held, that the defendant could not give secondary evidence of the bill, to show that it was accepted under the circumstances alleged, without a notice to produce. Goodered v. Armour, 3 G. & D. 206; 3 Q. B. 956; 12 L. J., Q. B. 56.

In an action on a bill of exchange, where the only issue was, that the acceptance was obtained by fraud and covin, the defendant cannot compel the plaintiff to produce the bill in support of the plea, unless he has given a notice to produce. Lawrence v. Clark, 3 D. & L. 87; 14 M. & W. 250; 15 L. J., Ex. 40.

An examined copy of a letter containing notice of the dishonour of a bill, which is not produced, nor the subject-matter of action, is not admissible without notice to produce the letter sent. Lanauze v. Palmer, M. & M. 31; 31 R. R. 709.

But where notice of the dishonour of a bill of exchange has been given in writing, it is not necessary to give a notice to produce that writing to let in parol evidence of its contents. Swain v. Lewis, 2 C. M. & R. 261; 4 D. P. C. 261; 1 Gale, 182; 5 Tyr. 998; 4 L. J., Ex. 249.

Cheque.]—Assumpsit against drawer of a cheque. Plea, that the amount was illegally won at play and issue thereon. Unless notice has been given to produce the cheque, plaintiff is not bound to produce it. Reeves v. Gamble, 5 N. & M. 433.

Proof of Possession.]—Proof, that an instrument is in the hands of the opposite party, does not amount to a notice to produce the instrument, so as to authorise the court to receive secondary evidence of the contents. Knight v. Waterford (Marquis), 4 Y. & C. 283; 10 L. J., Ex. Eq. 57.

Where a letter is proved to have come into the opposite party's possession, a copy may be read against him, without notice to produce, &c., as, if it is not a true copy, he has the means of contradicting it in his own hands. Lyne v. Lockwood, 2 Moll. 321.

For which Trover is brought.—In trover for a written instrument, it is not necessary to give the defendant notice to produce it. Scott v. Jones, 4 Taunt. 865; 14 R. R. 686.

As the nature of the action gives sufficient notice to the defendant of the subject of inquiry, to prepare himself to produce it, if necessary, for his defence. How v. Hall, 14 East, 274; 12 R. R. 515.

The plaintiff may prove the nature and description of the document by secondary evidence, though the defendant offers to produce it. Whitehead v. Scott, 1 M. & Rob. 2.

In trover for the certificate of a ship's registry, the certificate may be proved by the production of the registry from which it was copied, though no notice has been given to produce the certificate itself. Bucher v. Jarratt, 3 Bos. & P. 143.

Notice to produce a written demand of a thing for which trover is brought, is unnecessary. Hammond v. Place, Peake Ad. C. 90. S. P., per Bayley, in Colling v. Treweek, 6 B. & C. 394; 9 D. & R. 456; 5 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 132; 30 R. R. 366.

In an action against a carrier for the non-delivery of written instruments, it is not necessary to prove a notice to him to produce them, before giving parol evidence of their contents. Jolley v. Taylor, 1 Camp. 143.

Notice hung up in Office or affixed to Freehold.]—In an action against a carrier, where the question is whether the goods are rightfully detained by him in satisfaction of a general lien, parol evidence cannot be given of the contents of a portable notice, hung up in his office, containing a statement that all goods carried by him are subject to such general lien, but the notice itself must be produced. Jones v. Tarleton or Tarlton, 9 M. & W. 675; 1 D. (N.S.) 625; 11 L. J., Ex. 267; 6 Jur. 348.

Aliter, if the notice is fixed to the freehold. Ib.

Conflicting Wills.]—In ejectment by the heir of A., the defendant set up a will of A., whereby he devised all his property in fee to B., through whom the defendant claimed. One of the attesting witnesses stated that he had prepared this will; that a fortnight afterwards he prepared another will for A., which A. executed and delivered to him, and which the witness, upon A.'s death, delivered to B. No notice to produce the last-mentioned instrument had been given:—Held, that the plaintiff's counsel could not ask the witness whether, at the time of executing the instrument, A. declared it to be his last will; and if so, whether it was attested by three witnesses. Doe d. Phillips v. Morris, 4 N. & M. 598; 3 A. & E. 46; 1 H. & W. 226.

Broker's Card.]—A defendant's card, shewing that he acted in the character of a ship-broker, cannot be given in evidence, unless it can be proved to have been given to the witness by the defendant himself. A notice should be given him to produce his cards, and one of them should be proved as a copy, or parol evidence given of the contents. Clark v. Copp, 1 Car. & P. 199.

Copies.]—If a plaintiff's attorney, previously to bringing an action for a distress under the warrant of a magistrate, makes out two papers precisely similar, purporting to be demands of a copy of the warrant pursuant to 24 Geo. 2, c. 44, s. 6, and signs both for his client, and then delivers one to the defendant, the other will be sufficient evidence at the trial. Jory v. Orchard, 2 Bos. & P. 39; 5 R. R. 537.

Where a notice has been given to a party to produce an instrument, of which at the same time another copy was made, it may be given in evidence without notice to produce that in the other party's possession. Gotlieb v. Danvers, 1 Esp. 455.

Where an assignment has been executed of property due by a third person, and the party to whom the assignment is made, for the purpose of giving notice to such third person, prepares two notices at the same time, which he signs, and serves one of them on such person; if an action is afterwards brought by the assignee, he can give that notice in evidence which he retained, without notice to produce that served on the other person. Surtees v. Hubbard, 4 Esp. 203; 6 R. R. 853.

Stolen Letter.]—An indictment alleged that the prisoner, being in the employ of the Post-office, stole a post-letter: to wit, a post-letter directed and addressed as follows (setting out the address), which contained property. At the trial, a witness having deposed that he employed a man to post a letter containing the property in question:—Held, that he might be asked how that letter was addressed, although no notice to produce the letter had been given. Reg. v. Clube, 3 Jur. (N.S.) 698.

Notice to pay.]—A. was surety for B., and bound himself to pay to C. the balance of an account between B. and C. within the space of six months after notice. In an action by C. against A., parol evidence of such notice cannot be given without proof of the usual notice to produce. Grove v. Ware, 2 Stark. 174.

Notice to quit.]—A written notice to quit may be proved by production of a copy, though no notice has been given to produce the original. Doe d. Fleming v. Somerton, 7 Q. B. 58; 14 L. J., Q. B. 210; 9 Jur. 775.

Attorney's Bills.]—On the trial of an action for an attorney's bill, it is not necessary to prove a notice to produce the bill delivered before action brought; it is sufficient to give an examined copy in evidence. Colling v. Treweek, 9 D. & R. 456; 6 B. & C. 394; 5 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 132; 30 R. R. 366. S. P., Anderson v. May, 2 Bos. & P. 237; 3 Esp. 167; Phillipson v. Chase, 2 Camp. 110.

Policy of Insurance.—On an indictment for arson on the prosecution of an insurance company, their books are not evidence of the insurance without notice to produce the policy. Rex v. Doran, 1 Esp. 127.

b. Proof of Identity or Character of Document.

Question for Judge.]—A document being called for under a notice to produce, and such a document being produced, and it being alleged that it was not the document in question, the judge ruled that he must decide whether it was so before he would rule as to the admissibility of secondary evidence. Froude v. Hobbs, 1 F. & F. 612.

In an action for libel, the plaintiff, in order to prove its publication, tendered secondary evidence of the contents of a letter written by the defendant. On the part of the defendant a document was produced as the original:—Held, that the judge was at that stage of the cause bound to hear the evidence on both sides, and to decide whether the document offered was the original or not; and that, if it was, the secondary evidence was inadmissible. Boyle v. Wiseman, 11 Ex. 360; 3 C. L. R. 1071; 24 L. J., Ex. 284; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 894; 3 W. R. 577.

c. Form of Notice.

Title.] — In an action by "A. and B., as assignees of C. v. E." a notice to produce a document entitled "A. and B., assignees of C. and D. v. E." is insufficient, although A. and B. are, in fact, the assignees of C. and D. Harcey v. Morgan, 2 Stark. 17.

Documents—How specified.]—A notice to produce, served by the defendants on the plaintiffs, giving them notice to produce "all letters written to and received by you between 1837 and 1841, both inclusive, by and from the defendants or either of them, during the time aforesaid, or by or to any person on their or your behalf respectively," is good, and is not too general, although it does not specify the date of each particular letter. Morris v. Hannen, Car. & M. 29. S. C. nom. Morris v. Hauser, 2 M. & Rob. 392.

So a notice to produce "all and every letters written by the plaintiff to the defendant relating to the matters in dispute in the action," is sufficient to let in secondary evidence of a particular letter, though it does not specify the date of such letter. Jacob v. Lee, 2 M. & Rob. 33.

In an action for work and labour, a notice to produce "all accounts relating to the matters in question in this cause," is sufficient to let in secondary evidence of an account of work done, given by the plaintiff to the defendant, without specifying it by date or otherwise. Rogers v. Custance, 2 M. & Rob. 179.

In order to let in secondary evidence of a letter, the notice to produce must specify the letter intended; a notice to produce "all letters, papers, and documents, touching or concerning the bill of exchange mentioned in the declaration, and the debt sought to be recovered," is too general. France v. Lucy, R. & M. 341. S. P., Jones v. Edwards, M'Clel. & Y. 139.

Notice to produce a letter which refers to an inclosed account is sufficient to entitle the sender to give secondary evidence of the inclosed account if it is not produced. Engall v. Druce, 9 W. R. 536.

d. Service of Notice.

Time of.]—If a defendant four days before the trial is served with a notice to produce certain of the plaintiff's letters to him, it is sufficient, although it was objected that the defendant was a foreigner, and had only been in England since the time the letters were received by him, and that therefore he might have left them abroad. Drabble v. Donner, 1 Car. & P. 188; R. & M. 47.

A defendant was served four days before the trial with a notice to produce certain letters written by him to his partner in New South Wales. The action was commenced in 1832, and proceedings had taken place in chancery also, in respect of the subject-matter of the letters:—Held, that they must be presumed to have been sent back from New South Wales, and that the notice was, therefore, sufficient to let in secondary evidence. Sturge v. Buchanan, 2 P. & D. 573; 10 A. & E. 598; 2 M. & Rob. 90; 8 L. J., Q. B. 272.

In an ejectment trial at Liverpool, notice to produce a deed of feoffment was given to the defendant on the commission-day of the assizes, and the trial took place fourteen days after. The judge having held this to be sufficient notice to let in secondary evidence, the court refused to disturb the ruling. Doe d. Rowlandson v. Wainwright, 5 A. & E. 520; 2 H. & W. 391; 1 N. & P. 8; 6 L. J., K. B. 35.

If a forged deed is in the possession of a prisoner who is indicted for forging it, the prosecutor is not entitled to give secondary evidence of its contents, unless he has, a reasonable time before the commencement of the assizes, given the prisoner notice to produce it; and a notice given to the prisoner during the assizes is too late; but if the prisoner has said that he has destroyed the deed, no notice to produce it will be necessary. Rex v. Haworth, 4 Car. & P. 254.

A prisoner tried at the assizes for arson, on Wednesday, the 20th of March, was, on Monday, the 18th, served at the prison with a notice to produce a policy of insurance. The commission-day was Friday, the 15th, and the prisoner's home was ten miles from the assize town:—Held, that the notice was served too late. Rex v. Ellicombe, 5 Car. & P. 522; 1 M. & Rob. 260.

Notice to produce policies of insurance, served on the prisoner's attorney on Tuesday evening, the prisoner then in Maidstone, the policies being twenty miles off, and the trial taking place on Thursday, is sufficient. Reg. v. Barber, 1 F. & F. 316.

Notice to produce an agreement, served upon the defendant's attorney at five o'clock on the commission-day of the assizes, is too late, the attorney having then left home for the assize town, which was nine miles distant from his office, and the opposite party refusing to furnish him with a conveyance. George v. Thompson, 4 D. P. C. 656.

A cause was tried at the assizes on Monday, the commission-day being on the Thursday before. A paper was called for under a notice to produce, which was served on the Saturday before the trial. The attorneys on whom the notice to produce was served, and also the party who was their client, lived in the assize town:—Held, that the service of the notice to produce was not too late, and that the question in such cases is, whether, under all the circumstances, reasonable notice has been given. Firkin v. Edwards, 9 Car. & P. 478.

A notice to produce served on the defendant's attorney at his residence, twenty miles from the place of trial, at 8 p.m. on the night before the trial; the defendant residing in the same town with the attorney, but not at home on that evening until twelve o'clock, is too late. Howard v. Williams, 9 M. & W. 725; 1 D. (N.S.) 877; 11 L. J., Ex. 279; 6 Jur. 585.

A cause at the sittings at nisi prius was called on upon Thursday, the 4th February, and the plaintiff's case was closed on that day at 4 p.m.; the case was then adjourned to Friday, the 5th of February at 10 a.m. All the parties lived in town, and in the evening of the 4th of February, before 9 p.m., a notice to produce a letter of the defendant to the plaintiff served on the plaintiff's attorney, is served in time. Sturm v. Jeffree, 2 Car. & K. 442.

Service of a notice on the attorney in the cause on the day before the trial, and at a distance from the place of business, is bad. Hughes v. Budd, 8 D. P. C. 315; 4 Jur. 150.

Service of a notice to produce on a Sunday, is bad. Ib.

A notice to produce, in a town cause, served the evening before the trial, at the residence of the attorney, too late for the attorney to communicate with his client, is not in time, so as to let in secondary evidence. Bryne v. Harvey, 2 M. & Rob. 89.

A notice to produce a tradesman's books, served upon the plaintiff's attorney at seven o'clock of the evening previously to the trial, is too late. Atkins v. Meredith, 4 D. P. C. 658.

A notice to produce served on a defendant in London on a Saturday, the cause being tried on the following Monday, is too late. Houseman v. Roberts, 5 Car. & P. 394.

In a town cause a notice to produce a paper in the hands of the opposite attorney was served at 8 p.m. on the evening before the trial, at his office, on one of his clerks, who had the management of the cause:—Held, that the service was not too late, and the paper not being produced, secondary evidence was given of its contents. Gibbons v. Powell, 9 Car. & P. 634. S. P., Leaf v. Butt, Car. & M. 451; Meyrick v. Woods, Car. & M. 452.

A notice to produce a letter from defendant to plaintiff was served on plaintiff's attorney at a quarter before nine on the night before the trial. It related to the promissory note, the subject of the action, in answer to a letter from plaintiff to defendant:—Held, that the notice was served too late. Holt v. Miers, 9 Car. & P. 191.

Where previous Inspection.]—In an action on a bond, which has been seen by the defendant's attorney some time before the trial, and a copy of it furnished to the opposite party under a judge's order, notice to him to produce the bond served before the trial is sufficient to let in secondary evidence of its contents. Lloyd v. Mostyn, 10 M. & W. 478; 2 D. (N.S.) 476; 12 L. J. Ex. 1; 6 Jur. 794.

At great Distance.]—A notice to produce letters in the country, served in London on the day of the trial in London, is too late. Coombs v. Bristol and Exeter Ry., 1 F. & F. 206.

Notice served on the attorney at nine o'clock on Saturday night to produce papers at a trial in London on Wednesday, his client being absent in Scotland at the time, is too late. Vice v. Anson (Viscountess), 3 Car. & P. 19; M. & M. 96.

A notice to produce deeds was served on the defendant's attorney in Essex on Saturday, the commission-day of the assizes being Monday; the attorney went to London and fetched them. A notice was served on the Monday evening to produce another deed. The attorney stated that he had been to town to fetch the deeds; and if the plaintiff would pay the expenses of sending for this from town, where it was, it should be had. No offer to pay was made, and the trial was on Thursday:—Held, that, under these circumstances, the plaintiff was not entitled to give secondary evidence of the last-mentioned deed. Doe d. Curtis v. Spitty, 3 B. & Ad. 182; 1 L. J., K. B. 88.

A notice to produce a letter from Vienna, served on the 7th June, at a trial in London, which took place on the 11th June, is too short, and the defendant was therefore not bound to produce the letter. Loibel v. Strampfer, 16 L. T 720.

Notice to produce must be served before the commission-day on parties living out of the assize town. Trist v. Johnson, 1 M. & Rob. 259.

A cause came on, to be tried at assizes on a Wednesday morning. On the previous Monday evening, defendant's attorney, being at the assize town, was served with notice to produce a book, which would probably be at his office, which was nineteen miles from the assize town:—Held, that this service was too late. Hargest v. Fothergill, 5 Car. & P. 303.

Place of Service.]—A notice to produce a letter at the Hertford spring assizes, 1848, served on the 3rd of February, 1848, on the defendant in London, his firm having no place of business there, does not entitle the plaintiff to give secondary evidence of the contents of the letter. Ehrensperger v. Anderson, 3 Ex. 148; 18 L. J., Ex. 132.

In a town cause, a service of a notice to produce by putting the notice into the letter-box at the office of the attorney in London, on the evening before the trial, is not a good service. Lawrence v. Clark, 3 D. & L. 87; 14 M. & W. 250; 15 L. J., Ex. 40.

If a party to a cause is abroad, but employs an attorney to conduct it, he will be presumed to have left in the hands of that attorney all papers material to the cause. Bryan v. Wagstaff, 8 D. & R. 208; 5 B. & C. 314. S. C., R. & M. 329; 2 Car. & P. 126.

Notice to produce a letter relating to the matters in dispute, served on the attorney of the party on the evening next but one before the trial, is sufficient to let in secondary evidence of the contents, though the party was out of England. Ib.

On whom.]—A notice to produce served on the party himself a week before the trial is in sufficient time, although he has employed an attorney in the cause. Hughes v. Budd, 8 D. P. C. 315; 4 Jur. 150.

If a notice to produce has been duly served on a party in the cause, that is not invalidated by a subsequent bad service of notice on the attorney. Ib.

It is not necessary in penal actions to give notice to the defendant himself to produce papers; notice to his agent or attorney is sufficient. Cates v. Winter, 3 Term Rep. 306.

Where the attorney in a cause has been changed, a notice to produce (served before the change) on the first attorney is sufficient to call for production of the paper on the trial without fresh service on the second attorney. Doe d. Martin v. Martin, 1 M. & Rob. 242.

Service of notice to produce on an attorney who had served a notice on behalf of a prisoner as to an application to bail him upon the charge, is sufficient. Reg. v. Boucher, 1 F. & F. 486.

A notice to produce a document delivered to an attorney, suggested to be the prisoner's attorney, is not (in the absence of evidence that he was so) a valid notice, so as to enable secondary evidence to be given; and the attorney was not allowed to be asked whether he had shewn the notice to his client. Reg. v. Downham, 1 F. & F. 386.

Service on a prisoner in gaol is sufficient. Reg. v. Robinson, 5 Cox, C. C. 183.

Objection to Time of Service removed.]—Where none of the parties lived in the assize town, the plaintiff's attorney served the defendant's attorney, in the assize town, on the commission-day, with notice to produce a paper, and offered the expenses of going to fetch it. The defendant's attorney said that that was of no use, as the paper was not in existence:—Held, that the plaintiff on the trial might give secondary evidence of the contents of the paper, as the statement of the defendant's attorney, that the paper was not in existence, got rid of any objection as to the lateness of the service of the notice to produce. Foster v. Pointer, 9 Car. & P. 718.

Second Trial.]—When a new trial is granted, notices to produce, given for the first trial, are available on the second trial. Hope v. Beadon, 17 Q. B. 509; 2 L. M. & P. 593; 21 L. J., Q. B. 25; 16 Jur. 80.

Where a trial has been postponed from one session to another, a notice to produce served on the prisoner in time for the first session is available for the subsequent one without any fresh service. Reg. v. Robinson, 5 Cox, C. C. 183.

e. Documents in Hands of Third Party.

Question for Judge.]—Where a document is called for after notice to produce by the plaintiff, the defendant may, during the plaintiff's case, produce evidence to shew the document lawfully out of his possession, and the sufficiency of such evidence is solely for the judge to decide, who will determine whether secondary evidence is admissible, and such evidence gives the plaintiff's counsel no reply to the jury. Harrey v. Mitchell, 2 M. & Rob. 366.

Agent of Party.]—Where a document is proved to have been in the actual possession of a party to an action, or to be in the possession of his attorney in another action, secondary evidence is admissible, notice having been given to that attorney to produce it. Irwin v. Lever, 2 F. & F. 296.

Notice to the defendant to produce an order relating to a ship, which it appears the defendant has delivered to the captain, is sufficient (in default of production) to enable the plaintiff to give parol evidence of the order, since the possession of the captain is for this purpose the possession of the defendant. Baldney v. Ritchie, 1 Stark. 338.

In an action for rent by the assignee of the reversion against the assignee of the term, the plaintiff's attorney was called by his client to prove the execution of a deed; on cross-examination he admitted that there had been another deed between the same parties, relating to the premises, executed after the former, and that he had that deed in court; but he refused to produce it, relying on his privilege; the defendant then offered to produce parol evidence of the contents of the deed (without stating what evidence); no notice to produce had been given:—Held, that the parol evidence was rightly rejected. Bate v. Kinsey, 1 C. M. & R. 38; 4 Tyr. 662; 3 L. J., Ex. 304.

If a paper is traced into the hands of the agent of a party in a suit, and notice has been given to such party to produce it, he is bound to do so, and the other side is not bound to call the agent; and if he has delivered it to the stamp-office to get certain duties allowed, and does not tell that circumstance to the party serving the notice to produce, parol evidence of the contents may be given. Sinclair v. Stephenson, 1 Car. & P. 582; 2 Bing. 514; 10 Moore, 46.

In an action against the directors of an intended company, it was proved (in order to let in secondary evidence of their minute-books, called for under a notice to produce), that, four months before the trial, the late secretary had the books in a desk at the office of the company, and that he then gave up the key of the desk to the manager of the company, who acted for the directors:—Held, sufficient. Bell v. Francis, 9 Car. & P. 66.

Stakeholder.]—Secondary evidence of a document, to produce which notice has been given, is not admissible, where the document is held by a stakeholder, between the party in the cause and a third person. Parry v. May, 1 M. & Rob. 279.

Independent Person.]—Where, in an action for an assault, notice was given to the defendant to produce a written paper which had been delivered to A., under whom the defendant justified, and acted under his direction:—Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to give secondary evidence of its contents, as it was merely traced into the hands of a person acting in an independent character. Evans v. Sweet, R. & M. 83; 1 Car. & P. 277.

The plaintiff had been employed as secretary to a charitable institution; his appointment was made in pursuance of a resolution of the committee for managing the affairs of the society, which was entered in a book remaining in the plaintiff's hands as secretary, but to which entry the plaintiff was no party, nor did it appear to have been expressly brought to his notice; the society dissolving, the plaintiff quitted the employ, leaving this book in the office; in an action against three of the committee for arrears of salary:—Held, that the plaintiff was bound to produce the book, inasmuch as it would shew the terms on which he had been engaged; and that a notice to the defendants to produce it was not sufficient to entitle him to give secondary evidence under the quantum meruit; the book appearing not to be in the possession of the defendants, but in that of another member of the committee, without the knowledge or control of the defendants. Whitford v. Tutin, 4 M. & Scott, 166; 10 Bing. 395; 6 Car. & P. 228; 3 L. J., C. P. 106.

Sheriff's Warrant.]—In an action against a sheriff, after the expiration of his year of office, a notice served on his attorney to produce a warrant returned to the deputy sheriff of London during the sheriff's year of office, is sufficient to let in secondary evidence. Suter v. Burrell, 2 H. & N. 867; 27 L. J., Ex. 193.

Where a sheriff's warrant to levy execution had, after the levy, been returned by the bailiff to the under-sheriff, while the sheriff was yet in office, and the bailiff upon being called as a witness did not produce it:—Held, that proof of notice to the sheriff's attorney to produce it was sufficient to entitle the party to give parol evidence of its contents. Taplin v. Atty, 3 Bing. 164; 10 Moore, 564; 3 L. J. (o.s.) C. P. 218; 28 R. R. 616.

With Banker.]—Notice to a defendant to produce a cheque drawn by him and paid by his banker, is sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to give secondary evidence of its contents, although the cheque remains in the banker's hands. Partridge v. Coates, R. & M. 156; 1 Car. & P. 534.

And he need not call the banker's clerk to produce it. Burton v. Payne, 2 Car. & P. 520; 31 R. R. 692.

In an action upon a contract, in which the consideration was a bill of exchange given by the plaintiff to the defendant, who had notice to produce it, but on the voir dire stated that, before the notice, he had discounted it with his banker:—Held, that it must be proved, either by production or by secondary evidence under the notice to produce. Wright v. Bunyard, 2 F. & F. 193.

Person out of Jurisdiction.]—It is no ground for admitting secondary evidence of the contents of a private letter, that the person who has possession of the letter is beyond the jurisdiction of the court, and has refused to deliver it up when requested by a person who did not disclose the purpose for which it was wanted. Boyle v. Wiseman, 10 Ex. 647; 3 C. L. R. 482: 24 L. J., Ex. 160; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 115; 3 W. R. 206.

Control of Party—Document deposited in Court.]—A document deposited in a court of equity by a party to a suit there, and scheduled in his answer, but which remains with an officer of that court after an order to deliver it to the party, is sufficiently in the control and power of such party to let in secondary evidence after notice to produce and non-production by the party. Bush v. Peacock, 2 M. & Rob. 162.

f. Consequence of Production.

Party bound to put in.]—If the plaintiff's counsel calls on the defendant to produce a paper, and looks at it, he is bound to give it in evidence, if it is material to the issue; but if it is not, the plaintiff's counsel need not give it in evidence, although required by the defendant to do so. Wilson v. Bowie, 1 Car. & P. 10.

If during the examination of one of the plaintiff's witnesses, the defendant's counsel, under a notice to produce, call for a book, which the plaintiff's counsel produces, the defendant's counsel if he looks over the book so as to see the contents of several pages of it, will be bound to put it in as his evidence. Calvert v. Flower, 7 Car. & P. 386.

Whole must be read.]—In an action of detinue for a promissory note, the note was called for by the plaintiff's counsel, and produced by the defendant's counsel:—Held, that if the plaintiff had the note read in evidence, he was, if required by the other side, bound to read an indorsement on the note, as well as what was written on the face of it. Richards v. Francum, 9 Car. & P. 221.

Evidence for whom.]—The plaintiff had given notice to the defendant to produce certain letters written by the defendant to the defendant's partner in New South Wales, and had called upon him to admit an extract from a letter-book kept by the defendant. A judge made an order on the defendant to make the admissions contained in the notice, and the defendant consented to produce the letter-book at the trial:—Held, that the letters contained in the letter-book were secondary evidence of those described in the notice, although no other proof was given that the letters had been actually sent. Sturge v. Buchanan, 2 P. & D. 573; 10 A. & E. 598; 2 M. & Rob. 90; 8 L. J., Q. B. 272.

Held, also, that the defendant was not entitled to read other letters contained in the letter-book. Ib.

Where notice has been given to produce books, if the party calls for them and inspects them, it does not therefore make them evidence for the party whose books they are. Sayer v. Kitchen, 1 Esp. 210.

But a party, who calls for the other's books, has not the option to use them or not; he thereby makes them evidence. Wharam v. Routledge, 5 Esp. 235; 8 R. R. 851.

And he cannot ask for the book, and determine upon the inspection of it whether he will use it or not. Ib.

Under a notice to produce a letter, which is produced and mentions that it covers other papers, those papers are not thereby made evidence unless they are referred to in the letter. Johnson v. Gilson, 4 Esp. 21.

An indorsement on a feoffment (purporting to have been made by the attorney thereby appointed to deliver seisin), that he had done so in the presence of A., is not evidence of that fact, although the deed is produced by the defendant at the desire of the plaintiff, unless the defendant claims under it. Doe d. Wilkins v. Clevelland (Marquis), 9 B. & C. 864; 4 M. & Ry. 666; 8 L. J., K. B. 74.

g. Consequence of Non-Production.

When Secondary Evidence let in.]—Unless a defendant has received a proper notice to produce a deed, evidence that he has admitted that he has it with him is not admissible. Doe d. Wartney v. Grey, 1 Stark. 283.

The attorney of a client, not a party to the suit, having brought a book into court, in obedience to a subpœna duces tecum, refused to produce it, on the ground of privilege. The client himself, who had been served with a common subpœna, on being examined as a witness also objected to its being produced:—Held, that secondary evidence might be given of the contents of the book, although the client had not been served with a subpœna duces tecum. Newton v. Chaplin, 10 C. B. 356; 19 L. J., C. P. 374; 14 Jur. 1121.

In an action against A. and B., as executors, A. suffered judgment by default. The probate of the will was produced, and notice had been given to both to produce a receipt which had been given to A. as one of the executors:—Held, that if it was not produced, secondary evidence might be given of its contents, and that A. having suffered judgment by default made no difference. Beckwith v. Benner, 6 Car. & P. 681.

Where notice to produce a document had been given to the defendant, and there was merely evidence to go to the jury that such document was in his possession:—Held, that the document not having been produced when called for, the plaintiff might give secondary evidence thereof. Robb v. Starkey, 2 Car. & K. 143.

If a deed is in the possession of a third person as mortgagee, and he, having the deed in court though not subpœnaed in the cause, declines to produce it, secondary evidence may be given of its contents; but if the deed is not in court, and he has not been subpœnaed to produce, it is otherwise. The person thus declining to produce a deed must not state the contents, but he must state the date of the deed and the names of the parties, in order to identify it. Doe d. Loscombe v. Clifford, 2 Car. & K. 448.

Where a witness served with a subpœna duces tecum to produce a document either does not attend or does attend and refuses to produce the document (not on the ground of privilege), the party seeking to avail himself of the document cannot give secondary evidence of its contents: the remedy is to punish the witness for a contempt. Reg. v. Llanfaethly, 2 El. & Bl. 940; 2 C. L. R. 230; 23 L. J., M. C. 33; 2 W. R. 61.

A party declining to produce a document ought simply to answer that he does not produce it, and should not enter into a statement of the reasons why he does not produce it. Laxton v. Reynolds, 18 Jur. 963.

Notice "to produce letters and copies of letters, also all books relating to the cause" is too uncertain to admit parol evidence. Jones v. Edwards, 1 M'Clel. & Y. 139.

A merchant's copy-book of letters has been allowed to be read where the person who has the original letters refuses to produce them. Sturt v. Mellish, 2 Atk. 611.

Secondary evidence of an instrument will not be received without notice to produce, upon the mere proof of its being in possession of the opposite party. Knight v. Waterford (Marquis), 4 Y. & Coll. 284; 10 L. J., Ex. Eq. 57; 5 Jur. 88.

The mere refusal of a witness to produce a document, where he is not justified in withholding it, is not a ground for going into secondary evidence of that document. Jesus College v. Gibbs, 1 Y. & Coll. 145.

A party cannot, at the hearing, give secondary evidence of the contents of a document in his adversary's possession, unless he has given him notice to produce it. The depositions are not sufficient notice. Stulz v. Stulz, 5 Sim. 460.

Answer to a bill by a rector, for an account of tithes, setting up a simoniacal contract, supported by evidence of the contents of a letter alleged to have been written by the witness (one of the patrons of the living) to the plaintiff, previous to the admission to the living, containing the terms of the agreement, which were afterwards accepted; and the letter containing such acceptance had been subsequently returned to the plaintiff, and destroyed by him. On an objection to the admissibility of evidence of the letter containing the proposal, on the ground of want of notice to the plaintiff to produce the original:—Held, that the evidence was admissible, the depositions being sufficient notice. At law such evidence would not be admissible without notice, because it not being known till the time of trial what evidence will be offered on either side, non constat, otherwise, that the original might not be produced. But even at law, notice is not necessary, where, from the nature of the proceeding, the party must know that the contents of a written instrument in his possession will come into question. Wood v. Strickland, 2 Mer. 461.

A solicitor, who claimed a lien on deeds, was summoned as a witness with a subpœna duces tecum, brought the deeds into court, but refused to produce them:—Held, that secondary evidence of their contents was not admissible, the person proposing to give the secondary evidence being liable to pay the costs to the solicitor. Att.-Gen. v. Ashe, 10 Ir. Ch. R. 309.

Production of Copy.]—Bill against infant defendants. The plaintiff had served defendant's solicitor with notice to produce a particular deed in his possession. The defendants' solicitor sent to the plaintiff a copy of the deed:—Held, that the production of the copy at the hearing did not amount to secondary evidence of the deed against the infant defendants. Bacon v. Cosby, 20 L. J., Ch. 213; 15 Jur. 695.

Inference.]—If upon a notice to produce books of account they are not produced, this circumstance affords no legal ground for any inference respecting their contents, and merely entitles the opposite party to prove their contents by parol evidence. Cooper v. Gibbons, 3 Camp. 363.

Subsequent Production.]—Where a party served with notice refuses to produce the document when called for at the trial, and secondary evidence has been given of its contents, he cannot afterwards produce the document as his own evidence. Doe d. Thompson v. Hodgson, 4 P. & D. 142; 12 A. & E. 135; 2 M. & Rob. 283; 9 L. J., Q. B. 327; 4 Jur. 1202.

Where a party refuses to produce a deed, at the trial, and a copy is duly proved, he cannot afterwards exclude it by producing the original, and requiring it to be proved. Edmonds v. Challis, 6 D. & L. 581; 7 C. B. 413.

When a document is called for, and its production declined, the party so declining to produce it cannot afterwards make use of it for any purpose. Collins v. Gashon, 2 F. & F. 47.

Evidence against whom.]—A party is not obliged to produce evidence against himself, though such evidence is in court, and he has had notice to produce it. Law v. Wells 1 Peake, 128.

4. Notice to Admit.

Proof of Documents at the Hearing.]—A party will not be allowed to prove vivâ voce, at the hearing of a cause, documents affecting a material issue, of which no notice has been previously given given to his opponent. The common order to prove documents vivâ voce at the hearing applies only to making good a merely technical defect or to curing an accidental slip. Wilson v. Thornbury, 44 L. J., Ch. 242; L. R. 10 Ch. 239; 32 L. T. 350; 23 W. R. 329.

Necessity of Notice.]—A party, who proposes to adduce documentary evidence at a trial, is bound, in every case, to give a notice to admit, although the genuineness of the document is put in issue by the pleadings. Spencer v. Barough, 9 M. & W. 425; 11 L. J., Ex. 378; 6 Jur. 154.

Or although the document is not in his possession, or even is in a place inaccessible to him. Rutter v. Chapman, 8 M. & W. 388; 1 D. (N.S.) 118; 11 L. J., Ex. 178; 5 Jur. 610.

When, in a bill to set aside the grant of an annuity made by A. to B., and charged upon A.'s land, with also a personal covenant for payment, the plaintiff is himself the devisee as well as residuary legatee under A.'s will, he ought, under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 79, s. 68 (Ir.), to give notice to the other party that he intends to give in evidence as proof of the devise or testamentary disposition, the probate of the will. But if he should fail to give this notice, the omission would only create a technical difficulty in the case, and the court might properly, and would, adjourn the hearing to give an opportunity to remove that technical difficulty. Hilliard v. Eiffe, L. R. 7 H. L. 39.

Sufficiency of.]—A judge's order for the admission of documents in evidence referred to a notice served by the defendant's attorney, dated 4th March, 1845. The notice produced was dated the 1st March; but the plaintiff's attorney stated that it was the only notice served in the cause :—Held, sufficient. Bittleston v. Cooper, 14 M. & W. 399.

General Effect of.]—The admission of a document described in a notice to admit, is not the admission of a fact stated in the description ; it may be some evidence of the fact, which may be rebutted by evidence to the contrary. Pilgrim v. Southampton and Dorchester Ry., 8 C. B. 25 ; 18 L. J., C. P. 330.

An admission of a document "saving all just exceptions," does not preclude the party admitting it from objecting that it does not affect him. Hills v. London Gas Light Co., 1 F. & F. 346.

In an action on a bill of exchange against H. and others, members of a mining company, a notice to admit the bill was given in the following form :—"Bill of exchange drawn for 12*l.* 10*s.* by the plaintiff upon, and directed to, the defendants, as the N. C. Company, Forest of Dean, Gloucestershire, and accepted by H. B. for the defendants" :—Held, that under this admission, the defendants could not dispute the authority of H. B. to bind them by this acceptance. Wilkes v. Hopkins, 1 C. B. 737 ; 3 D. & L. 184 ; 14 L. J., C. P. 225.

A plea of set-off referring to an agreement expressed to be made between the plaintiff and the defendant, and a notice (on the part of the defendant) to admit the agreement referred to in the plea, is not a sufficient admission of the agreement sued upon ; and a conversation between the attorneys after the notice to admit is inadmissible to extend the admission under such notice. Corbett v. Lees, 1 F. & F. 679.

If, in a notice to admit documents, a document is described as a counterpart, but is, in fact, a lease, and the opposite party has consented to admit it, he is bound by his admission, and under it the lease may be given in evidence ; and an objection of its being stamped only as a counterpart cannot be taken. Doe d. Wright v. Smith, 3 N. & P. 335 ; 8 A. & E. 255 ; 2 M. & Rob. 7 ; 1 W., W. & H. 429 ; 7 L. J., Q. B. 158 ; 2 Jur. 854.

Although a judge's order has been made on the plaintiff to admit a copy of a letter from himself to the defendant, and the plaintiff has also had notice to produce the original, the copy cannot be read, unless evidence is given of the existence of the original. Sharpe v. Lamb, 3 P. & D. 454 ; 11 A. & E. 805 ; 9 L. J., Q. B. 185 ; 4 Jur. 965.

Where documents are indorsed by a solicitor in compliance with a notice under the 164th rule, the practice is to have a consent admitting the documents made a rule of court by a side-bar rule. Killikelly v. Molton, 10 Ir. Eq. R. 212.

Effect of Saving Clause.]—Where, in an action against acceptor of a bill of exchange, plea non acceptavit, his attorney signed an admission that the acceptance was in the handwriting of the defendant, without adding the clause, "saving all just exceptions to the admissibility of the document as evidence" :—Held, that the jury was warranted in finding for the plaintiff, notwithstanding the non-production of the bill. Chaplin v. Levy, 2 C. L. R. 556 ; 9 Ex. 531 ; 23 L. J., Ex. 117 ; 2 W. R. 241.

Whether a notice to admit contains a saving of all just exceptions or not, the opposite party is entitled to rely on any valid objection to the documents mentioned in the notice. Sharpe v. Lamb, supra.

Stamp.]—In an action on a bill of exchange, the defendant was required to make the admission specified in a notice to admit, and the notice called on the defendant to admit that the document therein "specified to be original was written, signed, or executed, as it purports to have been, saving all just exceptions to the admissibility of such document as evidence in this cause." The notice then described the bill of exchange in the usual manner :—Held, that an admission does not preclude the defendant from objecting that the bill was not properly stamped, and also that this was not such an admission as dispensed with the production of the bill. Vain v. Whittington, Car. & M. 484 ; 2 D. (N.S.) 757 ; 7 Jur. 95.

Erasure.]—A plaintiff called on a defendant to admit an authority to sell an estate, "signed by the defendant," and dated "10th of August, 1840," and a judge by consent made an order to admit it. When the document was given in evidence, the date, "August," appeared to be written on an erasure :—Held, that the defendant had precluded himself from calling on the plaintiff to give evidence to explain the altered date. Poole v. Palmer, Car. & M. 69.

Interlineation.]—A party who has been called upon in the ordinary form to admit a document before trial, and has done so, cannot at the trial object to such document on the ground that it has an interlineation not accounted for by evidence, unless it appears that the interlineation was made after the admission. Freeman v. Steggall, 14 Q. B. 202 ; 19 L. J., Q. B. 18 ; 13 Jur. 1030.

Addition.]—An admission of original letters in the ordinary form, as in the handwriting of the party admitting, precludes an objection to the authenticity of any part, even an addition to a postscript, obviously in a different handwriting. Hawke v. Freund, 1 F. & F. 294.

At New Trial.]—On a new trial, an admission of the handwriting of an attesting witness under a judge's order is available, though made before the previous trial, and though, in an action on a bond, the plea on the former trial was non est factum, and on the second trial a special plea that the condition of the bond has been altered after execution. Langley v. Oxford (Earl), 1 M. & W. 508 ; 2 Gale, 63 ; 5 L. J., Ex. 166.

Costs of Proof.]—A plaintiff, after notice, refused to admit a document, purporting to be a receipt for cash and for a promissory note. The jury found that the receipt was valid as to the cash, but not as to the promissory note. A certificate that the refusal to admit was reasonable, having been granted by the judge on an ex parte application of the plaintiff four months afterwards, and after the taxation of costs by the master, the court refused to set it aside. Day v. Vinson, 33 L. J., Ex. 171 ; 9 L. T. 723.

Who may Admit.]—Assignees in bankruptcy, and a married woman whose husband is a co-defendant, are parties competent to make admissions under the 21 & 22 Vict. c. 27, s. 7. Churchill v. Coller, 1 N. R. 82.

5. Putting in Documents.

All documents intended to be used in evidence in an action ought to be formally put in at the trial and marked by the registrar. Watson v. Rodwell, 48 L. J., Ch. 209; 11 Ch. D. 150; 39 L. T. 614; 27 W. R. 265—C. A.

Documents produced by Witness not Party to Proceedings—Putting in en bloc or seriatim.]—Where documents are produced by a witness who is not a party to the proceedings, the proper course is for an adjournment to be made to enable the parties to ascertain which of these documents are material. The parties are not entitled to put in the whole of the documents en bloc, or to ask the witness to produce the documents seriatim, and question him thereon. Maplin Sands, In re, 71 L. T. 594—C. A.

6. Admissibility of Unstamped Documents.

a. Generally.

Validity of Document.]—The want of a stamp does not avoid a document; it only prevents its being produced in evidence. Goodright v. Gregory, Lofft. 339.

If a document which is unstamped, but requires a stamp, is offered in evidence, and, if stamped, would be evidence to establish any point litigated between the parties, it cannot be received. Matheson v. Ross, 2 H. L. Cas. 286; 13 Jur. 307. See Evans v. Prothero, 2 Mac. & G. 319; 20 L. J., Ch. 448; 15 Jur. 113.

Distinction between an agreement that may be stamped, paying the penalty, which the party will be permitted to stamp, pending the cause, and one upon which no action can be brought unless stamped. Huddleston v. Briscoe, 11 Ves. 595.

To prove Admission in a Recital.]—In an action by payee against maker of a promissory note for 485*l*., in which he pleaded that he did not make the note, it was proposed, in addition to proof of his signature of the note, to put in an unstamped agreement between the same parties, of the same date as the note, in which it was recited that the one had bought of the other the lease of a public-house for 485*l*., and had given a note for that sum as a security for the purchase-money, and by which it was agreed that the vendor should hold the lease of the house till the purchase-money was paid:—Held, that as the agreement was one that ought to have borne a stamp, it was not receivable even for the purpose of proving the admission contained in the recital. Keane v. Janes, 2 Car. & K. 725.

Bill of Exchange.]—An insufficiently-stamped bill of exchange is admissible for the purpose of shewing that it is an unavailable security, and thereby of rebutting an inference which might be drawn from the statement of an account, that a debt due to the plaintiff had been satisfied by such bill. Smart v. Nokes, 6 Man. & G. 911; 7 Scott (N.R.) 786; 13 L. J., C. P. 79; 8 Jur. 44.

Promissory Note.]—But in an action on a note, the defendant was allowed to produce an unstamped note to prove that it was given in a state of intoxication. Gregory v. Fraser, 3 Camp. 454.

A promissory note which is insufficiently stamped as a note cannot be made available as evidence of the receipt of money by the maker of the note. Ashling v. Boon, 60 L. J., Ch. 306; [1891] 1 Ch. 568; 64 L. T. 193; 39 W. R. 298.

An unstamped promissory note may be handed to a witness in order to challenge his recollection, notwithstanding s. 38, sub-s. 1, of the Stamp Act, 1891. Birchall v. Bullough, 65 L. J., Q. B. 252; [1896] 1 Q. B. 325; 74 L. T. 27; 44 W. R. 300.

Cheque.]—The same evidence is admissible in a civil action to prove a fraud committed by a third party, as if he himself was indebted. Therefore, in an action for money had and received, where it was necessary for the plaintiff to prove that the property had been obtained from him fraudulently, by means of a cheque given by a third party:—Held, that the cheque, though unstamped, was admissible against the defendant, who was no party to the fraud. Keable v. Payne, 3 N. & P. 531; 8 A. & E. 555; 1 W., W. & H. 383; 7 L. J., Q. B. 218; 3 Jur. 40.

In an action on a cheque, where the instrument was put in and read without objection, but it afterwards appeared that it was post-dated:—Held, that being unstamped, it could not be given in evidence, and that the objection need not be taken on the first production of the cheque. Field v. Woods, 2 N. & P. 117; 7 A. & E. 114; 6 D. P. C. 23; 8 Car. & P. 52; 6 L. J., K. B. 209.

Sale by Agreement—Agreement Inadmissible—No other Evidence Admissible.]—B. owed A. a sum of money, for which A. had B.'s promissory note as a security. A. applied for payment. B. proposed that an inventory should be made of the goods on his premises, and that A. should take them at a valuation in discharge of the debt. A. consulted his attorney, who prepared a document. After the preparation of the document, B. delivered the inventory to A., and A. and B. insured the goods against fire in their joint names, and A. gave up to B. the note, which was destroyed. A. at the same time credited B. in his book to the amount of the debt. A. took possession of a few articles included in the inventory, for which B. had no use, but B. remained in possession of the rest of the goods as before. The goods being seized by the sheriff in execution, at the suit of a third party against B., A. claimed them as his own, and sued the sheriff in a county court for taking them, and, in order to maintain his claim, offered the document in evidence. This was objected to, and rejected for want of a stamp:—Held, that as B. was in possession of the goods, it lay on A. to prove clearly that they were his; and that as the document which contained the terms of the arrangement between A. and B. was inadmissible for want of a stamp, no other evidence of a sale was admissible, and that, consequently, the facts above stated were no evidence of A.'s title to the goods. Yorke v. Smith, 21 L. J., Q. B. 53; 16 Jur. 63.

For Collateral Purpose.]—Generally speaking, whenever a written instrument is tendered, not for the purpose of establishing a binding agreement between the parties, but for the collateral purpose of shewing the illegal notice of some transaction, it is not an objection that the instrument is unstamped. Coppock v. Bower, 4 M. & W. 361; 8 L. J., Ex. 9.

Therefore, where a petition containing charges of bribery was presented to the House of Commons against the return of a member, and the petitioner entered into an agreement, that in consideration of a sum of money and other terms he would not further prosecute his petition:—Held, that the agreement was illegal, and that the papers put in to establish the existence of that agreement did not require to be stamped. Ib.

Where A. brings an action against B. for the price of a gun ordered by the latter, he may read in evidence, for a collateral purpose, part of a letter written by B. to him; although the remainder of the letter contains directions for making the gun, and is not stamped as an agreement. Forsyth v. Jervis, 1 Stark. 437; 18 R. R. 804.

An unstamped document embodying an agreement not falling within the exceptions specified in the Stamp Act (33 & 34 Vict. c. 97), is inadmissible in evidence in civil proceedings for any purpose whatever. Interleaf Publishing Co. v. Phillips, 1 Cab. & E. 315.

A deed of assignment for the benefit of creditors, not registered through want of the necessary assents, may be used, even though unstamped, as evidence of an act of bankruptcy. Squire, Ex parte, Gouldwell, In re, 38 L. J., Bk. 13; L. R. 4 Ch. 47; 19 L. T. 272; 17 W. R. 40.

An article of agreement not stamped, the agreement being carried into effect with colourable variations by an instrument duly stamped, may be read as evidence of the res gestæ. If a stamp may be required by the Stamp Act (56 Geo. 3, c. 56), the unstamped paper may still be read on an undertaking to get it stamped if necessary. Moore v. M'Kay, 2 Moll. 134.

If the terms of a contract are reduced into writing, the paper must be stamped in order to be read in evidence, though collaterally. Hearne v. James, 2 Bro. C. C. 309.

Replevin—Evidence of Rent.]—In replevin, the issue being whether the plaintiff held certain closes at a fixed rent, specified in the avowry:—Held, that unstamped receipts tending to shew that he had previously paid for the same premises the like rent so specified, were inadmissible to support the issue. Hawkins v. Warre, 5 D. & R. 512.

Bill of Sale—Former Bill Unstamped.]—On an issue to try the property in goods, which the plaintiff claimed under a bill of sale, a former bill of sale of the same goods, but which had been cancelled, was tendered to shew that the second bill of sale was given bonâ fide, and not fraudulently. This document having been rejected, on the ground that it was not stamped:—Held, that it was properly rejected, and was inadmissible without a stamp. Williams v. Gerry, 10 M. & W. 296; 2 D. (N.S.) 201; 11 L. J., Ex. 389.

Documents made Abroad.] — A document which, by the law of a foreign country, is not admissible in evidence, for want of a stamp, may nevertheless be admitted in this country. But where, by the foreign law, the want of a stamp renders the contract void, it cannot be enforced here. Bristow v. Sequeville, 5 Ex. 275; 3 Car. & K. 64; 19 L. J., Ex. 289; 14 Jur. 674. See also James v. Catherwood, 3 D. & R. 190.

An agreement made in a foreign country cannot be used here, if it appears that by the laws of that country it would not have been available there without a stamp. Alves v. Hodgson, 7 Term Rep. 241; 2 Esp. 528; 4 R. R. 433.

A plaintiff cannot recover upon a written contract made in Jamaica, which, by the laws of that country, is void for want of a stamp. Ib. S. P., Clegg v. Levy, 3 Camp. 166.

A charter-party executed entirely abroad, and stamped within two months after it has been received in this country, can be received in evidence, since it falls within the provisions of 33 & 34 Vict. c. 97, s. 15, and not of ss. 67 and 68 of that act. The Belfort, 53 L. J., P. 88; 9 P. D. 215; 51 L. T. 271; 33 W. R. 171; 5 Asp. M. C. 291.

Receipts.]—See ante, col. 694.

Acknowledgment to save Statute of Limitations.]—P. being indebted to the executors of C. in 11,000*l.*, to which A. was beneficially entitled, sent a letter to A. as follows: "I have sent you a note for the money due to you, which your mother left for you." Inclosed in this letter was a promissory note, on a receipt stamp for 11,000*l.*, and 4*l.* per cent. interest. At the time of this letter and note being sent the debt was barred by the statute:—Held, that there was not a sufficient acknowledgment by P. without referring to the note to see what was the promise made, and this could not be done for the want of a proper stamp. Parmiter v. Parmiter, 3 De G., F. & J. 461; 30 L. J., Ch. 508; 3 L. T. 799.

In Proof of Fraud.]—A document which purports to be an agreement, and is valid upon the face of it, but which is tendered to shew the transaction with which it is connected to be a fraud, is admissible, although unstamped. Holmes v. Sixsmith, 7 Ex. 802; 21 L. J., Ex. 312; 16 Jur. 619.

A memorandum stamped as a receipt having been rejected, because requiring a stamp as an agreement, an agreement for the hire of goods, of which the value was mentioned only by reference to the receipt, does not require a stamp, the value of the hire not appearing to exceed the amount of 20*l.*, and the rejected receipt allowed to be looked at, with reference to the real state of the transaction, in order to shew fraud. Chittenden v. Day, 2 F. & F. 77.

Bond — Many Indorsements — No Room for Receipt.]—Where, from the number of indorsements, there is no room on the back of the bond, receipts written on unstamped paper, annexed to the bond, may be read in evidence. Orme v. Young, 4 Camp. 336; 17 R. R. 611.

Coming from Opposite Party.]—A written agreement, though coming out of the possession of the opposite party, cannot be given in evidence, unless it is legally stamped. Doe d. St. John v. Hore, 2 Esp. 724.

Form of Stamp.]—Articles of agreement under seal could not be given in evidence unless stamped with a deed stamp, although the agreement stamp was of the same value, but differently formed. Robinson v. Dryborough, 6 Term Rep. 317; 1 Esp. 243. And see Chamberlain v. Porter, 1 N. R. 34; Farr v. Price, 1 East, 55; 5 R. R. 515; Taylor v. Hague, 2 East, 414.

Stamped with a Denoting Stamp.]—Documents stamped with a denoting stamp by the commissioners, under 13 & 14 Vict. c. 97, s. 14, cannot be objected to, when tendered in evidence, as being improperly stamped. Prudential Mutual Assurance Investment and Loan Association v. Curzon, 8 Ex. 97; 22 L. J., Ex. 85.

Where the instrument is objected to at the trial as being insufficiently stamped, and afterwards, but before the case is argued in banc, a denoting stamp is affixed to it, such objection to the sufficiency of the first stamp is not thereby removed. Ib.

In Criminal Proceedings.]—Before 17 & 18 Vict. c. 83, s. 12, if an agreement or other written instrument was charged to be part of a fraud or other crime, it was immaterial whether it was stamped or not. Rex v. Foule, 4 Car. & P. 592.

b. On Payment of Penalty.

Not objected to.]—An agreement which has not been duly stamped, cannot be admitted without payment of the penalty, although no objection to its admission is offered by either side. Harris v. Chapman, 17 L. T. 517.

Insufficiently Stamped.]—Where an instrument has an insufficient stamp, it may at any time be made available by affixing a proper stamp and paying the penalty. Burton v. Kirkby, 2 Marsh. 480; 7 Taunt. 174.

Before and after 7 & 8 Vict. c. 21.]—An agreement made at a time when the 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, was in force, and under which it required a stamp of 1*l.*, was, subsequently to 7 & 8 Vict. c. 21, coming into operation, stamped, under a penalty, with the stamp of 2*s.* 6*d.*, as required by s. 2:—Held, admissible. Deakin v. Penniall, 2 Ex. 320; 17 L. J., Ex. 217.

Receipt of Penalty erased.]—If an instrument has been originally unstamped, but has been stamped on the payment of a penalty, it is admissible, though the receipt for the penalty has been erased; provided it is proved that such receipt had been indorsed on it; it is not necessary to prove the commissioners' signatures to such a receipt. Apothecaries' Co. v. Fernyhough, 2 Car. & P. 438.

Indorsement by Commissioners.]—A memorandum indorsed upon an instrument, purporting to be an acknowledgment by the commissioners of stamps on the payment of a penalty, is not receivable in evidence. Rex v. Preston, 3 N. & M. 31; 5 B. & Ad. 1029; 3 L. J., M. C. 58.

—— Before and after 16 & 17 Vict. c. 59.]—A bill of exchange for 25*l.*, dated 17th January, 1857, was drawn on one of the threepenny receipt stamps, rendered useless by 16 & 17 Vict. c. 59. In 1859, on application to the commissioners of inland revenue, they, on the payment of the penalty, affixed a bill stamp of the required value (3*d.*) to the instrument:—Held, that they had authority to do so, and that the bill so stamped was properly admitted. Kaiser v. Grout, 5 H. & N. 35; 29 L. J., Ex. 20; 1 L. T. 44; 8 W. R. 79.

c. Secondary Evidence.

Presumption.]—The burden of proving an instrument to be unstamped lies, in the first instance, on the party who objects to its production on the ground that it is unstamped. Marine Investment Co. v. Haviside, 42 L. J., Ch. 173; L. R. 5 H. L. 624.

When there is no evidence on either side it will be presumed to have been stamped. Ib.

But when once satisfactory evidence has been given that at a particular time the instrument was unstamped, there is an end of any presumption of law in favour of its having been stamped; the onus of proof is shifted, and the party who relies on the instrument must prove it to have been duly stamped. Ib.

Where secondary evidence is admitted to prove the contents of a lost instrument, the court will presume that the instrument was stamped, unless there is evidence that it was not stamped. Hart v. Hart, 1 Hare, 1; 11 L. J., Ch. 9; 5 Jur. 1007. S. P., Pooley v. Goodwin, 5 N. & M. 466; 4 A. & E. 94; 1 H. & W. 567.

When an agreement requiring a stamp is lost, and was without a stamp when last seen, it will be taken that it never was stamped, and secondary evidence of it cannot be received. Arbon v. Fussell, 9 Jur. (N.S.) 753; 7 L. T. 283; 11 W. R. 26.

The court will presume that an indenture of apprenticeship, executed thirty years before, under which the apprentice had regularly served his time for seven years, when the indenture was given up to him, and proved to be lost, was properly stamped. Rex v. Long Buckby, 7 East, 45; 8 R. R. 595.

Document inadmissible for want of Stamp.]—When an agreement in writing is in existence, which ought to be but is not stamped, it is not a nullity, so as to admit of parol evidence being given of the terms of the agreement. Delay v. Alcock, 24 L. J., Q. B. 68; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 498. S. C., nom. Alcock v. Delay, 4 El. & Bl. 660.

A party cannot be cross-examined as to the contents of a document not admissible for want of a stamp. Baker v. Dale, 1 F. & F. 271.

Where goods are claimed under an agreement the terms of which are contained in a written instrument, which is inadmissible by reason of its not being stamped, parol evidence cannot be received of the claimant's title to such goods. Yorke v. Smith, 21 L. J., Q. B. 53; 16 Jur. 63.

Where an agreement on unstamped paper has been destroyed, no parol evidence can be given of its contents, even if it has been destroyed by the wrongful act of the party who takes the objection. Rippiner v. Wright, 2 B. & Ald. 478; 21 R. R. 263.

The court refused to admit secondary evidence of a declaration of trust, there being strong circumstantial evidence to shew that the original instrument was not stamped. Rose v. Clarke, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 534.

The court of equity cannot, any more than a court of law, receive parol evidence of the contents of a written agreement, which appears never to have been stamped, although fraudulently destroyed by the party against whom it was sought to be enforced. Smith v. Henley, 1 Ph. 391; 13 L. J., Ch. 221; 8 Jur. 434.

Evidence in writing not admitted, as an agreement unstamped does not prevent parol evidence, if otherwise admissible. Hiern v. Mill, 13 Ves. 114; 9 R. R. 149.

Agreement not produced after Notice.]—An agreement, which by law ought to be stamped, not being produced upon notice given, secondary evidence is not allowed of its contents, if shewn that, at the time of its delivery to the party not producing it, it was unstamped. Arbor v. Fussell, 9 Jur. (N.S.) 753; 7 L. T. 283; 11 W. R. 26. See Rippiner v. Wright, 2 B. & Ald. 478; 21 R. R. 263.

Upon the defendant's refusal, after notice, to produce at the trial the original of an agreement on which the plaintiff relied, a witness for the plaintiff produced an unstamped copy; but, on his cross-examination, he stated that the original was not stamped at the time it was executed and acted upon, and it appeared that the plaintiff's attorney had had inspection of the original shortly before the action:—Held, that the presumption of the document being regularly stamped, which would have arisen from the defendant's refusal to produce it, being thus rebutted, the copy was properly rejected. Crowther v. Solomons, 6 C. B. 758; 18 L. J., C. P. 92.

Insufficiency—Evidence of.]—Where proof is given of the loss of a written instrument by a document, which itself shews that such instrument was originally insufficiently stamped, the court will not presume that the instrument was ever properly stamped, nor admit secondary evidence of its contents. Blair v. Ormond, 1 De G. & S. 428; 11 Jur. 665.

Lost Document—Evidence of being Unstamped.]—It lies upon the party objecting to secondary evidence of the contents of a lost document, on the ground of the want of a stamp, to shew that it was not stamped. Closmadeuc v. Carrel, 18 C. B. 36; 25 L. J., C. P. 216; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 474; 4 W. R. 547.

If it is shewn that at one time it was unstamped, that fact by itself will raise the presumption that it continued without a stamp. Ib.

But where it appeared that a charter-party at the time of its execution was unstamped, and within the fourteen days allowed by 5 & 6 Vict. c. 79, for stamping such an instrument, it was taken to the district stamp office in the country and the duty and postage paid, in order that it might be sent to London to be stamped, and the clerk to whom it was delivered proved that he sent to London all documents left with him for that purpose; and the clerks in London said they were unable to say whether such a document was or was not returned, but if it was, it would be returned in the usual course to the district office in the country; and the clerk there could not say whether it was returned or not, but on search being made for it, no trace of it could be discovered:—Held, that the evidence left it altogether uncertain whether the document was stamped or not, that the presumption of its being unstamped was done away with, and that the secondary evidence was admissible. Ib.

Devise of Lands—Sale—Lost Plans.]—A. devised lands to B. for life, with remainders over. He afterwards contracted to sell part of the lands to C., and the contract partly described them, and partly referred to a plan. C. did not pay the whole purchase-money, but entered into possession, and became bankrupt. The court of review made an order in the bankruptcy, declaring that A. had a lien for his unpaid purchase-money, and directed a sale. A. became the purchaser for a less sum than was due to him, and proved against C.'s estate for the difference. A. entered into possession, and so continued until his death. The plan had never been stamped, and was lost:—Held, that parol evidence was not admissible to shew what was contained in the lost unstamped plan. Andrew v. Andrew, 8 De G. M. & G. 336; 25 L. J., Ch. 779; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 719; 4 W. R. 520.

Work and Labour—Written Agreement unstamped—Extra Work.]—In an action for work, where it appears that the work was done under a written agreement, which is inadmissible for want of a stamp, parol evidence is not receivable to shew that there was extra work done not included in the original agreement; nor will the judge look at the contract for this purpose. Buckstone v. Cornish, 1 D. & L. 585; 12 M. & W. 426; 13 L. J., Ex. 91; 8 Jur. 46.

Joint Interest in Document—Admissibility of Stamped Copy.]—In an action founded on a document in which both parties have an interest, and which was in the possession of one, but is said by him to have been lost, a judge cannot order, that if such party does not produce the document to be stamped, a copy, duly stamped, shall be read in evidence at the trial, and that the original shall not be produced on the other side, nor objection taken to the want of a stamp on the original. The court rescinded such an order after it had been enforced by the judge at nisi prius, and made a rule of court. Rankin v. Hamilton, 15 Q. B. 187; 14 Jur. 930.

Admitted Copy.]—An admitted copy of a document may be received without a stamp, and without proof that the original is stamped. Travis v. Hargreave, 4 F. & F. 1078.

Agreement in two Parts—Only one Stamp.]—If plaintiffs put in one part of a written agreement which is signed by the defendant only, and is duly stamped, the defendant may put in the other part of the agreement which is signed by one of the plaintiffs for self and the other executors, although that part of the agreement is not stamped. Turner v. Hardey, Car. & M. 449.

If there are two parts of a written agreement, both executed at the same time, but the one stamped and the other unstamped, the unstamped part is receivable as secondary evidence of the contents of the stamped part. Waller v. Horsfall, 1 Camp. 501.

If two parts of an instrument are prepared, but only one is stamped, the party having the custody of the unstamped part may give secondary evidence of the contents of the agreement, if the other party refuses, on notice, to produce the stamped part. Garnons v. Swift, 1 Taunt. 507.

Where a plaintiff lost his part of an agreement under seal, after it had been duly stamped, and at the trial of an action on the agreement, the defendant, upon notice, produced his part unstamped, and the plaintiff the draft of the agreement:—Held, that the defendant's part, unstamped, might be received. Munn v. Godbold, 3 Bing. 292; 11 Moore, 49; 2 Car. & P. 97; 4 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 54; 28 R. R. 628.

A lessee who executes the counterpart of a lease, cannot dispute its admissibility in evidence, or impeach its validity upon the ground of the original not being properly stamped. Paul v. Meek, 2 Y. & J. 116; 31 R. R. 559.

Subject-matter illegal.]—A written agreement, which is in law illegal, is admissible for the purpose of insisting on the illegality of the transaction, in answer to an action for a sum thereby agreed to be paid, without its being stamped. Coppock v. Bower, 4 M. & W. 361; 8 L. J., Ex. 9.

Bill of Exchange.]—In an action on a bill of exchange given to the drawers for a balance of account on a purchase, and by them indorsed to the plaintiff, the defence being that it was given for a larger amount than really due, the agreement of purchase between the defendant and the drawer was allowed to be given in evidence unstamped. Ashcombe v. Ellam, 2 F. & F. 306.

A. & Co. being indebted to S. gave him an unstamped letter or order directed to B. & Co. requiring them to pay him 200*l.* out of moneys which would become payable from B. & Co. to them on the completion of a certain contract. A. & Co. became insolvent, and the trustee under their liquidation disputed the validity of the letter:—Held, that the order operated as a bill of exchange, and being unstamped, was not receivable in evidence. Shellard, Ex parte, Adams and Kirby, In re, 43 L. J., Bk. 3; L. R. 17 Eq. 109; 29 L. T. 621; 22 W. R. 152.

And see BILLS OF EXCHANGE.

Contract of Marriage.]—A letter read to prove a contract of marriage need not be stamped. Orford v. Cole, 2 Stark. 351.

Copy of Deed to refresh Memory.]—The copy of a deed produced and read in court, if it is merely used as a memorandum to refresh the memory of a witness, who has read the original, and compared the copy with it, is not liable to the duty imposed by 44 Geo. 3, c. 98, schedule A., and 48 Geo. 3, c. 149, schedule 1, part 1, on copies of documents. Braithwaite or Braythwayte v. Hitchcock, 2 D. (N.S.) 444; 10 M. & W. 494; 12 L. J., Ex. 38; 6 Jur. 976.

Letter to vary Contemporaneous Letter.]—Held, that a letter from defendant to plaintiff, which was written at the same time as another letter, duly stamped, by which the defendant agreed to take certain apartments of the plaintiff, and was offered in evidence in order to vary the terms of the other letter, was not admissible without a stamp. Atherstone v. Bostock, 2 M. & S. 511; 10 L. J., C. P. 113.

d. Time of Stamping.

Guarantee after Bankruptcy.]—It is no objection to a guarantee given by a bankrupt that it was not stamped at the date of the bankruptcy. The court does not look at the date of a stamp. Nicholson, Ex parte, 4 Jur. 1066.

After Proceedings—Deed.]—A deed stamped after proceedings have begun is good ab initio. Browne v. Savage, 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1020; 7 W. R. 571.

If an instrument of demise in writing of apartments for a period of three months certain requires either an agreement or a lease stamp, it is not necessary that it should be stamped before the rule is granted under 1 Geo. 4, c. 87, it being time enough any time before the trial of the ejectment. Doe d. Phillipps v. Roe, 1 D. & R. 443; 5 B. & Ald. 766.

A deed which wanted a proper stamp being produced at the hearing, the cause was ordered to stand over, to give the plaintiff an opportunity of getting a stamp affixed. This being effected a decree was made. Curtis v. Holcombe, 6 L. J., Ch. 156.

Where a deed is produced bearing the proper stamp, the court will receive it without entering into the inquiry whether it was affixed upon the payment of a sufficient penalty, and within proper time, although it is proved not to have been stamped when executed. Rex v. Preston, 3 N. & M. 31; 5 B. & Ad. 1029; 3 L. J., M. C. 58.

—— Letter.]—Bill founded on a letter not stamped; decree made, but directed not to be delivered out till letters were produced stamped to registrar. Cherret v. Jones, 6 Madd. 267.

An original letter stamped, after production, to make it evidence. Ford v. Compton, 2 Bro. C. C. 32.

—— Receipt.]—Receipt for purchase-money allowed to be stamped as an agreement during the hearing. Coles v. Trecothick, 9 Ves. 234; 1 Smith, 233; 7 R. R. 167.

Where limited by Statute.]—Where a deed bearing the proper stamp is proved not to have been stamped when executed, the court will inquire into the time it was stamped, in cases where stamping within a limited period is required by statute. Rex v. Preston, supra.

Before and after 1870—Date of Execution.]—A deed executed before the commencement of the Stamp Act, 1870, and at the time of execution requiring a 35*s.* stamp, was not dated nor stamped until afterwards; so that on its face it appeared to be duly stamped with a 10*s.* stamp, under ss. 4 and 78:—Held, that evidence of the real date of execution was admissible; and that, under s. 17, the deed could not be given in evidence. Clarke v. Roche, 47 L. J., Q. B. 147; 3 Q. B. D. 170; 37 L. T. 633; 26 W. R. 112.

Probate—When Payable under preceding Statute.]—J. died on the 2nd of August, 1879, having previously made her last will, which her executor proceeded to prove, and on the 13th of September, 1879, paid 450*l.*, being the amount of duty then payable. A caveat was lodged by the next of kin, and it was not until the 13th of April, 1880, that the will was established. In the meantime the 43 Vict. c. 14, was passed, altering and increasing the duties payable upon probates on and after the 1st of April, 1880:—Held, that the probate was liable to the increased duty made payable by the 43 Vict. c. 14, s. 9. Joy, In re, Lalor v. Jones, 5 L. R., Ir. 282.

Bond—After Death of Obligor.]—A bond is valid though not duly stamped until after the death of the obligor. Handley v. ——, 8 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 49.

e. Objections and Proof.

Several Parties—Proof on One making Objection.]—Where an agreement between several parties is offered in evidence, and it is objected to on the ground that it is not sufficiently stamped, by reason of the omission of a stamp, proof of that lies on the party who makes the objection, it being a fact. Waddington v. Francis, 5 Esp. 182.

The onus of shewing that an instrument, otherwise regular, has been duly stamped, lies on the party impeaching it. Doe d. Fryer v. Coombs or Combe, 3 Q. B. 687; 3 G. & D. 193; 12 L. J., Q. B. 36; 6 Jur. 930. S. P., Wilson v. Smith, 12 M. & W. 401; 1 D. & L. 633; 13 L. J., Ex. 113.

The burthen of proving an instrument to be unstamped lies, in the first instance, on the party who objects to its production on the ground that it is unstamped. Marine Investment Co. v. Haviside, 42 L. J., Ch. 173; L. R. 5 H. L. 624.

Presumption.]—When there is no evidence on either side, it will be presumed to have been stamped. Ib.

But when once satisfactory evidence has been given that at a particular time the instrument was unstamped, there is an end of any presumption of law in favour of its having been stamped; the onus of proof is shifted, and the party who relies on the instrument must prove it to have been duly stamped. Ib.

Against a party who refuses (after notice) to produce an agreement, it will be presumed that it is stamped. Crisp v. Anderson, 1 Stark. 35; 18 R. R. 744.

But the party refusing is at liberty to prove the contrary. Ib.

Claim for Exemption.]—Where an agreement is primâ facie liable to stamp duty, it is for the party offering it to bring it within the exemption. Chanter v. Dickinson, 2 D. (N.S.) 838; 5 Man. & G. 253; 6 Scott (N.R.) 182; 12 L. J., C. P. 147; 7 Jur. 89.

Obliterated Stamp.]—Where a deed requiring an ad valorem stamp is produced, bearing the appearance of having had a stamp upon it, but the nature of which, by reason of obliteration, cannot be ascertained, it is for the party objecting to the deed to give some evidence that a proper stamp had not been imposed, otherwise a presumption may be made that the deed had been duly stamped. Doe d. Fryer v. Coombes or Combe, 3 Q. B. 687; 3 G. & D. 193; 12 L. J., Q. B. 36; 6 Jur. 930.

Agreement to waive Objection.]—The court cannot sanction an agreement between the parties, that an objection for want of a proper stamp shall be waived. Owen v. Thomas, 3 Mylne & K. 353.

An agreement, that it should become necessary to stamp a document, and pay any penalty for doing so, one of the parties to it should be at liberty to charge the other with the expense of stamping it, is an evasion of the Stamp Act, and will not be enforced by a court of equity as to the penalty. Abbott v. Stratton, 3 Jo. & Lat. 603.

An agreement which has not been duly stamped cannot be admitted in evidence, although an application is made by both sides that the agreement should be admitted without being stamped, as it would amount to an evasion of the stamp laws. Harris v. Chapman, 17 L. T. 517.

Objection—by Associates.]—Under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125, s. 28, the associate can make only such objections, for want of a stamp, as the parties might have made if the statute had not passed. Travers v. Hargreave, 4 F. & F. 1078.

—— By Party or Counsel.]—The 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125, s. 28, which enacts that it shall be the duty of the officer of the court to call the attention of the judge to any omission or insufficiency of the stamp upon any document produced in evidence, does not preclude a party to the suit, or his counsel, from taking the objection. Austin v. Bunyard, 6 B. & S. 687.

Question as to whether Original was Stamped is for the Jury.]—On the trial of an action on a policy in which the existence of the policy was in issue, the plaintiffs, pursuant to notice to produce, called on the defendant to produce the original policy. He declined, and they thereupon, with a view of proving that it had been duly executed, proceeded to put in a document, purporting to be a copy of the policy which they had received from the defendant's broker. The defendant objected, and requested the judge to hear evidence to shew that no original policy was or ever had been in existence. The objection was overruled, and the alleged copy admitted. Later in the cause the defendant gave evidence tending to prove that in fact there had never been any duly-stamped policy, or indeed any policy at all executed, and the judge left it to the jury to say whether there had or had not been executed a duly stamped policy by the defendant. The jury found in the affirmative:—Held, that the question was rightly left to the jury, inasmuch as if the judge had himself decided it, he would in fact have decided the main issue between the parties. Stowe v. Querner, 39 L. J., Ex. 60; L. R. 5 Ex. 155; 22 L. T. 29; 18 W. R. 466.

When Point Doubtful.]—An objection that a document requires a stamp will not be given effect to if the point is doubtful. Westlake v. Adams, 1 F. & F. 183.

When to be taken.]—Where an instrument was put in evidence as an agreement, properly stamped, but during the trial it was subsequently relied upon as a lease:—Held, that the objection to its inadmissibility, for want of a proper stamp ought to have been taken at that period of the trial when it was first tendered as a lease. Doe d. Phillip v. Benjamin, 2 W. W. & H. 96.

An objection to the admissibility of a document for the want or insufficiency of a stamp must be taken at the time it is tendered in evidence. Robinson v. Vernon (Lord), 7 C. B. (N.S.) 235; 29 L. J., C. P. 310; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 146.

Where, therefore, executors suing had put in evidence probate of the will of their testator, and the same had been read without objection:—Held, that the defendant could not afterwards, by giving extrinsic evidence of the value of the estate, object to the admissibility of the probate for want of a sufficient stamp. Ib.

f. Decision as to.

Motion on.]—Semble, that s. 31 of 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125 has deprived the courts of jurisdiction to entertain any motion upon a point reserved on the stamp laws. Kaiser v. Grout, 5 H. & N. 35; 29 L. J., Ex. 20; 1 L. T. 44; 8 W. R. 79.

Judge at Nisi Prius.]—The question whether or not a document offered in evidence requires to be or is sufficiently stamped is to be decided by the judge at nisi prius, and cannot properly be reserved for the opinion of the court. Tattersall v. Fearnley, 17 C. B. 368. S. P., Siordet v. Kuczynski, 17 C. B. 251; 25 L. J., C. P. 2; 4 W. R. 153.

Unless he decides against its admissibility. Cory v. Davis, 14 C. B. (N.S.) 370. S. P., Sharples v. Rickard, 2 H. & N. 57; 5 W. R. 568.

The provision does not apply where on an objection being taken to the sufficiency of the document, the judge with consent of the parties abstains from expressing an opinion on the point and reserves it for decision in banco. Eames v. Smith, 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1025; 4 W. R. 9.

Appeal.]—Where a judge, trying an action without a jury, rules that the stamp upon any document is sufficient, or that the document does not require a stamp, the decision is final and no appeal lies to the Court of Appeal by way of application for a nonsuit, or to enter judgment, or for a new trial. Blewitt v. Tritton, 61 L. J., Q. B. 773; [1892] 2 Q. B. 327; 67 L. T. 72; 41 W. R. 36.

Documents—Pending Decision.]—Documents which require to be stamped, may be taken as put in conditionally, on a point reserved as to their sufficiency or necessity. Webber v. Mowbray, 2 F. & F. 310.

Jurisdiction to order Production of Document to be stamped.]—The court will compel the production, by a defendant, of a letter, with a view to its being stamped as an agreement, at the expense of the plaintiff (such letter being a part of an alleged agreement, which it is necessary for the plaintiff to prove as part of his case), the plaintiff being no party to such document, but claiming only an interest in it. Hall v. Bainbridge, 3 D. & L. 92; 14 L. J., Q. B. 289; 9 Jur. 451.

—— When exercised.]—B. and C. entered into partnership by an unstamped agreement, which was in the hands of S. A. sued B. and C., as partners, for goods sold, and applied to S. to take or send the agreement to the stamp office, that A. might get it stamped. S. refused to do so, and a judge would not order him to do so as he held the agreement for B. and C., and did not in any way hold it for A. Dyke v. Brewer, 2 Car. & K. 828.

7. Attesting Witnesses to Documents.

a. When Necessary.

In Case of Wills.]—A will more than thirty years old may be read in evidence without proof of its execution, although the testator has died within thirty years, and some of the subscribing witnesses are proved to be still living. Doe d. Oldham v. Wolley, 8 B. & C. 22; 2 M. & Ry. 195; 3 Car. & P. 402; 6 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 286. S. P., Doe d. Spilsbury v. Burdett, 4 A. & E. 1; 6 N. & M. 259; 6 L. J., K. B. 73.

It has never been laid down as a rule that a will cannot be proved without examining all the witnesses, though the practice has been to examine all. Powell v. Cleaver, 2 Bro. C. C. 504.

But a party proving a will in solemn form in the Probate Court, is bound to call at least one of the attesting witnesses. Bowman v. Hodgson, 36 L. J., P. 124; L. R. 1 P. 362; 16 L. T. 392.

In ejectment by the heir-at-law against the devisee to prove the execution of the will, it is not necessary to call the subscribing witnesses. Doe d. Stutsbury v. Smith, 1 Esp. 391.

A will purported to have been executed in the presence of two attesting witnesses. One was abroad and the other in England. The executors, who propounded the will, applied for a commission for the examination, de bene esse, of the second attesting witness, who was resident in London. The affidavit alleged no physical infirmity but described him as an elderly person. The court ordered the commission to issue, but intimated that if it was proposed at the trial to read the evidence taken under it, strict proof of inability to produce the witness would be required. McPherson v. Parnell, 40 L. J., P. 30; 24 L. T. 742; 19 W. R. 784.

A subscribing witness to a will, who swears to the testator's insanity, may be contradicted by other evidence. Lowe v. Joliffe, 1 W. Bl. 365.

And see cases sub tit. Wills, ante, cols. 705 et seq.

Deeds.]—Where an instrument is proved by a copy as secondary evidence, from which it appears that the original was subscribed by an attesting witness, it is, nevertheless, unnecessary to call him. Poole v. Warren, 3 N. & P. 693; 8 A. & E. 582; 3 Jur. 23.

Where a title-deed, under which both parties in ejectment claim, comes out of the possession of the defendant upon notice to produce, it may be read against him on behalf of the plaintiff, without calling the attesting witnesses. Doe d. Williams v. Williams, 5 N. & M. 434; 1 H. & W. 574.

In a case where all the parties are represented before the court it is not necessary to prove by the attesting witness a deed for the validity of which attestation is not necessary within the meaning of s. 26 of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854. Worthington v. Moore, 64 L. T. 338.

In an action for work and labour in getting an apprentice for the defendant, the plaintiff gave the defendant notice to produce the deed of apprenticeship:—Held, that the production of it did not dispense with the necessity of proving its execution by the subscribing witness. Reardon v. Minter, 5 Man. & G. 203; 12 L. J., C. P. 139.

Semble, where one of the plaintiffs is an attesting witness to an instrument, the proof of the execution of which is essential to the defendant's case, it is enough for the defendant to prove the handwriting of that plaintiff. Strange v. Dashwood, 3 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 194.

Upon a question of settlement of apprenticeship the indenture was produced, apparently executed by all parties; and the name of G. J. affixed to the attestation, as attesting witness; but without any description. It was proved that search had been made where the indenture was executed, but that no one of that name could there be found; and that on inquiry of the parties to the indenture nothing could be learned of him; but that between two and three miles from the place, there was a G. J. who said he knew nothing about the matter. He was not produced. Upon this evidence the sessions refused to receive the evidence of the parties to the indenture to prove its execution; being of opinion that enough had not been done to prove the handwriting of the attesting witness:—Held, that they had decided rightly. Rex v. Macclestone, 7 L. J. (O.S.) M. C. 96.

In an action of ejectment the counsel for the plaintiff called the defendant as a witness, and proposed to prove the defendant's execution of a deed, by which he assigned the lands sought to be recovered to the plaintiff by asking him whether he had executed it. Held, that the subscribing witness ought to be called: and that without shewing that it was impossible to procure him, the proposed evidence could not be received. Whyman v. Gath, 17 Jur. 559; 1 W. R. 373.

In ex parte cases a deed must, generally speaking, be proved by the attesting witnesses. Reay's Estate, In re, 3 Eq. R. 512; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 222; 3 W. R. 312.

On an ex parte application, the testimony of the attesting witness to an instrument was dispensed with, there being a difficulty in obtaining his evidence. Dierdon, In re, 10 Jur. (N.S.) 673; 10 L. T. 690; 12 W. R. 978.

Where the attesting witness to the signature of certain parties to an agreement for reference to arbitration was the clerk of their solicitor, and he refused to make an affidavit verifying the execution of the agreement by them, the court, on an ex parte application to make the award a rule of court, dispensed with proof of such execution. S. C., nom. Dierdon's Arbitration, In re, 4 N. R. 394.

Necessity of proving a deed by the attesting witness, where its validity and the payment of the consideration is contested by a person not a party to it. Leigh v. Lloyd, 35 Beav. 455.

To Seal of Bank.]—To an indenture of feoffment by the Bank of England, the seal of the bank was affixed by a paper wafered to the indenture, on which paper was written, "Sealed by order of the court of directors of the governor and company of the Bank of England, 12th Dec. 1833, J. K., secretary":—Held, that J. K. was not an attesting witness, and that the execution of the feoffment might be proved by the seal, without calling J. K. Doe d. Bank of England v. Chambers, 4 A. & E. 410; 6 N. & M. 539; 1 H. & W. 749; 5 L. J., K. B. 123.

Lease.]—In an action by a lessee against the assignee of a lease, the plaintiff having proved the execution of the counterpart of the lease, the defendant put in the original lease, which was produced by a party to whom he had assigned it:—Held, that it was not necessary for the plaintiff to call the subscribing witness to prove the execution of the lease. Burnett v. Lynch, 8 D. & R. 368; 6 B. & C. 589; 4 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 274; Cp. Nagle v. Shea, Ir. R. 9 C. L. 389—Ex. Ch.

The parties agreed to admit in the cause certain facts in the same manner as if they had been proved by proper and legal evidence, and among others, that a certain exhibit was the notice, and a certain other exhibit a true copy of the lease referred to in the notice:—Held, that the notice was not evidence of the lease so as to relieve the defendant from the necessity of calling the attesting witness. Mounsey v. Burnham, 1 Hare, 15.

Held, also, that the admission as to the copy of the lease substituted the copy for the original, but did not place the copy in a better situation than the original, if it had been produced. Ib.

Assignment of Goods.]—Where a defendant claimed title to goods under an assignment, and in pursuance of notice produced it at the trial when called for by the plaintiffs:—Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to read it in evidence without calling the attesting witness to prove the execution, although they impugned the validity of the assignment on the ground of fraud. Carr v. Burdiss, 1 C. M. & R. 782; 5 Tyr. 309.

Appointment under Power.]—An appointment of new trustees, not required to be by deed or to be attested, was made by deed, executed abroad by the donee of the power, who was resident abroad, and his execution of it was attested by a witness, also resident abroad. A vesting order was then applied for, one of the old trustees being of unsound mind, and was supported by proof of the handwriting of the signature of the appointor to the deed:—Held, that the petitioners must prove the handwriting of the attesting witness, or, failing that, must shew that they had endeavoured to find a witness in England who could speak to his handwriting, and failed in doing so, in which case the order might be drawn up on proof of the handwriting of the appointor. Rice, In re, 55 L. J., Ch. 799; 32 Ch. D. 35; 54 L. T. 589; 34 W. R. 747—C. A. See also Baxendale v. De Valmer, 57 L. T. 556.

Partnership Agreement.]—In an action the defence was, that the plaintiff's testator and the defendant were partners, and that the subject-matter of the action was a partnership account. To prove the partnership the defendant called for the production of an agreement, purporting to be by a third person, with the plaintiff's testator and the defendant as a firm, to do work for them:—Held, that on the production of it by the plaintiff the defendant was not entitled to read it without proof of its execution. Collins v. Bayntun, 4 P. & D. 544; 1 Q. B. 117; 5 Jur. 530; 10 L. J., Q. B. 98.

Contra Spoliatorem.]—It is not necessary to prove the execution of securities against a spoliator or a wrongdoer. Rex v. Ellins, R. & R. 188. S. P., Delany v. Temson, 3 Bro. P. C. 659.

Public Officer.]—Proof of execution is not necessary where the opposite party who produces the deed is a public officer, who, in the discharge of his official duties, was obliged to prepare such deed and get it executed. Scott v. Waithman, 3 Stark. 168.

Bill of Exchange.]—If the subscribing witness to the acceptance of a bill of exchange, being one of acceptor's family, cannot be served with a subpœna in consequence of the conduct of that family, the bill may be paid without his evidence. Hill v. Phillips, 5 Car. & P. 356.

In assumpsit by indorsee against acceptor, in order to shew that plaintiff had received the bill when it was overdue, a protest which had been made of it by plaintiff's immediate indorsee, being in the hands of the plaintiff, was called for by defendant at the trial on notice to produce. On its production it was found to be attested by a witness:—Held, that the mere circumstance that the protest came out of the hands of the plaintiff, as he did not claim title under it, was not sufficient to dispense with the necessity of calling the witness; but it being proved that on two occasions the paper had been produced by plaintiff's attorney to defendant's attorney as the protest applying to the bill in question, it was admitted in evidence without proof of the attestation. Martin v. Palmer, 6 Car. & P. 466.

b. Witness denying Attestation.

An attesting witness ought not to be admitted to deny his own attestation. Goodtitle d. Alexander v. Clayton, 4 Burr. 2224.

But if he does deny having seen the deed executed, other evidence of the execution is admissible. Talbot v. Hodson, 7 Taunt. 251; 2 Marsh. 527.

Witness is not at liberty to contradict his attestation. In such a case other evidence from circumstances is admissible, as where there is no witness or the person does not exist; sealing and delivery may be presumed from proof of handwriting. Burrowes v. Lock, 10 Ves. 474; 8 R. R. 33, 856.

c. Witness Dead, Absent or Incapacitated.

Witness Dead.]—Proof of the handwriting of the subscribing witness to an instrument is sufficient, he being dead, without any further proof of the identity of the parties, except the identity of name and description. Page v. Mann, 1 M. & M. 79.

Where attesting witness to deed has lived abroad, a strict proof of his death is required; otherwise, where constantly residing in England. Henley v. Philips, 2 Atk. 48.

One having order to prove a deed, vivâ voce, at the hearing, not allowed to prove the witnesses' hands, they being dead, but had leave to examine in the office to prove the deed, though publication was passed. Bloxton v. Drewit, Pre. Ch. 64.

One subscribing witness dead, and another out of jurisdiction, proof of handwriting allowed. Banks v. Farquharson, Dick. 167.

Mortgage bequeathed to wife of subscribing witness. Proof of his handwriting held sufficient proof of execution of mortgage between mortgagee and mortgagor. Inman v. Parsons, 4 Madd. 271.

In order to prove a deed a witness was called who stated that it was destroyed and that he had seen the names of the parties to it in their respective handwriting. He also stated that the instrument bore the name of one B. as an attesting witness; that B. was dead, but that he did not know B.'s handwriting or whether the name of B. was written by B.:—Held, that in the circumstances, secondary evidence of the contents of the deed was admissible without further proof of the handwriting of B. Per Erle, J.: Where a document is lost and the attesting witness to it is dead, there is no necessity for proving his handwriting. Reg. v. St. Giles, Camberwell, 1 El. & Bl. 642; 22 L. J., M. C. 54; 17 Jur. 164; 1 W. R. 181.

Witness Absent.]—In an action on an attested agreement, it was proved that the attesting witness formerly lived at Salford, but that about eleven months ago he had gone on board a ship bound for America; that a letter had been received some months after which was marked in his handwriting "ship letter"; and that he had not since been heard of in a lodge of Oddfellows to which he belonged:—Held, sufficient to let in evidence of his handwriting. Davidson v. Carr, 12 L. J., Ex. 312.

To account for not calling a subscribing witness, evidence cannot be given of his declarations as to where he lived; to let in proof of that, in answer to an inquiry there, it was stated that he was abroad; but some person should either be called from the house where the witness lived, or else some person who had seen him abroad. Doe d. Beard v. Powell, 7 Car. & P. 617.

Proof by a father that his son, who had parted from him on bad terms, had enlisted in the 11th Dragoons, and that he had inquired at the War Office and been told that the regiment had sailed for India, was held sufficient to let in evidence of the son's handwriting, as subscribing witness to an agreement. Wyatt v. Bateman, 7 Car. & P. 586.

Where an attesting witness to a deed cannot be found after strict and diligent inquiry, evidence of his handwriting is admissible. Doe d. Johnson v. Johnson, 2 Chit. 196.

In accounting for the absence of an attesting witness, general answers to inquiries that nothing is known concerning him are admissible, but not declarations as to particular facts if the party making them is capable of being called. Ib.

Absconding.]—An attesting witness to a bond could not be found after sufficient inquiry:—Held, that evidence of his handwriting was admissible, it being clear that he had absconded, although a letter which did not state where he was concealed had been received from him by his clerk a few days before the trial. Morgan v. Morgan, 9 Bing. 359; 2 Moore & Sc. 490; 2 L. J., C. P. 27.

Incapable of being examined.]—Proof of the handwriting of an attesting witness, who is incapable of being examined, is not sufficient to maintain an action on a written instrument; but plaintiff must give some evidence of the identity of defendant with the person executing, beyond the mere similarity of the name. Whitelocke v. Musgrove, 1 C. & M. 511; 3 Tyr. 541; 2 L. J., Ex. 210. Logan v. Alder, Ib., n.

Witness blind.]—Where an attesting witness to a deed had become blind:—Held, that it was not sufficient to prove the handwriting of the signature, but that he must be also examined. Rees v. Williams, 1 De G. & Sm. 314.

If since the execution of a deed the subscribing witness to it has become blind, a party suing on the deed must, if non est factum be pleaded, call the subscribing witness; and it is not enough to prove the handwriting of the parties executing the deed and of the subscribing witness. Crank v. Frith, 9 Car. & P. 197; 2 M. & Rob. 262.

A deed attested by a witness become blind may be read, as proof of the witness's writing, without calling him. Pedler v. Paige, 1 M. & Rob. 258.

d. Where Party Claims an Interest.

Subscribing Witnesses Unnecessary.]—In an action upon an agreement and a memorandum of even date indorsed thereon, to explain and vary the terms of the original agreement (which was expressly referred to as "the within-mentioned agreement"), the consideration for the defendants' promise was alleged to be the making of the agreement and memorandum, and the undertaking on the part of the plaintiffs to perform the same. At the trial, the plaintiffs called for and proved (the defendants producing it) the part of the agreement and memorandum executed by the plaintiffs; they then offered in evidence the part executed by the defendants, and after proving the execution of the memorandum indorsed thereon, proposed, without calling or accounting for the absence of the subscribing witness, to read the original agreement. The judge rejected it:—Held, that the agreement ought to have been received, and was admissible without calling the attesting witness. Fishmongers' Co. v. Dimsdale, 12 C. B. 557—Ex. Ch.

If a defendant calls on a plaintiff to produce at the trial a deed in his custody, to which the plaintiff is a party, and under which he claims a beneficial estate, it is not necessary that the defendant should call the attesting witness to prove the due execution of the deed when produced. Pearce v. Hooper, 3 Taunt. 60.

It is not necessary to prove the execution of a deed, if the adverse party claims under it; and this rule applies, where secondary evidence is given of the deed. Doe d. Rowlandson v. Wainwright, 1 N. & P. 8; 5 A. & E. 520; 2 H. & W. 391; 6 L. J., K. B. 35.

A party producing, at the trial of a cause, a deed which has been some months in his possession, is not excused from proving the execution, because he received such deed from the adverse party, who formerly claimed a benefit under it. Vacher v. Cocks, 1 B. & Ad. 145; M. & M. 353; 8 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 341.

e. After Notice to Produce.

Not necessary.]—In an action on an indenture of apprenticeship, the plaintiff proved that it was in the possession of the defendant, to whom he gave a notice to produce it:—Held, that, on non-production, parol evidence of its contents might be let in without calling the subscribing witness. Cooke v. Tanswell, 2 Moore, 513; 8 Taunt. 131.

Where a deed is in possession of a defendant, who has notice to produce it, an examined copy is evidence, without proof of his execution of it. Doxon v. Haigh, 1 Esp. 409.

In an action against the vendor of an estate, to recover the deposit on a contract for the purchase, if the defendant on notice produce the contract, the plaintiff need not prove its execution. Bradshaw v. Bennett, 1 M. & Rob. 143; 5 Car. & P. 48.

Where defendants, claiming title under a deed produce it at the trial when called for by plaintiffs, after notice to produce, the attesting witness need not be called, although plaintiffs dispute the validity of the deed on the ground of fraud but admit its execution. Carr v. Burdiss, 1 C. M. & R. 443; 3 Tyr. 136; 4 L. J., Ex. 60.

Assumpsit by a servant against his master for not employing him under a written agreement to serve for a year which had not expired. The agreement was produced under notice:—Held, that it was not necessary to call the subscribing witness to the execution. Bell v. Chaytor, 1 Car. & K. 162.

f. What must be Proved.

Execution.]—Witness must not only prove his own attestation, but also the execution of the deed by the person executing the deed. Hill v. Unett, 3 Madd. 370.

Acknowledgment of sealing and delivery, not sufficient evidence thereof. Grayson v. Wilkinson, Dick. 158.

But otherwise of signature. Ib.

Witness to deed must state the circumstances of the execution, the sealing and delivery. Burrowes v. Lock, 10 Ves. 470; 8 R. R. 33, 856.

Where Plaintiff is Witness.]—Course to be pursued when a plaintiff is attesting witness to a deed which defendant wants to prove. Strange v. Dashwood, C. P. Cooper, 497.

Effect of Proof.]—A deed proved by the attesting witness, vivâ voce, at the hearing is well proved for all purposes in the cause, unless it is impeached. Bowser v. Colby, 1 Hare, 109; 11 L. J., Ch. 132; 5 Jur. 1106.

8. Impounding Documents.

Order.]—The judge at the trial of a cause cannot order any paper to be impounded, which is not given in evidence; it is not enough that it should be in court in the possession of one of the witnesses. Rex v. Clifford, 1 Car. & P. 521.

By 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, a town clerk is required to preserve in his custody the voting papers used at an election of councillors for six months afterwards. A criminal information having been filed against a town clerk for misconduct at such an election, the court refused to direct that the voting papers should be impounded for the purpose of evidence against him, although the six months' custody of them would expire before the trial. Rex v. Nicholetts, 6 N. & M. 827.

A judge will not order documents which have been given in evidence in a cause to be impounded, unless application is made during the progress of the cause. Borton v. Ockford, 7 Car. & P. 547.

Inspection—Copies.]—In the case of documents impounded by order of the court, the court cannot, while such documents are in the custody of the court, part with such documents, but will give leave to inspect the same under Order XLII., r. 33A. Copies, however, of such documents may not be taken. Solicitor, In re, Incorporated Law Society, Ex parte, 65 L. T. 584.

V. Attendance of Witnesses.

1. Process.

a. Subpœna generally.

Form.]—The name of a witness, though not in the original subpœna, may be inserted therein at any time, if the party has been served with a copy. Wakefield v. Gall, Holt, N. P. 526.

Issue of—Time.]—Any party may without leave of the court issue a subpœna for the examination of a witness at any stage of an action; but the court will exercise a control over this privilege to prevent its being oppressively used. Raymond v. Tapson, 22 Ch. D. 430; 48 L. T. 403; 31 W. R. 394—C. A.

In an action for the redemption of a mortgage the usual judgment was obtained and the defendant, the mortgagee, proceeded to vouch his accounts in chambers. The plaintiff subpœnaed a solicitor who had acted for both parties in the mortgage transactions, in order to examine him with respect to the moneys received by him on account of both parties:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to issue the subpœna and to examine the witness. Ib.

Place of Trial.]—In order to bring a party into contempt for not attending as a witness at a trial at the sittings in obedience to a subpœna, the writ must specify the place at which the cause is to be tried, viz. Westminster Hall or Guildhall. Milson v. Day, 3 M. & P. 333.

A subpœna required the attendance of a witness in Westminster Hall, the nisi prius sittings being held, during term, in a detached building, called Westminster Sessions House:—Held, that, notwithstanding the apparent inconsistency of the writ, an attachment might be granted for disobedience to it, by reason of the witness neglecting to appear at the Nisi Prius Court, there being notices affixed to the walls of the court in Westminster Hall, directing witnesses to proceed to the sessions house. Chapman v. Davis, 1 D. (N.S.) 239; 4 Scott (N.R.) 319; 3 Man. & G. 609; 11 L. J., C. P. 51.

Date.]—A subpœna, tested the 9th May, and served on the 19th, required the witness to appear "on Monday, the 21st day of March instant." The court refused to set aside the service. Page v. Carew, 1 C. & J. 514; 9 L. J. (O.S.) Ex. 192.

But refused to grant an attachment against a witness for not obeying a subpœna dated on the 18th June, calling on him to attend the trial on the 2nd July, but which subpœna was not served until the 3rd, as the subpœna and service were inconsistent with each other. Alexander v. Dixon, 8 Moore, 387; 1 Bing. 366; 2 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 22.

A subpœna requiring the party to attend the trial of a cause on the commission-day extends to the whole assizes, and it need not go on to require his attendance "from day to day until the cause is tried." Scholes v. Hilton, 10 M. & W. 15; 2 D. (N.S.) 229; 11 L. J., Ex. 332.

A subpœna tested in vacation is a void writ. Edgell v. Curling, 8 Scott (N.R.) 663; 2 D. & L. 600; 7 Man. & G. 958; 14 L. J., C. P. 27; 9 Jur. 111.

—— Re-Sealing.]—If a cause appointed for one sitting is made a remanet, the subpœna must be re-sealed and re-served. Sydenham v. Rand, 3 Dougl. 429.

A witness is not bound to obey a subpœna altered by the attorney from the sittings for which it was originally sued out to a subsequent sittings without being re-sealed. Barber v. Wood, 2 M. & Rob. 172.

Irregularity of Service.]—A witness who has attended to be examined in pursuance of a subpœna cannot then refuse to be examined, on the ground of irregularity in the service of the subpœna. Wisden v. Wisden, 6 Hare, 549.

To Lunatic.]—A lunatic may be brought up by habeas corpus ad testificandum, on an affidavit that he is not a dangerous lunatic, and is in a fit state to be brought up. Fennell v. Tait, 5 Tyr. 218; 1 C. M. & R. 584.

To Sailor.]—But not a sailor on board a man-of-war, unless it be shewn that he is willing to attend. Rex v. Roddam, Cowp. 672.

Under Writ of Sequestration.]—When, on a bill filed and an interim order for injunction made, a writ of sequestration was issued in the ordinary form, in order to examine witnesses for discovery under such sequestration, a subpœna will be directed. D'Alteyrac v. Long, 19 L. T. 45.

Discharge of.]—Subpœna to testify, where no cause depending discharged. Price v. Holland, Cary, 95.

Preventing Service—Attachment — Costs.]—Although it is the moral duty of a private inquiry agent to afford all reasonable facilities for the service of subpœnas upon his employés, in a case in which they have been professionally engaged, he is not liable to attachment unless he uses actual obstruction to prevent his employés being served. In the absence of evidence of force or actual obstruction, the court refuses to issue an attachment, but, being of opinion that the conduct of the inquiry agent, or of a person acting on his behalf and with his authority, had given the petitioner reasonable ground to apply for an attachment, dismissed the motion, but made no order as to costs. Wylam v. Wylam, 69 L. T. 500.

Ad Respondendum.]—Process of subpœna ad respondendum may be issued out of the office of pleas, and it is not necessary that such process should be signed by the chief secondary, or a sworn clerk in the office of the king's remembrancer; rules made in respect thereof, in reigns of James and Car. 2, are absolute. Taylor v. Riley, 9 Price, 385.

b. Witness in Scotland or Ireland.

Powers of Chancery.]—The Court of Chancery has power, under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 34, and 21 & 22 Vict. c. 27, s. 3, to direct the issuing of a subpœna ad testificandum to witnesses residing in England or Scotland, commanding them to attend the trial of questions of fact directed in any proceedings in that court to be tried by a jury before itself. Underwood v. Darracott, Ir. R. 8 Eq. 348.

The affidavit on which the application for such a writ is founded must disclose facts to shew that the attendance of the witness is reasonably necessary. Ib.

On an affidavit that a witness residing in Scotland was a necessary witness, the court ordered a subpœna to issue for his attendance at the trial. Bruce v. Measor, 4 W. R. 230.

Under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 34.]—A rule under this statute, for a subpœna ad testificandum to a witness not within the jurisdiction of the court, is ex parte and absolute in the first instance. Readman v. Broers, 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1052; 4 W. R. 24.

A plaintiff, resident in Ireland, may be compelled by a subpœna ad testificandum, issued on the part of the defendant, to attend at the trial of a cause in this country. Harris v. Barber, 25 L. J., Q. B. 98.

But the court refused an order for a subpœna for the attendance at the trial of a witness resident in Scotland, on the ground that the affidavit did not shew the nature of the action, nor what the evidence wanted was. Allen v. Hamilton (Duke), L. R. 2 C. P. 630; 15 W. R. 866.

When an action and "all matters in difference" between the parties have been referred by consent to an arbitrator, no writ of subpœna will be granted under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 34, s. 1, in order to compel the attendance at the hearing before the arbitrator of witnesses residing within the United Kingdom but out of the jurisdiction of the Queen's Bench Division; for the hearing before the arbitrator is not a "trial" within the meaning of that enactment. Hall v. Brand, 53 L. J., Q. B. 19; 12 Q. B. D. 39; 49 L. T. 492; 32 W. R. 133—C. A.

And see infra, VII. 7.

c. Prisoners.

See 16 & 17 Vict. c. 30, s. 9; 51 & 52 Vict. c. 43 (The County Courts Act, 1888), and 52 & 53 Vict. c. 49, s. 18(2).

Application, how made.]—The application for a habeas corpus ad testificandum should be made to a judge at chambers, and not in court. Browne v. Gisborne, 2 D. (N.S.) 963; 12 L. J., Q. B. 297; 7 Jur. 328.

Before 16 and 17 Vict. c. 30, s. 9, a rule for bringing up a defendant from criminal custody on a habeas corpus ad testificandum was nisi only in the first instance. Rex v. Pilgrim, 4 D. P. C. 89.

When Brought up.]—The court will not grant a habeas corpus ad testificandum to bring up a prisoner of war. Furley v. Newnham, 2 Dougl. 419.

Or a prisoner in custody for high treason. Langston v. Cotton, Peake Ad. C. 21.

The court granted a habeas corpus ad testificandum to bring up a prisoner in criminal custody, to give evidence before an arbitration. Marsden v. Overbury, 18 C. B. 34; 25 L. J., C. P. 200.

So where the witness was in execution for a debt. Graham v. Glover, 5 El. & Bl. 591; 25 L. J., Q. B. 10; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 160; 4 W. R. 25.

The writ is grantable at common law in the case of an execution debtor. Geery v. Hopkins, 2 Ld. Raym. 851.

But the court refused a habeas corpus ad testificandum to bring up a prisoner in execution, where the application appeared to be a mere contrivance. Rex v. Barbage, 3 Burr. 1440.

—— Party to Action.]—Where the evidence of the plaintiff is necessary at the trial of a cause, he is entitled to a habeas corpus ad testificandum for himself as much as for any other witness. Cobbett, Ex parte, 3 H. & N. 155; 27 L. J., Ex. 199; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 145.

Where there is a question as to the identity of the person of the defendant to an information who is in prison, the Court of Exchequer will grant a habeas corpus to bring him up, to be present at the trial, upon his paying the costs. Att.-Gen. v. Fadden, 1 Price, 403.

A party in contempt, in a suit in another branch of the court, will be ordered to be brought up, if wanted for examination. Hill v. Travis, 21 L. J., Ch. 541.

Before House of Commons.]—A habeas corpus ad testificandum issued to bring up a prisoner to give evidence before an election committee of the House of Commons, on an affidavit of service of a rule to shew cause on the different persons concerned, and no cause shewn. Price, In re, 4 East, 587; 1 Smith, 284; 7 R. R. 637. S. P., Pilgrim, In re, 1 H. & W. 319; 3 A. & E. 485; 4 D. P. C. 89; 4 L. J., M. C. 120.

Form of Order—Time of hearing uncertain.]—Where a plaintiff moved ex parte for an order on the governor of a prison to produce a prisoner in court at the trial, but the time of hearing was uncertain, the court made the order in the form given in Seton (5th ed.), p. 89, but directed that the same should not be drawn up until the case was in the paper for trial. Jenks v. Ditton, 76 L. T. 591.

Costs.]—A party, who brought two actions, succeeded in one and failed in the other. The plaintiff, being a prisoner under the Insolvent Debtors Act, was brought up to give evidence by habeas corpus ad testificandum, but was only examined in the cause in which he failed:—Held, that, on taxation of his costs in the cause in which he succeeded, the plaintiff was entitled to the costs of the habeas corpus. Griffin v. Hoskyns, 1 H. & N. 95; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 475.

d. Crown Office.

Attachment.]—The court can attach a person for contempt in disobeying a subpœna from the crown-office, requiring him to attend before justices at petty sessions. Reg. v. Greenaway, 2 New Sess. Cas. 103; 7 Q. B. 126; 14 L. J., M. C. 190; 9 Jur. 1009.

It is no objection to granting an attachment against a party for disobeying a crown-office subpœna requiring him to appear before justices, to give evidence concerning the place of the last legal settlement of A., that it is not stated in the subpœna or shewn by the affidavit that one of the justices was of the quorum. Reg. v. Vickery, 3 New Sess. Cas. 193; 12 Q. B. 478; 17 L. J., M. C. 129; 12 Jur. 581.

A subpœna may be issued from the crown-office requiring a witness to attend at the assizes in the county to give evidence in support of an intended prosecution for a felony; and the Court of King's Bench will grant an attachment against him for not attending in obedience to the subpœna. Rex v. Ring, 8 Term Rep. 585; 5 R. R. 478.

"Parts" of the Kingdom.]—In 45 Geo. 3, c. 92, s. 3, for enforcing the appearance of persons served with a subpœna in one part of the United Kingdom, to give evidence in another in criminal prosecutions, the "parts" signified are England, Scotland and Ireland. Rex v. Brownall, 1 A. & E. 598; 3 L. J., M. C. 118.

e. Issuing from Quarter Sessions.

The Court of King's Bench has no power to grant an attachment against a witness for disobeying a subpœna issued out of the court of quarter sessions. Rex v. Room, 3 N. & M. 725.

Where a person has been served with a subpœna, not issued from the crown-office, to appear and give evidence at quarter sessions, and makes default, the Court of King's Bench cannot attach him for contempt, either by its general authority or by virtue of 45 Geo. 3, c. 92, s. 3. Rex v. Brownall, 1 A. & E. 598; 3 L. J., M. C. 118.

2. Service.

Method of.]—A copy of the subpœna must be delivered personally at the time of service. Thorpe v. Gisborne, 11 Moore, 55.

If the original writ of subpœna requires the witness to appear on the 27th of May, and the copy served requires him to appear on the 24th, an attachment for disobedience cannot be obtained. Doe d. Clarke v. Thomson, 9 D. P. C. 948.

The original subpœna should be shewn to the party subpœnaed at the time the copy of it is served, or an attachment will not lie against him for disobedience. Wadsworth v. Marshall, 3 Tyr. 228; 1 C. & M. 87; 2 L. J., Ex. 10. S. P., Rex v. Soloman, 1 D. P. C. 618; Pitcher v.

King, 2 D. & L. 755; 14 L. J., Q. B. 99; 9 Jur. 348.

Even though the party serving it was not asked to produce it. Ib.

Or even when the witness, being an attorney, has previously evaded the service of such subpœna. Smith v. Truscott, 6 Man. & G. 267; 1 D. & L. 530; 6 Scott (N.R.) 808; 12 L. J., C. P. 336.

Difficulty in serving a subpœna will not dispense with the necessity of personal service, unless it is sworn that the person keeps out of the way to avoid personal service. Barnes v. Williams, 1 D. P. C. 615.

In exchequer it is sufficient (where only one defendant) that a copy of subpœna ad respondendum be left, and the original shewn him; secus in chancery. Bland v. Buckley, 6 Price, 34.

Substituted Service.]—Application for substituted service of a subpœna ad testificandum, or, in the alternative, that a solicitor might produce his client before the examiner, refused. Spicer v. Dawson, 22 Beav. 282.

Reasonable Time.]—Whether a subpœna has been served in reasonable time before the trial, is matter for the court. Barber v. Wood, 2 M. & Rob. 172.

Service on a person living close to the place of trial at half-past eleven o'clock in the morning for a cause called on at two o'clock is not sufficient time. Ib.

The question as to whether a subpœna ad testificandum is served within a reasonable time, depends upon the circumstances of each particular case; therefore, where a person was served at twelve o'clock, while standing on the steps of the court-house, and was told the trial would come on the same day, which it did, at five o'clock:—Held, that the service was sufficient. Maunsell v. Ainsworth, 8 D. P. C. 869; 1 H. & W. 5.

3. Subpœna duces tecum.

a. Generally.

Effect of.]—A subpœna duces tecum, without being ad testificandum also is good; and the party is bound to obey it by producing the document, and is not thereby made a witness. Evans v. Moseley, 2 D. P. C. 364.

A. was served with a subpœna duces tecum, to produce a deed in his possession, which was to be proved by the subscribing witness, but he refused; ordered that he should produce the deed at his own expense; that the witness should attend at his expense; and that he should pay all the other expenses caused by his refusal. Bradshaw v. Bradshaw, 3 Sim. 285. Motion to discharge this order was refused by Lord Brougham, 1 Russ. & M. 358.

Must be specific.]—A subpœna duces tecum must distinctly specify what is required to be produced. A general production of documents cannot be enforced against a witness by subpœna duces tecum. Lee v. Angas, 35 L. J., Ch. 373; 14 L. T. 324; 14 W. R. 667.

A witness, a partner in a bank, was required by subpœna duces tecum to produce all books and accounts in his custody or power, containing any entries relating to 6,500*l.* consols, or to the dividends thereof, or the application or disposition thereof, or relating to the matters in question in the suit:—Held, that the witness was not compellable to produce any books, &c., because the language of the subpœna was too general, and because the books, &c. relating to the stock, were partnership property, and his co-partners would not consent to his producing them. Att.-Gen. v. Wilson, 9 Sim. 526; 7 L. J., Ch. 76; 1 Jur. 890.

It is not an objection to a motion to re-examine a witness on interrogatories which he refused to answer, and to produce a document refused to be produced, that there was an irregularity in the subpœna duces tecum, or that the required document was vaguely described in the subpœna, if the witness has appeared and submitted to be examined, and shewn by his answer that he identified the document inquired after with the document in his possession. A subpœna duces tecum is a requisition to a witness to produce a document; and an interrogatory requiring a witness to set forth the documents in the words is in effect equivalent to a requisition to produce it. The duty of a witness to produce a document called for by the subpœna duces tecum, or inquired after by an interrogatory, is the same, whether the document is called for in order to be proved by himself or by another witness. Tippins v. Coates, 6 Hare, 16; 11 Jur. 1075. But see S. C. on appeal 17 L. J., Ch. 337; 12 Jur. 339, the Lord Chancellor having discharged the order of the Vice-Chancellor.

A defendant being examined as a witness for the plaintiff, under a subpœna duces tecum refuses to produce books of trade, although he brings them with him and refers to them. The plaintiff then moves that he may be ordered to produce them, on the ground that they contain matters which will throw light on the case; and the notice of motion refers to a particular case, as to which there are entries in the books. Motion refused with costs. Selby v. Fraser, 5 W. R. 341.

Possibility of Compliance—Document belonging to Third Party.]—The court refused to grant an attachment against a witness for disobedience of an order of the district prothonotary of the Court of Pleas at Lancaster, and of an arbitrator, which required the witness to produce before the latter in London a large number of books and documents belonging to a railway company in Lincolnshire, of which he was the secretary and solicitor, and which the directors (who were no parties to the reference) refused to allow him to bring. Crowther v. Appleby, 43 L. J., C. P. 7; L. R. 9 C. P. 23; 29 L. T. 580; 22 W. R. 265.

Power of Court of Chancery.]—The Court of Chancery has no power to issue a subpœna duces tecum to a witness residing out of the jurisdiction to produce documents upon the hearing of a claim in chambers. Power v. Webber, Ir. R. 10 Eq. 188.

The court has jurisdiction, under the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, to issue a subpœna ad testificandum, or a subpœna duces tecum, requiring the attendance of witnesses on a motion for a decree. Semble. Wigan v. Rowland, 10 Hare (App.), xxvi.

It is not necessary, under the Chancery Amendment Act, s. 39, to apply to the court for a subpœna duces tecum upon the hearing of a cause. Holden v. Holden, 5 W. R. 217.

Where the examination of a witness is closed, and it is necessary that he should produce certain books, &c., at the hearing, the court may require him to do so by a subpœna duces tecum. An application for a subpœna duces tecum may be made before the hearing. Vorley v. Jerram, 6 W. R. 734.

Materiality.]—It is not competent for a person served with a subpœna, to shew that the instrument he was required to produce was immaterial in the cause, in answer to a rule for an attachment. Doe d. Butt v. Kelly, 4 D. P. C. 273.

Although a witness cannot refuse to produce documents on the ground that they will not be evidence between the parties, the court may take the circumstances into consideration, and will not order the witness to produce them, unless it is probable that the documents may be used in evidence. Phelps v. Prothero, 2 De G. & Sm. 274. And see S. C., 17 L. J., Ch. 404; 12 Jur. 667.

Privilege.]—The writ of subpœna duces tecum is of compulsory obligation on a witness to produce papers thereby demanded, which he has in his possession, and which he has no lawful or reasonable excuse for withholding; of the validity of which excuse the court and not the witness is to judge. Amey v. Long, 9 East, 473; 6 Esp. 116; 1 Camp. 16, 180, a.; 9 R. R. 589.

Where an attorney of a person, not a party to the action, brought a book into court in obedience to a subpœna duces tecum, but refused to produce it, on the ground of his client's privilege, and the client, being present as a witness under a subpœna, also objected to its production:—Held, that secondary evidence might be given of the contents of the book, although the client has not been served with a subpœna duces tecum. Newton v. Chaplin, 10 C. B. 356; 19 L. J., C. P. 374; 14 Jur. 1121. S. P., Hibberd v. Knight, 2 Ex. 11; 17 L. J., Ex. 119.

A man served with a subpœna duces tecum cannot be compelled to produce an instrument by virtue of which he committed a trespass. Miles v. Dawson, Peake, Ad. C. 54; 1 Esp. 405.

A witness called on his subpœna duces tecum, who objects to the production of documents, has no right to have the question of his liability to produce argued by counsel. Doe d. Rowcliffe v. Egremont (Earl), 2 M. & Rob. 386.

Under a subpœna duces tecum, the party may, in court, object to produce the documents; but if the objection is overruled, production will be compelled. Field v. Beaumont, 1 Swanst. 209.

A person having a deed in his possession, that in effect amounted to an act of bankruptcy, one of the parties was ordered to attend commissioners with it, without prejudice to any objection being taken before them, as to disclosure of confidential communications. Treacher, Ex parte, Buck, 17. S. P., Law, Ex parte, id. 110.

—— Of State—Secondary Evidence.]—Where a state official is subpœnaed in an action to produce a document, and acting by the direction of the authority to which he is responsible refuses to do so, on the ground that its production would be injurious to the public service, the court will not compel him to produce it, and will not inquire whether the objection is well founded, except where the excuse is palpably futile and frivolous. Where production in such a case has been refused, secondary evidence of its contents cannot be given. Hughes v. Vargas, 9 R. 661—C. A.

Lien.]—A right of lien upon an instrument in possession of a witness (not a solicitor) is not a good objection to its production under a subpœna duces tecum. Hunter v. Leake, 7 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 221.

Documents held in Trust—Subject to Litigation—Inaccessible.]—A witness may well excuse himself for not bringing with him and producing documents which he has under trust, and the right to which is or may become the subject of litigation. He is not bound to search for them, if he shews that they are in a place to which access on his part is both legally and physically impossible. Campbell v. Dalhousie (Earl), L. R. 1 H. L. (Sc.), 462; 22 L. T. 879.

An appellant on a bill to perpetuate testimony under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 69, obtained from the Court of Chancery a subpœna duces tecum directed to the respondents. The appellant being unable to enforce this writ against the respondents, who were resident in Scotland, applied to the Court of Session, under 22 Vict. c. 20, to compel them to search for an exhibit to the documents mentioned in the subpœna. The respondents stated as a reason for non-search and non-production, that they were locked up in the muniment room at a certain castle, and that though they were, as trustees of the late owner, in possession of the key of that room, yet they could not search that room, because there was a dispute between them and the present owner of the castle as to the right of possession of the documents:—Held, that the respondents could not be compelled to produce the documents. Ib.

What Persons.]—In ejectment by a tenant in tail against a lessee holding under a lease with warranty, granted by a prior tenant for life under a power to make leases, to recover possession, on the ground that the lease was not a due exercise of the power, the executors of the deceased grantor are not privileged from producing in evidence, under a subpœna duces tecum from the plaintiff, to prove seisin in the tenant for life, books containing notices by the steward of the deceased grantor, charging himself with receipt of rent for the premises. Doe d. Wyndham v. Date, 3 Q. B. 609; 6 Jur. 990.

An overseer of a parish is bound by a subpœna duces tecum, at the instance of another parish, to attend as a witness, and bring the rate-books of the parish with him, before justices, on an inquiry touching the settlement of a pauper. Reg. v. Greenaway, 7 Q. B. 126; 14 L. J., M. C. 190; 9 Jur. 1009.

So, also, is the attorney for the parish. Ib.

An attorney and steward of a lord of a borough is bound to produce under a subpœna duces tecum public documents relating to the borough, but he is not bound to produce documents relating to the lord's interest in the borough. Rex v. Woodley, 1 M. & Rob. 390.

A subpœna duces tecum to a party defendant, discouraged; the proper course is to move for an order on the defendant to bring in the documents, which he admits by his answer to be in his possession. Aldborough v. Stratford, 1 Hog, 123.

What Deeds.]—In an ejectment by devisees, it appeared that the defendant had mortgaged the premises to B., and had given him the will. At the trial B. was subpœnaed to produce it, and he declined doing so, as it was part of his title:—Held, that B. was not bound to produce the will, and that secondary evidence of the contents was not admissible. Doe d. Bowdler v. Owen, 8 Car. & P. 110.

A witness is not bound to produce, in obedience to a subpœna, a will, which he holds as attorney for a devisee claiming under it. Doe d. Carter v. James, 2 M. & Rob. 47.

A judge will not compel a witness to produce a document under a subpœna duces tecum, if, as against the party asking its production, the witness has a lien on the document which is called for. Kemp v. King, Car. & M. 396; 2 M. & Rob. 437. But see infra, Fowler v. Fowler, 50 L. J., Ch. 686.

A person's having a lien upon a document is no objection to his producing it on a trial; but if he fears that it may be abstracted the judge will allow him to stand by the witness while the witness is examined respecting it. Thompson v. Mosley, 5 Car. & P. 501.

A witness is bound to produce a document in order that it may be given in evidence, notwithstanding he may have a lien on it. Cameron Coalbrook Ry., In re, 25 Beav. 1.

Distinction between the production of documents at the instance of the party who created the lien, and of a stranger, and between production and parting with the possession. Ib.

Delivery of Document to Party in Action after Service of Subpœna.]—Where a letter has been written by the plaintiff to a witness, and the witness has had a subpœna duces tecum, but has delivered the letter to the plaintiff after action brought, and he refuses to produce it, parol evidence of its contents is admissible. Leeds v. Cook, 4 Esp. 256; 6 R. R. 855.

Secondary Evidence—Person not Party to Suit not Producing.]—A person not a party to a cause, served in due time with a subpœna duces tecum, to produce a document at the trial, without any legal excuse disobeyed it, and did not produce the document:—Held, that secondary evidence of its contents was not admissible. Reg. v. Llanfaethly, 2 El. & Bl. 940; 2 C. L. R. 230; 23 L. J., M. C. 33; 17 Jur. (N.S.) 1123; 2 W. R. 61.

Swearing Witness.]—A witness who appears to produce a document under a subpœna duces tecum, may be compelled to produce it without being sworn. Perry v. Gibson, 3 N. & M. 462; 1 A. & E. 48; 3 L. J., K. B. 158. S. P., Davies v. Dale, M. & M. 514; Summers v. Moseley, 2 C. & M. 477; 4 Tyr. 158; 3 L. J., Ex. 128.

Where a person called only to produce a document is sworn as a witness by mistake, and a question is put to him which he does not answer, the opposite party is not entitled to cross-examine him. Rush v. Smith, 1 C. M. & R. 94; 2 D. P. C. 687; 4 Tyr. 675; 3 L. J., Ex. 355.

Where a witness swears that he had attended with all the documents required by the subpœna, the defendants are entitled to ask him what documents he had in his possession, without his being sworn, and so making him their witness. Lee v. Angas, 35 L. J., Ch. 370; 14 L. T. 324; 14 W. R. 667.

A person served with subpœna duces tecum, under the 24th general order of May, 1845, to produce a document at the hearing, may, without having been sworn as a witness for the party serving him, be called at the hearing, upon his subpœna, and asked whether he produces the document; and if not, why not; or any other question confined to the purpose of production. Griffith v. Ricketts, 7 Hare, 301; 19 L. J., Ch. 399; 14 Jur. 325.

Delivery to Usher.]—Duces tecum for deeds, but ordered to be delivered to usher of court, but not to plaintiff, without special order. Wilford v. Denny, Cary, 53.

Practice.]—Issuing a writ of duces tecum is not now the practice of this court; instead of it, the plaintiff moves for deeds which the answer admits defendant has in his possession or power. Anon., 2 Moll. 367.

Upon a motion for a decree a subpœna duces tecum to produce a document at the hearing does not issue as of course. Chard v. Cox, 35 Beav. 196.

Where a case comes on upon motion for decree, it is not necessary to apply to the court for a writ of subpœna duces tecum, but such writ may be obtained at the record and writ clerk's office, as if the cause came on regularly at the hearing. Wilhem v. Reynolds, 8 W. R. 625.

Service by Person not a Party.]—Upon an inquiry in chambers to ascertain the next of kin of a person dead, partially intestate, one of the claimants, not a party to the suit, served upon the defendant, the administrator, and also one of the claimants of kinship, a summons to attend for examination, and a subpœna duces tecum to compel him to produce all letters from persons named in the subpœna, to the intestate, and other documents. The defendant admitted possession of some such letters and documents, but declined to produce them:—Held, upon motion, that without deciding whether the description was too general, this was an improper mode of attempting to obtain evidence to support the claim. Newland v. Steer, 11 Jur. (N.S.) 596; 13 L. T. 111; 13 W. R. 1014.

b. In Case of Solicitors.

Lien.]—In an action by a married woman against her husband and the trustees of her marriage settlement, the solicitor who prepared the settlement was called as a witness for the plaintiff, and required to produce the settlement under a subpœna duces tecum. The solicitor objected to produce it on the ground that it had not been paid for, and asserted a general lien on it. The settlement was prepared on the instructions of the wife in contemplation of her marriage in 1873; i.e. between the dates of the Married Women's Property Act, 1870, and the Amendment Act, 1874:—Held, that the solicitor was bound to produce it. Fowler v. Fowler, 50 L. J., Ch. 686; 44 L. T. 799; 29 W. R. 800.

A deed containing a recital alleged to be material to a defendant in a suit, was in the custody of the solicitor of some of the parties to the deed, and he claimed a lien on it in respect of the costs of its preparation. On his being called as a witness by the defendant, who was not his client or party to the deed, to produce it:—Held, that he could not refuse to do so by reason of his lien. Hope v. Liddell, 7 De G. M. & G. 331.

Where a deed is in the hands of an attorney, who holds it not merely as attorney, but as a security for money owing to him from his client, and the attorney, being called on a subpœna duces tecum, refuses to produce the deed on the ground of his own lien, the party calling for the production of the deed is entitled to give secondary evidence of its contents. Doe d. Gilbert v. Ross, 7 M. & W. 102; 8 D. P. C. 389; 10 L. J., Ex. 201; 4 Jur. 321.

A solicitor is not, on the ground of his lien on documents of a bankrupt in respect of professional services before the bankruptcy, entitled to refuse to produce such documents for examination by the trustee. Toleman and England, In re, Bramble, Ex parte, 13 Ch. D. 885; 42 L. T. 413; 28 W. R. 676.

Solicitor who had refused to allow a deed in his possession to be proved on behalf of plaintiff, because he had a lien on it for costs due from defendant, was ordered to produce it at his own expense, and to pay all the costs consequent on his refusal. Brassington v. Brassington, 1 Sim. & S. 455.

Solicitor claiming lien on deeds, cannot be compelled to produce them at hearing of cause, without subpœna duces tecum. Busk v. Lewis, 6 Madd. 29.

Privilege.]—An attorney, who has in that character received papers from a client, cannot be called to produce them in a cause, although he does not act therein as the attorney of the party. Parker v. Yates, 12 Moore, 520.

A vendor had a draft of conveyance made by his own attorney, from which the deeds were afterwards prepared. The attorney was paid for this business by the vendor and purchaser in moieties, by agreement, but the latter employed an attorney on his own part to look over the draft. It remained afterwards with the vendor's attorney:—Held, that such draft was confidentially deposited with the latter, by the purchaser as well as the vendor, and could not be produced on a trial against the interest of the purchaser's devisees, though with the consent of the vendor and his attorney. Doe d. Strode v. Seaton, 2 A. & E. 171; 4 N. & M. 81; 4 L. J., K. B. 13.

By an order of the Court of Chancery made in a suit depending between a lessee and lessor, the lease was deposited in the hands of the lessor's attorney, the lessee being at liberty to inspect the same. Upon ejectment brought by the lessee against the tenant in possession:—Held, that the attorney of the lessor was bound to produce the lease, it not being part of the lessor's title. Doe d. Courtail v. Thomas, 9 B. & C. 288; 4 M. & Ry. 218.

A party who is protected from producing a deed at nisi prius, on the ground that he holds it as a trustee for one of the parties, is not compellable to disclose the contents of it. Davies v. Waters, 9 M. & W. 608; 1 D. (N.S.) 651; 11 L. J., Ex. 214.

An attorney for a party in a cause is not bound to state the contents of a deed, of which he first obtained a knowledge by having obtained and read it, at the suggestion of his counsel, at the consultation in the cause. Ib.

An attorney subpœnaed to produce a document at a trial may, in his discretion, refuse to produce it, on the ground that it has been intrusted to him by a client. He is neither bound to produce it nor to answer a question with respect to its nature; and the judge ought not to examine it to see whether it is a document which ought to be withheld. Volant v. Soyer, 13 C. B. 231; 22 L. J., C. P. 83.

But an attorney, although he has received a document from his client, is not privileged from answering a question put for the purpose of letting in secondary evidence, whether the document is in his possession. Coates v. Birch, 1 G. & D. 647; 2 Q. B. 252; 1 D. (N.S.) 540; 11 L. J., Q. B. 1; 5 Jur. 540.

In an action against an attorney for negligence respecting a reference of an action for breach of promise of marriage, brought by Miss S. against the present plaintiff, in which he was attorney for the present plaintiff, it appeared that there were two parts of the agreement to refer, one signed by Miss S.'s attorney (unstamped), which was in possession of the present defendant, the other signed by the present defendant as attorney for the present plaintiff, and in the hands of Miss S.'s attorney. The latter had been stamped within twenty-one days after execution, and the expense of stamping and part of the expense of making it had been paid by the present plaintiff. The part in the hands of the present defendant being produced under a notice to produce, being unstamped could not be read in evidence, but:—Held, that the present plaintiff was entitled to have the stamped part of the agreement produced by Miss S.'s attorney, although she had desired him not to produce it. Held, also, that her attorney was not bound to produce letters written to him by the present defendant, as attorney for the present plaintiff, he stating that he was desired by his client not to produce them; but that if letters from her attorney to the present defendant as attorney for the present plaintiff were not produced under a notice to produce, her attorney was bound to give secondary evidence of their contents, although she desired him not to do so. Higgs v. Taylor, 1 Car. & K. 85.

See further, post, VI., 8.

To Identify.]—Action on a covenant in a lease by assignee of the reversion. The plaintiff put in a conveyance to him of the reversion, subject to mortgage debts. The defendant, in order to prove that the legal estate was out of the plaintiff, by reason of the conveyance of the reversion having been made subject to a mortgage, called the attorney of a person to whom the mortgage had been transferred, to produce the mortgage deed, under a subpœna duces tecum. The attorney objected, and stated that he had been instructed by his client not to produce it. The attorney for the original mortgagee was then called to give secondary evidence of its contents. He had a draft of a mortgage, but did not know whether it was a copy of the deed in question, unless he knew what that deed was. The judge ordered the first witness to produce the deed, and to allow the second witness to look at the indorsement, upon which he identified it as the deed of which the draft was a copy, and gave secondary evidence of its contents:—Held, that the privilege of the client was not violated by requiring the attorney to shew the indorsement on the deed, for the purpose of enabling the witness to identify it. Phelps v. Prew, 3 El. & Bl. 430; 2 C. L. R. 1422; 23 L. J., Q. B. 140; 18 Jur 249; 2 W. R. 258.

To let in Secondary Evidence.]—In an action against a mortgagor, the attorney of the mortgagee, who has the mortgage deed, cannot be compelled to produce it, if he objects to do so, nor can he be compelled to give evidence of its contents; but he may be asked for what purpose the money was raised; and secondary evidence may be given of the contents of the mortgage deed. Marston v. Downes, 4 N. & M. 861; 1 A. & E. 31; 6 Car. & P. 381; 3 L. J., K. B. 158. And see Newton v. Chaplin, 10 C. B. 356; 19 L. J., C. P. 374; 14 Jur. 1121.

Waiver.]—An attorney cannot be compelled by the court to disclose the contents of a client's deed in his possession; but if he does so willingly, the evidence may be received. Hibberd v. Knight, 2 Ex. 11; 17 L. J., Ex. 119; 12 Jur. 162.

In ejectment by a rector to recover land as parcel of the glebe, a book describing the lands subject to tithes, and a map of the glebe, were produced by an attorney and solicitor, who had been employed by J., the preceding rector, who was also owner of the advowson, to collect the tithes, and afterwards to sell the advowson. The book was given to him for the former purpose, the map with a view to the sale. The heir and the executors of J. authorised him to produce them. The advowson was sold to A., who had presented the lessor of the plaintiff:—Held, that the map was not a privileged communication; and that if it was, the privilege had been waived. Doe d. Marriott v. Hertford (Marquis), 19 L. J., Q. B. 526; 13 Jur. 632.

Interest.]—Where an attorney holds a document for a client, he cannot be compelled to produce it by a person who has an equal interest in it with his client. Newton v. Chaplin, 10 C. B. 356.

After a Notice to Produce.]—If, upon notice given to the attorney of a party to produce a document in his possession, he neglects so to do, he cannot be called as a witness to prove its contents. Bothomley v. Usborne, Peake, Ad. C. 101.

But he may be asked whether he has that document, in order to let in secondary evidence of it, if it is not produced. Bevan v. Waters, M. & M. 235; 3 Car. & P. 520.

If an attorney for a person not a party to an action, having refused at the trial to produce a deed belonging to his client, is directed by the judge to give parol evidence of the contents, the parties to the action have no right to object to such evidence going to the jury, even upon the supposition that the judge acted erroneously. Marston v. Downes, 1 A. & E. 31; 4 N. & M. 861; 6 Car. & P. 381; 3 L. J., K. B. 158.

Where a notice has been given to produce a deed, but which notice cannot be proved, the attorney for the other party cannot be called upon to produce it, he having admitted a receipt of the notice. Reed v. Passer, 1 Esp. 216; 1 Peake, 303; 3 R. R. 696.

The attorney for the opposite party cannot be asked whether he has with him a rule of court relating to the cause, with a view to give secondary evidence of the rule, no notice to produce or subpœna duces tecum having been served. Cook v. Hearn, 1 M. & Rob. 20.

4. Order for Attendance of Witnesses.

Under Ord. XXXVII. r. 13.]—Where a person duly subpœnaed fails to attend, the proper course is to move for an order that he do attend as a witness at his own expense. Stuart v. Balkis Co., 32 W. R. 676.

Under 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 39.]—Under the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 39, an order for the production of a witness at the hearing of a cause may be obtained without the order of the court. Holden v. Holden, 7 De G. M. & G. 397; 5 W. R. 217.

Semble, the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 39, enabling the court to require the production and oral examination before itself of any witness or party in the cause, only authorises the examination in court of witnesses who have already given evidence in the cause. In such a case the court will point out the communication to be made to the witness required to be recalled. The matter in issue as stated in the bill, with the passage marked, should be placed before such witness, with his affidavit relating to it, and he is to be told that his further examination is required thereon. East Anglian Ry. v. Goodwin, 6 W. R. 564.

Upon a motion for leave to issue a subpœna ad testificandum, for the hearing of the cause, under the 39th section of 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86:—Held, that the court has no authority under that section to issue a subpœna, but that the mode of proceeding under that section is by an order to be made at the hearing of the cause. May v. Biggendon, 1 Sm. & G. 133; 10 Hare (App.), xlv.; 22 L. J., Ch. 429; 17 Jur. 252; 1 W. R. 111.

A subpœna ad testificandum issues ex debito justitiæ without the order of the court, and it is not necessary to obtain such an order beforehand where there is a probability that the vivâ voce evidence of a party may be required at the hearing in the case contemplated by the 39th section of the act 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86. Ib.

Semble, that if the court wishes to have the vivâ voce evidence of a party under that section, the course would be, if he were not present, to adjourn the hearing. Ib.

Semble, the court has jurisdiction under the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, to issue a subpœna ad testificandum, or a subpœna duces tecum, requiring the attendance of witnesses on a motion for a decree. Wigan v. Rowland, 10 Hare (App.), xviii.

Notice of Motion for, when necessary.]—It is not necessary to serve the other parties in the cause with a notice of motion that a witness be ordered to attend and be examined, though the reason assigned by the witness for his refusal to be examined was, that he was professionally concerned as solicitor for such other parties. Wisden v. Wisden, 6 Hare, 549.

At what stage.]—If plaintiff replies, defendant may rejoin gratis, and after next term may give rule to produce witnesses. Flower v. Herbert, Dick. 349.

Under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42.]—Courts of equity have no jurisdiction, under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, to order witnesses to attend arbitrators. Hall v. Ellis, 9 Sim. 530; 8 L. J., Ch. 158; 3 Jur. 167.

Order on Party keeping back Witness.]—Where a witness is kept back by a party to a suit, the court will make an order that the party keeping back the witness shall produce him. Catholic Publishing Co. v. Wyman, 1 N. R. 512.

5. Order for Attendance to Produce during Proceedings.

Order XXXVII. r. 7.]—By Ord. XXXVII. r. 7, of the rules of court, 1883, the court or a judge may in any cause or matter at any stage of the proceedings order the attendance of any person, for the purpose of producing such writings or other documents as he could be compelled to produce at the hearing or trial.

Order for Ex parte.]—The plaintiff in the action, one of the residuary legatees under the will of H. S. (who, at his death in December, 1887, was a partner in a firm of brewers), obtained ex parte, under Ord. XXXVII. r. 7, an order that the four present partners in the firm (two of whom were not parties to the action) should attend before an examiner, and produce the partnership books for the years 1887 to 1889. On a motion by the two partners, who were not parties to the action, to discharge the order:—Held, that the order was rightly made ex parte; and motion dismissed, with costs. Smith, In re, Williams v. Frere, 60 L. J., Ch. 328; [1891] 1 Ch. 323; 64 L. T. 253.

Effect of Order for.]—An order to produce under rule 7 of Ord. XXXVII. is equivalent to a subpœna duces tecum, and has the same effect. Ib.

When Order made or refused.]—In an action brought by the plaintiffs against the defendants for an improper use and publication of certain telegrams transmitted by them to the plaintiffs, the defendants applied, under Ord. XXXVII. r. 7, for the production of certain documents belonging to and in the possession of the Electric News Telegraph Company, who were not parties to the action, with a view of shewing that the news contained in the telegrams had been communicated by the plaintiffs to such company, and by them made public prior to the time at which such news was published by the defendants. The defendants contended that the production of the documents in question would simplify the proceedings at the trial and save expense:—Held, that the power conferred on the court was one which, if it existed, should be exercised with extreme caution, and that no sufficient ground had been shown for the production of the documents asked for. Central News Co. v. Eastern News Telegraph Co., 53 L. J., Q. B. 236; 50 L. T. 235; 32 W. R. 493.

The plaintiff's solicitor, in a probate action, had also acted as solicitor to the testatrix whose will was in dispute:—Held, that no order could be made against the solicitor under Ord. XXXVII. r. 7, to produce documents in his possession as solicitor to the testatrix. O'Shea v. Wood, 60 L. J., P. 83; [1891] P. 286; 65 L. T. 30—C. A.

In an action against a married woman, the solicitor to the trustees of her settlement was held bound to produce it, as the defendant could not object to such production. Bursill v. Tanner, 55 L. J., Q. B. 53; 53 L. T. 445.

A conditional order to make discovery of a lease may be made against a tenant of lands ordered to be sold in an action. Webb v. Webb, 27 L. R., Ir. 42.

Power to Order Inspection.]—The power given by Ord. XXXVII. r. 7 to the court or a judge to order the attendance of any person for the purpose of producing documents at any stage of the proceedings, does not carry with it the power to order the inspection of the documents as distinct from their production. Straker v. Reynolds, 58 L. J., Q. B. 180; 22 Q. B. D. 262; 60 L. T. 107; 37 W. R. 379.

Jurisdiction where no Trial pending or Order made.]—There is no jurisdiction to make an order for production of documents under Ord. XXXVII. r. 7, against a third person not a party to the litigation, when there is no trial or application to the court pending, and the production of them is not necessary to carry out an order which has already been obtained. Elder v. Carter, 59 L. J., Q. B. 281; 25 Q. B. D. 194; 62 L. T. 516; 38 W. R. 612; 54 J. P. 692—C. A.

Against co-Defendant.]—Order of court on the application of a defendant for compelling production of documents by his co-defendant on the hearing of a motion. Bennett v. Bayes, 1 L. T. 69.

6. Expenses and Conduct-money.

a. Tender and Payment.

Necessity of.]—A subpœna without a tender of expenses will not bring a witness into contempt, though he comes to the assizes and refuses to be sworn. Bowles v. Johnson, 1 W. Bl. 36.

The court will not grant an attachment against a witness for not obeying a subpœna to attend at a trial unless the whole expenses of the journey, and of the necessary stay at the place of trial, are tendered at the time of serving the subpœna. Fuller v. Prentice, 1 H. Bl. 49; 2 R. R. 715. S. P., Ashton v. Haigh, 2 Chit. 201.

No conduct-money need be tendered to a witness in town in a town cause. Jacob v. Hungate, 3 D. P. C. 457.

Costs shall be paid to witness before he testifies. Belgrave v. Hertford (Earl), Cary, 62.

Witnesses served to testify, entitled to costs. Pearce v. Crawthorn, Cary, 61.

A party attending commissioners for the purpose of being examined as to the property of the bankrupt, is not entitled to have his expenses paid or ascertained till his examination is concluded. Roscoe, Ex parte 2 Rose, 345.

A vice-chancellor having made an order, ex parte, that a person ordered to attend as a witness should pay the costs, the order was discharged as irregular. Cast v. Poyser, 26 L. J., Ch. 353.

A witness is not bound to appear upon his subpœna and give evidence before the examiner, unless his reasonable expenses to and from the place of examination, and of his stay there, are tendered with subpœna. Brocas v. Lloyd, 23 Beav. 129; 26 L. J., Ch. 758; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 555; 4 W. R. 540.

An insufficient tender to a witness on account of his travelling and other expenses will excuse his attendance before an examiner in chancery, and an attachment having been issued against him was discharged with costs.

When Required for Cross-Examination.]—The party on whose behalf a witness gives evidence, if required by the other side to produce him for cross-examination, is bound in the first instance to pay such witness his reasonable expenses, even though he may be out of the jurisdiction of the court. Richards v. Goddard, 43 L. J., Ch. 144; 17 L. R., Eq. 238; 29 L. T. 884; 22 W. R. 204.

What Expenses.]—A witness was taken to the assizes, and there kept at the plaintiff's expense until the day of trial, when she refused to go into court without first being paid a certain sum:—Held, that, to entitle the plaintiffs to move for an attachment against the witness for not attending pursuant to her subpœna, they were bound to shew that a reasonable sum had been tendered to the witness for her conveyance home. Newton v. Harland, 1 Scott (N.R.) 502; 1 Man. & G. 956; 9 D. P. C. 16; 1 W. P. C. 53; 10 L. J., C. P. 11; 4 Jur. 992.

An auctioneer must be tendered his reasonable expenses as a professional witness, and although sworn he may refuse to answer till they have been tendered him. Working Men's Mutual Society, In re, 51 L. J., Ch. 850; 21 Ch. D. 831; 47 L. T. 645; 30 W. R. 938.

A witness is entitled to her reasonable expenses for travelling in the mode suited to her station in life, and the particular circumstances in which she may be placed. Dixon v. Lee, 1 C. M. & R. 645; 5 Tyr. 180; 3 D. P. C. 259.

The measure of necessary expenses is somewhat fully stated in Chapman v. Paynton, 13 East, 13, n.; 12 R. R. 297, n.

A witness who had attended before the examiner, but had refused to be examined unless he were paid the expenses of some former attendances, ordered, upon motion, to attend and be examined and to pay the costs of the motion. Gaunt v. Johnson, 6 Hare, 551.

A witness residing within three and a half miles from the examiner's office, and who was not in any profession or business, was offered one guinea, but refused to be examined unless he was first paid two guineas for his loss of time and expenses; he was, on an ex parte motion, ordered to attend the examiner at his own expense, in four days, or be committed. Wilson v. Broughton, 6 L. J., Ch. 205.

Professional witnesses have a right to demand compensation for loss of time, at the rate of a guinea a day, before they submit to be examined, although they reside in the town in which the examination is conducted. Scale of allowances to different witnesses. Clark v. Gill, 1 Kay & J. 19; 23 L. J., Ch. 711; 2 W. R. 652.

The scale of allowances for the expenses of a witness does not depend upon any valuation of the particular witness's time, but the same scale of compensation is to be allowed to a witness examined in a court of equity as to a witness examined in a court of common law. Nokes v. Gibbon, 26 L. J., Ch. 208; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 282; 5 W. R. 216.

An order was obtained, ex parte, for the attendance of a witness in a cause in equity to give his evidence at his own expense, and the order also contained a direction for him to pay the costs of obtaining it:—Held, that such direction was wrong. Ib.

A person summoned under the 63rd section of the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 45, as a contributory, to attend before the Master, is entitled to have his travelling expenses tendered to him at the time of being served with the summons. Northern and Southern Connecting Ry., In re, Mercer's Case, 2 Sm. & Gif. 87; 23 L. J., Ch. 246; 2 Eq. R. 481; 18 Jur. 161; 2 W. R. 251—L.JJ.

Quære, whether the Master has any jurisdiction to suspend payment of such costs. Ib.

Recovery Back.]—An action is maintainable for money had and received to recover conduct-money paid to a party, under 7 Eliz. c. 9, s. 12, upon a subpœna to attend a trial as witness, where, in consequence of the cause being settled, no trial takes place and the party incurs no expense, and does no act in consequence of the subpœna. Martin v. Andrews, 7 El. & Bl. 1; 26 L. J., Q. B. 39; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1121; 5 W. R. 67.

It makes no difference that the party paying the money has had the sum allowed on taxation of costs if, in fact, he has not obtained it. At any rate, such a defence cannot be raised under a plea of nunquam indebitatus. Ib.

If the opposite party requires a witness to attend, and he receives payment from both of them, although the payment made by the successful party is afterwards repaid him by the loser in the taxed costs, the loser cannot recover back the amount from the witness. Crompton v. Hutton, 3 Taunt. 230.

Waiver.]—A witness, being served with a subpœna, did not object to the amount of the conduct-money, but offered to bear his own expenses. Not having attended the trial, a rule nisi for an attachment against him having been granted:—Held, that, as he made no objection to the amount of the conduct-money when the subpœna was served on him, it was not competent to him to avail himself of the insufficiency of the amount tendered as an answer to a rule nisi for an attachment. Gough or Goff v. Miller or Mills, 2 D. & L. 23; 13 L. J., Q. B. 227; 8 Jur. 758.

Parties.]—A party to a cause about to attend it on his own account, has no right to conduct-money or expenses when subpœnaed by the other side. Reed v. Fairless, 3 F. & F. 958; 8 L. T. 853.

Defendant examined as witness, where he is the only evidence for plaintiff; and if no cause for plaintiff, plaintiff pays costs. Fyfield v. Vinore, Cary, 45.

Plaintiff examining defendant as a witness, pays his costs. Harvey v. Tebbutt, 1 Jac. & Walk. 197; 21 R. R. 145.

A plaintiff examined a defendant as a witness in the cause:—Held, that such defendant was on that account entitled to his costs of suit. Young v. English, 7 Beav. 10; 13 L. J., Ch. 76.

If a plaintiff examines a defendant as a witness, he must pay the defendant's costs of the suit. Leeds (Duke) v. Amherst (Lord), 14 Sim. 357.

A party to a suit, whether an accounting party or not, is entitled, under the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 38, to be paid his costs of attending to be cross-examined, in the same way as an ordinary witness. Darey v. Durrant, 24 Beav. 493; 27 L. J., Ch. 503; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 230; 6 W. R. 405.

b. Remedy of Witness.

By Action—Compensation for Loss of Time.]—A witness attending a trial under a subpœna is not entitled to a compensation for his loss of time, although the party requiring his attendance expressly promises to pay him for such loss. Willis v. Peckam, 4 Moore, 300; 1 Br. & B. 515; 21 R. R. 706.

A witness attending at the trial of a cause on subpœna cannot maintain an action for compensation for his loss of time in attendance, even though he is an attorney. Collins v. Godefroy, 1 D. P. C. 326; 1 B. & Ad. 950; 9 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 158.

A promise by an attorney, after a trial, to pay a witness a compensation for his loss of time, cannot, it seems, be enforced, either by action or attachment. Bates v. Sturges, 2 M. & Scott, 172; 7 Bing. 585.

A witness who is called in an action to depose to a matter of opinion, depending on his skill in a particular trade, has, before he is examined, a right to demand from the party calling him, a compensation for his loss of time; and there is a distinction between a witness so called and a witness who is called to depose to facts which he saw. Webb v. Page, 1 Car. & K. 23.

A solicitor summoned by the official receiver, under s. 27 of Bankruptcy Act, 1883, to attend County Court to give evidence, is entitled to his costs as a professional witness under r. 71 of bankruptcy rules, 1886, and the county court rules, 1889, and may maintain action for them against the receiver. Collins v. Godefroy, supra, distinguished. Chamberlain v. Stoneham, 59 L. J., Q. B. 95; 24 Q. B. D. 113; 61 L. T. 560; 38 W. R. 107.

—— Attendance.]—One who is subpœnaed as a witness and attends at the trial, but there refuses to give evidence unless his expenses are paid, and is thereupon not examined, may yet maintain an action for his necessary expenses of attendance against the party who subpœnaed him. Hallet v. Meares, 13 East, 15; 12 R. R. 296.

A witness who, in obedience to a subpœna, attends a trial in a civil action, may, without any express contract, maintain an action for his expenses against the party who subpœnaed him, the fact of his attendance being evidence from which the jury may infer a contract. Pell v. Daubney, 5 Ex. 955; 20 L. J., Ex. 44.

Called by both Sides.]—A witness who is subpœnaed by both parties in a cause is entitled to have all his expenses paid by the party who calls him at the trial, although the other party may have been the first who subpœnaed him. Allen v. Foxall, 1 Car. & K. 315.

In an action by B. against S., to be tried in London, the plaintiff was subpœnaed as a witness by both parties. On the service of the subpœna by B., the plaintiff inquired whether he might return to Bath until the following week, but was told he must use his own discretion. S. gave his permission to the plaintiff to return to Bath. The verdict on that trial was found for S. The plaintiff was paid by the attorney of S. for his expenses and loss of time during the eleven days which he remained in London, with an understanding that if any part should be disallowed on taxation, the part so disallowed should be refunded by the plaintiff to the attorney of S. On the taxation of S.'s costs, the Master allowed for six days only of the plaintiff's attendance. Thereupon the plaintiff refunded the sum disallowed by the Master, and brought an action against B. for his expenses and loss of time during the other five days:—Held, that the refunding of the sum disallowed to the attorney of S. did not take away the plaintiff's right of action against B. Hale v. Bates, El. Bl. & El. 575; 28 L. J., Q. B. 14; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1106.

7. Allowance on Taxation of Costs.

a. Parties.

Generally.]—It is not a general rule that parties, if witnesses, are to have an allowance for their attendance. Dowdell v. Australian Royal Mail Steam Navigation Co., infra.

The simple fact of a successful party to an action being examined as a witness is not sufficient to entitle him to recover his expenses as a witness against the opposite party; and if it appears that his attendance was unnecessary, or for the purpose of superintending the conduct of the cause, such costs will not be allowed. Howes v. Barber, 18 Q. B. 588; 21 L. J., Q. B. 254; 16 Jur. 614.

Loss of Time.]—A plaintiff obtained a verdict. The defendant obtained a rule nisi for a new trial, which was discharged. The plaintiff was a witness in his own cause, and he remained in this country till after the rule nisi was discharged. On taxation the Master allowed the plaintiff subsistence-money from the time the rule was granted till it was discharged:—Held, that as the Master must be taken to have found that the plaintiff was a necessary witness, that he could not have attended a second trial if one was ordered, unless he remained, and that his remaining incapacitated him from earning his subsistence, the detention might, under those special circumstances, be considered as part of the costs of the rule; and the allowance was right. Dowdell v. Australian Royal Mail Steam Navigation Co., 3 El. & Bl. 902; 2 C. L. R. 1656; 23 L. J., Q. B. 369; 18 Jur. 579; 2 W. R. 554.

Plaintiff took a passage to Australia in defendant's ship, but, being turned out and the ship sailing without him, sued defendants for not carrying him according to contract. Plaintiff could have had another passage in a few days, but he remained until the trial, several months, and gave evidence in his own favour. A verdict was found for him:—Held, on motion to review the Master's taxation of costs, that if plaintiff was detained bonâ fide for the purpose of giving evidence, and it was proper to call him as a witness at the trial, he ought to be allowed the expense of his maintenance while so remaining in this country, as costs against the defendant, although he was not a seafaring man. Ansett v. Marshall, 22 L. J., Q. B. 118; 17 Jur. 114; 1 W. R. 166.

—— Refusal to give Evidence.]—A party to a suit who describes himself as an engineer and surveyor, makes an affidavit and is subpœnaed as a witness before the examiner by the defendants, to give evidence on such affidavit. A mistake is made in the day named. The witness nevertheless attends, and on the two following days, but refuses to give evidence because three guineas only are offered him, and he claims five. An order is then obtained ex parte, that he shall attend within four days and give evidence at his own expense or stand committed. He attends and is examined, and subsequently moves to discharge or vary such order:—Held, that he is entitled to one guinea per day for the first three days, but nothing for the last day, and no costs given. Nokes v. Gibbon, 26 L. J., Ch. 208; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 282; 5 W. R. 216.

Travelling Expenses.]—The travelling expenses of a party suing in person, incurred for the purpose of conducting in person interlocutory proceedings, are not taxable items in party and party costs awarded against the opposite party in the action. Anthony v. Walshe, 22 L. R., Ir. 619—C. A.

Two Causes.]—A plaintiff having been brought up by habeas corpus to give evidence in one cause, when at the assizes gave evidence in another cause against the same defendant. Having succeeded in the first and failed in the second cause:—Held, that, on taxation of the costs of the first cause, he was entitled only to one moiety of the costs of the habeas corpus. Griffin v. Hoskyns, 1 H. & N. 95; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 475.

Materiality.]—In an action for goods sold, the delivery having been proved by the plaintiff's carman, the defendant's wife and servants were called to prove that the goods had been paid for on delivery, the latter swearing that they had on each occasion paid the carman, having received the money for that purpose, sometimes from the defendant's wife and sometimes from the defendant himself, and the former, that, as to proof, she had given the money to the servants only for the purpose of making the payments; on the trial, the defendant was in court, but was not called as a witness until observations had been made by the plaintiff's attorney, on account of his not being put into the box. A verdict having been found for the defendant, and the Master having declined to allow him the costs of his attendance, the court directed a review; holding that the defendant's attendance as a witness was under the circumstances advisable and proper, and it did not lie in the plaintiff's mouth to say that it was not necessary. Flower v. Gardner, 3 C. B. (N.S.) 185; 27 L. J., C. P. 56.

If a party to a cause is examined on his own behalf the Master may allow for his maintenance during the time of his detention for the purpose of giving evidence, as in the case of any witness, if his testimony, in the Master's opinion, was material and necessary, and if he attended for the purpose of being examined as a witness, and not merely to superintend the cause. Howes v. Barber, 18 Q. B. 588; 21 L. J., Q. B. 254; 16 Jur. 614.

To an action for work and labour, the defendant pleaded, first, except as to 59*l.* 12*s.*, never indebted; secondly, a set-off; thirdly, payment; and fourthly, payment into court of 59*l.* 12*s.*, which was taken out. The cause was referred, and the arbitrator found the first issue for the plaintiff and the rest for the defendant:—Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to the expense of his own attendance as a witness if his evidence was applicable to the second and third issues, the defendant being entitled to the general costs of the cause. Clothier v. Gann, 13 C. B. 220.

From India.]—A plaintiff, who was an engineer in the defendant's employ in India, brought an action against them for wrongful dismissal, and a verdict was taken by consent for 200*l.*, a quarter's salary, and 150*l.* for his expenses in coming to England. The Master allowed the plaintiff 450*l.* for subsistence in England while waiting for the trial, which the defendants had repeatedly delayed, and 150*l.* for expenses to enable the plaintiff to return to India:—Held, that the sum of 600*l.* was properly allowed, but that the decision was not to be taken as a precedent to allow such a sum for expenses in demands of small amount without good grounds for doing so. Culvert v. Seinde Ry., 18 C. B. (N.S.) 306; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 245; 13 W. R. 430.

b. Professional Witnesses.

Accountant.]—An accountant employed as a skilled witness to give evidence in support of the claim, though entitled to a reasonable allowance for his time and expenses in preparing his evidence by an examination of the books, is not entitled, upon party and party taxation, to his charges for balancing and putting the books into shape for the purpose of supporting the claim. Laffitte & Co., In re, Laffitte's Claim, 44 L. J., Ch. 633; L. R. 20 Eq. 650; 33 L. T. 91; 24 W. R. 7.

When, in an action involving questions of account, it becomes necessary for one party to employ an accountant to examine the books of his opponent for the purposes of his case, although he is afterwards successful in the action, yet he will not be allowed the costs in respect of the accountant's charges for such examination. Such costs fall within the general rule by which the expenses of qualifying a witness to give evidence are costs of the party whose witness he is. And it makes no difference that the accountant is to be appointed by an indifferent person, instead of by the party on whose behalf he is employed. Nolan v. Copeman, 42 L. J., Q. B. 44; L. R. 8 Q. B. 84; 27 L. T. 789; 21 W. R. 263.

The expense of an accountant, employed with reference to and pending the suit, does not come under the general denomination of costs, and will not be allowed on taxation. Small v. Attwood, 1 Y. & Coll. 53; 4 L. J., Ex. Eq. 1.

In the absence of any special arrangement, the rule for accountant's charges, fixed by the general order in bankruptcy of the 19th May, 1855, will be adopted by the Court of Chancery. Meymott v. Meymott, 33 Beav. 590; 33 L. J., Ch. 686; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 715; 10 L. T. 681; 12 W. R. 993.

Engineer or Architect.]—The daily fee allowed to a professional witness on taxation between party and party is not necessarily to be limited to 3*l.* 3*s.* In this case a fee of 5*l.* 5*s.* a day was allowed to an engineer and architect of eminence employed under the direction of the court. Robb v. Connor, Ir. R. 9 Eq. 373.

Auctioneer.]—An auctioneer summoned to give evidence before a special examiner appointed under proceedings in the chancery division is, as a professional witness, entitled to be paid a guinea a day by way of compensation for his loss of time, together with the amount of his travelling expenses, if any, including therein his railway fare, first-class, from his residence to the place of his examination and back again. And, although sworn, he may refuse to answer any questions until a sum sufficient to cover these amounts has been paid to him. Working Men's Mutual Society, In re, 51 L. J., Ch. 850; 21 Ch. D. 831; 47 L. T. 645; 30 W. R. 938.

Barrister.]—A barrister is primâ facie entitled to the expenses of a professional man, without proof of his being in practice. Turner v. Turner, 5 Jur. (N.S.) 839 ; 7 W. R. 573.

Solicitor.]—Where there is an order to tax a bill, as between attorney and client, or attorney and agent, and no reservation of the question of retainer or liability, the Master has, nevertheless, jurisdiction to consider whether any item is a proper item of charge, and is not confined merely to the question of amount. And if the agent, having attended as a witness, has charged for his attendance something beyond the ordinary charge of a witness, the Master will be justified in disallowing such extra charge, unless there is some special contract to pay a reasonable remuneration, in which case it will be for the Master to say what is reasonable. Sollery v. Flewcker, 27 L. J., Ex. 11.

Solicitor's Clerk.]—Charges for the attendance of a solicitor's clerk, in addition to the solicitor, on cross-examination, will not in any case be allowed. Smith v. Buller, 45 L. J., Ch. 69 ; L. R. 19 Eq. 473 ; 31 L. T. 873 ; 23 W. R. 332.

The Master having allowed the expenses of the plaintiff's attorney's attendance at the trial, as a witness for the plaintiff, to support an issue, upon which he was successful, the attorney not attending as such, but the cause being conducted by a competent clerk, the court refused to interfere. Butler v. Hobson, 5 Scott, 824 ; 7 D. P. C. 157 ; 5 Bing. (N.C.) 128 ; 1 Arn. 424 ; 8 L. J., C. P. 81.

The ordinary rule, not to allow on taxation the expenses both of the attorney and the London agent of the attorney of the party as witnesses in the cause (where it is tried at a town where neither of them resides), is relaxed, where it clearly appears that both of them were material and necessary witnesses for the party, as where one had written a letter and received an answer, and the other had communicated the answer to the plaintiff. Chapman v. Rodway, 27 L. J., Ex. 7.

Scientific Witnesses.]—There is no positive rule in equity as to the sum to be allowed to a scientific witness attending before an examiner ; but the Master decides on the sum to be allowed in each case according to the circumstances. Smith v. Buller, supra.

In fixing the remuneration of counsel and solicitor and the number of counsel employed, the amount of the money-issue involved and the commercial importance of the case are properly taken into consideration. The amount of evidence used in court is not the limit of the evidence the costs of which will be allowed between party and party. L. C. & D. Ry. v. S. E. Ry., 60 L. T. 753.

Interpreter.]—A party examining, by means of an interpreter, a witness ignorant of the English language, must bear the expense of the interpreter's services on the cross, as well as the direct, examination. Plunkett v. Williams, Ir. Eq. 6 R. 80.

On taxation of costs as between party and party, the Master has a discretion to allow the expense of employing an interpreter to assist a foreigner in preparing instructions for his answer ; but such allowance ought not to include the tavern or travelling expenses of an interpreter brought to this country for the special purpose. Shrewsbury (Earl) v. Trappes, 31 L. J., Ch. 680 ; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 587 ; 6 L. T. 516 ; 10 W. R. 663.

Several Witnesses.]—In an action for breach of warranty of a horse sold to the plaintiff, who resided in England, the plaintiff produced, as witnesses at the trial, three English veterinary surgeons, who had examined the horse shortly after the purchase, and deposed to its unsoundness. The plaintiff recovered a verdict, and the taxing-master having, on taxation, disallowed the expenses of two of these witnesses ; the judge at the trial having considered them necessary witnesses :—Held, that their expenses should be allowed. Weston v. Steeds, 24 L. R., Ir. 283.

Though not Called.]—A professional witness is entitled to his expenses on the scale allowed to persons of his profession, although not called to give professional evidence. Parkinson v. Atkinson, 31 L. J., C. P. 199.

Costs of Experiments.]—Where the prothonotary allowed for various sums expended in experiments, and a compensation for loss of time to scientific and professional men employed in making them, with a view to ascertain the increased risk or advantage in a new process of boiling sugar by means of heated oil, and who were called as witnesses at the trial ; the court directed him to review his taxation, on the ground that no such allowance or compensation ought to be made. Severn v. Olive, 6 Moore, 235 ; 3 Br. & B. 72 ; 23 R. R. 365.

A plaintiff will not be allowed his expenses in the construction of a model, nor a compensation for loss of time by scientific persons who had been sent to a distant part of the country to inspect a building there, although he could not safely have proceeded to trial without their testimony. Bayley v. Beaumont, 11 Moore, 497.

In a patent suit in which the plaintiffs after the briefs were delivered, but before the hearing, took the common order dismissing their bill, with costs :—Held, that they were entitled to an allowance in respect of the charges of scientific witnesses, and that such allowance was not limited by the rules of taxation at common law, and also that they were entitled to an allowance in respect of the cost of a model : but the court followed the Master's decision as to amount. Batley v. Kynock, 44 L. J., Ch. 565 ; L. R. 20 Eq. 632 ; 33 L. T. 45.

Qualifying to give Evidence.]—Ord. VI. r. 8, 1875, directs that such just and reasonable charges and expenses as appear to have been properly incurred in "procuring evidence" are to be allowed on taxation of costs. The expenses of procuring surveyors and a builder to inspect a house before trial, with a view to qualifying themselves to give evidence as to its state of repair, &c., having been disallowed by a Master, the divisional court held that, instead of disallowing them altogether, the Master should allow such a sum as in his discretion he should think reasonable, according to the old rule of the Court of Chancery. Mackley v. Chillingworth, 46 L. J., C. P. 484 ; 2 C. P. D. 273 ; 36 L. T. 514 ; 25 W. R. 650.

Where witnesses were engaged several days in searching for a defendant, in order to identify him upon a trial, although notice was given requiring him to be present at a place and time appointed, as this was only a mode of qualifying witnesses to give evidence, the plaintiff was not entitled to the costs of his witnesses in respect of the time they had been so engaged. Small v. Batho, 1 B. C. C. 43; 21 L. J., Q. B. 254; 16 Jur. 529.

The expenses of surveying and taking levels, in order to ascertain whether a weir had been improperly raised, to the prejudice of the plaintiff's water-mill, will not be allowed. Ormerod v. Thompson, 16 M. & W. 869.

In an action for negligence on a valuation between an outgoing and an incoming tenant, the Master disallowed the expenses of witnesses going to the premises for the purpose of qualifying themselves to give evidence:—Held, that such expenses were properly disallowed. May v. Selby, 4 Scott (N.R.) 727; 4 Man. & G. 142; 1 D. (N.S.) 702; 6 Jur. 52; 11 L. J., C. P. 223.

The Master was held to have properly disallowed the defendant such part of the expenses of witnesses as were incurred in qualifying them to give evidence; such as journeys and surveys being taken to enable them to speak to the insufficiency of work done. Gravatt v. Attwood, 1 B. C. C. 27; 21 L. J., Q. B. 215.

Fees to scientific witnesses for qualifying themselves to give evidence may in proper cases be allowed as between party and party, when sufficient information as to how the amount of such fees has been made up is laid before and considered by the taxing-master. Thompson v. Moore, 25 L. R., Ir. 98.

Inspecting Lands.]—Upon taxation of costs between party and party, the sums paid to witnesses for inspecting, measuring and valuing improvements upon lands will not be allowed in addition to the charges for the affidavits made by those witnesses. Murphy v. Nolan, Ir. R. 7 Eq. 498.

Rule 8 of the "special allowances" in the scale of 1875 so far qualifies the rule of 1853 as to allowance to witnesses, as to enable the Master in his discretion to allow so much for the attendance of scientific witnesses at the trial as shall appear to him to be just and reasonable. Turnbull v. Janson, 47 L. J., C. P. 384; 3 C. P. D. 264; 26 W. R. 815.

The same rule authorises the Master to allow in the charge for "instructions for brief" the reasonable expenses of such witnesses qualifying themselves to give evidence. Ib.

Special Fees to Scientific Witnesses.]—The rule as to special fees paid to counsel is applicable to the case of scientific witnesses, and special fees paid to experts of peculiar eminence, even when taxable between solicitor and client, will not be allowed as between party and party. Thompson v. Moore, 25 L. R., Ir. 98.

c. Foreign Witnesses.

Expenses.]—Where foreign witnesses appear to be domiciled in this country, they are not entitled to the expenses of their return home. Lopes v. De Tastet, 7 Moore, 120; 3 Br. & B. 292.

Loss of Time.]—Reasonable allowances in costs may be made for the loss of time of a necessary foreign witness, who is not accessible to a subpœna, and who will not attend without compensation. Lonergan v. Royal Exchange Assurance Co., 1 D. P. C. 233; 5 M. & P. 805; 7 Bing. 729.

What Time.]—A plaintiff, who brings over a foreign witness hither, in order to judge by his testimony whether there is ground to bring an action, and afterwards sues, and examines the foreigner at the trial, may be allowed the costs of detaining him here from the time of the writ sued out until the trial, and a reasonable sum for his sustenance here during the same time, but not the cost of his passage hither, or of his return. Schimmel v. Lousada, 4 Taunt. 695.

If a witness is bonâ fide sent for from a foreign country to support an intended action, though the writ is not sued out until after his arrival, the plaintiff is entitled in that cause to the costs of bringing him over, his subsistence, and compensation for his loss of time spent here pending the suit, for the purposes thereof, and to the costs of his return. Tremain v. Barrett, 1 Marsh. 463, 563; 6 Taunt. 88; 16 R. R. 584.

But if the witness is sent for to give evidence in one action which is discontinued, and the plaintiff calls him as a witness in another action against a different defendant, but arising out of the same transaction, he is entitled in the second action to the costs only of the witness's subsistence and detention for the purpose of the second action, but not of his voyage hither, or of his return. Ib.

A witness for plaintiff in an important action which was standing for trial after Trinity term, was brought over from Norway on 3rd June, and it was then found that he was unable to give the evidence for which he was particularly required; and in the absence of this evidence, it was necessary for plaintiff to send a commission abroad, and the proceedings in the action were therefore stayed. He was, however, a material witness in other respects, and was examined before the Master on 29th June, and was sent back to Norway. Ultimately the action was settled in favour of plaintiff:—Held, that, in the circumstances, plaintiff was entitled to the costs of bringing the witness over, keeping him till his examination, and sending him back, in addition to the costs of the examination itself, which alone the Master had allowed him. Seymour v. Saunders, 20 W. R. 832.

d. Material or Otherwise.

Unnecessary.]—All costs caused by unnecessary evidence must be paid by the party offering it. Littlewood v. Collins, 1 N. R. 457.

It is improper to examine in chief as to particular items of the account, the defendant being an accounting party; or to examine in chief as to the particular acts of wilful default in not receiving rents, the defendant being bound to account for the wilful default simply by reason of the nature of his relation to the plaintiff. Such evidence may, however, be entered as read, but the plaintiff must pay the defendant the costs of it. Hamilton v. M'Cormick, 3 Jo. & Lat. 183.

Where plaintiff not only failed to establish his case by evidence, but also incumbered the suit with an unnecessary multitude of witnesses, and with a body of very irrelevant depositions, he must pay the costs of the depositions, although the bill, not being vexatious, was dismissed without costs, as to the rest of the cause. Moore v. M'Kay, Beat. 282.

Where much unnecessary evidence was adduced on the part of the plaintiffs, in whose favour a decree was given, costs were only given against the defendants up to the date of the replication. Harvey v. Mount, 8 Beav. 439; 14 L. J., Ch. 233; 9 Jur. 741.

Question of Admissibility.]—Where there is a reasonable ground to believe that the testimony of a witness will be admissible, his expenses may be allowed on taxation of costs against the adverse party. Rushworth v. Wilson, 1 B. & C. 267; 1 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 113.

The master is in general the sole judge of what witnesses shall be allowed on taxation, and, therefore, when he had, in an action of libel, disallowed all witnesses to prove innuendoes, the court refused to interfere to make him review his taxation. Skelton v. Seward, 1 D. P. C. 411.

Where defendant in tithe cause examines many witnesses, whose testimony is inadmissible to any extent, the court will give the plaintiff his costs of the rejected depositions, independently of the result of the cause. Petch v. Dalton, 6 Price, 232.

Witnesses Rejected by Judge or Arbitrator.]—On taxation of costs it is a general rule to disallow the expenses of a witness rejected by the judge at the trial, as between party and party. Galloway v. Keyworth, 15 C. B. 228; 2 C. L. R. 860; 23 L. J., C. P. 218.

The same rule applies to a witness rejected by an arbitrator. Ib.

Witnesses not Called.]—The circumstance of witnesses not being called at the trial is no ground for disallowing their expenses; provided the master is satisfied that the attendance was reasonably necessary. Morison v. Harmer, 5 Scott, 410.

After public notice that common jury causes in London would be taken on the 18th of February; on the 12th a fresh notice was issued that they would be taken on the 16th. A cause in which the plaintiff, his attorney, and witnesses resided in the country at a great distance from London, having been put in the list for the 15th was called on in its turn, and the witnesses not being in attendance was referred. The witnesses arrived in the evening after the court had risen. The arbitrator having awarded in favour of the plaintiff:—Held, that the master was at liberty to allow the plaintiff the costs of his witnesses as costs in the cause. Standeven v. Murgatroyd, 3 H. & N. 570; 6 W. R. 625.

A cause was referred at the assizes, at about three o'clock in the afternoon, the costs of the cause to abide the event, and the costs of the reference and award to be in the discretion of the arbitrator. The arbitration commenced at six o'clock the same evening, and all the witnesses were examined before twelve o'clock that night. The award was ultimately made in favour of the defendant, to whom the costs of the action were ordered to be paid, each party paying his own costs of the reference, and a moiety of the expenses of the award:—Held, that a witness who did not arrive at the assize town until half-past ten o'clock in the evening of the day of the trial, was not properly chargeable as a witness in the cause. Fryer v. Sturt, 16 C. B. 218; 24 L. J., C. P. 154.

The fact of a witness not being examined at the trial, is not in itself a sufficient ground for disallowing the cost of such witness's proof. O'Meara v. Barry, [1895] 2 Ir. R. 454.

The expenses of attendance at the trial of a necessary witness (who, owing to the course of the trial, has not been examined) should be allowed where his attendance has been directed by counsel verbally or in writing. Gregg v. Gardner, [1897] 2 Ir. R. 122.

—— Where Double Payment—Fraud.]—If a plaintiff subpœnaes witnesses, and remunerates them accordingly, and they have been previously subpœnaed by and received their expenses from the defendant, which circumstances they conceal from the plaintiff, the court will allow the latter the expenses he has paid those witnesses for their attendance, although they were not called for him at the trial, on the ground that such payment was obtained by fraud. Benson v. Schneider, 1 Moore, 76; 7 Taunt. 337; Holt, 416.

Called for Trivial Purpose.]—Semble, no costs should be allowed for a witness summoned merely to prove a photograph, unless the other side have refused to admit his evidence, after a copy of his proof has been shown to them. East Stonehouse Local Board v. Victoria Brewery Co., 64 L. J., Ch. 793; [1895] 2 Ch. 514; 13 R. 657; 73 L. T. 54; 43 W. R. 585.

Alteration in Pleadings—Admission by Party.]—If, by an alteration in the state of the pleadings, after notice of trial, certain witnesses are unnecessary, the party who subpœnaed them must make reasonable efforts to prevent their attendance, or their expenses will not be allowed. Allport v. Baldwin, 2 D. P. C. 599.

The costs of witnesses, whose attendance becomes useless, owing to an admission being made by the opposite party of the matter which they were summoned to prove, are in the discretion of the master. Davis v. Thomas, 5 Jur. (N.S.) 709.

A plaintiff who enters into evidence to prove facts clearly admitted by the answer, must pay the costs, though he succeed in the suit. Booth v. Booth, 1 Beav. 130; 8 L. J., Ch. 39; 2 Jur. 938.

Subordinate Issues not Tried.] — An issue under 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 71, s. 46, raised a question as to the mode of taking the tithe of calves, and the plaintiff having, in his notice of the points to be raised, intimated an intention to raise a point on the question of value, which he was, at the trial, precluded by the defendant from going into, when the defendant succeeded:—Held, that he was not entitled to the costs of the witnesses brought by him to the assizes to rebut the plaintiff's evidence on the point as to value. Fisher v. Berrell, 1 D. (N.S.) 565; 6 Jur. 282.

In an action for entering a close, breaking the soil, and digging and carrying away minerals, the defendant pleaded that the plaintiff was not possessed of the minerals; a justification of the entry, under an immemorial custom; and a justification of the entry, subject to his making compensation to the plaintiff for surface damage; replication, taking the issue upon the plea of not possessed; traversing the unqualified right of entry; and alleging a demand of compensation and refusal; the plaintiff obtained a verdict upon the issue on the unqualified right, but the jury found that the defendant had tendered a reasonable compensation for the damage done, and a verdict was entered for him on the issue on the qualified right:—Held, that, under the issue on the plea of not possessed, the defendant was entitled to the costs of the witnesses subpœnaed, but not examined to prove his right of entry, but that the costs must be estimated separately, and as contradistinguished from those which arose upon the issue on the right to dig and carry away the minerals. Paddock v. Forrester, 2 D. (N.S.) 125; 4 Man. & G. 775.

In an action on a promissory note, the defendant having pleaded fraud, the plaintiff brought up a witness to disprove the fraud, but the defendant failing to make out a primâ facie case of fraud, the witness was not called:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to the expenses of such witness. Miller v. Thomson, 4 Man. & G. 260; 11 L. J., C. P. 224.

The master having allowed a plaintiff the expenses of a witness who was brought from France for the purpose of proving that the tenant in tail (upon whose will the question arose) died unmarried and without issue, the briefs shewing that he would have proved these facts, had not the course the cause took rendered such proof unnecessary:—The court refused to send the matter back to him. Street v. Platel, 8 Scott, 397.

To an action for refusing to deliver goods into the plaintiff's lighter, the defendant pleaded that, though in the notice for delivery he was required to deliver them upon tender of the bills of lading and freight, no bills of lading or freight were tendered; on which issue was joined:—Held, that the plaintiff, who had a verdict, was not entitled to the costs of witnesses in attendance to prove that it was not customary to tender the bills of lading on applying for goods, nor to pay the freight till some days after delivery. Jones v. Tobin, 4 Bing. (N.C.) 123; 5 Scott, 440; 6 D. P. C. 251.

Where there is a plea in bar to a declaration which is found for the defendant, he is not entitled to the expenses of witnesses, who have been subpœnaed for the purpose of giving evidence in reduction of damages. Hodgkinson v. Wyatt, 1 D. & L. 668; 13 L. J., Q. B. 73; 8 Jur. 216.

Discretion of Master.] — The charges for "instructions for brief," for "scientific witnesses qualifying themselves to give evidence," for "copies of documents furnished to counsel," and for "refreshers to counsel," are purely in the discretion of the master. Turnbull v. Janson, 47 L. J., C. P. 384; 3 C. P. D. 264; 26 W. R. 815.

If doubt exists as to whether a witness was material and necessary, and the master allows the charge upon the certificate of counsel in the cause, the court will not review the taxation. Marshall v. Parsons, 9 D. P. C. 251; 4 Jur. 1017.

The master is the sole judge of the proper number of witnesses to be allowed in support of the same matters. Pilgrim v. Southampton and Dorchester Ry., 8 C. B. 25.

Upon the taxation of the defendant's costs of issues upon which he has succeeded, an affidavit that the witnesses, whose expenses he claims, were called exclusively to support those issues, is not indispensable, provided the master is satisfied of the fact by other means. Ib.

The materiality of a witness is primâ facie a question for the master, but the court may review his decision on that point. Galloway v. Keyworth, 15 C. B. 228; 2 C. L. R. 860; 23 L. J., C. P. 218.

In taxing the costs of witnesses on several issues, where some issues are found for the plaintiff, and some for the defendant, it is for the master to judge whether the evidence of such witnesses is exclusively applicable to such issues. Elderton v. Emmens, 5 D. & L. 680; 17 L. J., C. P. 277; 12 Jur. 728.

The question whether the costs of witnesses subpœnaed but not actually called should be allowed, is a question of detail in reference to which the taxing-master may exercise his discretion. In allowing for witnesses' fees and expenses the taxing-master is not bound by the scale settled by the common law courts in 1853, but may exercise his discretion in accordance with Ord. LXV. r. 27 (9), (20), (29), (37), (38). Turnbull v. Janson (3 C. P. D. 264) followed. East Stonehouse Local Board v. Victoria Brewery Co., 64 L. J., Ch. 793; [1895] 2 Ch. 514; 13 R. 657; 73 L. T. 54; 43 W. R. 585.

In taxing the costs of witnesses the officer should act upon no fixed general rule, but should determine the case of each witness on its own merits. Railways Commissioner v. O'Rourke, 65 L. J., P. C. 84; [1896] A. C. 594; 75 L. T. 84 P. C.

The taxing-officer is the proper authority, subject to appeal to the court, to decide upon the allowance or non-allowance of shorthand notes. Ib.

—— Jurisdiction of Judge.] — Where the taxing-master has, in the proper exercise of his discretion, allowed the costs of a witness as between party and party, the judge has no jurisdiction under R. S. C. 1883, Ord. LXV. r. 27, sub-r. 29, to review the taxation. Oliver v. Robbins, 64 L. J., Ch. 203; 13 R. 63; 71 L. T. 636; 43 W. R. 137.

What Issues.] — A party succeeding on an issue is entitled to the costs of any witnesses called to give evidence on a fact involved in that issue, though the jury or an arbitrator may find that fact against him. Radcliffe v. Hall, 2 C. M. & R. 258; 1 Gale, 140; 3 D. P. C. 802; 5 Tyr. 770; 4 L. J., Ex. 191.

A party is not necessarily disentitled to the costs of witnesses called in support of an issue on which he succeeds, because their testimony may in a slight degree be applicable also to an issue upon which he has failed. The true question is, for what purpose were they called. Jewell v. Parr, 17 C. B. 636; 25 L. J., C. P. 179.

A declaration for a malicious prosecution for perjury, in one count, set out ten assignments of perjury, which were alleged to have been prosecuted maliciously and without probable cause; at the trial the plaintiff failed in proving want of probable cause as to nine of the assignments. He obtained a verdict with damages on the tenth assignment:—Held, that he was not entitled to the costs of witnesses called to give evidence of want of probable cause as to those nine; and that the defendant was not entitled to the costs of witnesses subpœnaed by him to shew probable cause as to those assignments. Delisser v. Towne, 4 P. & D. 644; 1 Q. B. 333.

On an inquiry before a sheriff to assess damages in an action wherein the defendant had suffered judgment by default, the jury gave damages on one breach only, and none on two others. The master allowed the expenses of two witnesses called to prove the second and third breaches:—Held, that the omission to give nominal damages could be rectified, and that the materiality of the witnesses was for the discretion of the master. Dods v. Evans, 15 C. B. (N.S.) 621; 33 L. J., C. P. 146; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 154; 9 L. T. 723; 12 W. R. 432.

Action for a libel contained in a memorial to the Secretary of State for the Home Department, charging misconduct of the plaintiff as a magistrate during the election of a member of parliament for a borough. Pleas, not guilty, and a justification. The plaintiff called some witnesses who proved the publication, and others who proved the falsehood of the charges in the memorial. The defendant called witnesses to prove the truth of the charges in the memorial. The jury found bona fides, but negatived the justification, and the court decided that the memorial was a privileged communication; therefore a verdict was entered for the defendant on the plea of not guilty, and for the plaintiff on the plea of justification:—Held, that the defendant was entitled to the costs of his witnesses, not excepting those whose evidence came to his knowledge after the publication of the memorial; and that the plaintiff was not entitled to the costs of his witnesses called to prove the truth of the charges. Harrison v. Bush, 5 El. & Bl. 344; 25 L. J., Q. B. 99; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 90; 4 W. R. 199.

When required for Cross-examination.]—A plaintiff having been called upon to produce and having produced, a witness for cross-examination, is entitled, ex debito justitiæ, to have the expenses thereof forthwith taxed and paid. Richards v. Goddard, L. R. 10 Ch. 288; 32 L. T. 213; 23 W. R. 329.

In a suit for specific performance the plaintiff, after expiration of the time prescribed, obtained liberty to cross-examine the defendants at the hearing, and they accordingly attended at the hearing for the purpose, but the plaintiff declined to cross-examine them:—Held, that, although the plaintiff was entitled to the general costs of the suit, he should be disallowed all costs in reference to the cross-examination, and pay the expenses of the witnesses so attending. Guilfoyle v. Hutchisonn, Ir. R. 8 Eq. 298.

The costs of bringing up witnesses for cross-examination in court allowed, in a taxation between party and party, although they had not been actually cross-examined. Clark v. Malpas, 31 Beav. 554; 1 N. R. 221; 32 L. J., Ch. 313; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 612; 7 L. T. 659; 11 W. R. 251.

One form of proceeding for the examination of a witness cannot be abandoned for another without payment of the costs incurred by the first proceeding. Darey v. Durrant, 24 Beav. 41; 27 L. J., Ch. 504; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 398.

Therefore, where the plaintiff had required the attendance of a defendant, to be cross-examined on his affidavit, and attended, it being decided that he was entitled to his expenses as a witness, the plaintiff then abandoned this course of proceeding, and filed interrogatories, for the defendant's examination:—Held, that this could not be done until the costs of the former proceeding had been paid. Ib.

Necessary through Negligence.]—In an action on a bill of exchange it became necessary to call two clerks of the plaintiff's attorney to account for the loss of the bill, which occurred through their negligence, in order to let in secondary evidence of its contents. The master having disallowed the costs of these witnesses, on the ground that their attendance was solely occasioned by their own negligence:—Held, per Pollock, C. B., and Martin, B., that he was correct in so doing; but per Alderson, B., and Platt, B., that he was incorrect, the true criterion of taxation being, whether the evidence was necessary for the plaintiff at the time of the trial. Matthews v. Livesley, 11 Ex. 221; 3 C. L. R. 898; 24 L. J., Ex. 252; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 601; 3 W. R. 517.

Where an examination is adjourned by the fault of a witness, the master taxes the costs of both days, and has no jurisdiction to decide that the second examination was unnecessary. Turner v. Turner, 5 Jur. (N.S.) 839; 7 W. R. 573.

The 14th order of June, 1854, does not empower the court to adjudicate on the amounts of the items allowed. Ib.

Subpœna duces tecum.] — When subpœnas duces tecum have been directed by counsel, and are necessary to enforce the production of documents, they should be allowed. Jessop v. Cusack, 25 L. R., Ir. 244.

e. Expenses.

Going to Assizes.]—In an action on a bill of exchange drawn in London, where the witnesses and parties resided, the plaintiff laid the venue in Surrey:—Held, that unless a case of oppression were made out, he was entitled to the costs of going to the assizes, notwithstanding the cause might have been tried at less expense in London. Vere v. Moore, 3 Bing. (N.C.) 261; 3 Scott, 646; 5 D. P. C. 367; 2 Hodges, 200; 6 L. J., C. P. 7.

Except under special circumstances, the expenses of the attendance of witnesses on the commission-day at the assizes cannot be allowed. Harvey v. Divers, 16 C. B. 497.

The court will not allow the expenses of the plaintiff's witnesses, brought too early to the assizes, to attend on a trial there. Anon., 2 Chit. 200.

But a plaintiff is bound to have his witnesses in attendance from the commencement of the assizes, and may therefore have the costs of their attendance previously to the trial. Cosgrave v. Evans, 2 D. P. C. 443.

It is a question for the discretion of the master, whether a witness ought to be allowed for the whole time of his attendance at the assizes, or only a portion of it; but, where the master has decided upon it, the court will not review his decision. Platt v. Greene, 2 D. P. C. 216.

Where a cause at the assizes is over at three o'clock in the afternoon, the witnesses may reasonably be allowed the following day for their return home, though their place of residence is distant only about fifty miles, and accessible by trains on the same evening. Fryer v. Sturt, 16 C. B. 218; 24 L. J., C. P. 154.

Travelling Expenses.]—The master ought not to allow for the travelling expenses of witnesses a greater amount than is reasonable, though it does not exceed 1*s.* a mile, and though it has been actually paid by the party bringing them. Hunter v. Liddell, 16 Q. B. 402; 20 L. J., Q. B. 200; 15 Jur. 426.

The master, in taxing the expenses of witnesses according to a certain scale, cannot allow more than is actually paid for their travelling expenses. Radcliffe v. Hall, 3 D. P. C. 802 ; 5 Tyr. 770 ; 2 C. M. & R. 258 ; 1 Gale, 140 ; 4 L. J., Ex. 191.

Where a country witness remained in London, the sum which his journey would have cost, being less than his expenses in town, will be allowed. Turner v. Turner, 5 Jur. (N.S.) 839.

Attendance for what Time.]—In the absence of special reasons, witnesses should be in attendance on the day fixed for trial, and from day to day while the case appears in the list for trial until the case is heard, and the costs of such attendance should be allowed. O'Meara v. Barry, [1895] 2 Ir. R. 454.

Maintenance during Detention.]—Where the captain of a merchant ship, domiciled in this country, was detained by the plaintiff for a considerable time to give evidence in a cause, but before issue was joined or notice of trial given :—Held, that the master was at liberty to allow the expenses of maintaining the witness during such detention. Berry v. Pratt, 1 B. & C. 276 ; 2 D. & R. 424 ; 1 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 116 ; 25 R. R. 396.

Where the master has allowed the expenses of the witnesses of the successful party at the assize town for several days, during which their attendance was not in fact necessary, the court will not interfere with the master's decision, unless mala fides is shewn in such successful party, as an intention unnecessarily to increase the costs. Thomas v. Saunders, 3 N. & M. 572.

In an action upon a policy of insurance, the master allowed subsistence-money for the captain (whose conduct was impugned by the defendant, and whose personal attendance at the trial was therefore admitted to be necessary) from the issuing of the writ until the trial, a period of eighteen months, at the rate of ten shillings a day ; the trial having been delayed by the necessity for each party sending out a commission to examine witnesses at the place where the disaster occurred :—Held, that in the absence of anything to shew that the master had exercised an improper discretion either as to the amount or the period of the allowance, the court could not interfere. Potter v. Rankin, L. R. 5 C. P. 518 ; 18 W. R. 868.

Subsistence allowed in costs in a policy cause, to the master of a ship insured, a material witness from the time of subpœna to the time of trial, although the witness resided in England, was not examined, was a master in the royal navy, and did not shew the permission of the admiralty for him to engage in the merchant service. Mount v. Larkins, 8 Bing. 195 ; 1 M. & Scott, 357 ; 1 D. P. C. 262 ; 1 L. J., C. P. 89.

But refused for his further detention pending a rule for a new trial, upon a point to which his evidence was not applicable. Ib.

So, in another cause, the court approved the allowance of subsistence money for a witness, the captain of a ship, from the service of the subpœna till the time of trial. Temperley v. Scott, 1 M. & Scott, 601 ; 8 Bing. 392 ; 1 L. J., C. P. 111.

A witness who is bonâ fide detained in this country for the purposes of a trial is entitled to expenses of his maintenance during the time he is so detained, and that although he may not be a seafaring man. Ansett v. Marshall, 1 B. C. C. 147 ; 22 L. J., Q. B. 118 ; 17 Jur. 114 ; 1 W. R. 166.

The master allowed 40*l.* for expenses to a gentleman from the office of the accountant-general of the Court of Chancery in Ireland, who was called to produce an order of the court, and a power of attorney enabling the defendant's attorney to obtain a transfer of stock, standing in the name of the accountant-general, and also to prove the course of business in the accountant-general's office upon the subject :—Held, that the allowance was properly made. Storey v. Houlditch, 1 Scott (N.R.) 206.

Detaining Witnesses on Shore.]—Semble, the cost of detaining witnesses on shore may be allowed, although such witnesses are not called. This is a matter in the discretion of the registrar. The City of Lucknow, 51 L. T. 907 ; 5 Asp., M. C. 340.

Return from Continent.]—A witness who is subpœnaed in London in August, to attend a trial at the adjourned sittings in October, and who is at the time of service on the eve of departure for the continent, is entitled to the expenses of coming from the continent to attend the trial. Vice v. Anson (Viscountess), 3 Car. & P. 19 ; M. & M. 96.

Postponement of Trial.]—Where a trial has been postponed at the instance of a defendant, a plaintiff who succeeds in the action is entitled to the costs of detaining a material witness, a captain of a vessel, for 300 days, and is not bound to examine him on interrogatories. Evans v. Watson, 3 C. B. 327 ; 4 D. & L. 193 ; 15 L. J., C. P. 256 ; 10 Jur. 818.

Unnecessary.]—The expenses of detaining a witness are not allowed when it cannot be shewn that such detention was necessary to insure his attendance to give evidence, nor where his detention was for some other purpose, such as to watch the proceedings in the suit. The Bahia, L. R. 1 Adm. 15 ; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 1008 ; 14 W. R. 411.

Included in Verdict.]—In an action for unliquidated damages for breach of an agreement, the jury included in the verdict an amount for subsistence-money to the plaintiff whilst awaiting the trial :—Held, that he was not entitled to an allowance for subsistence-money pending the action. Barker v. Clough, 7 Jur. (N.S.) 545 ; 4 L. T. 306 ; 9 W. R. 618.

Where the jury, in returning a verdict, say that they find for the plaintiff as to part of the declaration, he will not be allowed the expenses of witnesses called to support a different part, although the verdict is entered for him generally. Cocks v. Peachey, 2 M. & R. 420.

Second Trial.]—In an action upon a policy of insurance, the question being, whether or not the ship was seaworthy, the captain was detained (for the purpose of giving evidence for the plaintiff at the trial) from May to December, 1836, and again from October, 1840, to March, 1841. A rule having been obtained by the defendant for a new trial, on payment of the costs of, and occasioned by, the former trial, the Master allowed for the second period of detention of the captain only, at the rate of one guinea per day. The court declined to interfere. Stewart v. Steele, 5 Scott (N.R.) 517 ; 4 Man. & G. 669.

Before Lord Mayor.]—Costs for witness served to testify before Lord Mayor, awarded. Rowe v. Guybone, Cary, 35.

8. Remedy for Non-Attendance.

a. Attachment.

Not Committal.]—Proceedings to compel a party to an action to attend and be examined are by way of attachment and not by way of committal. Evans, In re, Evans v. Noton 62 L. J., Ch. 413; [1893] 1 Ch. 252; 2 R. 216; 68 L. T. 271; 41 W. R. 230—C. A.

When Granted.]—Subpœna to testify in Guildhall, London, attachment for non-appearance. Batt v. Rookes, Cary 61.

Attachment against witness served to testify. Middleton v. Speright, Cary, 80.

On the return of a subpœna, if a witness will not appear, and be examined, the party may take attachment against him; and if he appears, and deposes on the other side, his depositions may be suppressed on motion. Dolman v. Pritman, 3 Ch. Rep. 64; Anon., 2 Freem. 134.

The satisfaction formerly for the non-appearance of a witness was by action only, but now the courts of law grant attachment against him. Vailiant v. Dodomede, 2 Atk. 592. S. C., nom. Valiant v. Dodemead, Dick. 92.

Under a decree in a cause certain inquiries were directed. A witness having been served with a subpœna to attend before the master, declined to attend. An order was made ex parte, with costs, that he should appear within four days, or be committed to the queen's prison. Brook v. Biddall, 2 Eq. R. 637; 23 L. J., Ch. 696; 2 W. R. 443.

Contempt must be Clear.]—The court will not grant an attachment against a witness for not appearing to give evidence, unless a clear case of contempt is made out against him. Holme v. Smith, 1 Marsh. 410; 16 R. R. 558. S. C., nom. Horne v. Smith, 6 Taunt. 10; 16 R. R. 558.

The court will not grant an attachment against a witness for disobedience to a subpœna duces tecum, unless it appears clearly that the party absented himself, or withheld the documents in defiance and contempt of the court. Reg. v. Russell (Lord), 7 D. P. C. 693; 3 Jur. 604.

To warrant an attachment against a party for not attending pursuant to a subpœna, it must be made out to the satisfaction of the court that his non-attendance was the result of a contemptuous disregard of the process of the court, and that he was a material and necessary witness. Chapman v. Davis, 4 Scott (N.R.) 319; 1 D. (N.S.) 239; 3 Man. & G. 609; 11 L. J., C. P. 51.

The court refused to grant an attachment against a witness for disobedience of an order of the district prothonotary of the Court of Pleas at Lancaster, and of an arbitrator, which required the witness to produce before the latter in London a large number of books and documents belonging to a railway company in Lincolnshire, of which he was the secretary and solicitor, and which the directors (who were no parties to the reference) refused to allow him to bring. Crowther v. Appleby, 43 L. J., C. P. 7; L. R. 9 C. P. 23; 29 L. T. 580; 22 W. R. 265.

A master maltster, resident at a distance from his malthouse, placed his servant in charge of malt in process of manufacture, strictly enjoining him not to leave it at any time whatever. The servant having been subpœnaed as a witness:—Held, that the injunctions of the master afforded no sufficient excuse for disobeying the subpœna, although it was served upon him so short a time before the trial as to preclude the possibility of his communicating with his master. Gough or Goff v. Miller or Mills, 2 D. & L. 23; 13 L. J., Q. B. 227; 8 Jur. 758.

Due Calling.]—No attachment will be granted unless the affidavit states that the witness was duly called at the trial. Malcolm v. Ray, 3 Moore, 222. S. P., Jacobs, In re, 1 H. & W. 123; Rex v. Stretch, 3 D. P. C. 368; 3 A. & E. 503.

It is not indispensably necessary that, when a witness is called on his subpœna, the officer of the court should hold the writ in his hand; it is sufficient that the writ should be exhibited in court, and the officer call him three times. Rex v. Fenn, 3 D. P. C. 546; 1 H. & W. 200.

An affidavit that the witness was called three times in open court is sufficient, without alleging that he was called upon the subpœna. Dixon v. Lee, 3 D. P. C. 259; 1 C. M. & R. 645; 5 Tyr. 180.

—— Non-Attendance.] — Though a witness may not have been called in court on his subpœna, yet, if it clearly appears from the affidavits in support of the application for an attachment against him that he did not attend the trial, the court will make the rule for the attachment absolute. Gough or Goff v. Miller or Mills, 2 D. & L. 23; 13 L. J., Q. B. 227; 8 Jur. 758.

Excuses—Illness.]—It is a sufficient excuse that he was too ill to attend. Jacobs, In re, 1 H. & W. 123.

Illness is an excuse. Scholes v. Hilton, 10 M. & W. 15; 2 D. (N.S.) 229; 11 L. J., Ex. 332.

Witness, unable to travel, discharged of contempt. More v. Worcham, Cary, 99.

—— Impressment.]—Witness, served to testify, pressed for soldier, attachment is stayed. Humble v. Malbe, Cary, 41.

—— Failing to hear Call.] — Defendant attended at Guildhall in obedience to a subpœna duces tecum with which he was served on plaintiff's behalf, but owing to ill health it was deemed advisable for him to remain outside the court until he was called. He accordingly remained in waiting at Guildhall until told by his attorney that the record had been withdrawn. It appeared that during the absence from the court for a few minutes of defendant's attorney to fetch his counsel from an adjoining court, the cause was called on, and defendant called on his subpœna both within and without the court, but not hearing himself called he failed to answer, whereupon plaintiff's attorney withdrew the record on the alleged ground that defendant was a material witness, in whose absence it was not safe for plaintiff to go to trial, and a motion (on affidavits) for an attachment against defendant for contempt in not obeying the subpœna was now made:—Held, that there was no ground for the application, the defendant having failed to answer only because he did not hear himself called. Per Pollock, C.B. If plaintiff had suffered any damage through defendant's negligence he has a remedy by action. The court, in discharging the rule, refused to mould it so as to make defendant pay the costs of the day. Glendinning v. Thomas, 6 L. T. 251.

—— Irregular Service.]—Upon discharging a rule nisi for an attachment against a witness for disobedience to a subpœna, a copy of which had been tendered to him enclosed in an envelope, the court refused to allow the costs of shewing cause, though the witness swore that the original writ of subpœna was not shewn, or the nature of the document explained to him at the time of the alleged service, there appearing to have been some "approximation" to the offence imputed to the witness. Marshall v. York, Newcastle and Berwick Ry., 11 C. B. 398.

A rule for an attachment against a witness will be discharged with costs, if it is denied that the original was shewn at the time of service. Jacobs v. Hungate, 3 D. P. C. 456.

An affidavit, to ground a rule nisi for an attachment for not obeying a subpœna, must state that at the time of the service the original subpœna was shewn; and it is a sufficient answer to such rule that the affidavit does not so allege. Garden v. Cresswell, 2 M. & W. 319; 5 D. P. C. 461; M. & H. 44; 6 L. J., Ex. 84.

Upon a motion for an attachment against a witness for not attending pursuant to a subpœna, it appearing from the affidavits in answer that the witness's wife had neglected to deliver to her husband a notice which had been left with her, requiring his attendance in court on the following morning, and the witness swearing that he did not receive the notice, and did not wilfully disobey the process of the court, the rule was discharged, but without costs. Netherwood v. Wilkinson, 17 C. B. 226.

—— Leaving Court.]—A witness is liable to attachment, if, after a subpœna served on him, he attends in court, and, during the opening of the plaintiff's case, thinking he is not able to prove a particular fact, he leaves the court, and the plaintiff is nonsuited for want of his evidence. Malcolm v. Day, 3 Moore, 579; 21 R. R. 730.

The court refused an attachment against a witness, who being subpœnaed without particular notice when the cause would come on, in the course of his third's day's attendance left the court to attend to urgent business of his trade, although the cause was tried in his absence, and the plaintiff nonsuited, which his evidence would have prevented. Blandford v. De Tastet, 5 Taunt. 260; 1 Marsh. 42.

So, though the witness was induced to leave the court by the representation of the adverse attorney. Ib.

An attachment will not be granted against a witness, if he has a reasonable ground for believing that he will not be wanted. Rex v. Soloman, 1 D. P. C. 618.

—— Cause going off.]—But it is no excuse that he would have been in time, if a previous cause on the list had not unexpectedly gone off. Fenn, In re, 3 D. P. C. 546; 1 H. & W. 200.

Nor that another person had answered for him, and would have fetched him in a few minutes. Ib.

—— Leave.]—If an attorney of the party who has subpœnaed a witness gives him leave to be absent until a particular time, and, in the interim, the cause is called on in the absence of the witness, the latter is not liable to an attachment for a contempt. Farrah v. Keat, 6 D. P. C. 470; 1 W. W. & H. 43; 2 Jur. 136.

—— Materiality.]—Where it appears from the notes and information of the judge who tried a cause, that the attendance of a witness who has been subpœnaed would be wholly immaterial to the event, no attachment for contempt in not attending will be granted. Dicas v. Lawson, 1 C. M. & R. 934; 3 D. P. C. 427; 5 Tyr. 235; 4 L. J., Ex. 80.

In order to ground a motion for an attachment for disobedience to a subpœna, the affidavit must state that the party was a material witness. Tinley v. Porter, 2 M. & W. 822; 5 D. P. C. 744; 6 L. J., Ex. 233. S. P., Taylor v. Willans, 4 M. & P. 59; and Chapman v. Davis, 1 D. (N.S.) 239: 4 Scott (N.R.) 319; 3 Man. & G. 609; 11 L. J., C. P. 51.

—— Postponement.]—A subpœna duces tecum required a defendant's attorney to appear on a particular day, but did not command him to appear from day to day, after that day. The cause was postponed at the instance of the defendant, and the attorney did not appear on the day when the cause was called up. The court refused an attachment for disobedience to the subpœna. Vaughton v. Brine, 9 D. P. C. 179; 1 W. P. C. 41; 4 Jur. 1061.

Time for Motion.]—A motion for an attachment against a person subpœnaed as a witness, for not attending at a trial, must be made within the term succeeding the trial. Thorpe v. Gisbourne, 11 Moore, 55.

A motion for an attachment for not obeying a subpœna should be made at the earliest possible opportunity after the contempt has occurred. Rex v. Stretch, 4 D. P. C. 30; 5 N. & M. 178; 1 H. & W. 322; 3 A. & E. 503.

b. Action.

When it Lies.]—No action lies against a witness for non-attendance, unless the cause was called on and the jury sworn. Bland v. Swafford, Peake, 60.

In a declaration an averment that the appearance of the defendant was material and necessary at the trial is equivalent to an averment that the plaintiff had a good cause of action. Davis v. Lovell, 4 M. & W. 679; 1 H. & H. 451; 7 D. P. C. 178; 8 L. J., Ex. 152; 3 Jur. 225.

An action will lie for disobedience to a subpœna served after the first day of the assizes, and commanding the witness to attend on that day, and so from day to day until the cause is tried, provided the trial takes place within a reasonable time after service of the subpœna. Ib.

It is not necessary to aver that the absence of the defendant as a witness was the sole cause of the plaintiff failing in his action. That fact is important only with regard to the amount of damages to be recovered in an action against such witness. Ib.

In an action for not obeying a subpœna, it is primâ facie sufficient to allege that the defendant was a material witness, and that his absence caused the plaintiff to be nonsuited, without averring that the plaintiff had originally a good cause of action. Masterman v. Judson, 8 Bing. 224; 1 M. & Scott, 367; 1 L. J., C. P. 86.

In an action for not appearing as a witness, the declaration need not aver, in express terms, that the subpœna was served within a reasonable time; the usual averment that the defendant could and might have appeared, and had no reasonable cause for omitting to do so is sufficient. Maunsell v. Ainsworth, 8 D. P. C. 869; 1 H. & W. 5.

The action will lie if the witness's evidence was material upon any one of the issues, even though the plaintiff had not a good cause of action. Cowling v. Coxe, 6 D. & L. 399; 6 C. B. 703; 18 L. J., C. P. 100; 13 Jur. 101.

—— Cause of Withdrawal of Record.]—An action will lie against a witness for non-attendance in pursuance of a subpœna, although the plaintiff was not nonsuited but withdrew his record in consequence of the absence of the witness. Mullett v. Hunt, 1 C. & M. 752; 3 Tyr. 875; 2 L. J., Ex. 287.

A declaration alleged, that the subpœna was made known and shewn to the defendant. The evidence was, that the subpœna was made known, and conduct-money was taken by the witness, but the original subpœna was not shewn:—Held, that it was not necessary for the purposes of such action that the original subpœna should have been shewn (unless, perhaps, where the party demanded to see it), and that the part of the allegation as to shewing the subpœna might be rejected. Ib.

In an action against a party for not appearing to give evidence in obedience to a subpœna ad testificandum, it is not necessary to shew that the defendant was called on his subpœna by the officer of the court, if it is shewn by other satisfactory evidence that he was not present at the proper time and place when he was required to give evidence; or even that he was absent when the cause was called on for trial, under such circumstances that he could not have been forthcoming when required to give evidence, and in such case it is not necessary that the jury should have been sworn and the plaintiff nonsuited; it is sufficient if he withdrew the record, being unable safely to go to trial in the absence of the witness. Lamont v. Crook, 6 M. & W. 615; 8 D. P. C. 737; 9 L. J., Ex. 253; 4 Jur. 489.

A declaration stating that the plaintiff was about to institute a suit in the Divorce Court for a dissolution of his marriage on the ground of his wife's insanity at the time of the marriage, and that the defendant was a surgeon and apothecary, alleged a contract on his part to attend as a witness and give testimony at the trial. Breach, that he did not appear, by reason whereof the plaintiff was bound to withdraw the record, there being no allegation that the plaintiff had a good cause of action. Verdict for the plaintiff, damages 50*l*. On a rule to enter a nonsuit, or to reduce the damages to 1*s*.:—Held, that on the facts there was evidence of the contract alleged; that the action was well brought; and that the plaintiff was entitled to substantial damages. Yeatman v. Dempsey, 7 C. B. (N.S.) 628; 29 L. J., C. P. 177; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 778; 1 L. T. 402; 8 W. R. 219. Affirmed 9 C. B. (N.S.) 881; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 1245; 9 W. R. 743—Ex. Ch.

What Payment.]—If a witness has received an adequate sum from one party for his expenses, on being subpœnaed, and he consents to accept a shilling for his expenses with the subpœna, when served by the opposite party, he will still be liable to an action by the latter, if he does not attend pursuant to the writ. Bittley v. M'Leod, 3 Bing. (N.C.) 405; 4 Scott, 131; 5 D. P. C. 481; 3 Hodges, 44; 1 Jur. 22.

Contesting Ground of Action.]—A declaration in an action against a witness for disobedience of a subpœna ad testificandum stated that the plaintiff had a good cause of action in the suit in which the subpœna was issued, and that although the testimony of the defendant was material evidence for the plaintiff, he did not attend the trial, whereby the plaintiff was compelled to withdraw the record, and became liable to pay the defendant in that suit the costs of the day, and also to pay his own costs. The defendant having pleaded not guilty, leave and licence, and that the plaintiff could have proceeded to the trial without the testimony of the defendant:—Held, that, the plaintiff having put in the record in the previous action, the defendant could not, on these pleadings, refer to it, and contend that it contained no ground of action, a good cause of action being conclusively admitted by the pleadings, and that the defendant was liable to pay the whole of the costs. Needham v. Fraser, 3 D. & L. 190; 1 C. B. 815; 14 L. J., C. P. 256; 9 Jur. 734.

Damages.]—In an action against a witness for not obeying a subpœna, proof of actual damage having been sustained by the plaintiff, through the witness's breach of duty, is essential, as the law will not imply a loss from mere disobedience to a subpœna. Cowling v. Coxe, 6 D. & L. 399; 6 C. B. 703; 18 L. J., C. P. 100; 13 Jur. 101.

c. Assessment of Recompense by Court.

The further recompense given by 5 Eliz. c. 9, s. 12, against a witness for non-attendance, must be assessed by the court out of which the process issues, and not by the jury or judge at nisi prius. Pearson v. Iles, 2 Dougl. 556.

9. Protection from Arrest.

Statute.]—55 & 56 Vict. c. 64 protects Witnesses giving Evidence before any Royal Commission, or any Committee of either House of Parliament, or on other Public Inquiries.

Before Magistrate.]—A witness attending before a police magistrate in a pending case is privileged from arrest. Montague v. Harrison, 3 C. B. (N.S.) 292; 27 L. J., C. P. 24; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 29; 6 W. R. 43.

A. had charged persons with felony, and the magistrate, on their being brought before him, remanded them to a future day. A. was attending as prosecutor and witness, but without any summons or crown-office subpœna to compel his attendance. On leaving the court he was arrested under a ca. sa.:—Held, that he was entitled to his discharge. Ib.

Jurisdiction of Court to give Protection.]—The court out of which the nisi prius record is sent has jurisdiction to punish a contempt committed by the arrest of a witness in the cause during the continuance of his privilege eundo, morando, et redeundo. Kimpton v. L. & N. W. Ry., 9 Ex. 766; 2 C. L. R. 1026; 23 L. J., Ex. 232; 2 W. R. 430.

A person subpœnaed to attend as a witness on the trial of an action is privileged from arrest under a decree for debt, and will be discharged from custody on motion to the court in which the action is pending, and the attorney causing her to be arrested may be compelled to pay the costs of the motion. Hayes v. Bagwell, 18 W. R. 470.

Commitment for Non-Payment of Rates.]—Commitment for non-payment of rates where no distress is recoverable is a civil and not a punitive process, and, therefore, a witness in an action against whom an order for such a commitment has been made is privileged from arrest whilst returning from the court in which he has given evidence. Hobern v. Fowler, 62 L. J., Q. B. 49; 5 R. 33.

VI. EXAMINATION OF WITNESSES.

1. Competency.

a. Want of Reason or Religion.

Religion.]—A person who has no notion of eternity, or of a future state of rewards and punishments, cannot be examined as a witness. Rex v. White, 1 Leach, C. C. 430.

The proper question to be asked a witness, in order to ground an objection to his competency, is not whether he believes in Jesus Christ or the Holy Gospels, but whether he believes in God and a future state. Rex v. Taylor, Peake, 11.

A plaintiff in a cause was about to be sworn, when she was objected to as incompetent, on the ground of want of religious belief. The judge then swore her on the voir dire, and, in answer to questions by the defendant's counsel, she said that she did not believe in a God, and that she did not believe in the obligation of an oath any more than in that of her word, nor did she believe in a future state of rewards and punishments, but that she was morally bound by the solemn declaration she had taken, to speak the truth:—Held, that the witness was properly examined on the voir dire, and rejected as incompetent. Maden v. Catanach, 7 H. & N. 360; 31 L. J., Ex. 118; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 1107; 5 L. T. 288; 10 W. R. 112.

A Chinese, sworn according to a form which is obligatory upon his conscience, is a good witness in a court of law. Reg. v. Entrehman, Car. & M. 248.

So a negro, who was called as a witness, stated, before he was sworn, that he was a Christian and had been baptised:—Held, that he ought to be sworn, and that no further question could be asked him before he was so. Reg. v. Serva, 2 Car. & K. 53.

As to the admission of evidence of heathens, &c. Omychund v. Barker, 1 Atk. 21; 2 Eq. Abr. 397; Willis's Rep. 538.

Infants.]—Before a child is examined as a witness, the judge must be satisfied that the child feels the binding obligation of an oath from a general course of religious education; and the effect of the oath on the conscience of the child should arise from religious feelings of a permanent nature, and not from instruction recently communicated for the purposes of a trial. Rex v. Williams, 7 Car. & P. 320.

Though a witness be an infant, his tender years will not invalidate his evidence. Smith v. French, 2 Atk. 245.

Lunatics.]—If a lunatic is tendered as a witness, it is for the judge to examine whether the lunatic is of competent understanding to give rational evidence, and is aware of the nature and obligation of an oath. If the judge is satisfied on these points, he should admit the lunatic as a witness. Reg. v. Hill, 2 Den. C. C. 254; T. & M. 512; 20 L. J., M. C. 222; 15 Jur. 470; 5 Cox, C. C. 259.

Before being sworn the lunatic may be examined, and witnesses may be called as to his competency. Ib.

If he is admitted it is for the jury to judge whether his evidence is tainted by his insanity, and to decide upon the degree of credit to be attached to it. Ib.

Before the evidence of a lunatic, subject to insane hallucinations, can be received, there must be an inquiry as to his mental condition. Spittle v. Walton, 40 L. J., Ch. 368; L. R. 11 Eq. 420; 24 L. T. 18: 19 W. R. 405.

b. Parties.

Under 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, a party to a suit may be called as a witness by his adversary. Boyle v. Wiseman, 10 Ex. 647; 3 C. L. R. 482; 24 L. J., Ex. 160; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 115; 3 W. R. 206.

Conducting their own Cases.]—There is no rule of law against a party addressing the jury and being examined as a witness in his own behalf, since 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99; though the court strongly disapproves of such a practice. Cobbett v. Hudson, 1 El. & Bl. 11; 22 L. J., Q. B. 11; 17 Jur. 488; 1 W. R. 54.

Defendant in Criminal and Fiscal Proceedings.]—An information before justices under 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 32, s. 23, for using an engine for the purpose of taking game without the authority of a certificate, is a criminal proceeding in which the party is charged with the commission of an offence punishable on summary conviction, within 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, s. 3, and therefore the party charged is not competent or compellable to give evidence for or against himself. Cattell v. Ireson, El. Bl. & El. 91; 27 L. J., M. C. 167; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 560; 6 W. R. 469.

Upon a proceeding under 9 Geo. 4, c. 61, s. 21, against an ale-house keeper for unlawfully and knowingly permitting divers persons of bad character to assemble and meet together in his house and premises against the tenure of his license, such ale-house keeper is not a competent witness, and cannot give evidence in his own behalf. Parker v. Green, 2 B. & S. 299; 31 L. J., M. C. 133; 6 L. T. 46; 9 Cox, C. C. 169.

On the trial of an information for penalties incurred under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 35 and 16 & 17 Vict. c. 34, against an annuitant for refusing to allow the tenants of the premises on which the annuity was charged, the property-tax, to be deducted out of the rents, he could not be called as a witness, before 28 & 29 Vict. c. 104. Reg. v. Sheil, 1 F. & F. 204.

See further Criminal Law.

c. Husband and Wife.

Since 16 & 17 Vict. c. 83, s. 1, a wife is competent and compellable to give evidence against the husband in an action in which he is a party. Selfe v. Isaacson, 1 F. & F. 194.

In all cases where husband and wife are admissible witnesses against each other, they are also admissible for each other. Rex v. Sergeant, R. & M. 352.

Husband neglecting to Maintain Wife.]—But a wife is not a competent witness against her husband, charged under the Vagrant Act, 5 Geo. 4, c. 83, s. 3, with neglecting to maintain her, whereby she became chargeable to the parish. Reeve v. Wood, 5 B. & S. 364; 34 L. J., M. C. 15; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 201; 11 L. T. 449; 13 W. R. 154.

After Termination of Marriage.]—Where a man and wife are divorced by act of parliament, the wife is not competent to prove a contract made by her husband previously to the divorce. Monroe v. Twistleton, Peake Ad. C. 219. But see 16 & 17 Vict. c. 83, s. 3.

The widow of a deceased person is a competent witness for the plaintiff, in an action against the executors of such person, on a promise made by him in his lifetime. Beveridge v. Minter, 1 Car. & P. 364.

But a widow cannot be asked to disclose conversations between herself and her husband. Doker v. Hasler, R. & M. 198.

Void Marriage and Cohabitation.]—Persons who cohabit as man and wife, after a marriage de facto, supposed by both to be a good marriage in law, may, after the marriage is found to be a nullity, give in evidence, in a court of justice, statements made by each other during the cohabitation. Wells v. Fletcher, 5 Car. & P. 12; S. C., nom. Wells v. Fisher, 1 M. & Rob. 99.

A kept mistress is not incompetent to give evidence for her protector, although she has, with his consent, passed by his name, and appeared in the world as his wife, as the objection only goes to her credit. Batthews v. Galindo, 4 Bing. 610; 1 M. & P. 565; 3 Car. & P. 238; 6 L. J. (O.S.), C. P. 138.

A man who has been married may be a witness to prove such marriage illegal. Standen v. Standen, Peake, 33.

See further HUSBAND AND WIFE.

d. Other Cases.

Convicts.]—A convict under sentence of death cannot be called as a witness. Reg. v. Webb, 11 Cox, C. C. 133.

Parish Matters.]—Under 3 & 4 Vict. c. 26, s. 1, any owner of lands within a parish is competent to give evidence on a prosecution against the parish for non-repair of a highway, though he is not a rated inhabitant, the lands being occupied by tenants who are rated for them. Reg. v. Doddington, 1 Q. B. 341; 10 L. J., Q B. 166.

An overseer, since 3 & 4 Vict. c. 26, is a competent witness for or against his parish. Reg. v. Vickery, 12 Q. B. 478; 17 L. J., M. C. 129; 15 Jur. 581.

To prove Adultery.]—The adultery of a wife living apart from her husband destroys her implied agency to bind him for necessaries, and the wife is an admissible witness to prove the adultery. Cooper v. Lloyd, 6 C. B. (N.S.) 519.

The 32 & 33 Vict. c. 68, s. 3, did not render inadmissible the evidence of a witness that he or she has committed adultery. Hebblethwaite v. Hebblethwaite, 39 L. J., Mat. 15; L. R. 2 P. 29; 21 L. T. 732.

A witness may claim the protection of the statute or give the evidence, but a party to the suit cannot object to its admission. Ib.

Withdrawing Evidence.]—The evidence of an incompetent witness may be withdrawn from the jury upon the incompetency appearing during his examination in chief, although he has been examined previously on the voir dire, and pronounced to be competent. Reg. v. Whitehead, 35 L. J., M. C. 186; L. R. 1 C. C. 33; 14 L. T. 489; 14 W. R. 677.

Examination on Voir Dire.]—A party cannot examine his own witness upon a voir dire. Plummer v. May, 1 Ves. 426.

2. SUFFICIENCY.

Against Deceased Persons.]—The court is not prone to act on evidence of conversation with a deceased person, and will never give a person anything on his own uncorroborated statement against another after that other's death. Rogers v. Powell, 38 L. J., Ch. 648; 18 W. R. 282. Hartford v. Power, Ir. R. 3 Eq. 602. McGonnell v. Murray, Ir. R. 3 Eq. 460.

When a claim is made against the estate of a deceased person, the court will never act upon the uncorroborated evidence of the claimant. Morley v. Finney, 18 W. R. 490.

The evidence of a party to the suit in his own favour, although uncorroborated, is admissible, and may influence the court as a juryman. Browne v. Collins, 21 W. R. 222.

Evidence of a plaintiff on his own behalf as to a bargain with a man since dead, ought, in the absence of corroboration, to be disregarded. Hill v. Wilson, 42 L. J., Ch. 817; L. R. 8 Ch. 888; 29 L. T. 238; 21 W. R. 757.

The rule that a claim upon the estate of a deceased person cannot be maintained upon the unsupported testimony of the claimant, applies to cases of alleged debt as well as to cases of alleged gift. Finch, In re, Finch v. Finch, or Wynne-Finch, In re, Wynne-Finch v. Wynne-Finch, 23 Ch. D. 267; 48 L. T. 129; 31 W. R. 526—C. A. S. P., Whittaker, In re, Whittaker v. Whittaker, 51 L. J., Ch. 737; 21 Ch. D. 657; 46 L. T. 802; 30 W. R. 787.

The evidence of a plaintiff on his own behalf as to an agreement with a man since dead ought, in the absence of corroboration, to be disregarded. Hope v. Cloncurry (Lord), Ir. R. 8 Eq. 554.

There is no rule of law that the uncorroborated evidence of a claimant against the estate of a dead man will be rejected, but it will be regarded with jealous suspicion. Garnett, In re, Gandy v. Macaulay, 31 Ch. D. 1—C. A.

There is no rule of law which precludes a claimant from recovering against the estate of a deceased person on his own testimony without corroboration; although the court will in general require such corroboration. Hodgson, In re, Beckett v. Ramsdale, 55 L. J., Ch. 241; 31 Ch. D. 177; 54 L. T. 222; 34 W. R. 127—C. A.

A claim against the assets of a deceased person cannot be allowed upon the uncorroborated evidence of the claimant. This rule is of universal application, and does not depend on the character or position of the claimant. Harnett, In re, Leahy v. O'Grady, 17 L. R., Ir. 543.

The court will not act upon the unsupported testimony of a claimant upon the estate of a deceased person. Grant v. Grant, 34 Beav. 623.

The court will not act on the unsupported testimony of a person in his own favour. Down v. Ellis, 35 Beav. 578.

The court will not in any case allow, out of the assets of a deceased person, the amount of a claim which is sustained only by the uncorroborated testimony of the claimant. Hartford v. Power, Ir. R. 3 Eq. 602.

Impeaching Deed.]—The evidence of a witness, impeaching the instrument he has attested, as a witness to a will, denying the sanity of the devisor, &c., is admissible, but to be received with the most anxious jealousy. Howard v. Braithwaite, 1 Ves. & B. 202.

Ex Post Facto Evidence.]—The danger of receiving the evidence of parties themselves, ex post facto, as to their original intentions. Jackson, Ex parte, Warwick, In re, Mont. & C. 271; 3 Deac. 651; 8 L. J., Bk. 36.

Perjury.]—Evidence of persons coming to swear that they, in former instance, perjured themselves, is not to be received. Lord, Ex parte, 2 Ves. 26. See further, CRIMINAL LAW.

Accomplices.]—A person employed by government to mix with conspirators and pretend to aid their designs for the purpose of betraying them, does not require corroboration as an accomplice. Reg. v. Mullens, 3 Cox. C. C. 526.

If there is strong evidence against one who at law is put into the simul cum, that he is particeps criminis, the court will exclude him from being a witness. Cotton v. Lottrell, 1 Atk. 452. See further, CRIMINAL LAW.

Against Wrong-doer.]—In odium spoliatoris, the oath of the injured party sufficient to charge the wrongdoer. Childrens v. Saxby, 1 Vern. 207.

Oath of Single Witness — To prove Contempt.]—One witness sufficient to prove a contempt. Sands v. Knighton, Toth. 41.

Upon an ordinary contempt, a commission was had by the plaintiff, who proved the contempt positively by one witness. The defendant alleged the process was by mistake served on a wrong person, and prayed a commission to examine into it, and it was granted. Hammond v. Shelley, 2 Ch. Ca. 100.

Though contemptuous words were spoken of a subpœna, and the person serving is severely beaten, yet, as these facts were proved by the oath of a single person only, the court would not, in the first instance, order the person to stand committed, but made a rule upon him to shew cause why he should not stand committed. Anon., 3 Atk. 219.

—— To prove Admission.]—Little reliance is to be placed on the unsupported testimony of one witness of an oral admission by the defendant of the plaintiff's case. Greenslade v. Dare, 20 Beav. 284.

—— To prove Gift.]—Unsupported evidence of donee of a parol gift, together with delivery of a part, not sufficient evidence of a gift of the whole. Semble, on a question of a gift, subsequent statement of donor admissible. Forrest v. Forrest, 5 N. R. 299.

—— To prove Indemnity.]—On an application for the settlement of a fund belonging to a married woman, her evidence as to the indemnity of the parties is not by itself sufficient. Anon., 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1084.

—— Of Wife as to Settlement.]—Where a husband is residing permanently abroad, semble, the court will act upon an affidavit of no settlement by the wife alone. Wilkinson v. Schneider, 39 L. J., Ch. 410; L. R. 9 Eq. 423.

—— Inconsistent Conduct.]—Where any question of fact depends upon the testimony of a single witness, and any inconsistency is apparent between such testimony and his previous conduct, the court will look rather to the acts done by him than to the statements when called as a witness. Barr, In re, 4 Kay & J. 219; 6 W. R. 424.

When a witness comes forward after a considerable lapse of time to impeach the character of a transaction by the allegation of fresh circumstances, which are either unsupported or contradicted by other evidence, the conduct of the witness in the interval will be regarded as affecting the value of his testimony. Rowley v. Rowley, 1 Kay, 242; 2 Eq. R. 241; 23 L. J., Ch. 275; 18 Jur. 306.

—— Against Receipt.]—A man who has given a written receipt for money paid to him cannot avoid the effect of the written instrument by his own unsupported affidavit that the money was not actually paid him; but must produce independent evidence to that effect. Farrow's Estate, In re, 22 Beav. 400.

A., in January, 1853, gave to B. his I. O. U. for 65*l*. After A.'s death, B. having claimed the amount, his receipt for the amount was produced. B. swore positively that the amount had never been produced. The court held, that it could not act on his unsupported testimony against the written evidence. Ib.

—— Against Oath.]—The court will not act upon the uncorroborated testimony of one witness against a party as to a fact expressly denied by him upon his oath. Gray v. Haig, 20 Beav. 219.

No decree for a plaintiff in equity on the evidence only of one witness in contradiction to defendant's positive answer. Glynn v. Bank of England, 2 Ves. 38.

Single witness against defendant's answer on oath not sufficient for decree. Speed v. Martin, 2 Com. 587.

Where there is a single witness against the defendant's oath, this is not sufficient evidence for a decree, nor will the court direct a trial at law. Christ's College, Cambridge v. Widdrington, 2 Vern. 283.

One witness against the defendant's answer not sufficient to ground a decree. Kingdome v. Boakes, Pre. Ch. 19.

There being but one witness against what was sworn in the defendant's answer, the plaintiff can have no decree. Alam v. Jourdan, 1 Vern. 161.

Plaintiff cannot have a decree on the testimony of one witness contradicted by the answer of one defendant. Mortimer v. Orchard, 2 Ves. J. 243.

A single witness cannot prevail against a positive denial by the answer. Cranstown (Lord) v. Johnston, 3 Ves. 171; 3 R. R. 80.

Evidence of single witness not sufficient against answer of defendant. Evans v. Bicknell, 6 Ves. 174; 5 R. R. 245.

Single witness not corroborated, not sufficient against positive denial by the answer. Cooke v. Clayworth, 18 Ves. 12; 11 R. R. 137.

Parol evidence of one witness, unsupported by other evidence, not sufficient to found a decree. Dawson v. Massey, 1 Ball & B. 234.

Where the bill is supported by only one witness, and the facts affirmed in the answer are not less probable than those affirmed by the witness, no decree will be made. Warren v. Taylor, C. P. Cooper, 174.

A decree, whereby the defendant was concluded by the plaintiff's own oath, reversed. Plampin v. Betts, 1 Vern. 272.

Lease not decreed upon expenditure in repairs and improvements under an alleged agreement proved by one witness; the answer containing a positive denial of the agreement was also confirmed by circumstances. Pilling v. Armitage, 12 Ves. 78; 8 R. R. 295.

Specific execution of a parol agreement for a lease for three lives proved by one witness, refused, the answer admitting an agreement for one life only, supported by the testimony of one witness, and not inconsistent with the evidence of part performance by plaintiff. Lindsay v. Lynch, 2 Sch. & Lef. 1; 9 R. R. 54.

Though one witness not sufficient against a distinct denial by answer, the latter must be precise and positive. Arnot v. Biscoe, 1 Ves. 95.

The rule that a decree cannot be made, where there is but one witness, applies only where the answer of the defendant is equally strong in opposition to such evidence. Walton v. Hobbs, 2 Atk. 19.

—— When held sufficient.]—Effect given to the testimony of a single witness in support of a positive statement contained in the bill and against the answer. Watts v. Hyde, 17 L. J., Ch. 409; 12 Jur. 661.

There being but one witness against answer, court directed an issue. Pemby v. Mathew, Dick. 550; 1 Bro. C. C. 52.

The evidence of one witness, corroborated by a letter of the defendant, is sufficient to contradict the defendant's answer. Keys v. Williams, 3 Y. & Coll. 55; 7 L. J., Ex. Eq. 59.

The testimony of one witness, though uncorroborated by circumstances, is a sufficient ground for a decree, if the answer deny the fact upon belief only, although the answer be positive, and there are no other means of contradicting the fact. Hughes v. Garner, 2 Y. & Coll. 328.

Decree varied in the House of Lords by directing an issue. Id. 731.

Corroborating Circumstances.]—The evidence of a single witness cannot be received against the answer of a defendant, unless there are circumstances which go to corroborate the witness as against the answer. Jordan v. Money, 5 H. L. Cas. 185. Reversing S. C., nom. Money v. Jordan, 21 L. J., Ch. 893.

If a particular allegation is supported by only one witness, and is positively denied by the answer, and there is nothing to shew that the one is to be credited more than the other, the claim founded upon that allegation cannot be enforced against the defendant. For this purpose the answer must be looked at with all the concomitant circumstances which may tend to depreciate it, and the value of the particular denial may be legitimately tested by a comparison of the answer with the evidence on other points. Ib.

Specific performance of a parol agreement to grant a lease, decreed on the testimony of one witness, confirmed by circumstances, against the denial in the answer, after part performance by delivery of possession. Morphett v. Jones, 1 Swanst. 172; 1 Wils. 100; 18 R. R. 48.

Where the evidence of a single witness against a negative in defendant's answer is corroborated by a great number of circumstances, it is sufficient to support an equity. Janson v. Rany, 2 Atk. 140.

One witness with corroborating circumstances admitted against an answer. Biddulph v. St. John, 2 Sch. & Lef. 532.

Decree made upon evidence of single witness against positive contradiction of the answer, containing circumstances giving greater credit to the depositions, the defendant declining an issue, otherwise it would not be made thereon. East India Co. v. Donald, 9 Ves. 275; 1 Smith, 213.

A single witness is not sufficient against the answer of defendant, except under special circumstances. Cuth v. Jackson, 6 Ves. 40.

A single witness cannot prevail against the answer unless confirmed by circumstances. Savage v. Brocksopp, 18 Ves. 336.

Answer read as evidence contrasted with the other evidence not for the purpose of discrediting it. Ib.

3. Swearing.

Statute.]—The Oaths Act, 1888, amends and consolidates the enactments relating to the administration of oaths.

Form of Oath.]—A witness may be sworn in the form which he expressly or impliedly declares to be binding on his conscience. Omichund v. Barker, Willes, 538; 1 Atk. 21.

Upon the principles of the common law, no particular form of oath is essential to be taken by a witness, so that it binds his conscience. Atcheson v. Everitt, Cowp. 389.

A witness who declines swearing on the New Testament, although he professes Christianity, but states himself to be a methodist, may be allowed to swear on the Old Testament, if he considers that mode of swearing as binding on his conscience. Edmonds v. Rowe, R. & M. 77.

If a witness, without making any objection, takes the oath in the usual form, he may be afterwards asked whether he thinks such oath binding on his conscience; but it is improper to ask him if he considers any other form of oath more binding, and such a question cannot be asked. Queen's Case, 2 Br. & B. 284; 22 R. R. 662.

Where witnesses were sworn upon a book that did not contain the gospels, the court suppressed the depositions, as being a nullity. Doherty v. Doherty, 8 Ir. Eq. R. 379.

—— Jewish.]—A Jew ordered to be sworn to his answer on the Pentateuch, and the plaintiff's clerk to be present. Anon., 1 Vern. 263.

Where a witness was sworn on the gospels at the trial, and it was afterwards discovered that he was a Jew, and had been sworn in a false name:—Held, that any objection as to his testimony was too late after verdict, and that the oath, as taken by the witness, was binding on him, as it would subject him to the penalties of perjury if he had sworn falsely. Sells v. Hoare, 7 Moore, 36; 3 Br. & B. 232.

Where a witness is sworn on the New Testament, who admits that he was born a Jew, but the tenets of which religion he has never formally abjured, and was never baptised or admitted into the Christian church, he is an admissible witness, though the oath has been so taken by him, on his asserting that he then considered himself as a member of the established religion, and bound by its precepts. Rex v. Gillham, 1 Esp. 285; 6 Term Rep. 265.

—— Mahometan.]—See Rex v. Morgan, 1 Leach, C. C. 54.

—— Chinese.]—Reg. v. Entrehman, Car. & M. 248.

—— Statutory.]—The concluding paragraph in the form of oath of abjuration imposed by 6 Geo. 3, c. 53, "And I do make this recognition, acknowledgment, abjuration, renunciation, and promise heartily, willingly, and truly upon the true faith of a Christian," was an essential portion of the substance of the oath, and no part of it could be omitted or altered. Salomons v. Miller 8 Ex. 778; 22 L. J., Ex. 169; 17 Jur. 463; 1 W. R. 360—Ex. Ch.

By a private act, no person appointed to act as tithe valuer shall be capable of acting until he shall have taken and subscribed an oath in the words following: "I, A. B., do swear that I will faithfully execute, &c. So help me God." The oath had been subscribed with the omission of the words "So help me God":—Held, that the oath had nevertheless been properly administered according to the statute, for the words omitted were no part of the oath, but only an indication of the manner of administering it. Lancaster and Carlisle Ry. v. Heaton, 8 El. & Bl. 952; 27 L. J., Q. B. 195; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 707.

An affirmation taken under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 82, stated that the affirmant was a member of a religious sect called Separatists. It did not follow in terms the form of affirmation required by the statute, but it purported to be supplemental to another affirmation which did, and to have been made before an officer authorised to administer it:—Held, that it must be assumed to have been properly made. Wolsely v. Worthington, 13 Ir. Ch. R. 341.

Obligation of Oath.]—A witness who does not believe in the sanctions of religion will not be bound by an oath, and his evidence if given on oath may be rejected. Maden v. Catanach, 7 H. & N. 360; 31 L. J., Ex. 118; 5 L. T. 288; 10 W. R. 112.

Affirmation.]—Where a witness is desirous of making an affirmation instead of taking an oath, it is the duty of the judge presiding at the trial to himself examine the witness, and ascertain that he objects to being sworn on the ground either that he has no religious belief, or that the taking of an oath is contrary to his religious belief. A witness who states that he has a religious belief cannot be allowed to affirm. Reg. v. Moore, 61 L. J., M. C. 80; 66 L. T. 125; 40 W. R. 304; 17 Cox, C. C. 458; 56 J. P. 345—C. C. R.

And see Nash v. Ali Khan, 8 Times Rep. 444.

—— Under earlier Statutes.]—A person, formerly a Quaker, who had seceded from that sect on some points of doctrine, retaining their opinions on the unlawfulness of swearing, but refusing to affirm under the forms given in 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 49, and 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 82, was not admissible as a witness in criminal cases upon making the affirmation according to 9 Geo. 4, c. 32. Reg. v. Doran, 2 M. C. C. 37; 2 Lewin, C. C. 27.

Time for Objection.]—Upon a criminal trial an objection to the admissibility of the evidence of a witness permitted to affirm without having been so questioned, is not taken too late although taken after verdict. Reg. v. Moore, supra. And see Sells v. Hoare, supra.

Swearing Juror.]—On the trial of an action on a bill of exchange, where the cause was undefended, one of the jury said that the stamp was forged, and called the attention of the judge to the fact:—Held, that the juryman must be sworn as a witness to give evidence to his brother jurors, before they can act upon his opinion, and on his declining to be sworn as a witness, the judge told the jury that they must find for the plaintiff. Manley v. Shaw, Car. & M. 361.

Refusing to be Sworn.]—An accounting party subpœnaed for examination cannot refuse to be sworn because he has not received sufficient notice of the points on which he is to be examined, but after being sworn he may object to answer for this reason. Meyrick v. James, 46 L. J., Ch. 38.

A person having attended under a subpœna as a witness, but refusing to be sworn, ordered to attend to be examined or stand committed. Hennegal v. Evance, 12 Ves. 201.

After decree an affidavit was made by A. B., one of the defendants to the suit. A summons was taken out for A. B. to attend at chambers, where the accounts were being taken for cross-examination. A. B. attended, but was not cross-examined. Notice was given for his attendance before the examiner, but he was not served with a writ of subpœna, nor were any directions or order given by the judge or his chief clerk for the attendance of the witness before the examiner. A. B. having refused to be sworn:—Held, that after decree he was entitled to a writ of subpœna before appearing before the examiner for cross-examination, but that no special directions by the judge or chief clerk were necessary for transferring the examination from chambers to before the examiner. Stebbing v. Atlee, 26 L. J., Ch. 265; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1161; 5 W. R. 109.

A party interested, being summoned to appear as a witness, is not justified in refusing to be sworn before the chief clerk, on the ground that he will not be able to have the assistance of counsel before the chief clerk, and ought therefore to be examined before the judge or the examiner. The proper course would be, after he has been sworn, to apply to the chief clerk for such purpose, and afterwards by way of appeal to the court. Electric Telegraph Co. of Ireland, In re, Bunn, Ex parte, 24 Beav. 127; 26 L. J., Ch. 614.

A plaintiff cannot, before he has given notice to the defendant of his intention to proceed, either by filing replication or moving for a decree, summon a witness before an examiner of the court to obtain evidence for the hearing. Rendle v. Metropolitan Provincial Bank, 36 L. J., Ch. 789; 16 L. T. 764; 15 W. R. 1068.

A plaintiff summoned a witness to appear before an examiner, but the witness, at the request of the defendants, objected to be sworn. The plaintiff afterwards obtained an order of course to set down that objection for argument as the demurrer of the witness, and on the same day filed a replication:—Held, that he had been guilty of an irregularity, and must pay the costs of the demurrer. Ib.

Evidence of Counsel.]—See Kempshall v. Holland, 14 R. 336—C. A.; and Hickman v. Berens, 64 L. J., Ch. 785; [1895] 2 Ch. 638; 12 R. 602; 73 L. T. 323—C. A.

4. EXAMINATION.

Objecting to Competency.]—It is not too late to object to the competency of a witness after he has been sworn in chief, but before he has been asked any questions on oath. Yardley v. Arnold, 10 M. & W. 141; 2 D. (N.S.) 311; Car. & M. 434; 6 Jur. 718; 11 L. J., Ex. 413.

An objection to the competency of a witness may be taken at any period of his examination, even though founded on facts elicited on cross-examination, and which were known from the beginning to the party taking the objection. Jacobs v. Layhourn, 11 M. & W. 685; 1 D. & L. 352; 12 L. J., Ex. 427; 7 Jur. 562.

The judge at nisi prius is a judge of fact as well as of law on a question of the competency of a witness arising on the voir dire; but his opinion on the facts is subject to review by the court, which will uphold his opinion where the evidence of disqualification is ambiguous, and the judge has admitted the witness. Doe d. Norton v. Webster, 12 A. & E. 442; 4 P. & D. 270; 9 L. J., Q. B. 373.

Two Defendants.] — Where an action was brought against two for negligence, who appeared by different attorneys, and were defended by different counsel:—Held, that one counsel only could be allowed to examine their joint witnesses in chief. King v. Williamson, 3 Stark. 162.

Application by Plaintiff to call Defendant after close of Defendant's Case.] — After a defendant's case was closed, the plaintiff's counsel asked leave to call as a witness one of the defendants who had not (as plaintiff's counsel assumed that he would) been called to support his own case. Counsel admitted that he had not been misled by anything falling from the other side:—Leave refused, as counsel had, in the exercise of his judgment, relied on the defendant being called in his own behalf; the court thinking that to grant the application would be making a precedent which might lead to laxity in the conduct of a plaintiff's case. Barker v. Furlong, [1891] 2 Ch. 172; 64 L. T. 411; 39 W. R. 621.

After Decree.]—Motion for leave to examine a witness after decree—refused with costs; such a special application not being justified by the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86. Howard v. Sewell, 1 W. R. 124.

After Notice of Motion for Decree.] — After notice of motion for a decree, witnesses in chief cannot be examined. Rheden v. Wesley, 28 L. J., Ch. 797.

After Nonsuit.]—After a plaintiff has submitted to be nonsuited, the defendant's counsel cannot put further questions to any witness. Jones v. Hall, 2 Stark. 505.

Where Judge prepared to decide Issue.]—If a judge of first instance is prepared to decide in favour of a defendant or respondent without hearing his evidence, his counsel is entitled to insist that the evidence shall be heard before the decision is given. Jacobson, Ex parte, Pincoffs, In re, 21 Ch. D. 312; 48 L. T. 197; 31 W. R. 554.

If, however, the counsel does not exercise that right, but accepts the decision in his favour on his opponent's evidence, the Court of Appeal has still power to allow the evidence to be taken before reversing the decision. Ib.

Recalling.]—A judge has a discretion whether or not a witness shall be recalled after the party who called him has closed his case. Adams v. Bankart, 1 C. M. & R. 681; 5 Tyr. 425; 1 Gale, 48.

Permission to recall a witness is entirely within the discretion of the judge, and that discretion should be exercised with great caution. Shedden v. Att.-Gen., L. R. 1 H. L., Sc. 470; 22 L. T. 631.

A witness who had answered some of the interrogatories, but refused to answer the others, was ordered to answer those interrogatories within four days, or stand committed. Austin v. Prince, 1 Sim. 348.

Witness previously examined allowed to be recalled for further examination. Wood v. Scarth, 3 Eq. R. 485; 24 L. J., Ch. 392; 3 W. R. 305.

Refusal to Answer — When Allowable.]—In an inquiry before the chief clerk directed by an administration decree, any person able to give information relating to the assets may be summoned, and is bound to attend before a special examiner, and to answer all questions properly put to him by the receiver having the conduct of the decree; but the witness so summoned may decline to answer any questions tending to shew his liability in a pending action commenced by the receiver against him. Venables v. Schweitzer, 42 L. J., Ch. 389; L. R. 16 Eq. 76; 28 L. T. 462; 21 W. R. 505.

A party to a suit who is subpœnaed as a witness cannot object to be sworn and examined on the ground that the only relevant questions which could be put to him are such as would tend to incriminate himself; but the opposite party has a right to insist on his being sworn and examined, and he must, if he thinks fit, claim his privilege not to answer such questions. Boyle v. Wiseman, 10 Ex. 647; 3 C. L. R. 482; 24 L. J., Ex. 160; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 115; 3 W. R. 206.

—— Practice.]—If a person under examination in chambers refuse to give a sufficient answer, the proper course is to apply to the judge to examine him personally, which the judge can do; and then, if he refuse to answer, he may be at once committed. The practice of waiting until the examinant has put in four insufficient answers, and then applying for an order that he may stand committed, if feasible at all, would involve very considerable delay, as the insufficiency of the several examinations must be certified by the chief clerk, and his certificates do not become final until twelve days after he has signed them, under the orders 47 to 52 of the 16th October, 1850. An order for committal will not be made after a third insufficient examination. Hayward v. Hayward, or Price, 1 Kay (App.), xxxi.; 23 L. J., Ch. 549; 3 Eq. R. 436; 2 W. R. 332.

Answer tending to Criminate — Duty of Judge.]—Where a witness refuses to answer a question put to him on the ground that his answer might tend to criminate himself, his mere statement of his belief that his answer will have that effect is not enough to excuse him from answering, but the court must be satisfied from the circumstances of the case, and the nature of the evidence which the witness is called upon to give, that there is reasonable ground to apprehend danger to him from his being compelled to answer. But, if it is once made to appear that the witness is in danger, great latitude should be allowed to him in judging for himself of the effect of any particular question. Subject, however, to that reservation, the judge is bound to insist on the witness answering, unless he is satisfied that the answer will tend to place him in peril. Reg. v. Boyes (1 B. & S. 311) approved and followed. Reynolds, Ex parte, Reynolds In re, 51 L. J., Ch. 756; 20 Ch. D. 294; 46 L. T. 508; 30 W. R. 651; 46 J. P. 533—C. A.

The 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, s. 18, requiring magistrates to caution the accused with respect to statements he may make in answer to the charge, is not applicable to witnesses asked questions tending to criminate them. Reg. v. Coote, infra.

—— Witness presumed to know Rules of Law.]—The witness's knowledge of the law enabling him to decline to answer criminating questions must be presumed on the maxim, ignorantia juris non excusat. Reg. v. Coote, 9 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 463; 42 L. J., P. C. 45; L. R. 4 P. C. 599; 29 L. T. 111; 21 W. R. 553; 21 Cox, C.C. 557.

—— Only Witness can take Advantage of.]—The privilege of refusing to answer questions on the ground that they tend to criminate is that of the witness alone, and neither party to the suit can take any advantage therefrom. Reg. v. Kinglake, 22 L. T. 335; 18 W. R. 805.

Where, therefore, a witness was called on the part of the Crown to prove bribery against the defendant, and he refused to give evidence on the ground that his evidence would tend to criminate himself, which objection was overruled by the judge, whereupon he gave his evidence:—Held, that the defendant could not afterwards object that such evidence was improperly received. Ib. See also Thomas v. Newton, M. & M. 48, n.; and Rex v. Adey, 1 M. & Rob. 94.

Refusal to Produce Documents.]—A witness being sworn, and having in court a document in his possession, is bound to produce it, if required, though he has not received any notice to produce, nor been served with a subpœna duces tecum. Suelgrove v. Stevens, Car. & M. 508. S. P., Dwyer v. Collins, 7 Ex. 639; 21 L. J., Ex. 225; 16 Jur. 569.

After Time.]—Notwithstanding the time for taking the evidence in a cause has expired, the court will allow the examination in chief of witnesses as to facts to which newly discovered documents relate, on being satisfied that such documents are of importance in the cause, that they are newly discovered, and that there has been no delay or laches in respect of them. Ernest v. Vivian, 2 N. R. 545.

Disclosing Evidence.]—Witnesses ought not to disclose their evidence to parties. Cooth v. Jackson, 6 Ves. 33.

Interpreter.]—Interpreter appointed on oath to witness. Smith v. Kirkpatrick, Dick. 103.

Under a commission for the examination of French witnesses who could not speak English, the depositions are not to be taken in French, but must be turned by the interpreter into English, and be so taken down and returned. Belmore v. Anderson, 2 Cox, 288; 4 Bro. C. C. 90.

Consent of a Welsh married woman, unable to speak English, taken by the judge in his private room through an interpreter sworn in the usual manner. Lloyd, In re, 2 W. R. 388.

5. Ordering out of Court.

In what Cases.]—A witness will not be ordered out of court during the reading of evidence on affidavit. Penniman v. Hill, 24 W. R. 245.

It is almost a matter of right for a party to have a witness go out of court while a legal argument is going on as to his evidence. Reg. v. Murphy, 8 Car. & P. 297.

Either party, at any period of a cause, has a right to require that the unexamined witnesses should be out of court. Southey v. Nash, 7 Car. & P. 632.

But parties to an action cannot be ordered out of the court as long as they behave with propriety. Charnock v. Dewings, 3 Car. & K. 378.

The application to have the witnesses ordered out of court is made to the discretion of the court, and the court may accede or not to the application, and direct in what manner it may be carried out. Selfe v. Isaacson, 1 F. & F. 194.

The plaintiff has a right to be in court to instruct counsel. Ib.

So, the attorney in the cause may remain, and afterwards be called as a witness. Pomeroy v. Baddeley, R. & M. 430. S. P., Everett v. Lowdham, 5 Car. & P. 91.

If on the trial of an information for a libel, where the defendant has pleaded a justification under 6 & 7 Vict. c. 96, s. 6, the witnesses are ordered out of court, the prosecutor must be out of court if he is intended to be called as a witness. Reg. v. Newman, 3 Car. & K. 252.

Semble, that a petitioner, who is also assignee, and is proposed to be examined as a witness by the respondents, is excepted from the general rule for excluding witnesses during vivâ voce examination. Dugard, Ex parte, Aughtie, In re, 4 Deac. & C. 524.

Witness Disobeying Order.]—Though a judge has power to order witnesses out of court, and may fine a witness for disobeying this order:—Semble, he cannot lawfully refuse to permit the examination of the witness. Cobbett v. Hudson, 1 El. & Bl. 11; 22 L. J., Q. B. 11; 17 Jur. 481; 1 W. R. 54.

A judge has no right to exclude the parties to a cause from being present at the trial, although they are to be examined as witnesses; but if they remain in court after having been ordered to leave it, the judge may direct the jury to weigh the credit due to their testimony. Constance v. Brain, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1145. S. P., Chandler v. Horne, 2 M. & Rob. 423.

If, however, a party leaves the court in obedience to the order of the judge, the court will not grant a new trial, for he ought to have stood upon his right to remain. Ib.

It is no ground for rejecting a witness's evidence that he remained in court after an order for all the witnesses to leave the court; it is merely matter of observation on his evidence.

Cook v. Nethercote, 6 Car. & P. 741; Rex v. Colley, M. & M. 329.

If a witness comes into court, and hears some of the evidence after the witnesses have been ordered out of court, it is entirely in the discretion of the judge whether he shall be examined or not: and this is so in the Exchequer as well as in other courts, the only difference in that court being confined to revenue cases, in which the rule is istrict, that such witness cannot be examined. Thomas v. David, 7 Car. & P. 350; Parker v. M'Williams, 6 Bing. 683; 4 M. & P. 480; 8 L. J. (o.s.) C. P. 276.

The witnesses had been all ordered out of court, but one of them came into court again, and heard the evidence of another witness. The witness who had so come back into court was allowed to be examined as to such facts only as had not been spoken to by any other witness. Beaman v. Ellice, 4 Car. & P. 585.

6. Refreshing Memory.

Nature of Assistance.]—A witness may refresh his memory by any book or paper, if he can afterwards swear to the fact from his own recollection; but if he cannot swear to the fact from recollection, any farther than as finding it entered in a book or a paper, the original book or paper must be produced. Doe d. Church v. Perkins, 3 Term Rep. 749.

Where a licence to trade had been lost, a witness was allowed to speak to the contents of the licence from memory, though he had made an entry of it in his memorandum-book for the private information of himself and the governor by whom it was issued. It was held the book itself was not evidence per se, but could be used by the witness to refresh his memory. Kensington v. Inglis, 8 East, 273; 9 R. R. 438.

In an action by acceptor against drawer of an accommodation bill, on his implied contract of indemnity, the plaintiff, in order to prove that a former bill, in renewal of which the bill in respect of which the action was brought was given, had been made payable at a particular place, called a banker's clerk, who, without producing the bank book, stated that he had ascertained the fact from an entry therein, in his own handwriting, but that, independently of that entry, he had no recollection whatever of the fact:—Held, that this was not evidence of such fact. Beech v. Jones, 5 C. B. 696.

At law a witness may refresh his memory from notes, as to dates and names, but he must not give the whole evidence from writing. Anon., Ambl. 252.

The cashier of a banking house, upon his examination as a witness, stated, that he had ascertained, from the clearing-book kept by him, and in his own handwriting, that a certain sum of money was paid in notes of a particular description. The statement was founded solely on the witness's knowledge of the book and of his own handwriting, and not from any recollection of the fact deposed to, and the book was not produced:—Held, that, under these circumstances, the statement could not be received as evidence of the fact deposed to, though it might serve as a ground for further inquiry. Dupuy v. Truman, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 341.

A witness stated, that he believed from a reference to his books of account, and from inspection of a cheque and other documents which were produced to him at the time of his examination, that A., on a certain day, paid 500*l.* to B.:—Held that this was not sufficient evidence of payment. Cator v. Croydon Canal Co., 4 Y. & Coll. 405. Affirmed 13 L. J., Ch. 89.

Notes—When made.]—A witness, for the purpose of refreshing his memory, may refer to entries in a book, which he did not write with his own hand, but which he regularly examined from time to time soon after they were written, and while the facts stated in them were fresh in his memory. Burrough v. Martin, 2 Camp. 112; 11 R. R. 679.

A witness has no right to refresh his memory with a copy of a paper made by himself six months after he made the original, although the original is proved to be so covered with figures that it is unintelligible, the original paper having been written at the time of the transaction. Jones v. Stroud, 2 Car. & P. 196; 31 R. R. 660.

A witness cannot refresh his memory by depositions which he did not make immediately after the occurrence of the facts he deposed to. Whitfield v. Aland, 2 Car. & K. 1015.

It is essential that a witness producing a memorandum, by which to refresh his memory as to a fact, should be enabled to swear positively to the truth of such fact, although he has no present independent recollection of it; but it is not essential that the memorandum should have been contemporary with the fact. Hill v. Barry, 7 Jur. 10.

By whom made.]—Entries made in a time-book of a colliery by the timekeeper may be referred to by the pay clerk to refresh his memory if the pay clerk has seen the entries at the time of the timekeeper calling them out at pay time, in order to prove that the pay clerk paid certain sums at the pay time. Reg. v. Langton, 46 L. J., M. C. 136; 2 Q. B. D. 296; 35 L. T. 527; 13 Cox, C. C. 345.

A clerk may refresh his memory as to the deliveries of goods, by looking at entries made in his presence by his master in a ledger, from entries made by the clerk in a waste-book, such entries in the ledger having been checked by the clerk while the facts were fresh in his memory, and the waste-book need not be produced. Burton v. Plummer, 4 N. & M. 315; 2 A. & E. 341; 4 L. J., K. B. 53.

So a witness may refresh his memory by reference to entries in a book, which entries were made by another person, under the witness's directions, from documents written by the witness at the time of the transactions, and which entries were regularly compared by the witness with the original memoranda. Talbot de Malahide (Lord) v. Cusack, 17 Ir. C. L. R. 213; 12 L. T. 678.

A ship's log, written by the mate who is abroad, may be used to refresh the memory of the captain, who read it about a week after it was written. Anderson v. Whalley, 3 Car. & K. 54.

A person was in the habit from time to time, and within two hours of their occurrence, of reporting to a police inspector proceedings that had taken place at certain meetings where a treasonable conspiracy was carried on. The inspector took down the purport of the report from his dictation, but not in the very words he used. When finished, some of the reports were read over by the witness, and some were read to him, and all were signed by him. Held, that on examination he might use these reports for the purpose of refreshing his memory. Reg. v. Mullens, 3 Cox, C. C. 526.

Newspaper Report.]—A witness may refresh his memory as to the day on which certain proceedings at which he was present took place, by referring to a newspaper containing a report of those proceedings, and which he read at the time the facts were fresh in his recollection, and then knew that they were correctly reported. Dyer v. Best, 4 H. & C. 189.

An editor of a newspaper swore that A. was the writer of an article which had appeared in that paper many years before, and that the MS. had been lost. A. stated that he had been in the habit of writing such articles for the newspaper, but that he had no recollection of having sent the particular article referred to. He swore, however, that all the statements made in the articles he did send were true:—Held, that the newspaper might be put into A.'s hand, in order to refresh his memory; and that he might be asked whether, looking at the article, he had any doubt that the fact was as therein stated. Topham v. M'Gregor, 1 Car. & K. 320.

Surveyor's Report.]—A surveyor made a survey of a report which he furnished to his employers; being afterwards called as a witness, he produced a printed copy of this report, on the margin of which he had two days before, to assist him in giving his explanations as a witness, made a few dottings. The report had been made up from his original notes, of which it was, in substance, though not in words, a transcript:—Held, that he might look at this printed copy of the report to refresh his memory. Horne v. M'Kenzie, 6 Cl. & F. 628; Macl. & R. 977.

Other Proceedings.]—A witness cannot have the proceedings in another court put into his hands for the purpose of refreshing his memory as to the matters on which he is giving evidence. Halliday v. Holgate, 17 L. T. 18.

A witness may refresh his memory from the notes of counsel, taken at a former trial. Lawes v. Reed, 2 Lewin, C. C. 152.

Receipt not Stamped.]—In an action against assignees to recover money wrongfully paid to them, the debt having been previously paid to the bankrupt, it appeared that an entry was made in the plaintiff's book by the bankrupt, i.e. "R. L." the bankrupt's initials, "26*l.* Maugham," the plaintiff's name:—Held, that the bankrupt might speak from his recollection of the entry in the book, as having refreshed his memory, though the book could not be used as evidence for want of a receipt stamp. Maugham v. Hubbard, 2 M. & Ry. 5; 8 B. & C. 14; 6 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 229.

Where an agent who had given a receipt for money afterwards became blind, such receipt, although unstamped, was allowed to be read over to him in court, for the purpose of refreshing his memory. Catt v. Howard, 3 Stark, 3; 23 R. R. 751. S. P., Rambert v. Cohen, 4 Esp. 213; 6 R. R. 854.

Where the plaintiff entered an account in writing of goods and cash furnished to the defendant from time to time, each page of which was authenticated by the defendant's acknowledgment in writing of the receipt of the contents; though such acknowledgment in writing cannot be given in evidence per se, in respect of the cash items, amounting to above 40*s.* in each page, for want of a receipt stamp, yet it is competent to the plaintiff to prove that, upon calling over each article to the defendant, he admitted that he had received the same; and the witness may refresh his memory by referring to the account. Jacob v. Lindsay, 1 East. 460.

Attention Directed to Items of Account.]—The rule that in cross-examination upon an account, notice of the items to which the cross-examination will be directed must be given to the party bringing in the account, applies to the cross-examination of a party seeking to charge by his account as well as to the case of a merely accounting party. Bates v. Eley, 45 L. J., Ch. 270; 1 Ch. D. 473; 34 L. T. 50; 24 W. R. 424.

Right of Counsel to Inspect.]—On cross-examination of a witness, the cross-examining counsel is not entitled to inspect the whole of a diary used by the witness to assist his memory, but only such parts as refer to the subject-matter of the suit. Burgess v. Bennett, 20 W. R. 720.

When on cross-examination of a witness for the plaintiff, the defendant's counsel puts documents into his hands, and proves out of his mouth that they are in the plaintiff's handwriting, the plaintiff's counsel has a right to see them at once, for the purposes of cross-examining on them and identifying them. Peck v. Peck, 21 L. T. 670; 18 W. R. 295.

If a witness refreshes his memory from entries in a book, the opposite counsel may cross-examine on those entries, without making them his evidence, and the jury may see the entries if they wish to do so; but if the opposite counsel cross-examines as to other entries in the same book, he makes them his evidence. Gregory v. Tavernor, 6 Car. & P. 281. S. P., Lloyd v. Freshfield, 2 Car. & P. 325.

Where a witness refreshes his memory with respect to a particular fact, by a memorandum, it must be produced. Howard v. Canfield, 5 D. P. C. 417; W. W. & D. 78; 1 Jur. 71.

If a paper is put into the hands of a witness to refresh his memory, the counsel on the opposite side has a right to see it; but if it is merely given to him to prove a handwriting on it, he has not. Sinclair v. Stevenson, 1 Car. & P. 582; 2 Bing. 514; 10 Moore, 46.

If the counsel for the defendant in cross-examination puts a paper into the witness's hand to refresh his memory, the opposite counsel has a right to look at it, without being bound to read it in evidence; and the opposite counsel may also ask the witness when it was written without being bound to put it in. Rex v. Ramsden, 2 Car. & P. 603; 31 R. R. 703.

Where a witness has documents handed to him to depose to the handwriting or merely to refresh his memory, the other side are not entitled to inspection of such documents, but only of those documents upon which the witness is examined extra those points. In the absence of anything to shew what is the practice at common law in the case of a witness going abroad, referred to in the 31st section of 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, the ordinary rule of evidence at a trial is adhered to, and which is expressed in the above propositions. Lord v. Colvin, 5 De G. M. & G. 47; 2 Drew. 205; 23 L. J., Ch. 469; 18 Jur. 253; 2 W. R. 298.

7. Opinion.

a. In General.

Effect of Opinion.]—When a skilled witness says that in the course of his duty he formed a particular opinion on certain facts, he may further be asked in examination in chief how he went on to act upon that opinion. Stephenson v. Tyne River Improvement Commissioners, 17 W. R. 590.

Lunacy.]—Where an accused person is supposed to be insane, a medical man, who has been in court and heard the evidence, may be asked as a matter of science, whether the facts stated by the witnesses, supposing them to be true, shew a state of mind incapable of distinguishing between right and wrong. Reg. v. M'Naghten, 10 Cl. & F. 200; 8 Scott (N.R.) 595; 1 Car. & K. 130.

See also CRIMINAL LAW.

So, too, the opinion of a testator's friends as to his sanity, contained in letters written to him in his lifetime, are admissible. Wright v. Tatham, 7 A. & E. 313; 2 Nev. & P. 305.

Nuisance.]—In an action for a nuisance, an architect acquainted with the locality may be asked, if the nuisance depreciated the value of the houses in the neighbourhood. Gauntlett v. Whitworth, 2 Car. & K. 720.

Course of Business.]—A London stockbroker is a competent witness as to the course of business of London bankers. Adams v. Peters, 2 Car. & K. 723.

Where a deficit appeared on the accounts of a grocer's assistant, another grocer having had eleven years' experience in a shop in a similar district is admissible as an expert to shew how the deficit might have arisen from losses incidental to the trade of a retail grocer, notwithstanding that his course of dealing was in some respects dissimilar from that pursued in the shop in question. M'Fadden v. Murdock, 15 W. R. 1079.

Course of Nature.]—Where the question is, whether a bank, which had been erected for the purpose of preventing the overflowing of the sea, had caused the choking up of a harbour, the opinions of scientific men, as to the effect of such an embankment upon the harbour, are admissible. Folkes v. Chadd, 3 Dougl. 157.

Art.]—Seal engravers may be called to prove the difference between a genuine impression and one supposed to be false. Ib.

The opinion of an artist in painting is evidence as to the genuineness of a picture. Ib.

State of Will.]—On an indictment for uttering a forged will, which, together with writings in support of it, it was suggested had been written over pencil marks which had been rubbed out, the evidence of an engraver who had examined the paper with a mirror and traced the pencil marks, is admissible on the part of the prosecution. Reg. v. Williams, 8 Car. & P. 434.

Insurance.]—The opinion of one conversant in the business of insurance, whether the communication of particular facts would have enhanced the premium, is admissible; but he cannot be asked what his conduct would have been in the particular case. Berthon v. Loughman, 2 Stark. 258.

A merchant at Sydney shipped goods for England on board the ship C., and, by another that sailed after her, wrote to an agent in England, and desired him if he received the letter before the C. arrived, to wait thirty days in order to give every chance for her arrival, and then effect an insurance on the goods. The letter was received, and the agent having waited more than thirty days effected an insurance through the intervention of a broker, who told the underwriters when the C. sailed, and when the letter ordering the insurance was written, but did not state when it was received nor the order to wait thirty days after the receipt of it, both affecting the insurance. The C. never arrived. The assured brought an action on the policy against the insurers, but failed on account of the suppression of facts by the broker. In an action by the assured against the broker, for negligence in effecting the policy:—Held, that the evidence of underwriters was not admissible to shew that in their opinion the matters not communicated were material. Campbell v. Rickards, 5 B. & Ad. 840; 2 N. & M. 542; 2 L. J., K. B. 204.

A broker, having effected policies of insurance on goods of R., R. putting into his hands a letter from the supercargo of the ship containing the goods, told the broker the policies were to be altered, and he must do the needful. In an action against him for negligence in this matter:—Held, that brokers might be called to say, looking at the policies, the invoices of the goods, and the letter, what alterations in the policies a skilful broker ought to have made. Chapman v. Walton, 10 Bing. 57; 3 M. & Scott, 389; 2 L. J., C. P. 213.

Drawing of Patent.]—On a scire facias to repeal a patent for a machine, on the ground that it is not new, to prove that fact, it is allowable to put in the hands of a witness, who has constructed a machine for the same purpose, a drawing not made by himself, and ask him whether he has such a recollection of the machine he made as to be able to say that such is a correct drawing of it. Rex v. Hadden, 2 Car. & P. 184; 31 R. R. 658.

Professional Character.]—In an action for a libel, imputing to the plaintiff, a physician, improper treatment of a patient, and that another physician had said that the plaintiff's conduct had been such that no medical man of respectability would consult with him, and that, by so doing, he had honourably discharged his duty to his medical brethren:—Held, that a medical man, having been called as a witness, could not be asked whether he would meet the plaintiff in consultation, or whether the physician who had refused to consult with him had honourably discharged his duty to the medical profession. Ramadge v. Ryan, 2 M. & Scott, 421; 9 Bing. 333; 2 L. J., C. P. 7.

In an action upon a policy of insurance as for a total loss, the captain having abandoned the vessel, the defence was, that there had not been a total loss. The captain was called for the plaintiff, and was cross-examined as to alleged habits of intoxication, and as to his state at the time of the abandonment. A witness for the defendant was asked "whether from what he saw of the captain's habits, in A., before the voyage, he could form any judgment as to his general habits of sobriety or intoxication":—Held, that the question was admissible, the inquiry whether the captain formed a correct judgment under the circumstances being relevant to the issue. Alcock v. Royal Exchange Assurance Corporation, 13 Q. B. 292; 18 L. J., Q. B. 121; 13 Jur. 445.

A witness for the plaintiff stated on cross-examination, that, by the rules of the Jockey Club, the owner of the horse might bet against his own horse, and then withdraw him:—Held, that the witness might be asked, on re-examination, whether he did not consider such conduct dishonourable. Greville v. Chapman, 5 Q. B. 731; D. & M. 553; 13 L. J., Q. B. 172.

Meaning of Words.]—In an action for words spoken or written, the ordinary sense of those words is to be taken as the meaning of the speaker or writer, unless something is shewn to have taken place which may give a peculiar character to the expressions used. In the absence of any such evidence, a witness cannot be asked the question, "What did you understand by the words?" The proper course to be adopted is, first, to lay the foundation by giving such evidence, and then the question becomes admissible. Daines v. Hartley, 3 Ex. 200; 12 Jur. 1093.

Signature.]—A person accustomed to ancient manuscripts, saying that, by a careful examination of certain signatures, he had, in his mind, such a distinct knowledge of the handwriting as to be able to say, without immediate reference to them, whether any letter shewn to him was or was not written by the same person, is a competent witness. Crawford and Lindsay Peerages, 2 H. L. Cas. 557.

Evidence of witnesses who have seen letters written by the person whose handwriting is in dispute, is admissible, though they may not have seen him actually write. Doe v. Suckermore, 5 A. & E. 705.

Foreign Documents.]—It is not competent to a witness, who is called to interpret a foreign document, to give an opinion as to its construction; that is for the court. Stearine and Kaarsen Fabrick Gonda Co. v. Hentzmann, 17 C. B. (N.S.) 56.

Foreign Law.]—The evidence of a person whose only knowledge of the laws of a foreign country is derived from having studied them, cannot be received in proof of the operation and effect of such laws. Bonelli, In goods of, 45 L. J., P. 42; 1 P. D. 69; 34 L. T. 32; 24 W. R. 255.

A witness, who describes himself as a "certified special pleader," and familiar with Italian law, is incompetent to prove a point of Italian law. Ib.

An English barrister practising in Canadian appeals before the privy council, is not competent to give evidence as an expert as to the validity, according to the law of Canada, of a marriage solemnised in that country. Cartwright v. Cartwright, 26 W. R. 684.

A professional or an official witness, giving evidence as to a foreign law, may refer to foreign law books to refresh his memory, or to correct or confirm his opinion; but the law itself must be taken from his evidence. Sussex Peerage, 11 Cl. & F. 85; 8 Jur. 793.

A Roman Catholic bishop, holding the office of coadjutor to a vicar-apostolic in this country, is, in virtue of that office, to be considered as a person skilled in the matrimonial law of Rome, and, therefore, admissible as a witness to prove that law. Ib.

Witnesses, in giving their testimony on a foreign law, may, if they think fit, refer to laws or to treaties, for the purpose of aiding their memory upon the subject of their examination; but, in general, it is the testimony of the witness, and not the authority of the law or of the text writer, detached from the testimony of the witness, which is to influence the judge. Nelson (Earl) v. Bridport (Lord), 8 Beav. 527; 10 Jur. 871.

A party is not bound to produce a written law or decree which his witness, in proving a foreign law, refers to. Ib.

Witnesses, in proving a foreign law, referred to certain passages in law books:—Held, that this did not give the opposite party a right, without further proof, of reading any other passages from the same works. Ib.

And see ante, cols. 610–613.

Ecclesiastical Law.]—Where a question is to be decided upon the principles of an ecclesiastical court, a court of equity will have a case stated for the opinion of civilians. Hurst v. Beach (5 Madd. 356; 21 R. R. 304) followed in that respect. Sayre v. Cramp, 2 W. R. 438.

Surveyor.]—Evidence, as to value, of witnesses stating opinions formed upon a loose recollection of circumstances, at a distant period, not to be put in competition with that of surveyors actually employed at the time to ascertain the value, and where no bad motive can be ascribed, so as to affect a lease sought to be set aside for undervalue. Att.-Gen. v. Cross, 3 Mer. 542; 17 R. R. 121.

Accountant.]—The court refused to receive at the hearing of a cause the deposition of an accountant containing a statement of the result of his examination of partnership account-books, where the books on which he made his statement were not in evidence; but, semble, that if the books had been in evidence, the deposition of the accountant of the result of his examination of them would be receivable as the evidence of a person of skill. Johnson v. Kershaw, 1 De G. & Sm. 260; 11 Jur. 553.

Actuary.]—A person who, though not an actuary, is acquainted with the business of life insurance, is competent to give evidence as to the average and probable duration of lives and the present value of annuities, as stated by the tables and accepted by life insurance companies. Rowley v. L. & N. W. Ry., 42 L. J., Ex. 153; L. R. 8 Ex. 221; 29 L. T. 180; 21 W. R. 869—Ex. Ch.

Not as to Merits.]—Where scientific men are called as witnesses, they are not entitled to give their opinions as to the merits of the case, but only as to the facts as proved at the trial. Jameson v. Drinkald, 12 Moore, 148.

b. As to Handwriting.

Document put into Hands of Witness.]—If a paper is put into the hands of a witness to refresh his memory, the counsel on the opposite side have a right to see it; but if it is merely given to him to prove a handwriting, they have not. Sinclair v. Stevenson, 1 Car. & P. 582; 2 Bing. 514; 10 Moore, 46.

Skilled Witness.]—Any person who is "skilled" in handwriting may give evidence as to the handwriting of a document, although he may not be "skilled" in the way of his business or profession. Reg. v. Silverlock, 63 L. J., M. C. 233; [1894] 2 Q. B. 766; 10 R. 431; 72 L. T. 298; 43 W. R. 14; 18 Cox, C. C. 104; 58 J. P. 788.

Nature of Knowledge.]—Evidence of witnesses who have seen letters written by the person whose handwriting is in dispute, is admissible, though they may not have seen him actually write. Doe d. Sackermore, 5 A. & E. 705.

A witness formed his opinion of the handwriting of a party from having observed it signed to an affidavit used in the cause (on a motion to postpone) by the counsel for the party against whom it was proposed to be proved:—Held, sufficient. Smith v. Sainsbury, 5 Car. & P. 196.

If a person prove that he has never seen the defendant write, and has never corresponded with him, but has seen papers in the master's office which the attorney of the party admitted to be of his handwriting, and the person has acted on these papers: this is not such a knowledge of the party's handwriting as will enable the person to prove a written document alleged to be in his handwriting. Greaves v. Hunter, 2 Car. & P. 477.

Handwriting cannot be proved by a person who has seen letters franked by defendant, but has never corresponded with him or seen him write. Quære, how far opinion as to handwriting being genuine is evidence. Carey v. Pitt, Peake Ad. C. 130; 4 R. R. 895.

An issue having been directed to satisfy the court as to the forgery of a signature to a warrant of attorney, a verdict was found, establishing the genuineness of it, upon evidence satisfactory to the judge who tried the cause, and to the court upon his report of it. In the course of the trial, an inspector of franks, who had never seen the party write, was called to prove, from his knowledge of handwriting in general, that the signature in question was not genuine, but an imitation; this evidence having been rejected, the court refused to disturb the verdict, on the ground that such evidence, even if admissible, was entitled to very little weight; and that the issue being to satisfy the court, a new trial ought not to be granted, unless for the rejection of evidence which might possibly have altered the verdict. Quære, whether such evidence be admissible at all. Gurney v. Langlands, 5 B. & Ald. 330; 24 R. R. 396.

Rule as to proof of handwriting, the witness must have seen the party write, and swear to his belief that the writing produced is his. Eagleton v. Kingston, 8 Ves. 473.

If the witness will not swear to his belief of the handwriting, but says that he thinks it like, the Lord Chancellor of opinion this is not evidence. Id. 476.

A witness called to prove handwriting should form his judgment from the handwriting, not from extrinsic circumstances. Mendes Da Costa v. Pym, Peake Ad. C. 144.

In an action on a joint and several promissory note against A., B. and C., the only evidence as to the handwriting of C. was a retainer to the attorney to defend the action, bearing the signatures of all three, upon which the attorney had acted, without having ever seen C., or being acquainted with his handwriting:—Held, that there was no evidence of the handwriting of C. Drew v. Prior, 5 Man. & G. 264.

On a claim of peerage, a family pedigree from the proper custody being offered in evidence, and, in order to prove handwriting, the opinion of an inspector of franks and official correspondence, forming a judgment of the character of handwriting from inspection of other documents, without immediate comparison with the one in question:—Held, inadmissible; but that of the claimant's family solicitor, who had acquired a familiar knowledge of the ancestor's handwriting, from having, in a long course of his business for the claimant's family, examined deeds, &c., signed by the ancestor, and coming to the claimant as muniments of his title to estates descending to him, received. Fitzwalter Peerage, 10 Cl. & F. 193.

The clerk of a solicitor, who was the solicitor of the mortgagor and mortgagee in the creation of the security, and who copied the bill of costs of the solicitor in the transaction of making an appointment of the estate comprised in the security, and of preparing the mortgage deed, which was founded on the title created by the appointment, may be received as a witness to depose to the handwriting on the document (which proof alone does not make it evidence), but he cannot be received to depose further as to the contents of the bill of costs, or the subject to which it relates, for an attorney's bill of costs is his history of the transaction, and the attorney could not be himself permitted to give evidence of the transaction against his client, or against those claiming under his client. Chant v. Brown, 9 Hare, 790; 16 Jur. 606.

As to the necessary proof of a party's handwriting. Randolph v. Gordon, 5 Price, 312; 19 R. R. 633.

Writing of Surname.]—The signature of a party to a bill of exchange may be proved by a person who has seen him write his surname only. Lewis v. Sapio, M. & M. 39.

From one Occasion.]—In an action on a foreign bill to prove the handwriting of the defendant, it is evidence to go to the jury, that a person, who saw him write once, thinks the handwriting like, though he has no belief on the subject; but, if he had never seen the party write, mere comparison of hands would not be admissible. Garrells v. Alexander, 4 Esp. 37.

If a witness, who is called to prove a person's handwriting, states that he has seen the person sign his name once, and believes the handwriting to be his, that is evidence of the handwriting, though slight, to go to the jury. Willman v. Worrall, 8 Car. & P. 380.

From Correspondence.]—If a party has received letters from another, and has acted on them, it is sufficient to justify him in swearing as to his belief of the handwriting of such person. Thorpe v. Gisburne, 2 Car. & P. 21.

A witness who had never seen the defendant, but had corresponded with a person by the same name, living at Plymouth Dock, where the defendant resided (and it appeared that there was no other person of that name there), stated that the handwriting of certain letters was that of the person with whom he had corresponded:—Held, sufficient evidence to admit the letters to be read against the defendant. Harrington v. Fry, R. & M. 90; 1 Car. & P. 289; 2 Bing. 179; 9 Moore, 344.

A clerk who has seen numerous letters addressed by a party to his employer, and has acted on those letters, may prove the handwriting of the party. Rex v. Slaney, 5 Car. & P. 213.

To prove the handwriting of a defendant, named F. W., to a letter, a clerk of a banker stated that a person of that name kept an account with the banker and had signed his name in a book, and drawn cheques which the witness had paid, and that he believed the letter to be of the handwriting of that person. The defendant's attorney proved that the defendant had desired him to address him at No. 12, Tower-street, and another witness proved that he had written two letters to "Mr. F. W., 12, Tower-street," and had received answers, and that he believed the letter offered in evidence to be of the same handwriting as the answers he had received to his letters :—Held, sufficient proof that the letter was in the defendant's handwriting. Murieta v. Wolfhagen, 2 Car. & K. 744.

—— Answer to Letter.]—Mr. S., the managing clerk of the plaintiff's attorney, wrote a letter to the defendant, addressed to him at his residence, which letter was proved to have been put into the post. Mr. S. proved that he received an answer to his letter :—Held, that the letter thus received in answer was admissible, without proof of the defendant's handwriting. Orenston v. Wilson, 2 Car. & K. 1.

Ancient Manuscripts.]—A person accustomed to ancient manuscripts, saying that, by a careful examination of certain signatures he had, in his mind, such a distinct knowledge of the handwriting as to be able to say, without immediate reference to them, whether any letter shewn to him was or was not written by the same person, is a competent witness. Crawford and Lindsay Peerages, 2 H. L. Cas. 557.

Where a person had been dead a great number of years, whose handwriting was to be proved, it was done by shewing the similarity of the handwriting in question to the handwriting of his will. Morewood v. Wood, 14 East, 328, n. ; 12 R. R. 537. S. P., Roe d. Brune v. Rawlings, 7 East, 282 ; 3 Smith, 254 ; 8 R. R. 632.

A witness may prove handwriting although he never saw the party write, if the antiquity of the writing renders that impossible, by swearing that it corresponded with other ancient documents acknowledged to be genuine. Gould v. Jones, 1 W. Bl. 384.

To prove that a paper was the handwriting of a deceased rector, whose name it bore, it is not sufficient to produce many of the returns to the spiritual court, made in the time of that rector, and signed with his name. Brookbard v. Woodley, Peake, 21, n.

The handwriting of an account paper may be proved by the opinion of a witness, who has compared it for the first time with other authentic old writings at the time of the trial. Doe d. Tilman v. Turver, R. & M. 141.

After thirty years, handwriting of letter need not necessarily be proved when letter affords intrinsic evidence of its authenticity. Where there is no direction to such letter, primâ facie it must be intended to have been written to the party among whose papers it was found. Fenwick v. Reed, 6 Madd. 7.

Comparison of Handwriting—Since the C. L. P. Act, 1854, s. 27.]—In an action on a bill, the acceptance being denied and alleged to be a forgery, documents, such as receipts, not relevant to the issue, but proved to be in the handwriting of the defendant, were allowed to be put in for the purpose of comparison. Birch v. Ridgway, 1 F. & F. 270.

On the cross-examination of an attesting witness to a codicil, he denying that it was in his handwriting, other documents admitted by him to be in his writing were allowed to be submitted to the jury for the purpose of comparison of handwriting. Cresswell v. Jackson, 2 F. & F. 24.

In an action on a bill against the acceptor, there was a plea traversing the acceptance. No evidence was offered by the plaintiff on this point, but the bill and a letter were produced at the trial in accordance with a notice by the defendant to produce, in which notice the bill was described as the bill accepted by the defendant, and the letter as being a letter of the defendant's :—Held, that as the jury had an opportunity of comparing the handwriting if they had thought it necessary, there was some evidence of the defendant's handwriting. Beard v. Jackson, 24 W. R. 159.

The question being whether a memorandum was in the handwriting of a defendant, and he, in the course of cross-examination, having been got to write something on a piece of paper, this was allowed to be shewn to the jury for the purpose of comparison of handwriting. Cobbett v. Kilminster, 4 F. & F. 490.

In a suit involving a question of disputed handwriting the hearing of a summons for production of documents is not the proper stage for ordering the production of writings for purposes of comparison, inasmuch as by the C. L. P. Act, 1854, s. 27, disputed writings may be compared only with writings "proved to the satisfaction of the judge to be genuine," and this proof can only be furnished at the hearing. Wilson v. Thornbury, 43 L. J., Ch. 356 ; L. R. 17 Eq. 517.

—— Before Act.]—Evidence of handwriting by comparison is inadmissible, except either where the writing acknowledged to be genuine is already in evidence in the cause, or the disputed writing is an ancient document. These exceptions are of necessity. Doe d. Perry v. Newton, 1 N. & P. 1 ; 5 A. & E. 514 ; W. W. & D. 403 ; 6 L. J., K. B. 1.

A person accustomed to ancient manuscripts, saying that by a careful examination of certain signatures he had in his mind such a distinct knowledge of the handwriting as to be able to say, without immediate reference to them, whether any letter shewn to him was or was not written by the same person, is a competent witness. Crawford and Lindsay Peerages, 2 H. L. Cas. 557.

A document purported to be a certificate of a marriage at Bristol, in 1761, written and signed by W. D., curate of St. James's :—Held, that the handwriting of W. D. might be proved by the opinion of a witness, formed by comparing it with various signatures of W. D. in the original register of St. James's, by which he appeared to be the officiating curate in 1761, without any proof of his death, or of search for witnesses who might have seen him write. Doe d. Jenkins v. Davies, 10 Q. B. 314 ; 16 L. J., Q. B. 218 ; 11 Jur. 607.

In an action of libel for having charged the plaintiff with having written a libel on the defendant, to which he pleaded a justification that the plaintiff had written the libel, it appeared that in the libel thus alleged to have been written by the plaintiff, the name of the defendant was spelt in a peculiar way:—Held, that, in order to prove that the plaintiff wrote that libel, other documents written by him in which the name was so spelt were receivable. Brooks v. Tichborne, 5 Ex. 929; 20 L. J., Ex. 69; 14 Jur. 1122.

If a witness who is called to disprove the signature of the defendant to an acceptance, states that he believes the signature is not that of the defendant, and gives as his reason for that belief, the absence or presence of certain peculiarities, which he says do or do not exist in the genuine signatures of the defendant, the opposite counsel may put into his hand a paper unconnected with the cause, and ask if, in his opinion, that contains a genuine signature of the defendant; and, if he answers in the affirmative, he may then be asked, "Does the signature in this paper, which you say is genuine, contain the same peculiarities, or want the same peculiarities (as the case may be), which you have before stated as your reasons that the signature in dispute is not genuine?" Young v. Honner, 1 Car. & K. 51; 2 M. & Rob. 536.

Evidence as to handwriting formed by the witness called on an immediate comparison at the trial, is inadmissible. Doe d. Mudd v. Suckermore, 2 N. & P. 16; 5 A. & E. 703; W. W. & D. 405; 7 L. J., Q. B. 33.

If the witness called for the plaintiff, in his cross-examination, admit that a letter was written by him with the authority of the plaintiff, but deny that a second letter is of his handwriting, the defendant's counsel will not be allowed to show both letters to another witness called for the plaintiff, and ask him whether he does not believe that the second letter was written by the same person who wrote the first. Clermont v. Tullidge, 4 Car. & P. 1.

A clerk of the post-office, accustomed to inspect franks for the detection of forgeries, may be examined as a witness to prove that the handwriting of an instrument is an imitated and not a natural hand, and also to prove that two writings, suspected to be imitated hands, were written by the same person. Goodtitle d. Revett v. Braham, 4 Term Rep. 497.

The rule that comparison of handwriting is not evidence, does not extend so far as to prevent the court or jury from instituting a comparison between two documents of which primâ facie evidence has been given. Griffith v. Williams, 1 C. & J. 47.

A jury may judge of a disputed handwriting, by comparing it with other documents in evidence for other purposes, and admitted to be the handwriting of the party. Solita v. Yarrow, 1 M. & Rob. 133. See also Rex v. Morgan, Ib. n.

If, in an action on a bill of exchange, the question be whether the acceptance be that of defendant, the jury will be allowed to look at letters written by defendant on the subject of the bill, and which are in evidence in the cause. Eaton v. Gervis, 8 Car. & P. 273.

Evidence of rector's handwriting of receipts by comparison of his signature in registrar's book (the entries in which it was his duty to sign):—Held, sufficient. Taylor v. Cook, 8 Price, 650.

Comparison of handwriting, though lately admitted as evidence, if confirmed by the contents of correspondence, refused in the instance of a single letter for the purpose of commitment. Wade v. Broughton, 3 Ves. & B. 172.

The evidence of "experts," as to the age of the document and the character of the handwriting, may in some cases be valuable. Crouch v. Hooper, 16 Beav. 182.

—— With Document not in Evidence.]—On the trial of an action on a promissory note, in which the question is whether defendant had endorsed it or not, plaintiff's counsel will not be allowed to give in evidence a number of other notes bearing defendant's undoubted signature, with a view of having the jury compare the handwriting of those signatures with the indorsement of the note in question, and the jury will not be allowed to compare anything with the endorsement except documents otherwise evidence in the case. Bromage v. Rice, 7 Car. & P. 548.

On a question as to the genuineness of handwriting, a witness who has been examined as to his opinion and belief respecting it, cannot on cross-examination be asked his opinion as to the genuineness of another document in the handwriting of the supposed writer, such document not being in evidence for other purposes. Griffits v. Ivory, 11 Ad. & E. 322; 3 P. & D. 179; 9 L. J., Q. B. 49.

A witness for defendants in an action on a bond, having sworn that the attestation to the bond was not in A.'s handwriting, plaintiff's counsel put into his hand a paper not in evidence in the cause, which he also stated was not written by A.:—Held, that plaintiff could not prove, for the purpose of contradicting the witness, that the paper was actually written by A. Hughes v. Rogers, 8 M. & W. 123; 10 L. J., Ex. 238.

Signature — Deed appointing Trustees.] — A married woman, under a power prescribing no particular form, appoints new trustees, and the fund vested in the old trustees having been paid into court under the Trustee Relief Act, petitions for payment out to the new trustees. Upon this petition the question arises, whether the proof of her signature by a stranger who has seen her write is sufficient under s. 26 of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854:—Held, that the application being for payment out of the fund, and not to carry into effect the instrument, the act did not apply; and that, inasmuch as the power did not prescribe any special form, the proof was sufficient. Hall's Trust, In re, 9 W. R. 776.

Signature of Marksmen.] — An instrument executed by mark may be proved from inspection by a person who has seen the party so execute instruments. George v. Surrey, M. & M. 516; 31 R. R. 755.

Where Witness becomes Blind.]—A witness, in his deposition taken in a suit in equity, swore to the handwriting of a particular document, and afterwards became blind: his deposition was read in his lifetime, on the trial of an issue to prove the handwriting. Lynn v. Robson, 1 L. J., (o.s.) Ch. 88.

Conflicting Evidence.]—Where the genuineness of handwriting to a deed is contested in chancery, if an affidavit is produced from the sole attesting witness alive that he knew the persons executing the deed, and saw them execute it, and then wrote his own attestation, the fact that persons skilled in handwriting declare their belief, formed on inspection, that the handwriting is not genuine, does not call on that court to grant an issue to try the disputed fact; but it may determine that fact on the opposing affidavits. Newton v. Ricketts, 9 H. L. Cas. 262; 31 L. J., Ch. 247; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 952; 5 L. T. 62; 10 W. R. 1.

What Documents.]—Letters and papers of any class may be proved as to the handwriting viva voce, and the witness cannot be cross-examined at the hearing; but, if there be any doubt, an opportunity may be given by the court to see if he has sworn truly. Ellis v. Deane, 3 Moll. 63.

Effect of Offer to Compromise.]—Assumpsit against the drawer and indorser of a bill of exchange. Plea denying the drawing and indorsement. At the trial a witness for plaintiff stated that he had received letters from defendant's place of business in the same handwriting as that in which the bill was drawn and indorsed. An offer to defendant to compromise after action brought was also proved. For the defence, three witnesses swore that the writing was not defendant's:—Held, that though the witnesses for the defence rebutted the inference that the writing was defendant's, yet the offer to compromise was evidence recognising the handwriting upon the bill, whether that of the defendant or of some other person, sufficient to go to a jury. Harding v. Jones, 1 Tyrw. & G. 135.

In Criminal Case.]—The same proof of a prisoner's handwriting is allowed in a criminal as in a civil case. Rex v. Hensey, 2 Ken. 368; 1 Burr. 643.

In Ecclesiastical Court.]—In the ecclesiastical courts comparison of handwriting is admissible evidence. Lock v. Denner, 1 Add. 360.

8. Privilege.

a. Legal Professional Confidence.

i. Counsel.

In what Cases.]—A barrister cannot be called as a witness to prove what was stated by him on a motion before the court. Curry v. Walter, 1 Esp. 456; 5 R. R. 743.

A party will not be allowed to go into evidence of the time when the counsel for the opposite party was retained, either by calling the counsel's clerk, or otherwise, as the retaining of counsel falls within the rules respecting confidential communications. Foote v. Hayne, 1 Car. & P. 545; R. & M. 165; 28 R. R. 788.

A statement made by counsel at judge's chambers in the presence of his client's attorney or the attorney's clerk acting for the attorney, in order to induce the judge to take a step in the cause, is, if relevant to the question at issue in the trial, admissible. Huller v. Worman, 3 L. T. 741; 9 W. R. 348.

Counsel not to be examined as to his knowledge as such. Dennis v. Codrington, Cary, 100.

ii. Solicitors.

Existence of Legal Proceedings.]—If any matter is disclosed to an attorney in the cause, he cannot be permitted to give it in evidence either in that or in any other action. Wilson v. Rastall, 4 Term Rep. 753; 2 R. R. 515. S. P. Lloyd v. Lloyd, 2 Curt. 262.

It is the privilege of the client and not of the attorney. Parkhurst v. Lowten, 2 Swanst. 216.

An attorney is not privileged from disclosing as a witness a statement made by his client relative to the subject-matter of a suit, if such statement was not necessary for the purpose of the proceedings on which the attorney was employed. Gillard v. Bates, 6 M. & W. 547; 8 D. P. C. 774; 9 L. J., Ex. 171.

Solicitor concerned in cause is not bound to testify, though served with process. Berd v. Lovelace, Cary, 62. S. P. Austen v. Vesey, id. 63; Hartford v. Lee, id. 63.

Communications made to an attorney respecting a matter in dispute and controversy are privileged, though no cause was then commenced. Clark v. Clark, 1 M. & Rob. 3.

So, communications made by a party to an attorney are confidential, although they do not relate to a cause existing or in progress at the time they were made. Cromack v. Heathcote, 4 Moore, 357; 2 Br. & B. 4; 22 R. R. 638. But see Reg. v. Cox, infra.

Communications made before suit, by a client to his solicitor, concerning the matter in dispute, are not generally privileged; but advice given confidentially to a client, on such statements, is within the rule. Bluck v. Galsworthy, 2 Giff. 453; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 91; 3 L. T. 399.

Communications between a solicitor and his client ante litem motam, and a bill of costs relating thereto, are privileged. Turton v. Barber, 22 W. R. 438.

Communications between solicitor and client, to which privilege once attaches, are always privileged, whether they have been made with reference to the existing action or to a previous one; à fortiori are they privileged when the question in dispute is the same in the second action. Bullock v. Corrie, 47 L. J., Q. B. 352; 3 Q. B. D. 356; 38 L. T. 102; 26 W. R. 330.

So, held, where A., having failed in an action against him by B., brought an action for indemnity against C., who was under the same obligation to him as he was to B., and the application was by C. to inspect documents to which privilege attached in the former action. Ib.

On the Queen's proctor's intervention alleging the adultery of the petitioner, counsel on behalf of the Queen's proctor proposed to ask the petitioner whether he had not confessed to his solicitor on a former trial that he had been guilty of a matrimonial offence:—Held, that the communication was privileged, and that therefore the question was inadmissible. Branford v. Branford, 48 L. J., P. 40; 4 P. D. 72; 40 L. T. 659; 27 W. R. 691.

An attorney is not at liberty to disclose in evidence what has been confidentially communicated to him by a client, although the latter is no party to the cause before the court. Rex v. Withers, 2 Camp. 578.

An interrogatory being put to a solicitor in the cause, as to whether the plaintiff had acted as adviser and agent for a certain defendant, the solicitor demurred, for that he had acted professionally for both parties, and in the suit; and all the information he possessed which would enable him to answer the interrogatory had been derived from communications confidentially made to him by the said defendant and the plaintiff, or one of them; and he considered his answering the interrogatory would be a breach of professional confidence reposed in him by his clients. Demurrer allowed. Gibbon v. Strathmore, 11 L. J., Ch. 366.

As to Sale of Estates.]—Communications made to an attorney by his client respecting the sale of estates are privileged: the rule is not limited to suits existing or expected. Mynn v. Joliffe, 1 M. & Rob. 326.

The privilege of communication between solicitor and client extends to all matters within the scope of the ordinary duties of a solicitor, and the sale of estates being of such matters a solicitor is not at liberty to disclose what passed in conversations which he had either with the client or the agent of the client, relative to the amount of the bidding to be reserved upon the sale of an estate in which he had been concerned for him, or to other matters connected with such sale. Carpmael v. Powis, 1 Ph. 687; 15 L. J., Ch. 275.

Where an act is done in pursuance of a bargain between two parties, and in presence of the attorneys for each of them, the communication by one party to his attorney relating to that act is not privileged so as to prevent the attorney from giving evidence of it. Weeks v. Argent, 16 M. & W. 817; 16 L. J., Ex. 209; 11 Jur. 525.

Where upon the sale of an estate the same attorney was employed by the vendor and by the purchaser, a communication from the purchaser to the attorney, asking for time to pay the purchase-money, is not privileged. Perry v. Smith, 9 M. & W. 681; Car. & M. 554; 11 L. J., Ex. 269.

Upon settling interrogatories for the examination of a vendor in the master's office, on a question of title between vendor and purchaser:—Held, that the vendor was not compellable, at the instance of the purchaser, to state his motive for making a certain appointment, or to disclose confidential communications made by him to his solicitor and counsel respecting the property, although such communications were made merely on behalf of the consulting person singly, and were not made during a suit, during a dispute, or after the threat of a suit. Pearse v. Pearse, 1 De G. & Sm. 12; 16 L. J., Ch. 153; 11 Jur. 52.

As to Mortgage.]—In a suit for redemption by a judgment creditor of A., a mortgagor, and B., a solicitor, who had a mortgage on A.'s property in his own name, but in trust for other parties, his clients, and had been employed by other clients also in advancing money upon it by way of mortgage, it was held that B. was not bound to disclose either the names of the parties for whom he held the mortgage (he swearing by his answer that he was authorised to give discharges for the money when repaid) or the names of the other clients for whom he had effected mortgages. Jones v. Pugh, 1 Ph. 96; 11 L. J., Ch. 323; 6 Jur. 616. Reversing 12 Sim. 470.

Knowledge Obtained during Trial.]—The rule as to privileged communications between counsel or attorney and client does not extend to facts of which the counsel or attorney of themselves obtain knowledge in the course of a trial. Brown v. Foster, 1 H. & N. 736; 26 L. J., Ex. 249; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 245; 5 W. R. 292.

The privilege of a solicitor applies only to communications received from his client; it does not extend to those derived from third parties, whether strangers to or the opponents of the client, although made to the solicitor while acting in that capacity. Ford v. Tennant, 32 Beav. 162; 32 L. J., Ch. 465; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 292; 7 L. T. 732; 11 W. R. 324.

Question for Judge.]—A judge is bound to decide the preliminary question of fact whether a communication is privileged or not, and his decision, if erroneous, may be reviewed. Cleave v. Jones, 7 Ex. 421; 21 L. J., Ex. 105.

Motion to restrain a solicitor from giving evidence of confidential matters, refused; the propriety of his being examined being left to the consideration of the court before which he might appear as a witness. Beer v. Ward, Jac. 77.

Professional Advice.]—The protection of communications, made by a client to his attorney, applies to all cases in which the relation of attorney and client subsists, and to all cases where the client applies to the attorney in his professional capacity. Doe d. Shellard v. Harris, 5 Car. & P. 592.

An attorney cannot be asked whether A. applied to him to draw a certain deed; nor whether A. asked his advice for a lawful or an unlawful purpose. Ib.

In an action of trover for a lease brought by the assignees of a bankrupt, the plea set out that before the bankruptcy, the bankrupt deposited the lease with the defendant as a collateral security for money which the bankrupt owed him. At the trial, the plaintiffs attempted to shew that the lease was deposited after the act of bankruptcy, and for that purpose called a witness, who had been the attorney for the bankrupt after the act of bankruptcy, and had been applied to by him to raise the money. It was then proposed to ask him whether the bankrupt had not the lease in his possession at that time:—Held, that this was privileged from disclosure, as being a confidential communication made to him in his character as an attorney. Turquand v. Knight, 2 M. & W. 98; 2 Gale, 192; 6 L. J., Ex. 4.

Counsel or attorney cannot be called upon to reveal the advice given to the client; demurrer, therefore, overruled as to the case, and allowed as to the opinion. Richards v. Jackson, 18 Ves. 474. See Wayte v. Surman, 2 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 28.

A., the defendant, wrote to his solicitor, who was also the solicitor of E., the plaintiff: "You may make Mr. E. an offer of the T. Hotel on certain terms." This letter was forwarded to the plaintiff, who at once wrote and accepted the offer. A subsequent letter from the defendant to the solicitor, expressing satisfaction that E. had accepted the offer, was tendered in evidence:—Held, that the letter was privileged. Eadie v. Addison, 52 L. J., Ch. 80; 47 L. T. 543; 31 W. R. 320.

Where an attorney is employed by a client professionally to transact professional business, all the communications which pass between them in the cause and for the purpose of that business, and not those only which relate to litigation commenced or in contemplation, are privileged communications. Herring v. Clobery, 1 Ph. 91; 11 L. J., Ch. 149.

A. applied to B., an attorney, to raise money upon certain property, and enabled him to obtain an abstract of the title and compare it with the original, but the money was never raised. In an ejectment, B. was called upon to produce the abstract as secondary evidence of an original deed stated therein :—Held, that A.'s communication was confidential, and that B.'s evidence was therefore inadmissible. Doe d. Peter v. Watkins, 4 Scott, 155 ; 3 Bing. (N.C.) 421 ; 3 Hodges, 25 ; 6 L. J., C. P. 107 ; 1 Jur. 42.

An attorney is not bound to speak as to the particulars of a bill of exchange, when the knowledge of those particulars is only derived from the bill having been intrusted to him by his client. Beard v. Ackerman, 5 Esp. 120.

An attorney, employed by consent of two parties in preparing a deed from one to the other, cannot be examined as to what he became informed of in preparing the deed, when the action is brought by the assignees of one against the other, suggesting fraud in the deed. Robson v. Kemp, 4 Esp. 235 ; 5 Esp. 52 ; 8 R. R. 831.

When an attorney has come to the knowledge of a deed or an instrument having been destroyed, from the circumstance of his being employed as an attorney, he cannot be asked as to the fact the knowledge of which was so obtained. Ib.

In an action by payee against maker of a promissory note for money lent, the plaintiff, for the purpose of taking the case out of the Statute of Limitations, tendered an account-book, containing an admission by the defendant of payment of interest to him. The defendant's counsel then raised a collateral issue as to the admissibility of the book, and proved that the plaintiff, being the attorney of the defendant, wrote to her for a statement of the debts and payments of her late husband, adding, "This from you will assist me in preparing the case for counsel." Whereupon the book in question was sent to the plaintiff :—Held, that the communication was privileged. Cleave v. Jones, 7 Ex. 421 ; 21 L. J., Ex. 105.

A witness may demur to answer an interrogatory which seeks for information come to his knowledge in professional confidence. Parry v. Watkins, 9 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 63.

Attorney, &c., may object to answer as a witness, as to a confidential communication. Maddox v. Maddox, 1 Ves. 61.

A solicitor may, by his answer to a bill against him and his clients, refuse to discover any deeds or facts confidentially communicated to him. Stratford v. Hogan, 2 Ball & B. 164.

Crime.]—All communications between a solicitor and his client are not privileged from disclosure, but only those passing between them in professional confidence and in the legitimate course of professional employment of the solicitor. Communications made to a solicitor by his client before the commission of a crime for the purpose of being guided or helped in the commission of it, are not privileged from disclosure. Reg. v. Cox, 54 L. J., M. C. 41 ; 14 Q. B. D. 153 ; 52 L. T. 25 ; 33 W. R. 396 ; 15 Cox, C. C. 611 ; 49 J. P. 374—C. C. R.

Fraud.]—C. and R. were partners under a deed of partnership. M. brought an action against R. & Co., and obtained judgment therein, and issued execution against the goods of R. The goods seized in execution were then claimed by C. as his absolute property under a bill of sale executed in his favour by R. at a date subsequent to the above-mentioned judgment. An interpleader issue was ordered to determine the validity of the bill of sale, and upon the trial of this issue, the partnership deed was produced on C.'s behalf, bearing an indorsement purporting to be a memorandum of dissolution of the said partnership, prior to the commencement of the action by M. Subsequently C. and R. were tried and convicted upon a charge of conspiring to defraud M., and upon that trial the case for the prosecution was, that the bill of sale was fraudulent, that the partnership between R. and C. was in truth subsisting when it was given, and that the memorandum of dissolution indorsed on the deed was put there after M. had obtained judgment, and fraudulently ante-dated, the whole transaction being, it was alleged, a fraud intended to cheat M. of the fruits of his execution. Upon the trial a solicitor was called on behalf of the prosecution to prove that after M. had obtained the judgment C. and R. together consulted him as to how they could defeat M.'s judgment, and as to whether a bill of sale could legally be executed by R. in favour of C. so as to defeat such judgment, and that no suggestion was then made of any dissolution of partnership having taken place. The reception of this evidence being objected to, on the ground that the communication was one between solicitor and client, and privileged : the evidence was received, but the question of whether it was properly received was reserved for this court :—Held, that the evidence was properly received. Cromack v. Heathcote (2 Br. & B. 4 ; 22 R. R. 638) ; Rex v. Smith (1 Phil. & Arn. on Evidence, 118) ; and Doe v. Harris (5 Car. & P. 592), overruled. Follett v. Jefferyes (1 Sim. (N.S.) 1) ; Russell v. Jackson (9 Hare, 387) ; and Gartside v. Outram (26 L. J., Ch. 113), approved. Ib.

A solicitor ordered to be examined against his client in a case of fraud. Cutts v. Pickering, 3 Ch. Rep. 66.

Where relief is sought in respect of a fraud, there must, in order to take the case out of the rule of privilege, be at least a specific, allegation in the bill, connecting with the fraud the solicitor of the person who was a party thereto, although such person be deceased. Charlton v. Coombes, 32 L. J., Ch. 284 ; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 534 ; 8 L. T. 81 ; 11 W. R. 504 : 1 N. R. 547.

Where, therefore, a bill alleged that a person deceased had been party to a fraud and prayed relief in respect thereof, and the solicitor of such person, being called as a witness, demurred to questions put to him before the examiner upon the ground of privilege, the court allowed the demurrer, there being no specific allegation in the bill connecting the solicitor with the fraud complained of. Ib.

Forgery.]—A. took a forged will to B., a solicitor, and asked him to advance money on a mortgage of the property mentioned in the will. B. made no charge for the interview, and did not advance the money :—Held, not a privileged communication. Reg. v. Farley, 1 Den. C. C. 197 ; 2 Car. & K. 313.

A prisoner was indicted for forging a will. The forged instrument had been given by him to his attorney, ostensibly for professional purposes, but in the opinion of the judge with some very different object. An objection that it was a privileged communication, and therefore could not be read :—Held invalid. Reg. v. Jones, 1 Den. C. C. 166 ; 2 Car. & K. 234.

An attorney is not obliged to give evidence on a charge of forgery against his client. Rex v. Dixon, 3 Burr. 1687.

A., an attorney was employed by B., as his solicitor, to put out money upon mortgage. C. applied to A. as his solicitor to procure him an advance on mortgage. C. stated to A. that he was owner of certain freehold lands, and produced a forged will in proof of his title, which he placed in the hands of A. B. advanced the money, A. acting as his solicitor, by preparing the mortgage deeds, &c.:—Held, that on the trial of C. for uttering the forged will, A. was bound to produce the will, and also to give evidence of what C. said to him as to the advance of the money. Reg. v. Avery, 8 Car. & P. 596.

And see Rex v. Hayward, 2 Car. & K. 234; 2 Cox C. C. 23.

False Pretences.]—A letter written by a solicitor for a client making a claim for a lost parcel alleged to contain valuable articles, is not inadmissible on the ground of privilege in a criminal case. But in order to make a client criminally responsible for a letter written by his solicitor it must be shewn that the letter was written in pursuance of the instructions of the client. A letter by a solicitor written "in consequence" of an interview with his client is not equivalent to a letter written by the instructions of the client, and is not admissible in a criminal case against the client. Reg. v. Downer, 43 L. T. 445.

Same Solicitor Employed by Two Clients.]—Where two parties in dispute have one attorney, a communication by one to him in his common capacity is not privileged, and may be used by the other. Baugh v. Cradocke, 1 M. & Rob. 182. S. P., Cleave v. Powell, 1 M. & Rob. 228.

A solicitor acting for two clients in a matter is privileged, upon examination before the court, from disclosing to one client professional instructions given to him by the other. Ubsdell, In re, 27 L. T. 460; 21 W. R. 70.

A. having a claim against B., they went together to the office of A.'s attorney, who had never acted as attorney for B. A statement was made by B. relating to A.'s claim, and it was arranged that the attorney should, on behalf of B., write to a third party in respect of the subject-matter of the claim. An action having been afterwards brought by A. against B.:—Held, that the statement by B. was not a privileged communication. Shore v. Bedford, 5 Man. & G. 271; 12 L. J., C. P. 138. And see Eadie v. Addison, ante, col. 926.

Held, also that the letter, being an act done, might be proved by the attorney. Ib.

Joint Adventure by Two Persons—Statements by One to Solicitor of the Other.]—Where two persons, each employing his own solicitor, are engaged in a joint adventure, and one of them, who is desirous of retiring from the adventure, suggests that his solicitor should be consulted by his co-adventurer in regard to the matter, the statements made at an interview with his solicitor by or to the co-adventurer are privileged, and cannot be admitted as evidence against him in an action by a third person brought in connection with the joint adventure. Semble, statements made at joint consultations between parties and their counsel or their solicitors would be similarly privileged. Rochefoucauld v. Boustead, 65 L. J., Ch. 794; 74 L. T. 783.

Trust Business.]—In an action by a cestui que trust against his trustee, a communication made by him to an attorney, who had been employed by him in the matters of the trust, and only relating to such matters, is not privileged. Shean v. Philips, 1 F. & F. 449.

Proposition of Compromise.] — The plaintiff may call the former attorney of the defendant to prove an offer by him, on the part of his client, to settle the account, and to pay a sum of money as due to the plaintiff. Turner v. Railton, 2 Esp. 474.

A witness may be called upon by the plaintiff to state a conversation, in which the defendant proposed a compromise to the plaintiff, although the witness attended on that occasion as attorney for the defendant. Griffith v. Davies, 5 B. & Ad. 502.

An offer made by the attorney of the defendant's father, is no evidence against the defendant, and the fact of the defendant afterwards employing the same attorney makes no difference. Burghart v. Angerstein, 6 Car. & P. 690.

Where the clerk of the plaintiff's attorney went to the defendant's attorney for the object of effecting a compromise, and what he said was said with the wish of effecting it:—Held, that all that passed was privileged as being a negotiation to bring about a compromise. Jardine v. Sheridan, 2 Car. & P. 24.

In a discussion between the attorneys of the plaintiff and defendant touching the dispensing with certain witnesses at the trial, the plaintiff's attorney stated to the defendant's attorney that the debt was owing from the late husband of the defendant:—Held, that such statement could not be given in evidence against the plaintiff. Petch v. Lyon, 9 Q. B. 147; 15 L. J., Q. B. 393.

A. having a demand upon B., B., before A. commenced his action, employed C., his attorney, to make certain propositions to A. upon the matters in difference between them; C. cannot be examined as to what B. said upon the occasion, for this is to be considered as a privileged communication between attorney and client; but what C. said when he made the propositions to A. is good evidence against B., without further proof of C. being authorised by him than the fact of C. being his attorney. Gainsford v. Grammar, 2 Camp. 9; 11 R. R. 648.

A letter from one of the parties, proposing a compromise, is not a privileged communication, if tendered as evidence that a compromise had actually been effected. Collier v. Nokes, 2 Car. & K. 1012.

An offer to accept a given sum in payment of a claim, on condition that the amount of the claim is not to be questioned, is not a negotiation for a compromise, and therefore admissible. Burchall v. Spottiswoode, 3 Car. & K. 302.

A debtor being in prison wrote to the town agents of his creditors' attorneys requesting them to send a confidential clerk to him, with whom he might communicate as to his creditor's claim:—Held, in an action by the creditors to recover the claim, that what the debtor said to the person who went to him in consequence of his letter was receivable in evidence, even though the subject-matter of the communications was an offer of 10*s.* in the £. Hill v. Elliott, 5 Car. & P. 436.

To what Persons the Doctrine applies.]—The privilege is confined to counsel, solicitors, and attorneys when acting in their respective characters. Wilson v. Rastall, 4 Term Rep. 753 ; 2 R. R. 515.

The agent of the defendant's attorney cannot be examined as to communications with the defendant on the subject of the action, in order to prove his identity. Parkins v. Hawkshaw, 2 Stark. 239 ; 19 R. R. 711.

If a party goes to C., who is neither an attorney nor pretended to be one, to ask him to make a conveyance of some property, and C. writes to a relation of his who was an attorney, and on receiving his relation's answer, informs the party that she cannot convey, this is not a privileged communication. Doe d. Pritchard v. Roe, 8 Car. & P. 99.

An interpreter, who is present at conversations between a foreigner and his attorney, is bound to the same secrecy as the attorney himself, and ought not to divulge the facts confided to him, after the cause for the purpose of which the confidence was placed is at an end. Du Barre v. Livette, 1 Peake, 108 ; 3 R. R. 655.

The rule respecting privileged communications extends to an attorney's clerk acting on behalf of his master, as well as to the attorney himself. Taylor v. Foster, 2 Car. & P. 195 ; 31 R. R. 659.

But an attorney's clerk is not privileged from answering whether he has received a particular paper from the client. Eicke v. Nokes, M. & M. 303.

A conversation between a client, who afterwards becomes bankrupt, and his attorney's clerk, on the subject of his affairs, is a privileged communication, and cannot be given in evidence in an action by his assignees, for the purpose of shewing his motives. Bowman v. Norton, 5 Car. & P. 177.

An articled clerk to an attorney, who is bound by his articles to keep all his master's secrets, is at liberty to give in evidence statements of his master not made under a charge of secrecy, nor affecting the interests of his master's clients, though the disclosure may go to support a civil action against the master. Webb v. Smith, 1 Car. & P. 337 ; R. & M. 106.

A person to whom a party, supposing him to be an attorney, makes confidential communications respecting his cause, is bound to give evidence of them, if called as a witness ; attorneys only being privileged as to not being bound to disclose the secrets of their clients. Fountain v. Young, 6 Esp. 113.

An attorney will be prevented from communicating his client's secrets even after he is struck off the roll. Cholmondeley (Earl) v. Clinton (Lord), 19 Ves. 268 ; 13 R. R. 183.

The privilege of not disclosing communications between solicitor and client belongs to the client alone and his representatives as against third parties, not inter se. Gresley v. Mousley, 2 Kay & J. 288 ; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 156.

Defendant having examined B., his clerk in court, plaintiff exhibited interrogatories to cross-examine him, to which he demurred, for that he knew nothing but as defendant's clerk in court, or agent. Demurrer overruled, as covering too much, for it ought to conclude, that he knew nothing but by the information of his client. Vaillant v. Dodemead, 2 Atk. 524. S. C. nom. Valiant v. Dodemead, Dick. 92.

Where at law the party calls upon his attorney as a witness, the other side may cross-examine him to the point in the cause. Ib.

Counsel, solicitor, or attorney may be privileged from being examined in such cases, but not an agent. Ib.

Demurrer to examination, as being counsel for the opposite party, was overruled, for that what he knew was as a conveyancer only. Ib.

The communications by an agent sent abroad by a solicitor to collect evidence in aid of an action, will be protected as confidential, equally with the communications of a solicitor or solicitor's clerk. Steel v. Stewart, 13 Sim. 533 ; 12 L. J., Ch. 473.

Address of Client.]—A solicitor is not protected from disclosing the residence of his client by the circumstance that it became known to him only in his character of solicitor. To be entitled to claim such a protection, the client's residence must have been made known to him in professional confidence for the purpose of obtaining professional advice. Campbell, Ex parte, Cathcart, In re, L. R. 5 Ch. 703 ; 23 L. T. 289 ; 18 W. R. 1056.

The court will not make an order upon a solicitor compelling him to disclose the address of his client, a defendant who has absconded, and whom the plaintiff seeks to serve with a subpœna duces tecum to compel his appearance at the hearing with documents material to the plaintiff's case. Heath v. Crealock, 42 L. J., Ch. 455 ; L. R. 15 Eq. 257 ; 28 L. T. 101 ; 21 W. R. 380.

A female who had been employed by the defendant to take care of his house, but who had subsequently left it, brought an action against him for breach of promise of marriage. The defendant had threatened to proceed criminally against her on a charge of taking away some of his property from the house. The court refused to compel the plaintiff's attorney to disclose her place of residence, as the defendant knew who she was, and had avowed he sought the information with the view of effecting her arrest on the criminal charge. Harris v. Holler, 7 D. & L. 319 ; 19 L. J., Q. B. 62.

But the court or a judge will compel a plaintiff's attorney to disclose the place of abode of his client, notwithstanding that one object of the defendant in requiring the information is, that he may be enabled to arrest the plaintiff under a writ of attachment. Cox v. Bockett, 18 C. B. (N.S.) 239 ; 34 L. J., C. P. 125 ; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 88 ; 11 L. T. 629 ; 13 W. R. 292.

A bill was filed against A., B. and C. All the defendants appeared by the same solicitor, and put in a joint answer. The bill amended. The solicitor accepted service for A. and B., who answered the interrogatories to the amended bill, but declined to accept service for C., or to disclose his address, on the ground that the plaintiff's object was to ascertain C.'s address in order to serve process upon him in an action at law in an independent matter :—The court ordered the time for filing replication, or giving notice of motion for decree, to be enlarged till C. should put in his answer ; but made no order for the solicitor to disclose C.'s address. Clark v. Compton, 4 N. R. 15.

A client's address, communicated to his solicitor when applying to him for advice, is privileged from disclosure unless the solicitor and his client were jointly engaged in the commission of some wrongful act, and the address was communicated to the solicitor while so engaged. On the 31st July the debtor departed from his dwelling-house, and took with him all his furniture. On the 1st August he had an interview with his solicitor, who was at that time unaware that an act of bankruptcy had been committed. On the 4th October the debtor communicated by letter with his solicitor. In the proceedings that ensued the solicitor's clerk was examined as a witness, and declined to disclose the debtor's address, on the ground that it had been communicated confidentially to him, as the debtor's solicitor, for the purpose of advising his client in reference to these proceedings, and that such address had not been, so far as he believed, communicated by the debtor to the rest of the world. On application being made to compel the witness to disclose the address:—Held, that the address was under the circumstances a privileged communication, and as such need not be disclosed. Official Receiver, Ex parte, Arnott, In re, 60 L. T. 109; 37 W. R. 223; 5 Morrell, 286.

As Attesting Witness.]—A solicitor employed to obtain the execution of a deed, and who is one of the witnesses, is not precluded, on the ground of a breach of professional confidence, from giving evidence as to what passed at the time of execution, by which the deed may be proved invalid. Crawcour v. Salter, 18 Ch. D. 30; 45 L. T. 62.

A person devised real property to his widow for life, and after her death to his children equally, with a power to the widow to mortgage or sell, in case the fund arising from the real and personal estate of the testator was not sufficient for her maintenance. The widow executed a mortgage of the property for 30*l.* to her son T., and it was proved that four years before the mortgage, T. advanced his mother a sum less than 1*l.* to pay a poor-rate that she was unable to pay. The subscribing witness to the mortgage deed had acted as attorney both of the widow and T. respecting it:—Held, that, on the trial of an ejectment by the administratrix of T., to recover the property under the deed, the subscribing witness might be cross-examined to shew that the sum of 30*l.* mentioned in the deed, and in the receipt at the back of it, was never in fact advanced. Doe d. Salt v. Carr, Car. & M. 123.

Collateral Matters.]—An attorney is not privileged from giving evidence of collateral facts; therefore, he may be obliged to prove that his client swore to and signed an answer, upon which the latter is indicted for perjury. Doe d. Jupp, v. Andrews, Cowp. 845.

The right of an attorney to refuse to disclose matters with which he had become acquainted in the course of his employment as such, does not extend to matters of fact which he knows by any other means than confidential communication with his client, though, if he had not been employed as attorney, he probably would not have known them; therefore an attorney of a party to a suit is bound to answer, on a trial, whether a particular document belonging to his client is in his possession, and is then in court. Dwyer v. Collins, 7 Ex. 639; 21 L. J., Ex. 225; 16 Jur. 569.

An attorney is not justified in refusing to answer questions on the ground of privilege, unless the questions relate to matters communicated to him in his capacity of legal adviser. Hawley, In re, 1 W. R. 128.

Knowledge which an attorney obtains in the course of his retainer as such, of the state of a deed, e.g. whether when shewn to him by his client it was stamped or not, is privileged. Wheatley v. Williams, 2 Gale, 140; 1 M. & W. 533; 5 L. J., Ex. 237.

A knowledge of a client's handwriting, obtained by his attorney from having witnessed his execution of the bail-bond in the action, is not a confidential knowledge, so as to privilege the attorney from answering when called on the part of the plaintiff, to prove the defendant's handwriting on the trial. Hurd v. Moring, 1 Car. & P. 372.

No breach of confidence in a solicitor to prove client's handwriting: he is bound to do so if called upon. Bowles v. Stewart, 1 Sch. & Lef. 226.

An attorney is not restrained from any rule of law from giving evidence of a conversation between him and his client, touching the justice of his suit, after a writ of inquiry executed on an interlocutory judgment, and a compromise thereupon: for the purpose of the suit having been obtained, the communication could not be said to have been made by way of instruction for conducting his cause. Cobden v. Kendrick, 4 Term Rep. 431; 2 R. R. 424.

A communication made by a client to his attorney to obtain information as to a matter of fact, and not for the purpose of asking him his legal advice, is not privileged. Bramwell v. Lucas, 4 D. & R. 367; 2 B. & C. 745; 2 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 161.

An attorney is bound to disclose, when called as a witness by the adverse party, the contents of a notice which he has received to produce a paper in the hands of his client. Spenceley v. Schulenberg, 7 East, 357; 3 Smith, 325.

What a mortgagor, in treaty to raise money, says to the attorney of the mortgagee, is not a privileged communication. Marston v. Downes, 4 N. & M. 861; 6 Car. & P. 381; 1 A. & E. 31; 3 L. J., K. B. 158.

An attorney is bound to give evidence of a statement made by himself to the adverse party by the direction of his client. Ripon v. Davies, 2 N. & M. 310.

A bill was filed to set aside a deed, on the ground of alterations having been improperly made in it after execution. A defendant examined the solicitor of a plaintiff as a witness to prove communications between them, showing that the solicitor was aware of the alteration in the deed. To the interrogatory on this point the witness demurred, because he alleged that it inquired about matters only known to him as a solicitor for the plaintiff:—Held, that this could not protect him from the necessity of disclosing his communications with the defendant. Gore v. Harris, 15 Jur. 1168.

A solicitor cannot object to prove a distinct fact, as, for instance, the execution of a deed for the benefit of third parties, though, by so doing, he may injure the interests of his client. Tristram v. Roberts, 10 Jur. 125.

But, where a solicitor was asked whether his client had waived objections to title:—Held, that as such a waiver might be the result of a course of conduct, or series of transactions, he was not bound to answer the question. Ib.

An attorney held bound to discover when and to whom he parted with documents of title of his client, and in whose possession the same were. Banner v. Jackson, 1 De G. & Sm. 472.

An attorney cannot, on the grounds of professional confidence, refuse to answer an interrogatory, as to his having seen a certain instrument; and if so, when and in whose hands

O'Gorman v. M'Namara, Hayes, 174; and see id. note (a).

Demurrer by a witness examined by the plaintiff, on the ground that he had been the solicitor of some of the defendants, and that the interrogatory required the disclosure of confidential communication, overruled, the witness being bound to produce letters communicated to him from collateral quarters to which the interrogatory pointed, and to answer questions seeking information as to matters of fact, as distinguished from confidential communications. Sawyer v. Birchmore, 3 Myl. & K. 572.

The solicitor of a purchaser of an estate from the bankrupt, ordered to attend the commissioners for the purpose of being examined; without prejudice to any question of privilege. Hodgson, Ex parte, 2 Glyn & J. 21.

The attorney of the party benefited by the will, and who prepared it:—Held, not privileged, on the ground of professional confidence, from answering as to contemporaneous acts of the testatrix, upon which he founded his opinion as to her testamentary capacity. Jones v. Goodrich, 5 Moore, P. C. 16.

Attorney examined as a witness must disclose acts done in his presence by his client, as execution of a deed, &c. not private confidential conversation with him, as the reasons for making it, etc., on motion to suppress the depositions referred to see what part came to his knowledge as confidential attorney, in order to have that suppressed. Sandford v. Remington, 2 Ves. J. 189; 2 R. R. 195.

Solicitor of plaintiff to be examined, except as to things in his knowledge as solicitor. Kelway v. Kelway, Cary, 89.

A direction given by a client to his attorney, or his clerk, to send a particular person, not a sheriff's officer, with the sheriff, to point out the person to be arrested under a capias ad satisfaciendum, is not a privileged communication. Caldbeck v. Boon, Ir. R. 7 C. L. 32.

Judgment having been signed against a married woman in an action, an inquiry was directed before a master whether she was possessed of any separate estate. The solicitor to the trustees of her marriage settlement, being subpœnaed by the judgment creditor upon the inquiry as a witness, and to produce documents, stated that the deed of settlement was in his possession as solicitor to the trustees, but refused to state the names of the trustees or produce the deed on the ground of professional privilege:—Held, that he must state the names of the trustees and produce the deed. Bursill v. Tanner, 55 L. J., Q. B. 53; 16 Q. B. D. 1; 53 L. T. 445; 34 W. R. 35—C. A.

The answer to an interrogatory confined to the point on which the party's solicitor was produced is admissible, though he gained his information as solicitor. King's Proctor v. Daines, 3 Hag. Ec. 235.

As to Retainer.]—The fact of the retainer of counsel or attorney is not a privileged communication. Forshaw v. Lewis, 1 Jur. (N.S.) 263.

The attorney conducting a cause in court may be called as a witness by the opposite side, and asked who employs him, in order to shew the real party, and to let in his declarations. Levy v. Pope, M. & M. 410; 31 R. R. 743.

At a private examination of the solicitor to a debtor the solicitor was in effect asked when he was first employed by the debtor:—Held, that he could not decline to answer on the ground that he would disclose communications made to him for the purpose of obtaining his professional advice. Trustee, Ex parte, Wells, In re, 9 Morrell, 116.

Consent of Client.]—Confidential communications to an attorney being the privilege of the client may be disclosed if he consents. Merle v. More, 1 R. & M. 390.

Lien.]—Where a witness in a cause, who had been the solicitor of the plaintiff, declines to answer an interrogatory concerning documents in his possession, on the ground that he has a lien on them for costs, the court (there being no danger of perjury in the case) will permit a new interrogatory to the same intent as the former to be exhibited to him, though publication had passed. Bloss v. O'More, Hay. & J. 337.

Interrogatories.]—See DISCOVERY.

b. Tendency to Criminate.

Power of Judge.]—Where a witness refuses to answer a question put to him on the ground that his answer might tend to criminate himself, his mere statement of his belief that his answer will have that effect is not enough to excuse him from answering, but the court must be satisfied, from the circumstances of the case and the nature of the evidence which the witness is called upon to give, that there is reasonable ground to apprehend danger to him from his being compelled to answer. But if it is once made to appear that the witness is in danger, great latitude should be allowed to him in judging for himself of the effect of any particular question. Subject, however, to that reservation, the judge is bound to insist on the witness answering, unless he is satisfied that the answer will tend to place him in peril. Reynolds, Ex parte, Reynolds, In re, 51 L. J., Ch. 756; 20 Ch. D. 294; 46 L. T. 508; 30 W. R. 651; 46 J. P. 533—C. A.

Witness presumed to know Rules of Law.]—The witness's knowledge of the law enabling him to decline to answer criminating questions must be presumed, on the maxim, ignorantia juris non excusat. Reg. v. Coote, 9 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 463; 42 L. J., P. C. 45; L. R. 4 P. C. 599; 29 L. T. 111; 21 W. R. 553.

The 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, s. 18, requiring magistrates to caution the accused with respect to statements he may make in answer to the charge is not applicable to witnesses asked questions tending to criminate them. Ib.

Only Witness can take advantage of.]—The privilege of refusing to answer questions on the ground that they tend to criminate, is that of the witness alone, and neither party to the suit can take any advantage therefrom. Reg. v. Kinglake, 22 L. T. 335; 18 W. R. 805.

A party to an action may be put in the box and sworn, although the counsel for such party objects that the questions intended to be put to him will criminate him, and that he will object to answer them. It is for the party himself to make such objection. Boyle v. Wiseman, 10 Ex. 647; 3 C. L. R. 482; 24 L. J., Ex. 160; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 115; 3 W. R. 206.

Counsel have no right to make the objection, but it must be made by the witness himself. Thomas v. Newton, M. & M. 48, n.

Nor can counsel argue in support of the witness's objection. Rex v. Adey, 1 M. & Rob. 94.

The court will not refuse leave to deliver interrogatories on the ground that the attorney of the party proposed to be interrogated swears that the questions, if answered, may tend to criminate his client. If they have that tendency the objection must be taken by the client on oath. Osborn v. London Dock Co., 10 Ex. 698; 3 C. L. R. 313; 24 L. J., Ex. 140; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 93.

Answer "might tend to Criminate."]—In an act on for false and malicious libel the plaintiff delivered interrogatories to prove the publication. The defendant in his answer objected to answer, on the ground that to do so "might tend to criminate" him:—Held, a sufficient answer. Lamb v. Munster, 52 L. J., Q. B. 46; 47 L. T. 442; 31 W. R. 117. See Sidebottom v. Adkins, post, col. 939.

Criminate—"Would tend."]—A witness is not only not bound to answer a question the answer to which would criminate him, but he is not bound to answer any question the answer to which would tend to criminate him. Cates v. Hardacre, 3 Taunt. 424; 12 R. R. 678. S. P., Macbride v. Macbride, 4 Esp. 243; Rex v. Lewis, 4 Esp. 225.

If a witness claims the protection of the court on the ground that the answer would tend to criminate himself, and there appears reasonable ground to believe that it would do so, he cannot be compelled to answer. Reg. v. Garbett, 1 Den. C. C. 236; 2 Car. & K. 474; 2 Cox, C. C. 448.

If compelled notwithstanding, what he says after such claim must be considered to have been obtained by compulsion and cannot be given in evidence against him. Ib.

He is entitled to protection at whatever stage of the inquiry he chooses to claim it; he is equally entitled to protection, whether he has already answered the question in part or not at all; and no answer forced from him by the presiding judge (after such a claim) can be afterwards given in evidence against him. Ib.

Whether the mere declaration of a witness on oath that he believes that his answer would tend to criminate him would or would not be sufficient to protect him from answering, where sufficient other circumstances did not appear in the case to induce the judge to believe that the answer would tend to criminate the witness, quære. Ib.

The privilege of a witness in not answering questions which may tend to criminate him is not limited to cases where he has been guilty of an offence; it is sufficient if the answer would disclose circumstances connected with the commission of a crime which he might not be able to explain, and would induce those who heard him to fix him as the guilty party. Adams v. Lloyd, 3 H. & N. 351; 27 L. J., Ex. 499; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 590; 6 W. R. 752.

In order to protect himself from answering upon the ground that a discovery of the matters inquired after would expose, or tend to expose, him to penalties, a defendant must state upon oath his belief that such would be the case. Scott v. Miller, Johnson, 328; 28 L. J., Ch. 584; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 858; 7 W. R. 561.

Exceptions therefore allowed to an answer in the following form: I submit that I am not bound to discover "certain matters specified," because the discovery of such matters would or might shew or tend to shew, that, under the provisions of the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, I am liable to "certain specified penalties"; the defendant not stating his own belief upon the subject. Ib.

Where a question is in form an innocent one, it is not a sufficient ground of refusal for a witness to say that he believes his answer to such a question will or may criminate him; but he must satisfy the court that there is a reasonable probability that it would or might do so. Gilbert, Ex parte, Genese, In re, 3 Morrell, 223.

Whatever the rule may be as to the right of a witness to decline answering a question, on the ground that it may tend to criminate him, without giving any reason why it should tend to do so, he will be compelled to answer where he gives his reason and such reason is insufficient. Aston's Case, 4 De G. & J. 320; 28 L. J., Ch. 631; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 779; 7 W. R. 539.

Where Judge may compel Answer.]—But the rule is subject to exception, where the state of things disclosed renders the judge perfectly certain that in claiming protection the witness is trifling with the authority of the court, and availing himself of the rule of law to keep back the truth, having in reality no ground for the excuse he is making in not answering the question. Adams v. Lloyd, 3 H. & N. 351; 27 L. J., Ex. 499; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 590; 6 W. R. 752.

Semble, per Jervis, C.J., and Maule, J., that it is for the witness to say, on oath, whether he believes the answer may tend to criminate him, and that his decision is conclusive. Fisher v. Ronalds, infra.

No man can be compelled to criminate himself. Parkhurst v. Lowten, 2 Swanst. 214; 19 R. R. 63.

Nature of Liability.]—In an action for a libel in the shape of an extra-judicial affidavit sworn before a magistrate, a person acting as the magistrate's clerk is not bound to answer whether, by the defendant's orders, he wrote the affidavit and delivered it to the magistrate, as he might thereby criminate himself. Maloney v. Bartley, 3 Camp. 210.

A witness is, therefore, not bound to answer whether he wrote an advertisement referring to libellous letters which the prosecutor has received; and though he is bound to answer whether he knows in whose handwriting it is, he is not bound to name the person, as it may be himself. Rex v. Slaney, 5 Car. & P. 213.

A witness (called to prove that a bill of exchange was given for money lost at play) having said that he was present in a room in his own house when the transaction was alleged to have taken place, but that he saw no gaming, being asked, "was there a roulette table in the room?" and on being cautioned by the judge, declined to answer, on the ground that his answer might tend to criminate him in a prosecution for keeping a gaming-house, is privileged from answering. Fisher v. Ronalds, 12 C. B. 762; 22 L. J., C. P. 62; 17 Jur. 393; 1 W. R. 54.

A witness asked whether he has not been imprisoned on a conviction for forging coal-meters' certificates is not bound to answer. Millman v. Tucker, Peake, Ad. C. 222.

A defendant is not, as a general rule, at liberty to decline to answer interrogatories, upon his mere statement upon oath that such answer might subject him to prosecution. The court will decide whether, under the circumstances, such a statement ought to be considered conclusive. Judgment in Fisher v. Ronalds (17 Jur. 393) observed upon. Sidebottom v. Adkins, 3 Jur. (N.S.) 631; 5 W. R. 743.

Witness not compelled to answer interrogatories having a direct tendency to subject him to penalties, &c., or having such a connection with them as to form a step towards it. Paxton v. Douglas, 16 Ves. 239.

Witness obliged to give testimony, though it affects his civil rights. Chamberlain, Ex parte, 19 Ves. 482.

The admission of a witness that he is a member of a religious sect who hold a certain principle as a body, which, if acknowledged individually, would subject him to excommunication ipso facto by the 12th Canon of 1603:—Held, insufficient to disable him from giving evidence in the suit; and quære, if excommunication ipso facto (if not absolutely abolished by statute 53 Geo. 3, c. 127), disables a party from being a witness until absolved. Escott v. Martin, 4 Moore, P. C. 104; 6 Jur. 765.

Demurrer by a witness to answering interrogatories, on the ground that he might subject himself to penalties, allowed. Such a demurrer may be allowed partially. A demurrer by a witness to two interrogatories was allowed as to one, and overruled as to the other. The court gave the witness half the costs of the demurrer. Daris v. Reid, 5 Sim. 443.

Demurrer to interrogatory by witness on account of its tendency to render him liable to penalty should state particularly the objectionable parts of the interrogatories. Jackson v. Benson, 1 Y. & J. 32.

Bankruptcy—Bankrupt must Answer.]—A bankrupt was examined before a commissioner, and asked various questions respecting the writing of a false letter in his father's name for the purpose of getting additional credit from persons with whom he traded. He made no objection to answering the questions on the ground that they tendered to criminate him, or on any other ground:—Held, that the examination was not compulsory, as touching the estate or dealings of the bankrupt; and that, as he might have objected to it and did not, it was a voluntary statement, and admissible against him upon his trial subsequently on the criminal charge of uttering a forged letter. Reg. v. Sloggett, Dears. C. C. 656; 25 L. J., M. C. 93; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 764; 4 W. R. 487; 7 Cox, C. C. 139.

The examination of a bankrupt as to his trade dealings and effects, lawfully taken under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 117, is admissible against him on a criminal charge arising out of the very matters as to which he was so examined. Reg. v. Cross, Dears. & B. 68; 7 Cox, C. C. 226.

A bankrupt is bound to answer all questions touching matters relating to his trade dealing or estate, or which may tend to disclose any secret grant, conveyance, or concealment of his lands, tenements, goods, money, or debts, although his answers may criminate himself, and such answers may afterwards be given in evidence against him upon a criminal charge. Reg. v. Scott, Dears & B. 47; 25 L. J., M. C. 128; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1096; 4 W. R. 777; 7 Cox, C. C. 164. S. P., Reg. v. Robinson, 36 L. J., M. C. 78; L. R. 2 C. C. 80; 16 L. T. 605; 15 W. R. 966; 10 Cox, C. C. 467.

The bankrupt being under a personal obligation to make a full disclosure of his property to his creditors, must answer all questions put to him about his property, whatever the consequences to himself may be. Scholefield, Ex parte, Firth, In re, 46 L. J., Bk. 112; 6 Ch. D. 230; 37 L. T. 281; 26 W. R. 9—C. A.

A bankrupt is bound to disclose his property, although his answer may tend to convict him of concealing his effects. Feaks, In re, 2 Deac. & C. 226; Mont. & B. 215.

A bankrupt is bound to answer touching his estate, although his answer may tend to convict him of perjury on a former occasion, and of concealing his effects. Cross, J., dissent. on the ground of the assignee's motive in putting the question. Smith, In re, 2 Deac. & C. 230; Mont. & B. 203; 2 L. J., Bk. 33.

Semble, a plaintiff is bound to disclose his property although an indictment is pending against him for concealing it, &c., and although his answer may tend to criminate him. Heath, In re, 2 Deac. & C. 214; Mont. & B. 184; 2 L. J., Bk. 27.

Where a bankrupt has sold goods to a party for a price considerably lower than what he gave for them, the purchaser, when summoned before the commissioner for examination, is bound to answer the question, "To whom did you subsequently sell these goods?" for it materially concerns the estate of the bankrupt to ascertain whether the sale by him was bonâ fide. Falk, In re, 2 Deac. & C. 415.

—— But Witness may Refuse.]—A witness summoned for examination, under s. 96 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, as to the property of a bankrupt, is entitled to refuse to answer a question on the ground that his answer would tend to criminate himself. Scholefield, Ex parte, Firth, In re, supra.

Time for Refusal to Answer.]—A defendant or witness, if interrogated as to matters tending to criminate him, may decline to answer at any time, notwithstanding what he has disclosed may be sufficient to convict him. The decision in Ewin v. Oshaldiston (6 Sim. 608) disapproved of. Two Sicilies (King of) v. Willcox, 1 Sim. (N.S.) 301; 20 L. J., Ch. 417; 15 Jur. 214.

Inference.]—If a witness declines to answer a question, no inference of the truth of the fact inquired into may be drawn from that circumstance. Rose v. Blakemore, R. & M. 383.

Party demurring to the discovery, or witness refusing to answer facts tending to criminate himself, no admission to the truth of the fact. Lloyd v. Passingham, 16 Ves. 59.

Tending to Degrade.]—Questions tending to degrade a witness, without exposing him to punishment, may be put on cross-examination. Cundell v. Pratt, M. & M. 108.

The question whether the witness was not living in a state of incest cannot be put because it may subject her to punishment. Ib.

Waiver of Privilege.]—If a witness answers any question on a matter rendering himself liable to forfeiture or punishment, he cannot afterwards claim his privilege, but must answer throughout. East v. Chapman, M. & M. 47; 2 Car. & P. 570.

A witness who has given evidence on his examination in chief as to the truth of a libel may be asked on his cross-examination whether the MS. of the libel was not written by him, and he is bound to answer the question. Ib.

If a witness, being cautioned that he is not obliged to answer a question that may criminate him, still chooses to answer it, he is bound to answer all questions relative to that transaction, and cannot afterwards take an objection to any further question that has a tendency to criminate him. Dixon v. Vale, 1 Car. & P. 278.

If a witness answers questions to which he might have demurred as subjecting him to penalties, his answers may be used against him for all legal purposes. Smith v. Beadnell, 1 Camp. 30.

Pardon—Unfounded fears of Incrimination.]—A pardon, under the Great Seal, takes away the privilege of a witness in not answering, so far as regards any risk of prosecution at the suit, or in the name of the Crown. Reg. v. Boyes, 1 B. & S. 311; 2 F. & F. 157; 30 L. J., Q. B. 301; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 1158; 5 L. T. 147; 9 W. R. 690; 9 Cox, C. C. 32.

A merely remote and naked possibility of legal peril to a witness from answering a question is not sufficient to entitle him to the privilege of not answering; to entitle him to the privilege of silence the court must see, from the circumstances of the case and the nature of the evidence which he is called to give, that there is reasonable ground to apprehend danger to the witness from his being compelled to answer. Moreover, the danger to be apprehended must be real and appreciable, with reference to the ordinary operation of law in the ordinary course of things; not a danger of an imaginary and an unsubstantial character, having reference to some extraordinary and barely possible contingency, so improbable that no reasonable man would suffer it to influence his conduct. Ib.

On the trial of an information for bribery, filed by the attorney-general by the direction of the House of Commons, one of the persons charged in the information to have been bribed was called as a witness; and, on his declining to answer any questions with respect to the bribery, the counsel for the Crown handed him a pardon under the Great Seal; which the witness accepted, but still declined to answer:—Held, that the possible risk of impeachment by the House of Commons, notwithstanding the pardon under the Great Seal, according to 12 & 13 Will. 3, c. 2, s. 3, was not a sufficient ground to entitle him to the privilege of not answering. Ib.

A witness is not excused from answering a question on the ground that the conduct inquired into on his part would subject him to a penalty, if the time limited for proceeding for such penalty is past. Roberts v. Allatt, M. & M. 192. See Rex v. Reading, 7 Howell's St. Tr. 296.

Punishment for not Answering.]—A witness, who, on a trial, refuses to answer a question duly put to him, on the ground that the answer would tend to criminate himself, and persists in his refusal after being told by the judge that he sees no ground for the witness to apprehend danger from answering the question, is liable to fine and commitment for contempt of court. Fernandez, Ex parte, 10 C. B. (N.S.) 3; 30 L. J., C. P. 321; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 571; 4 L. T. 324; 9 W. R. 832.

Examination by Commissioner.] — Commissioners have no right to ask questions, the answers to which may subject the witness to fine or other criminal punishment. Smith v. Beadnell, 1 Camp. 30.

c. Public Policy.

As to Affairs of State.]—Communications in official correspondence relating to matters of state cannot be produced in evidence in an action by an individual against a person holding an office, for an injury charged to have been done in the exercise of the power given to him as such officer; not only because such communications are confidential, but because their disclosure might betray secrets of state policy which might be injurious to the interests of the country; nor can an extract be admitted relating to the particular matter, because the whole must be read or none. Anderson v. Hamilton, 8 Price, 244, n.; 4 Moore, 593; 2 Br. & B. 156, n.; 22 R. R. 751, n.

Communications which take place between the governor of a distant province and his attorney-general are confidential, and if a witness is interrogated as to their substance in a court of justice, he is not bound to answer any questions respecting them. Wyatt v. Gore, Holt, N. P. 299.

In an action against the secretary of the Board of Trade for acts done by the board's servants, an order having been obtained for discovery of documents, he made an affidavit stating that he had, as secretary to the board, certain official documents in his official custody and control, and that he objected to state anything further with respect to them on the ground of public policy:—Held, that this was insufficient to establish the privilege claimed. Kain v. Farrer, 37 L. T. 469.

Semble, it is not enough to state, in a mere formal affidavit, that discovery is objected to on the ground of public policy; but it should appear that the mind of a responsible person has been brought to bear on the question of the expediency for the public interest of giving or refusing the information asked for. Ib.

In such an action, the defendant not having denied his responsibility for the acts of the servants of the board, possession of documents by the board which are under his official control is possession by himself. Ib.

When a collision occurs between one of the Queen's ships and a ship belonging to a private owner, and the captain of the Queen's ship makes (in accordance with the usual practice) a report to the Lords of the Admiralty, the Court of Admiralty will not, in a cause against the captain, in which an appearance has been entered by the Queen's proctor by order of the Lords of the Admiralty, order it to be produced for inspection by the opposite parties if the secretary to the Lords of the Admiralty makes an affidavit to the effect that such production would be prejudicial to the public service. H.M.S. Bellerophon, 44 L. J., Adm. 5; 31 L. T. 756; 23 W. R. 248.

A judge at nisi prius has no power to compel a witness to produce documents connected with affairs of state if their production would be injurious to the public service, and that question must be determined not by the judge but by the head of the department having the custody of the documents. Beatson v. Skene, 5 H. & N. 838; 29 L. J., Ex. 430; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 780; 2 L. T. 378; 8 W. R. 544.

An officer of the Tower will not be permitted to prove that a particular plan of the Tower produced is a correct one. Rex v. Watson, 2 Stark. 148.

Parliament.]—A member of parliament, or the Speaker, may be called upon to give evidence of the fact of a member of parliament having taken part or spoken in a particular debate. Plunkett v. Cobbett, 5 Esp. 137.

But he cannot be asked as to what the member delivered in the course of a debate. Ib.

On a trial, a member of parliament may be asked whether Mr. L. was Speaker of the House of Commons on a particular day; but if he be asked how a member voted, he will not be compelled to answer, if he declines doing so, and has not leave of the House to give evidence. Chubb v. Salomons, 3 Car. & K. 75.

To an action of slander the defendant pleaded that the statements complained of were part of the evidence given by him in a character of a witness before a select committee of the House of Commons:—Held, that the statements so made were privileged, and that the action would not lie. Goffin v. Donnelly, 50 L. J., Q. B. 303; 6 Q. B. D. 307; 44 L. T. 141; 29 W. R. 440; 45 J. P. 439.

Military Court.]—Where the commander-in-chief directed a military inquiry to be held to investigate the conduct of a commissioned officer in the army, who afterwards sued the president of such inquiry for a libel stated to be contained in his report:—Held, that such report was a privileged communication, and properly rejected as evidence at the trial. Home v. Bentinck (Lord), 2 Br. & B. 130; 4 Moore, 563; 22 R. R. 748.

No action will lie against a witness for what he says or writes when giving evidence before a court of justice. The rule is founded on principles of public policy. The same principle applies when a military man is bound to appear and give evidence before a military court of inquiry. Dawkins v. Rokeby (Lord), 45 L. J., Q. B. 8; L. R. 7 H. L. 744; 33 L. T. 196; 23 W. R. 931.

A military court of inquiry may not be strictly a judicial tribunal; but where such court has been assembled under the orders of the general commanding in chief, in conformity with the Queen's regulations for the government of the army, a witness who gives evidence thereat stands in the same position as a witness giving evidence before a judicial tribunal. Ib.

And see Dawkins v. Paulet (Lord), 9 B. & S. 768; 39 L. J., Q. B. 53; L. R. 5 Q. B. 94; 21 L. T. 584; 18 W. R. 336.

Letter to Insolvency Court.]—A letter written by an opposing creditor to the chief commissioner of the Insolvent Debtors' Court, previous to the hearing of an insolvent's case, is not a privileged communication. Gould v. Hulme, 3 Car. & P. 625.

Surveyor appointed by Court to report.]—A surveyor appointed by the parties, at the instance of the judge, to make a report, acts in a quasi-judicial capacity and ought not to be examined in the action. Broder v. Saillard, 24 W. R. 456.

Arbitrator.]—An arbitrator cannot be compelled to give evidence in a cause as to matters that occurred before him during the arbitration. Johnson v. Darwin, 4 Car. & P. 327; 2 B. & Ad. 925.

Where a cause has been referred, and the arbitrator, upon the inspection of the plaintiff's books and examination of the parties, finds that the plaintiff had no cause of action in an action for malicious prosecution, the arbitrator cannot be called as a witness to prove those facts. Habershon v. Troby, 3 Esp. 38; Peake, Ad. C. 181.

An arbitrator may be called to prove what matters were claimed before him on a reference. Martin v. Thornton, 4 Esp. 181.

An arbitrator may be called as a witness in an action to enforce his award. Buccleuch (Duke) v. Metropolitan Board of Works, 41 L. J., Ex. 137; L. R. 5 H. L. 418; 27 L. T. 1.

He may be asked questions as to what passed before him, and as to what matters were presented to him for consideration. Ib.

But no questions can be put to him as to what passed in his own mind when exercising his discretionary power on the matters submitted to him. Ib.

The former law and practice with regard to references to arbitration are not abolished by the Judicature Act, and consequently, where a cause is referred to an arbitrator for decision according to the old practice, the arbitrator cannot be called on to report to the court with regard to the matter referred to him, but his decision is final. Craikshank v. Floating Swimming Baths Co., 45 L. J., C. P. 684; 1 C. P. D. 260; 34 L. T. 733; 24 W. R. 644.

An order was made that a cause should be referred to the master, and that the subsequent proceedings should be continued and concluded according to the new practice:—Held, that the reference was not merely for report by the master under the new powers given by the Judicature Act, but for decision, and that the master could not be made to report to the court, but his decision was final. Ib.

The court will admit evidence of an arbitrator in explanation of his award; and when it appears from such evidence that there has been a mistake on his part, either as to the subject-matter referred to him, or in point of legal principle affecting the basis on which the award is made, the award will be set aside or referred back to the arbitrator. Dare Valley Ry., In re, 37 L. J., Ch. 719; L. R. 6 Eq. 429.

Protection of Informer.]—In an information by the attorney-general for a breach of the revenue laws, a witness for the Crown cannot be asked in cross-examination, "Did you give the information?" Att.-Gen. v. Bryant, 15 M. & W. 169; 15 L. J., Ex. 265.

For the rule of public policy which protects a witness from being asked such questions as would disclose the informer, if he is a third person, equally applies to questions which would disclose whether the witness is himself the informer. Ib.

Protection of Witness.]—A witness in a court of justice is absolutely privileged as to anything he may say as a witness having reference to the inquiry on which he is called as a witness. Seaman v. Netherclift, 46 L. J., C. P. 128; 2 C. P. D. 53; 35 L. T. 784; 25 W. R. 159—C. A.

An action will not lie against a witness for what he says when giving evidence before a court of justice. The same principle applies where a military man is bound to appear and give evidence before a military court of inquiry. Dawkins v. Rokeby (Lord), 45 L. J., Q. B. 8; L. R. 7 H. L. 744; 33 L. T. 196; 23 W. R. 931. See further DEFAMATION.

Grand Jurymen.]—A grand juryman may be examined, in an action for malicious prosecution, as to the fact whether the defendant was the prosecutor of the indictment. Sykes v. Dunbar, 2 Selw. N. P. 1059; 1 Camp. 202, n. S. P., Freeman v. Arkell, 1 Car. & P. 137; 3 D. & R. 669; 2 B. & C. 494.

Tax Collector.]—A collector of the property-tax is bound, when subpœnaed as a witness, to give evidence of all facts within his knowledge touching the matter in question, notwithstanding the oath against disclosure administered to him by the commissioners. Lee v. Birrell, 3 Camp. 337.

Acts of Agent.]—When the directions which have been given by a defendant to his agent cannot be read on the ground of public policy, the agent may be asked whether he did not act under the direction of the defendant. Cooke v. Maxwell, 2 Stark. 183; 19 R. R. 700.

Indecency.] — Indecency of evidence is no objection to its being received, when it is necessary to the decision of a civil or a criminal right. Da Costa v. Jones, Cowp. 729.

Legitimacy — Non-Access.] — See HUSBAND AND WIFE.

d. Other Grounds.

Non-Legal Confidence—Clergymen.]—Clergymen are bound to answer questions relating to matters confided to them in confession. Butler v. Moore, MacNally, 253.

Otherwise, by Best, C.J., in Broad v. Pitt, 3 Car. & P. 518; and by Alderson, B., in Reg. v. Griffin, 6 Cox, C. C. 219.

In a suit by the husband it appeared that, subsequently to the discovery by the petitioner of an alleged act of adultery between the respondent and co-respondent, the respondent had an interview with a clergyman, who, at the trial, was called as a witness on behalf of the petitioner, but objected, on the ground of privilege, to disclose the conversation or anything that took place at the interview. The court, however, overruled the objection, and held that the clergyman had no right to withhold the information. Normanshaw v. Normanshaw, 69 L. T. 468.

—— Romish Priest.] — A Roman Catholic priest called as a witness, on a trial for felony, is bound to answer the question from whom he received the property alleged to be stolen, although delivered to him by a party in connection with the confessional. Reg. v. Hay, 2 F. & F. 2.

—— Medical Men.]—Medical men are bound to reveal confidential communications made to them in their professional character as such. Rex v. Gibbons, 1 Car. & P. 97.

—— Bankers.]—The bankers of one of the parties in a cause is bound to answer what such party's balance was on a given day, as it is not a privileged communication. Lloyd v. Freshfield, 2 Car. & P. 325.

A letter by a mercantile agent to his principal, giving information respecting what the agent has actually done for, and on account of, the principal, is not privileged, although it is sent in compliance with the request of the principal, made after the principal has been threatened with litigation respecting the matter on which he requires information. Anderson v. Bank of British Columbia, 45 L. J., Ch. 449; 2 Ch. D. 644; 35 L. T. 76; 24 W. R. 624—C. A. Affirming decision of M.R., reported subsequently, 24 W. R. 724.

—— Steward.]—Communications to a steward by his employer respecting his affairs are not privileged from disclosure, like those to legal advisers. Falmouth v. Moss, 11 Price, 455; 25 R. R. 753.

—— Pursuivant of Heralds' College.]—A pursuivant of the Heralds' College is not in the position of a legal adviser, and communications passing between him and the person employing him in reference to pedigrees in the Heralds' College are not privileged, and he is entitled to be examined in reference thereto. Slade v. Tucker, 49 L. J., Ch. 644; 14 Ch. D. 824; 43 L. T. 49; 28 W. R. 807.

Irrelevancy.]—A witness cannot demur because the questions asked him are not pertinent to the matter in issue. Ashton v. Ashton, 1 Vern. 165.

Immateriality.]—A witness cannot object to answer a question because it relates to private matters, or because it is immaterial, unless the answer may be withheld on some ground of privilege. Tipping v. Coates, 6 Hare, 16; 17 L. J., Ch. 17; 11 Jur. 1075.

Defamatory to Third Party.]—Demurrer of a witness to interrogatories inquiring after matter defamatory to a third person, and not material in the cause, allowed. Mulgrave v. Dunbar (Lord), 2 Swanst. 198.

Prejudicial in other Action.]—An order had been made to wind up a company, and a special examiner appointed to take the evidence in the proceedings. B. was subpœnaed as a witness, but not by the company. He was asked whether he was a director of the company, and what was the nature of certain specified transactions in which he was engaged with particular persons. He refused to answer those questions on the grounds that they ought to have been put to him only in the presence of a jury, and that to answer them then might prejudice his success in two actions which he had commenced against the company. He then moved for an order to stay his further examination before the special examiner, and for leave to prosecute his actions, notwithstanding the pendency of the winding-up:—Held, that his examination could not be stopped, but that he might go on with his actions. Contract Corporation Co., In re, Bateman, Ex parte, 15 L. T. 263.

Solicitor — Retainer by other Side.]—The solicitor of the plaintiffs in the cause was served with a subpœna to attend and be examined before commissioners as a witness for the defendants, and he thereupon attended and delivered to the commissioners a written refusal to be examined, on the ground of his being professionally employed by the plaintiffs:—Held, that such document was not properly returned by the commissioners, and ought not to have been set down as a demurrer. Wisden v. Wisden, 6 Hare, 549.

9. Leading Questions.

What are.]—A witness, called to prove that A. and B. are partners, is asked whether A. has interfered in the business of B.: this is not a leading question. Nicholls v. Dowding, 1 Stark. 81; 18 R. R. 746.

In order to identify a person in court with one whom the witness has described, the attention of the witness may be directed to that person, and he may be asked if that is the person of whom he has spoken. Rex v. Watson, 2 Stark. 128. S. P., Rex v. De Berenger, 3 M. & S. 67.

A leading question may be put when it is necessary to contradict a witness on the other side, as to the contents of a paper which has been destroyed. Courteen v. Touse, 1 Camp. 43; 10 R. R. 627.

Where a witness on cross-examination denies having used particular expressions in the presence of the parties, the opposite counsel examining a person to contradict the witness is not at liberty to lead, by reading from his brief the words denied; the conversation spoken to by the first witness being evidence of itself. Hallett v. Cousins, 2 M. & Rob. 238.

The rules of evidence are exactly the same in civil and criminal cases; and in both it is in the discretion of the judge how far he will allow the examination in chief of a witness to be by leading questions, or to assume the form of a cross-examination. Reg. v. Murphy, 8 Car. & P. 297.

Cross-examination.]—Leading questions may always be put in cross-examination, whether the witness is a willing or an adverse one for the party calling him. Parkin v. Moon, 7 Car. & P. 408.

Alternative Question.]—An interrogatory put in the alternative, not pointing to one side of the question more than to the other:—Held, not to be leading, as it would be sometimes impossible otherwise to get an answer to the interrogatory. Aylward v. Kearney, 2 Ball & B. 463.

10. As to Contents of Written Documents.

Admissions.]—What a party says is evidence against himself as an admission, notwithstanding it may relate to the contents of a written paper. Earle v. Pickin, 5 Car. & P. 542.

In an action for goods sold and delivered, and on an account stated, a parol admission of the debt by the defendant is evidence under the account stated, though it appears that there was a written agreement relating to the goods. Newhall v. Holt, 6 M. & W. 662; 9 L. J., Ex. 293; 4 Jur. 610

When issue is joined on the contents of a deed, the plaintiff may give in evidence an admission by the defendant of the contents of that deed, without producing the deed itself, or accounting for its non-production. Slatterie v. Pooley, 6 M. & W. 664; 1 H. & W. 18; 10 L. J., Ex. 8; 4 Jur. 1038. S. P., Howard v. Smith, 3 Scott (N.R.) 574; 3 Man. & G. 254; 10 L. J., C. P. 245.

In an action against assignees to recover money wrongfully paid to them, the debt having been previously paid to the bankrupt, the latter stated, that, from looking at an entry of his own in the plaintiff's book, he had no doubt whatever he had received the money:—Held, sufficient proof of the payment without producing the book. Maughim v. Hubbard, 2 M. & Ry. 5; 8 B. & C. 84; 6 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 229.

Nature of Rule.]—A party who has executed a deed under a power of attorney will not be permitted to speak to its contents: the power of attorney ought to be produced. Johnson v. Mason, 1 Esp. 89.

A reporter to a newspaper, who is called as a witness, cannot be asked in cross-examination, whether, in articles which he has written in that newspaper, he has not called the opposite party by nicknames, as that is a part of the contents of the articles. Reg. v. Murphy, 8 Car. & P. 297.

A witness cannot be asked what the opposite party has said as to the contents of a deed executed by him, without such party has had notice to produce such deed. Bloxam v. Elsee, 1 Car. & P. 558; R. & M. 187; 30 R. R. 275.

A witness may be interrogated as to his examination of old records, and may state that they correspond in substance with a particular record, which has been read, without going through the whole in detail, subject, however, to a full cross-examination. Rowe v. Brenton, 3 M. & Ry. 212; 8 B. & C. 765.

In the absence of any evidence of the contents of a rate-book, the collector cannot be asked to say whether a particular person's name was on the rate, though he might be asked whether he had applied to him for it. Justice v. Elstob, 1 F. & F. 256.

A witness, who states that he had at one time received a number of letters from one of the parties in a cause, containing statements with reference to a particular fact, but which letters he had since destroyed, cannot be examined as to the general contents of such letters, for the purpose of ascertaining the impression thereby produced in his mind with reference to the fact in question. Topham v. M'Gregor, 1 Car. & K. 320.

On the trial of an action for piracy of musical copyright, a piece of music having been shewn to a witness skilled in music, he was asked, for the purpose of proving that it was not first published in England, whether he had not seen printed copies of it for sale in a shop at Milan, at a given date, sixteen years before the trial:—Held, that the question was irregular as referring to the contents of a document not produced or accounted for. Boosey v. Davidson, 13 Q. B. 257; 18 L. J., Q. B. 174.

Where parts only of a book containing proceedings in bankruptcy are put in by one party, the opposite counsel has no right to refer to other parts of it. Whitfield v. Alan, 2 Car. & K. 1015.

Though a witness cannot give evidence of the particular contents of written accounts, yet he may speak to the general balance, without producing them. Roberts v. Doxon, 1 Peake, 116; 3 R. R. 660.

A witness may be asked whether he has agreed to sell goods on commission, although the terms of such agreement have been reduced to writing. Whitfield v. Brand, 16 M. & W. 282; 16 L. J., Ex. 103.

Denial of Writing.]—If, in examination in chief, the plaintiff is asked as to the contract, and denies that there was a contract in writing, the defendant may interpose and give evidence upon a collateral issue as to whether there was a contract in writing or not, before the plaintiff is allowed to give evidence of its terms. Cox v. Coureless, 2 F. & F. 139.

On Cross-examination.] — When on cross-examination of a witness for the plaintiff the defendant's counsel puts documents into his hands and proves out of his mouth that they are in the plaintiff's handwriting, the plaintiff's counsel has a right to see them at once for the purposes of cross-examining on them and identifying them. Peck v. Peck, 21 L. T. 670; 18 W. R. 295.

The mere fact of counsel whilst cross-examining a witness, putting a document into the witness's hand, and asking him whether it is in his handwriting, does not entitle the opposite counsel to see such document. Cope v. Thames Dock Co., 2 Car. & K. 757.

But the opposite counsel have a right to see the document before the cross-examining counsel proceeds to found any question on the document itself. Ib.

On cross-examination of a witness, the cross-examining counsel is not entitled to inspect the whole of a diary used by the witness to assist his memory, but only such parts as refer to the subject-matter of the suit. Burgess v. Bennett, 20 W. R. 720.

Parties are not entitled to put in as part of their case documents handed to a witness on cross-examination by the opposite party, to depose to their nature. Collier v. Nokes, 2 Car. & K. 1012.

Where a witness on cross-examination proves the handwriting of the opposite party to a paper, the counsel for such party has no right to see the paper, to enable him to found an examination as to whether it was really the writing of his client or not. Russell v. Rider, 6 Car. & P. 416.

The defendant's counsel, on cross-examination of the plaintiff, read a letter from him, which, in effect, answered his case, and then submitted that there was no evidence for the jury:—Held, that the court in banc, in considering whether there was evidence, could not look at the letter as part of the plaintiff's case. Rawlings v. Chandler, 9 Ex. 687.

In an action for a libel in imputing to the plaintiff that by reason of his belonging to an association he was a rebel, the plea justifying the libel:—Held, that the defendant could not ask him on cross-examination (he not having been asked anything on the point of examination in chief) whether his name was inscribed in a book containing the names of members. Darby v. Ousley, 1 H. & N. 1; 25 L. J., Ex. 227; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 497; 4 W. R. 463.

And see further under next head.

11. Cross-examination.

Examination in Chief, Necessity for.]—What is opened by the counsel of one party, as presumptive evidence in favour of his client against the other, cannot be examined into on cross-examination of his witnesses, if they have not been examined in chief as to the facts so stated in his favour. Lucas v. Novosilieski, 1 Esp. 297.

Where a witness has been called by one party, the other may cross-examine him, though no question has been asked him in chief. Phillips v. Middlesex (Sheriff), 1 Esp. 357.

If a witness is called, and has only answered an immaterial question when his examination is stopped by the judge, the opposite party has no right to cross-examine him. Creery v. Carr, 7 Car. & P. 64.

The cross-examination of a witness is an incident to his examination in chief. Phelps v. Prothero, 2 De G. & Sm. 274. And see 17 L. J., Ch. 404; 12 Jur. 783.

Quære, whether a party can read the cross-examination of the witness of his adversary where the latter does not read the examination in chief. Barker v. Birch, 1 De G. & Sm. 376.

Witness called by Mistake.]—If the plaintiff's counsel calls a witness by mistake, he cannot be cross-examined. Clifford v. Hunter, 3 Car. & P. 16; M. & M. 113.

A witness called under a mistake of counsel, as to his being able to speak to a transaction, is not liable to cross-examination though sworn, if the mistake is discovered before any question is put. Wood v. Mackinson, 2 M. & Rob. 273.

Witness to prove Document.]—A party will not, as a matter of indulgence, obtain leave to cross-examine a witness, who has been produced by the other side, merely for the purpose of proving a will of lands. Moore v. Moore, 2 Jones, 445.

The plaintiff in a creditors' suit called a witness to prove the execution of a bond upon which his debt was founded; the defendant, the executor, cross-examined the witness as to the consideration. On the proving of the debts before the master, the defendant insisted that the bond was usurious, and obtained leave to examine the witness again upon interrogatories to be settled by the master, on a motion by the plaintiff:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to cross-examine the witness; that the application by the plaintiff for leave to cross-examine the witness was proper. Whitaker v. Wright, 3 Hare, 412; 13 L. J., Ch. 367; 8 Jur. 439.

Witness to Produce Document.]—A witness having been called into the box and sworn in the course of a prosecution for a misdemeanour, produces a document, but is not examined: the defendant is entitled to cross-examine. Rex v. Brooke, 2 Stark. 472; 20 R. R. 723.

A person who merely attends under a subpœna duces tecum for the purpose of producing a document cannot be cross-examined. Summers v. Mosely, 1 C. M. & R. 96, n.

Even if by mistake he has been sworn and asked a question which he does not answer. Rush v. Smith, 2 D. P. C. 687; 1 C. M. & R. 94; 4 Tyr. 674; 3 L. J., Ex. 355.

Testing by Documents.]—The power of the Court of Chancery to make an order for the production of documents for the purpose of their being put into the hands of a witness who is being cross-examined in order to test his evidence, is the same as that of a common law court at a trial at nisi prius. Emma Silver Mining Co., In re, 44 L. J., Ch. 456; L. R. 10 Ch. 194; 31 L. T. 816; 23 W. R. 300.

Attention directed to Items of Account.]—The rule that in cross-examination upon an account, notice of the items to which the cross-examination will be directed must be given to the party bringing in the account, applies to the cross-examination of a party seeking to charge by his account as well as to the case of a merely accounting party. Bates v. Eley, 45 L. J., Ch. 270; 1 Ch. D. 473; 34 L. T. 50; 24 W. R. 424.

Of Plaintiff on Counter-claim.]—The defendant in an action for a legacy sought a set-off by counter-claim, and raised issues not involved in the claim and defence. He was not allowed in cross-examination of the plaintiff to ask questions relevant only to the issues raised upon the counter-claim, but was allowed to recall that plaintiff as his own witness. Woodfine, In re, Thompson v. Woodfine, 47 L. J., Ch. 832; 38 L. T. 753; 26 W. R. 678.

Right of Party to Cross-examine own Witness.]—Where a party to an action has called a witness, he is not entitled as of right to cross-examine that witness, even if the witness is a hostile litigant. The presiding judge has a discretion whether he will allow the witness to be cross-examined by the party calling him. Clarke v. Saffery (R. & M. 126; 27 R. R. 736), and Barton v. Carew (R. & M. 127), commented on. Price v. Manning, 58 L. J., Ch. 649; 42 Ch. D. 372; 61 L. T. 537; 37 W. R. 785—C. A.

The situation in which a witness stands towards either party, does not give the party calling the witness a right to cross-examine him unless the witness's evidence be of such a nature as to make it appear that the witness is an unwilling one. Reg. v. Ball, 8 Car. & P. 745.

—— When called by Other Side.]—A plaintiff having examined a witness, if a defendant afterwards calls him as his witness in chief, the plaintiff may cross-examine him at large. Lord v. Colvin, 3 Drew. 222; 3 Eq. R. 514; 24 L. J., Ch. 517; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 298; 3 W. R. 342.

Right of Party to Discredit his own Witness.]—See post, col. 966.

Witness of Co-Defendant.]—A defendant may cross-examine another defendant's witness. Lord v. Colvin, supra.

All evidence taken, whether on examination in chief or on cross-examination, is open to all parties. Ib.

Time for.]—The cross-examination of a witness should always commence as soon as the direct examination is finished. Beatagh v. Beatagh, 1 Hog, 98.

Relevancy.]—The judge will allow the defendant's counsel to cross-examine as to facts which appear to be irrelevant, as relating to a third person, if the defendant's counsel undertakes that it shall be shewn by other evidence that these facts are relevant to the issue. Haigh v. Belcher, 7 Car. & P. 389.

Adverse party may cross-examine witness to same point to which he is produced, but not to new matter. Ely (Dean) v. Stewart, 2 Atk. 44; Barnard. 170.

On the trial of an issue, "whether (during a certain period) there arose from the works of the defendants noisome, offensive, noxious, or unwholesome smoke, and other vapours, to the nuisance of the plaintiff, whereby the produce of his garden was deteriorated," evidence was adduced for the plaintiff to shew that the smoke and other vapours from the defendants' works had injured the produce of other grounds in the neighbourhood; and also, for the defendants to shew that their works did not injure the produce of any other grounds; and one of the defendants' witnesses having, on his examination in chief, described several gardens in the neighbourhood of the works as in utmost health, was asked in cross-examination by the plaintiff's counsel, if he knew Glasgow Field (grounds in the neighbourhood), and having answered that he "knew Glasgow Field, and never knew of any damage done there," he was then asked, "whether he had known of any sum having been paid by the defendants to the proprietors of Glasgow Field, for alleged damage there, occasioned by their works":—Held, that the question was inadmissible as leading to a new collateral inquiry, which, answered either way, could not affect the issue, or test the credit of the witness. Tennant v. Hamilton, 7 Cl. & F. 152; 1 Rob. 821.

On a motion ex parte, the court ordered the witnesses to be produced, plaintiffs to give a note of what witnesses they had examined, and defendants to give a note of which of them they would have produced to be cross-examined. Spalding v. Bragham, 2 Fowl. Ex. Pr. 158. S. P., Johnston v. Carruthers, id. 159.

A defendant in a foreclosure suit produced evidence to shew that the mortgagor was insane at the time of the execution of the deed, which had been proved in the usual way by the attesting witness. The court made the usual foreclosure decree. Semble, it would have been competent to the defendant to have prevented the plaintiff from succeeding in his claim, by cross-examining the attesting witness, and thereby shewing that the deed was void. Jacobs v. Richards, 23 L. J., Ch. 557; 18 Jur. 257; 2 W. R. 174.

As to Character of Plaintiff.]—In an action for false imprisonment on a criminal charge, the defendant cannot cross-examine as to the bad character of the plaintiff, nor as to previous charges made against him. Downing v. Butcher, 2 M. & Rob. 374.

Where the character of the plaintiff or the defendant is attempted to be impeached in the cross-examination of the adversaries' witnesses, if those witnesses deny the imputation intended to be conveyed, the party will not be admitted to go into evidence of his character. King v. Francis, 3 Esp. 116.

In an action for slander, imputing to the plaintiff unnatural practices, to which there was only a plea of not guilty, the counsel for the defendant, on cross-examination, asked a witness, "Have you heard from other persons that the plaintiff is addicted to practices of this kind?"—Held, that the question was improper, as it was not confined to rumours existing before the words were spoken by the defendant. Thompson v. Nye, 16 Q. B. 175; 20 L. J., Q. B. 85; 15 Jur. 285.

A libel alleged that the plaintiff, a theatrical critic, had endeavoured to extort money by threatening to publish defamatory matter concerning a deceased actress; defence, that the allegation was true in substance and in fact:—Held, that evidence of rumours, before the publication of the libel, that the plaintiff had committed the offences charged in it, and evidence of particular facts and circumstances tending to shew the misconduct of the plaintiff as a theatrical critic, could not be admitted in reduction of damages. Scott v. Sampson, 51 L. J., Q. B. 380; 8 Q. B. D. 491; 46 L. T. 412; 30 W. R. 541; 46 J. P. 408.

Character of Third Party.]—In an action for fraudulently representing that a trader was trustworthy, the defendant proposed to ask a witness what was the reputation of the trader on a certain day, as to his trustworthiness:—Held, that the question was admissible. Sheen v. Bumpstead, 1 H. & C. 358; 32 L. J., Ex. 124. Affirmed, 2 H. & C. 193; 32 L. J., Ex. 271; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 242; 8 L. T. 832; 11 W. R. 734—Ex. Ch.

Collateral Matters.]—A defendant charged with an indecent assault, having been cross-examined as to alleged indecencies as to other persons, and denied them; evidence in disproof of these imputations on one side, or in support of them on the other, was rejected, as relating to issues quite collateral; the plaintiff being bound by the defendants' answers as to these collateral matters. Tolman v. Johnstone, 2 F. & F. 66.

In an action upon a joint and several promissory note, professed to be made by A. and B., the defendant being the administrator of A., the defence set up was, that the plaintiff had forged the note, and another note also; and the defendant was asked, on cross-examination, whether he had not heard B. say, after the case had been before the magistrates, when a charge of forgery with reference to the note was preferred against the plaintiff, that "he, B., was sorry he had forgotten he had signed two notes." The defendant answered in the negative:—Held, that another could not be called to shew that he was present at the time, and that B. had made the statement. Palmer v. Trower, 8 Ex. 247; 22 L. J., Ex. 32.

Refusal.]—Where, upon the hearing of a cause by a vice-chancellor, a tender by the defendant of himself to be examined orally as a witness for himself in the cause, with a view to his cross-examination by the plaintiff, had been refused by the plaintiff, this was held by the Court of Appeal to be a sufficient ground for refusing to accede to an application by the plaintiff to have that course adopted upon the hearing of an appeal from the vice-chancellor's decree. Hindson v. Weatherill, 23 L. J., Ch. 820; 18 Jur. 499; 2 W. R. 507—L.JJ.

As to Contents of Written Documents.]—A witness cannot upon cross-examination, even for the purpose of discrediting him, be asked as to the contents of a written paper which is neither produced, nor its absence accounted for. Macdonnell v. Evans, 11 C. B. 930; 21 L. J., C. P. 141; 16 Jur. 103.

The defendant cannot, in the course of the plaintiff's evidence, cross-examine the plaintiff's witnesses, as to the contents of written documents, although notice has been given to the plaintiff to produce them, and he refuses to produce them in that stage of the cause. Sidways v. Dyson, 2 Stark. 49. S. P., Graham v. Dyster, 2 Stark. 21.

It was not allowable on cross-examination, in the statement of a question to a witness, to represent the contents of a letter, and to ask him whether he wrote a letter to any person, with such or similar contents, without having first shewn the witness the letter, and asked him whether he wrote it or not. Queen's Case, 2 Br. & B. 286; 22 R. R. 662.

Two or three lines of a letter might be exhibited to a witness, without shewing him the whole, and he might be asked whether he wrote the part shewn him or not; but if he denied that he wrote such part he could not be examined as to the general contents of the letter. Ib.

A. brought an action against the publisher of a newspaper for libelling him in his character of tidewaiter, by imputing to him that he was a traitor and idolater, and sworn to obey a foreign potentate, and solemnly pledged to devote himself to the work of the conversion of England to the Roman Catholic faith, and overturning the national faith; that he was member of an association for that purpose, and as such unfit to be intrusted with the property of the Crown. At the trial the publication of the libel having been proved, the plaintiff was examined as a witness, and deposed that he was a Roman Catholic, and had paid ½*d.* towards an association for the conversion of England to the Roman Catholic faith:—Held, that he could not, either at common law or under the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125, s. 24, be asked on cross-examination if his name was written in a book of that association. Darby v. Ouseley, 1 H. & N. 1; 25 L. J., Ex. 227; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 497; 4 W. R. 463.

The plaintiff having admitted that he was bound by the canons and decrees of the Church of Rome, and believed the Pope in council infallible:—Held, that he could not be asked on cross-examination whether he felt himself bound by the notes and comments of the Rheimish Testament. Ib.

A party may be cross-examined as to whether he has read a letter of a certain date, and in certain terms. Ireland v. Stiff, 1 F. & F. 340.

A party to the action being called as a witness on his own behalf, may be asked in cross-examination the contents of a letter which he has written, without producing the letter. Farrow v. Blomfield, 1 F. & F. 653.

The defendant's counsel, in an action for collision, proposed, in his cross-examination of the captain of the plaintiff's ship, to put in evidence the statement made by the captain before a receiver of wreck, under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 448:—Held, inadmissible. Northard v. Pepper, 17 C. B. (N.S.) 39; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1077; 10 L. T. 782.

The rules of a society to which the defendant belonged, proved by cross-examination of one of the witnesses, are evidence against him. Minns v. Smith, 1 F. & F. 318.

A plaintiff, in an affidavit in support of a motion for an injunction, referred to portions of an examination taken in the Court of Bankruptcy:—Held, that for the purpose of cross-examining him upon his affidavit, the defendant was entitled to have the examination, which had been partially referred to, produced. Bell v. Johnson, 4 L. T. 636; 9 W. R. 549.

To explain or contradict a statement made by a party as to an alteration in a will under which he was claiming, the probate of the will is not sufficient evidence, but the original document itself should be put into the hands of the witness. Brown v. Hughes, 1 F. & F. 299.

A witness on cross-examination may admit not having mentioned a fact on a former examination, though that examination is in writing, and not produced. Ridley v. Gyde, 1 M. & Rob. 197.

—— Evidence for whom.]—When a book is put into the hands of a witness to refresh his recollection, and questions are asked upon it in cross-examination, the book is not thereby made evidence for the party producing it, though it may be so for the opposite party. Payne v. Ibbotson, 27 L. J., Ex. 341.

—— Cross-examining on Affidavit.] — See cases, post, IX. EVIDENCE ON AFFIDAVIT.

Right of Counsel to Inspect Documents.]—See cases, ante, col. 949.

Whether by Court or Examiner.]—The court, under the 15 & 16 Vict. cc. 80 and 86, directed that a party to a suit, a witness by affidavit on his own behalf in support of his own state of facts before the master, should be cross-examined before the examiner instead of the master; and that all the parties should be examined on interrogatories before the examiner, as the master should direct. Heartall v. Cheatle, 1 Sm. & G. 78; 9 Hare (App.) xx. n.; 17 Jur. 128; 1 W. R. 91.

A witness who has made an affidavit may be cross-examined either before one of the examiners of the court or a special examiner, and in the case of a witness abroad, the proper course is to apply for a special examiner. Edwards v. Spaight, 2 John. & H. 617.

Under 7, 19, and 21 of the Orders of the 5th February, 1861, a witness cannot be cross-examined in court upon an interlocutory application, but only at the hearing, issue having been joined, and replication filed. Bodger v. Bodger, 1 N. R. 119; 11 W. R. 80.

A party to the suit, who has made an affidavit at chambers after decree, may be cross-examined before the examiner at any time thereafter without a special order to that effect, but cannot be compelled to attend there, or to submit to such cross-examination without a subpœna. Stebbing v. Atlee, 26 L. J., Ch. 265; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1161; 5 W. R. 109.

The examiner's office is primâ facie the proper place to take all evidence without any special order. Such special order is more proper to be made where the evidence is desired to be taken at chambers. Ib.

Where the party to the suit, who had made the affidavit in question at chambers, where the evidence was being taken, received a simple notice to attend at chambers to be cross-examined, and did attend, but was not then cross-examined:—Held, that she might afterwards be compelled to attend at the examiner's office to be cross-examined, but that for such purpose a subpœna was necessary, and that simple notice of the meeting would not do, and even that, being present on such notice, she might refuse to be sworn. Ib.

Semble, the costs occasioned by the subpœna under such circumstances would in general fall on the party insisting on the cross-examination, after having neglected his first opportunity. Ib.

Where a suit is brought on by motion for decree, and issue is joined in a cross-suit, and an order is obtained by the plaintiff in the original suit for him to use in the cross-suit affidavits filed in his own suit, it is at the option of the plaintiff in the cross-suit either to treat these affidavits as filed in the original suit, and so cross-examine the witnesses before an examiner, or to consider them as evidence to be used in his own suit, and give notice of cross-examination in open court at the hearing. Nere v. Pennell, 1 Hem. & M. 252.

A witness having disputed the correctness of an alleged translation of letters in a foreign language, on which translation he was being cross-examined before the examiner, but as to the correctness of which there was no evidence:—Held, that the proper course would be to cross-examine the witness at the hearing in open court upon the alleged translation, at which time, if any difficulties should arise, the court would, if necessary, consider how to dispose of them. Foster v. Gladstone, 12 W. R. 525.

Under Commission.] — See post, VII. EXAMINATION UNDER COMMISSION.

12. RECALLING.

In what Cases.] — A witness on cross-examination answered a question put to him by the defendant's counsel, and went on to make a further statement, which was not legal evidence. The plaintiff's counsel, in reply, remarked upon this further statement. He was stopped by the jury, who understood the witness to have said the direct contrary to that attributed to him by the plaintiff's counsel, who then wished to recall the witness, but the judge refused to allow this to be done:—Held, that the witness having volunteered a statement which was not evidence, it was the duty of the judge not to notice it, and that he was right in refusing to recall the witness to correct the mistake of the jury as to what the statement was. Cattlin v. Barker, 5 C. B. 201; 17 L. J., C. P. 62.

Discretion.]—Permission to recall a witness is entirely within the discretion of the judge, and that discretion should be exercised with great caution. Shedden v. Att.-Gen., L. R. 1 H. L. Sc. 470; 22 L. T. 631.

A judge has a discretion whether or not a witness shall be recalled after the party who called him has closed his case. Adams v. Bankart, 1 C. M. & R. 681; 5 Tyr. 425; 1 Gale, 48.

13. Re-examination and Reply.

Hostile Witness.]—Where an adverse witness, upon his cross-examination, voluntarily gives evidence which would have been inadmissible as evidence in chief, and the counsel cross-examining does not object to such evidence being admitted or retained upon the judge's notes, the opposite counsel has a right to re-examine as to that evidence. Blewett v. Tregonning, 5 N. & M. 308; 3 A. & E. 554; 1 H. & W. 432.

Where a witness gives evidence destructive of the case which he was called to prove, the party calling him may, in order to neutralise his evidence, shew that he had before the trial given to the attorney an account of the transaction entirely different to that sworn to by him at the trial. Wright v. Beckett, 1 M. & Rob. 414.

The counsel calling a witness, who gives adverse testimony, cannot on re-examination ask whether the witness has not given a different account to the attorney. Winter v. Butt, 2 M. & Rob. 357. S. P., Allay v. Hutchings, 2 M. & Rob. 358, n.

The counsel calling a witness who has given unfavourable evidence on cross-examination may, on re-examination, ask him questions to shew inducements to betray the party who has called him. Dunn v. Aslett, 2 M. & Rob. 122.

Conversations.]—If, on the trial of an action or an indictment, a witness examined on the part of the plaintiff or prosecutor, upon cross-examination by the defendant's counsel, states that, at a time specified, he told A. that he was one of the witnesses against the defendant, and, being re-examined by the plaintiff's or the prosecutor's counsel, states what induced him to mention this to A., the plaintiff's or prosecutor's counsel cannot further re-examine the witness as to such conversation, even as far only as it related to his being one of the witnesses. Queen's Case, 2 Br. & B. 294; 22 R. R. 662.

If a witness called for the plaintiff is asked, on the part of the defendant, whether the plaintiff had any conversation with him on a particular subject, and the witness states anything that the plaintiff said on that subject, the plaintiff's counsel may examine as to every part of the same conversation: but, if the witness states that the plaintiff had no such conversation with him, this does not let in the plaintiff's counsel to examine as to anything else that the plaintiff said. Dicas v. Brougham (Lord), 6 Car. & P. 249.

Previous Statement.]—A witness was asked, on the trial of a cause, if the plaintiff had not, in his cross-examination on a former trial, admitted his insolvency:—Held, that the witness, on his re-examination, was not at liberty to detail any statement made by the plaintiff in his examination in chief at the former trial, if that statement was unconnected with the question of insolvency. Prince v. Samo, 3 N. & P. 139; 7 A. & E. 627; 1 W. W. & H. 132; 7 L. J., Q. B. 123; 2 Jur. 323.

Upon Documents.]—If the counsel who cross-examines puts a paper into the witness's hand, and puts questions on it, and anything comes of those questions, the counsel for the opposite party has a right to see the paper, and re-examine on it; but if the cross-examination, founded on the paper entirely fails, and nothing comes of it, the opposite counsel has no right to see the paper. Reg. v. Duncombe, 8 Car. & P. 369.

In Reply—When Plaintiff taken by Surprise.]—An action having been brought in a county court, ostensibly by two executors, the defendant shewed that it was brought without the consent of one of the executors, and put in and proved a release executed by that one only a day before the trial. The plaintiff's counsel, on his saying he was taken by surprise, applied to be allowed to call that executor for the purpose of shewing the release to be void. The judge refused this, and nonsuited the plaintiffs:—Held, that he was wrong in so refusing, and that such examination ought to have been allowed. Robinson v. Vernon (Lord), 7 C. B. (N.S.) 231: 29 L. J., C. P. 135; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 610; 1 L. T. 67; 8 W. R. 47.

Where a party is taken by surprise by a point made against him at the hearing, the judge may, if he thinks right, at any stage of the trial allow him to produce rebutting evidence; and if such permission is refused, the Court of Appeal will, in a proper case, permit the fresh evidence to be taken on the appeal. Bigsby v. Dickinson, 46 L. J., Ch. 280; 4 Ch. D. 24; 35 L. T. 679; 25 W. R. 89—C. A.

—— Purpose of.]—In an action by indorsee of a bill of exchange, on an issue denying the indorsement, he rested his case, in the first instance, on proof of the handwriting of the indorser. The defendant then gave evidence that the plaintiff was too poor to have discounted the bill, or to have had it indorsed to him, and that he had disclaimed having done so, or having anything to do with the bill:—Held, that the plaintiff ought not to be allowed to give evidence in reply, for the purpose of shewing his ability to discount the bill, and that, in fact, he had discounted it, as such evidence was merely confirmatory of his primâ facie case, and not in contradiction of the defendant's witnesses. Jacobs v. Tarleton, 11 Q. B. 421; 17 L. J., Q. B. 194; 12 Jur. 517.

Upon the trial of an interpleader issue in a county court, to try the title to goods taken in execution, the plaintiff, in support of his title, gave in evidence a deed (which was valid upon the face of it), by which the execution debtor had assigned to him the goods; but the witness called to prove the execution of the deed was cross-examined by the defendant, with a view to shew that the transaction was fraudulent, and the deed was therefore void:—Held, that the plaintiff was not bound to give evidence in the first instance to establish the validity of the deed, although called upon by the judge to do so, and although the nature of the defence appeared by the cross-examination of the attesting witness: and therefore that the judge was wrong in refusing to receive evidence in reply, to rebut a case of fraud set up by the defendant to invalidate the deed. Shaw v. Beck, 8 Ex. 392.

—— Jurisdiction of Judge to allow Further

Evidence.]—A judge may at any period in a case allow further evidence to be called by either party for his own satisfaction, even though it is doubtful whether it is admissible on the request of the party desiring it as of right. Budd v. Davison, 29 W. R. 192.

The plaintiff rested his case partly on an alleged conversation between himself and the defendant at the plaintiff's house on a certain evening in the presence of plaintiff's wife. Plaintiff's wife was cross-examined as to the substance of the alleged conversation, but not as to the fact of the defendant having been in the house on that occasion. The defendant having in his examination in chief denied that he was in the house at all on the evening in question: leave was given to the plaintiff, after the evidence on both sides was closed, to call further evidence to rebut the defendant's denial. Rogers v. Manley, 42 L. T. 585.

In an action to restrain the defendants from erecting a urinal in Old Burlington Mews, the statement of claim alleged that the soil of the mews was vested in and was the absolute property of three of the plaintiffs. The statement of defence did not admit this allegation, but alleged that the mews had long been a highway dedicated to the public, and belonged to the parish as one of the public streets thereof. At the trial of the action several witnesses were examined on both sides; and at the close of the defendant's evidence the plaintiffs applied for leave to call evidence in reply, to shew that the soil of the mews had not been dedicated to the public:—Held, that as the plaintiffs were distinctly apprised by the pleadings before the trial of the action what the nature of the defence would be, the application must be refused. Vernon v. St. James' Vestry, 49 L. J., Ch. 130; 42 L. T. 82.

14. Impeachment of Credit.

a. Generally.

The only modes of impeaching the credit of a witness are by cross-examination, by producing the record of his conviction of some infamous crime, or by adducing general evidence that he is unworthy of belief upon his oath. Rex v. Watson, 2 Stark. 149. S. P., Spencely v. De Willott, 7 East, 108; 3 Smith, 289.

b. Evidence in Contradiction.

Preliminary Cross-examination.]—Where a witness has said nothing in examination in chief, he cannot be cross-examined to discredit him. Bracegirdle v. Bailey, 1 F. & F. 536.

A party to an action, giving evidence in support of his own case, may be asked, on cross-examination, for the purpose of testing his credit, whether an action has not been brought against him in an inferior court of record upon a similar claim, and a verdict against him has been returned by the jury, he having given evidence in the cause, and this may be done without the production and proof of the record of that court. Even if a judge wrongly allows such questions to be put and to be answered, the court will not on that ground, even if the witness had been a third person, grant a new trial, unless it can see that injustice has been done by such ruling. Henman v. Lester, 12 C. B. (N.S.) 776; 31 L. J., C. P. 366; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 601. See also Reg. v. Little, 15 Cox, C. C. 319.

—— Necessity for.]—If in the course of a case it is intended to suggest that a witness is not speaking the truth upon a particular point, his attention must be directed to the fact by cross-examination shewing that that imputation is intended to be made, so that he may have an opportunity of making any explanation which is open to him, unless it is otherwise perfectly clear that he has had full notice beforehand that there is an intention to impeach the credibility of his story, or (per Lord Morris) the story is of an incredible and romancing character. Browne v. Dunn, 6 R. 67—H. L. (E.)

The solicitor for a defendant stated in an affidavit that a witness for the plaintiff had stated to him facts which were put in writing signed by the witness, and he made the writing an exhibit. The statements in the writing were contradictory to the evidence of the witness as given in the suit:—Held, that the writing was not admissible in the way in which it was put in, the witness having had no opportunity of explaining it. Hemming v. Maddick, 41 L. J., Ch. 522; L. R. 7 Ch. 395; 26 L. T. 565; 20 W. R. 433.

The general rule is, that if a party to a cause wishes on the trial to impeach an adverse witness, by proof of his having used certain expressions, the witness himself must first be asked whether he used them. Carpenter v. Wuhl or Wall, 3 P. & D. 457; 11 A. & E. 803; 9 L. J., Q. B. 217.

Not Admissible as to Collateral Matters.]—Where a question is put to a witness in cross-examination, the answer to which may have a tendency to discredit him, if such question is collateral to the matter in issue the answer which the witness gives must be taken as conclusive, and other witnesses cannot be called to contradict him. Harris v. Tippett, 2 Camp. 637; 11 R. R. 767. S. P., Rex v. Rudge, 2 Peake, 232; 4 R. R. 906.

Evidence of a particular collateral fact cannot be adduced in any case, whether civil or criminal, in order to discredit a witness. Rex v. Watson, 2 Stark. 149.

A witness cannot be cross-examined as to any collateral independent fact, irrelevant to the matter in issue, for the purpose of contradicting him, if his answer be one way, by another witness, in order to discredit the whole of his testimony. Spencely v. De Willott, 7 East, 108; 3 Smith, 289. S. P., Henman v. Lester, 12 C. B. (N.S.) 776; 31 L. J., C. P. 366; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 601.

A witness cannot be cross-examined for the purpose of contradicting him, except on points relevant to the issue. Palmer, Ex parte and In re, 1 Deac. & C. 373.

If, on cross-examining a witness, an irrelevant question be put, you cannot produce evidence to disprove his answer, but must take it for better and worse. Arnsby, Ex parte, 2 Deac. & C. 213.

A witness who was examined for the plaintiff, to prove a contract, was cross-examined for the defendant upon a subject irrelevant to the matter in dispute between the parties. The defendant then examined witnesses to contradict the statement made by the plaintiff's witness with regard to such irrelevant matter:—Held, that it was not competent for a party to call witnesses to contradict evidence which was immaterial to the question at issue. Goddard v. Parr, 24 L. J., Ch. 783; 3 W. R. 633.

It is an acknowledged rule of evidence, that a collateral irrelevant inquiry cannot be gone into, to discredit a witness on the other side. Tennant v. Hamilton, 7 Cl. & F. 152; 1 Rob. 821.

A witness, being examined to prove a contract, is asked if he is not a fortune-teller, and, on his answering no, two affidavits are made to prove that he had told fortunes for money, for the purpose of throwing discredit on his evidence; and a motion is made to take those two affidavits off the file, as totally irrelevant to the question at issue:—Held, that they must be taken off the file, and that the party filing them must pay the costs. Goddard v. Parr, 24 L. J., Ch. 783; 3 W. R. 633.

Proof of Previous Inconsistent Statement—Statutes.]—The Criminal Procedure Act, 1865 (which by s. 1 is made applicable to all courts as well criminal as all others), s. 4, provides that "if a witness upon cross-examination as to a former statement made by him relative to the subject-matter of the indictment or proceeding, and inconsistent with his present testimony, does not distinctly admit that he has made such statement, proof may be given that he did in fact make it; but before such proof can be given, the circumstances of the supposed statement, sufficient to designate the particular occasion, must be mentioned to the witness, and he must be asked whether or not he made such statement." A similar provision in the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 125), was repealed by the S. L. R. Act, 1883.

—— By Witness previously Examined.]—Where a defendant, who claimed to be the owner of a mill, denied on cross-examination that he had ever stated that he was tenant only, the plaintiff was allowed under the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 125), s. 23, to call a witness to prove that on a certain occasion the defendant had described himself as such, though the same witness had previously been called and examined. Sykes v. Haig, 44 L. T. 57.

—— Before the Act.]—If, on cross-examination, it is proposed to ascertain of a witness, whether he has made representations of any particular nature, immediately after being asked whether he made any representation, he must be asked whether he made the representation by parol, or in writing. Queen's Case, 2 Br. & B. 292; 22 R. R. 662.

If a witness, examined in chief on the part of the plaintiff, being asked whether he remembered a quarrel taking place between A. and B., answers that he has heard of a quarrel between them, but does not know the cause of it, and such witness is not asked upon his cross-examination whether he has or has not made a declaration touching the cause of the quarrel, the counsel for the defendant cannot, in order to prove such witness's knowledge of the cause of the quarrel, afterwards examine a witness to prove that the other witness has made such a declaration to him touching the cause of such quarrel. Queen's Case, 2 Br. & B. 299; 22 R. R. 662.

So, where he answers that he does not remember it, and such witness is not asked, on his cross-examination, whether he has or has not made a declaration stated in the question respecting such quarrel, the counsel for the defendant cannot, in order to prove that such witness must remember the quarrel, afterwards examine a witness to prove that the other witness has made such a declaration. Ib.

Where a witness in support of a prosecution has been examined in chief, and has not been asked, on cross-examination, as to any declarations made by him, or acts done by him, to procure persons corruptly to give evidence in support of the prosecution, it is not competent to the accused to examine witnesses in his defence to prove such declarations or acts, without first calling back such witness examined in chief, to be examined as to the fact whether he ever made such declarations or did such acts. Queen's Case, 2 Br. & B. 311; 22 R. R. 662.

If a witness is called on the part of the plaintiff or a prosecutor, and gives evidence against the defendant or accused, and if, after the cross-examination of such witness, the defendant's or accused's counsel discovers that the witness so examined has corrupted, or endeavoured to corrupt, another person to give false testimony in such cause, the counsel for the defendant or accused is not permitted to give evidence of such corrupt act of such witness, without calling back such witness. Ib.

It is not admissible to impeach a witness by shewing that he has made a particular statement, unless the witness denies having made such statement; it is enough that he states he has no recollection of making such statement. Pain v. Beeston, 1 M. & Rob. 20.

In order to discredit a witness by proof of a contradictory statement, it is not enough to ask him generally whether he has ever made such a statement, but particulars must be specified to him. Angus v. Smith, M. & M. 473.

A witness cannot be called to contradict another who denies having made a particular statement, if such statement was not of a fact, but only of a matter of opinion, as such statement of opinion does not come within the rule which confines contradictions to matters directly connected with the issue in the cause. Elton v. Larkins, 5 Car. & P. 385.

Evidence of statements by witnesses on other occasions relevant to the matter at issue, and inconsistent with the evidence given by them at the trial, is always admissible, in order to impeach the value of their testimony; but it is only such statements as are relevant that are admissible. And in order to lay a foundation for the admission of such contradictory statements, and to enable the witness to explain them, and for that purpose only, he must be asked whether he ever said what is suggested to him, with the name of the person to whom or in whose presence he is supposed to have said it, or some other circumstance sufficient to designate the particular occasion. If the witness, on the cross-examination, admits the conversation imputed to him, there is no necessity for giving other evidence of it; but if he says he does not recollect, that is not an admission, and evidence may be given on the other side, that the witness did say what is imputed, provided the statement is relevant to the matter in issue. Crowley v. Page, 7 Car. & P. 789.

A witness cannot be called to contradict another with respect to a statement suggested to have been made, if there is not an express denial by the party who is supposed to have made it of his having done so. Long v. Hitchcock, 9 Car. & P. 619.

In an information against the defendant for using a cistern in the making of malt, without making an entry as required by act of parliament, a witness was asked by the defendant's counsel if he had not stated to C. that the excise officers had offered him 20*l.* to say that the cistern had been used; the witness having denied the alleged statement:—Held, that evidence could not be given to shew that he had in fact made the statement. Att.-Gen. v. Hitchcock, 1 Ex. 91; 16 L. J., Ex. 259; 11 Jur. 478.

Where a witness is asked if he has made a certain statement, which is material to the issue, and at variance with other parts of his evidence, and he denies that he has made such statement, evidence may be given to shew that he did in fact make the statement. Ib.

Where a witness is examined as to a fact with a view to shew that he is biassed as to the cause, and he denies the fact, evidence may be offered in contradiction to prove the fact. Ib.

In a suit against the personal representative of D., deceased, the principal question was, at what period the partnership of D. with E. terminated; and after publication passed, the plaintiff discovered two affidavits, one sworn by D. in another suit, the other sworn in the same suit by a witness examined for the defendant in the principal suit. On a motion by the plaintiff for liberty to examine witnesses to prove the existence of these affidavits on the ground that the affidavit of D. tended to prove the existence of the partnership at a particular period which was a fact in issue, and that the affidavit of the witness might contradict his evidence, if read for the defendant at the hearing, leave was given to exhibit an interrogatory to prove the affidavit of D., without prejudice as to the admissibility of the affidavit, with liberty for the defendant to cross-examine; but it was refused, as to the affidavit of the witness, on the ground that, if the object was to discredit his testimony, the plaintiff ought to proceed in the ordinary course for that purpose. Gregory v. Davies, or Marychurch, 12 Beav. 275; 19 L. J., Ch. 77; 13 Jur. 1019; 14 Jur. 102.

In a suit for renewal the defendant examined a witness, to prove the service of a notice upon the plaintiffs, requiring them to renew and pay up the renewal fines. Semble, that it was not competent for the plaintiffs to read the evidence of another witness examined by them in the same cause, for the purpose of proving an admission by the defendant's witness that he had never served the notice in question. And semble, that articles should have been previously exhibited, to the credit of the defendant's witness, by the plaintiffs, to enable them to impeach his testimony. O'Keeffe v. Allen, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 382.

Semble, that an examination of a party before the commissioner may be read to discredit an affidavit of the same witness made upon a petition. Marjoribanks, Ex parte, 1 De G. 466.

—— Illiterate Witness.]—The veracity, or even accuracy, of an ignorant and illiterate person, is not to be conclusively tested by comparing an affidavit made by him with his vivâ voce testimony; discrepancies between them are not conclusive against his testimony. Johnston v. Todd, 5 Beav. 597.

Subsequent Statement.]—Upon an appeal from the Rolls, it was objected to the evidence of a witness examined in the cause, and read at the former hearing, that he had since, by answer to a bill exhibited against him, confessed, that on the day he was examined, the plaintiff gave him a bond that, if he recovered the land in question, he would convey part of it to the witness. By the opinion of the Lord Keeper, assisted by two judges, this answer was ordered to be read. Needham v. Smith. 2 Vern. 463.

c. Evidence as to Character.

Proof that Witness is Unworthy of Belief.]—In order to impeach the character of a witness for veracity, witnesses may be called to prove that his general reputation is such that they would not believe him upon oath. Reg. v. Brown, 36 L. J., M. C. 59; L. R. 1 C. C. 70; 16 L. T. 364; 15 W. R. 795; 10 Cox, C. C. 453.

Evidence may be brought by the opposite side to shew that the general character of a witness is such that he is unworthy of being believed upon his oath. Mawson v. Hartsink, 4 Esp. 102; 6 R. R. 841.

—— Scope of Inquiry.]—Examination to credit limited to the general question, whether the witness is to be believed upon his oath. An affidavit in bankruptcy, with that view, going to particular facts, and scandalous, taken off the file, with costs. Anon., 3 Ves. & B. 93.

In examination as to credit of a witness, the general question "whether he is to be believed on his oath" only, and not the circumstances leading to that belief, can be asked. Carlos v. Brook, 10 Ves. 50.

If a party wishes to discredit the testimony of a witness, he can only bring evidence to prove that the witness is a person not deserving of credit, but not that the evidence given is false. If it is desired to disprove his testimony, that should be by cross-examination. Llewellin v. Pace, 1 W. R. 28.

—— Collateral Matters.]—Collateral questions trying the truth of a material part of the witness's story, may be put. Bardwell, Ex parte, Venables, In re, 1 Mont. & Ayr. 206.

Interrogatories in support of articles for purpose of discrediting witnesses, may relate to particular facts not in use in the cause, as well as to the credit of the witnesses generally. Piggott v. Croxhall, 1 Sim. & S. 467.

Application for examination to credit regarded with great jealousy: confined to facts affecting credit and character only, and not material to what is in issue. White v. Fussell, 1 Ves. & B. 153.

A witness to credit deposed that he believed the principal witness to be unworthy of belief, on account of a particular transaction, which he detailed:—Held, that the assignment of a reason for the belief was insufficient ground for suppressing more of the deposition than related to the reason assigned. The same witness spoke to a conversation in which the principal witness had given an account of a fact material to the issue, at variance with his testimony; the court refused to suppress the deposition, although the principal witness had not been cross-examined as to this. Penny v. Watts, 2 De G. & Sm. 501; 12 Jur. 993.

Immorality — Relevancy.]—In an action against the maker of a promissory note, one of the subscribing witnesses was asked if she did not constantly sleep with her master, the plaintiff. She said that she did not:—Held, that a witness might be called for the defendant to prove that she did so, and that this was not collateral to the issue; though, if the question had been, whether the witness had walked the streets as a prostitute, that would have been so, and had the witness denied it, other witnesses could not have been called to contradict her. Thomas v. David, 7 Car. & P. 350. See also Rex v. Rudge, 2 Peake, 232; 4 R. R. 906; and Goddard v. Parr, 24 L. J., Ch. 783; 3 W. R. 633.

Previous Conviction — Statutes.]—By the Criminal Procedure Act, 1865 (28 Vict. c. 18) (which by s. 1 is applicable to all courts as well criminal as all others), s. 5, "A witness may be questioned as to whether he has been convicted of any felony or misdemeanour, and upon being so questioned, if he either denies or does not admit the fact, or refuses to answer, it shall be lawful for the cross-examining party to prove such conviction."

A similar provision in the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, s. 25, was repealed by S. L. R. Act, 1883.

—— Decisions.]—A previous conviction may be proved against a party under s. 25 of 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125, if he denies such conviction on cross-examination, although the fact of such conviction may be altogether irrelevant. Ward v. Sinfield, 49 L. J., C. P. 696; 43 L. T. 252.

The credit of a witness may be impeached by producing the record of his conviction of some crime. Rex v. Watson, 2 Stark. 149.

Evidence in Support of Character.]—Where evidence is brought to impeach the character of a witness, and his character is in issue, evidence may be adduced on his behalf for the purpose of shewing that he bears a good character. Rex v. Murphy, 19 Howell's St. Tr. 724; Rex v. Clarke, 2 Starkie, 241.

Evidence to support the character of a witness is not admissible unless fraud is expressly imputed to him. Durham (Bishop) v. Beaumont, 1 Camp. 207.

—— Solicitor preparing Will.]—In a suit by the heir-at-law of a testator, imputations having been cast upon the character of a deceased attorney, by whom the will was prepared, and who was one of the attesting witnesses, charging him with fraud in the execution of the will:—Held, that the devisee might call witnesses to shew the general good character of such attorney. Provis v. Reed, 3 M. & P. 4; 1 L. J., C. P. 163; 30 R. R. 695.

In ejectment by heir against devisee, the solicitor who drew the will was called to prove its execution by the testator. On cross-examination it was sought to impeach his character:—Held, that the defendant could not be allowed to call witnesses to prove his good character, such evidence being only allowable where the attorney who prepared the will is dead. Doe d. Reed v. Harris, 7 Car. & P. 330.

At what Stage.] — In general witnesses to character cannot be examined after verdict and before sentence, where the defendant might have examined them upon the trial. Reg. v. Mullens, 3 Cox, C. C. 526.

There is no precise time beyond which witnesses cannot be discredited. Piggott v. Croxhall, 1 Sim. & S. 467.

Commission to examine to credit should be executed before decree: costs given on that ground. White v. Fussell, 1 Ves. & B. 151.

Party is too late to move to suppress a deposition for irregularity, after having exhibited articles to discredit the witness. Malone v. Morris, 2 Moll. 324.

After decree founded upon the testimony of a witness, it would be too late to apply to exhibit articles to impeach his credit; but liberty was given after decree to exhibit articles to discredit a witness who had been examined in chief only to one point (which it was not intended to controvert), he having been afterwards examined in aid of the account. Ib. 323.

Depositions Scandalous.] — Depositions of witnesses examined as to credit referred for scandal and impertinence. Bray v. Bulkby, Dick. 288.

d. Party's own Witness.

Statutes.]—By the Criminal Procedure Act, 1865 (28 Vict. c. 18) (which by s. 1 is applicable to all courts as well criminal as all others), s. 3, it is provided that "A party producing a witness shall not be allowed to impeach his credit by general evidence of bad character, but he may, in case the witness shall, in the opinion of the judge, prove adverse, contradict him by other evidence, or, by leave of the judge, prove that he has made at other times a statement inconsistent with his present testimony; but before such last-mentioned proof can be given, the circumstances of the supposed statement, sufficient to designate the particular occasion, must be mentioned to the witness, and he must be asked whether or not he has made such statement."

The corresponding provision in the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 125), s. 22, was repealed by S. L. R. Act, 1883.

Adverse Witness—Who is.]—The 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125, s. 22, lays down the following rules as to a party discrediting and contradicting his own witness who proves adverse, two of them declaratory of the common law, the third enacting, viz. a party shall not impeach his own witness by general evidence of bad character; a party may contradict him by other evidence relevant to the issues; a party may prove that the witness has made other statements on other occasions at variance with his evidence at the trial, provided, in the judge's opinion, the witness is adverse, and provided the judge also gives leave to produce evidence of such statements. Greenough v. Eccles, 5 C. B. (N.S.) 786; 28 L. J., C. P. 160; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 766.

A witness, whose testimony turns out to be unfavourable to the party calling him, is not therefore an adverse witness within 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125, s. 22. Ib.

To make him an adverse witness, so as to entitle the party calling him to contradict him by other evidence, shewing that he has made at other times a statement inconsistent with his present testimony, he must, in the opinion of the judge, be adverse in the sense of shewing a hostile mind. Ib.

See also Amstell v. Alexander, infra.

—— Previous Inconsistent Statements.]—The defendant's counsel stating, after calling and examining a witness, that he had given another and materially different account of the transactions to the defendant's attorney, the judge allowed the witness to be asked if they were so, and to be dealt with as adverse, but only with a view to discredit him generally; and this it will not do if it is not utterly inconsistent with his sworn evidence. Faulkner v. Brine, 1 F. & F. 254.

In an action on a policy of insurance against bodily injury by accident or violence, a surgeon, who was called as a witness for the plaintiff, to whom he had given a certificate of serious injury, contradicting it and alleging that it was collusively given, was allowed to be treated as an adverse witness. Martin v. Travellers' Insurance Co., 1 F. & F. 505.

A statement to contradict the evidence of a witness may be contained in a series of documents, not one of which, taken by itself, would amount to a contradiction of his evidence. Jackson v. Thomason, 1 B. & S. 745; 31 L. J., Q. B. 11; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 134; 6 L. T. 104; 10 W. R. 42.

To enable a party, at the trial of an action, to impeach the credit of a witness called by him, by proving that he (the witness) has made at other times a statement inconsistent with his evidence in the witness-box, it is not necessary that the previous statement and the evidence at the trial should be absolutely and entirely at variance with each other. Ib.

By 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125 (C. L. P. Act), it is not made competent to a party to prove that his own witness has formerly made a statement inconsistent with his present testimony. Ryberg v. Rybery, 32 L. J., Mat. 112; 11 W. R. 502.

A witness called on behalf of a plaintiff gave evidence quite different from the proof in the brief of the plaintiff's counsel, and from the heads of evidence as taken down in writing by the plaintiff's attorney, and alleged to have been read over by him to the witness. The witness was considered sufficiently adverse to be examined as to his previous statements to the plaintiff's attorney; and the judge allowed the witness to be asked whether he did not say the several things stated in the paper containing the heads of his evidence as taken down by the plaintiff's attorney, but refused permission to examine the witness from the paper as a statement in writing made by him within 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125, s. 22. Amstell v. Alexander, 16 L. T. 830.

—— Witness to Will.]—An executor having produced one of the attesting witnesses to the will in dispute, who failed, from mental incapacity or some other cause, to give a rational account of the time and manner of execution, called the second witness. The second witness deposed that the testator did not sign his name or acknowledge his signature in the presence of two witnesses present at the time:—Held, that though the second witness could not be considered a hostile witness, yet he was produced to satisfy the requirements of the law; the party producing him might put questions to other witnesses tending to throw doubts upon his general credibility. Coles v. Coles, 35 L. J., P. 40; L. R. 1 P. 70; 13 L. T. 608; 14 W. R. 290.

—— Discretion of Judge.]—At the trial of an action the defendant's counsel, in order to shew that a witness called by him was hostile, and to obtain leave to treat him as such under s. 22 of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, asked the judge to look at an affidavit made by the witness in a former action. The judge, being of opinion that there had been nothing in the witness's demeanour, or in the way he had given his evidence, to shew that he was hostile, refused to look at the affidavit:—Held, on motion for a new trial, that the discretion given to the judge under s. 22 of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, was absolute, and the court had no jurisdiction to review his decision. Rice v. Howard, 55 L. J., Q. B. 311; 16 Q. B. D. 681; 34 W. R. 532.

—— Before Examiner.]—There is no rule that a witness on his examination in chief before the examiner may not be treated as a hostile witness. Ohlsen v. Terrero, 44 L. J., Ch. 155; L. R. 10 Ch. 127; 31 L. T. 811; 23 W. R. 195.

The 22nd section of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, authorising a party to a suit to discredit his own adverse witness, applies to the courts of chancery, and to an examination, not in court, but before an examiner; but the leave to produce counter-evidence must be given, not by the examiner, but by the judge upon a special motion. Buckley v. Cooke, 1 Kay & J. 29; 24 L. J., Ch. 24; 3 Eq. Rep. 138; 3 W. R. 33.

An examiner in chancery has no authority to determine questions as to the relevancy or adverse nature of the evidence of a witness; but when the question as to his being adverse is likely to be raised, the examiner should take down the questions as well as the answers upon which counter evidence may be required. Ib.

At the hearing this leave cannot be given because no new witness can then be called. Ib.

Before the Statutes—Contradicting Witness by other Evidence.]—If a witness for a prosecution disprove the prosecutor's case, the prosecutor may call other witnesses to prove the facts denied by the former witness, and thus incidentally contradict that witness, and shew him to be unworthy of credit; but the prosecutor cannot adduce any evidence not otherwise admissible for the sole purpose of discrediting his own witness. Reg. v. Ball, 8 Car. & P. 745.

If a witness unexpectedly gives evidence against the party calling him, although his evidence cannot be in part relied upon, and the rest of it disproved, it may be entirely repudiated, and witnesses may be called on the same side to contradict him. Alexander v. Gibson, 2 Camp. 556; 11 R. R. 797.

Where a witness, called to prove a particular fact, states on cross-examination, or otherwise, another fact militating against the party calling him, other witnesses may be called on the same side to disprove such other fact, but the whole of his testimony is not necessarily to be rejected. Bradley v. Ricardo, 1 M. & Scott, 133; 8 Bing. 57; 1 L. J., C. P. 36.

Where the first witness called for a defendant disproved the fact relied on in defence:—Held, that the defendant was not thereby concluded, but might prove the fact by other witnesses. Ewer v. Ambrose, 5 D. & R. 629; 3 B. & C. 746.

The other witnesses called are not to discredit him generally, but to contradict him on the fact to which he has deposed, if it is material to the issue, not if it is merely collateral. Friedlander v. London Assurance Co., 4 B. & Ad. 193; 1 N. & M. 30; 2 L. J., K. B. 16.

—— Previous Statements.]—Where a witness gives on cross-examination unfavourable testimony to the party calling him, and on re-examination denies having given a different account of the matter so spoken to, the party calling him has no right to discredit him, by shewing he has given such different account. Holdsworth v. Dartmouth Corporation, 2 M. & Rob. 153.

Although the general rule is, that on the trial of a cause a party shall not discredit his own witness, yet if the witness unexpectedly gives adverse evidence, the party may ask him if he has not on a particular occasion, made a contrary statement; and the question and answer may be stated by the judge to the jury with the rest of the evidence, the judge cautioning them not to infer, merely from the question, that the fact suggested by it is true. Melhuish v. Collier, 15 Q. B. 878; 19 L. J., Q. B. 493; 14 Jur. 621.

15. Perjury.

Not Actionable.]—An action will not lie against a witness for perjury. Amey v. Long, 1 Camp. 16, 180; 9 East, 473; 6 Esp. 116; 9 R. R. 589.

Or for giving false or even perjured testimony. Collins v. Cave, 4 H. & N. 225; 28 L. J., Ex. 204; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 297; 7 W. R. 493. Affirmed, 8 W. R. 586—Ex. Ch.

Observations on the effect of a positive pledging of an oath to a circumstance which turns out to be a misconception. Wood v. Scarth, 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1107.

VII. Examination of Witnesses under Commission or Mandamus.

1. Jurisdiction Generally.

De bene esse.]—Whenever a necessary witness is going abroad, or is from illness, age or other infirmity likely to be unable to attend the trial, an order will be made under Ord. XXXVII. r. 4, for his examination before an officer of the court in the presence of both parties. A like order will be made whenever it shall appear to the court necessary for the purposes of justice. Warner v. Mosses, 50 L. J., Ch. 28; 16 Ch. D. 100; 29 W. R. 201—C. A.

Mayor's Court.]—The Mayor's Court of the city of London has no power to grant a commission to examine witnesses abroad. Cox v. Leech, 1 C. B. (N.S.) 617; 26 L. J., C. P. 125; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 442; 5 W. R. 199.

Court of Chancery.]—A motion for a commission to examine witnesses for the trial of an issue directed by the Court of Chancery, is properly made to the court in which such trial is to be had. Bourdeau v. Rowe, 1 Bing. (N.C.) 721; 1 Scott, 648; 1 Hodges, 93.

A commission having been granted by the Court of Chancery for the examination upon interrogatories of a witness for the defendants in an issue, the Common Pleas refused to vary the terms of that commission by empowering the plaintiff to cross-examine the witness under it vivâ voce, or to issue another commission for that purpose. Hargrave v. Hargrave, 4 C. B. 648; 5 D. & L. 151; 16 L. J., C. P. 271.

Scotch Court.]—When an application is made to a Scotch court under 1 Will. 4, c. 22, s. 1, to enforce the attendance of witnesses in an English suit for examination in Scotland before a special examiner appointed in the English suit, it is the duty of the Scotch court to determine what witnesses are to be summoned, and what documents they are to produce, as well as to decide all questions as to privilege on the evidence, which may arise on the examination. Campbell v. Att.-Gen., 36 L. J., Ch. 600; L. R. 2 Ch. 571; 15 W. R. 915.

Revenue Proceedings.]—Before 22 & 23 Vict. c. 21, s. 16, in an information by the attorney-general on behalf of the customs, the court had no power, either by virtue of its general jurisdiction at common law or under 1 Will. 4, c. 22, at the defendant's instance, to direct a commission for the examination of witnesses. Att.-Gen. v. Bovet, 15 M. & W. 60; 3 D. & L. 492; 15 L. J., Ex. 155. S. P., Reg. v. Wood, 7 M. & W. 571; 9 D. P. C. 310; 10 L. J., Ex. 168.

Reference by Consent out of Court.]—In a reference to arbitration by consent out of court, the court has no jurisdiction under Ord. XXXVII. r. 5, to order a commission to issue for the examination of witnesses abroad. Shaw and Ronaldson, In re, 61 L. J., Q. B. 141; [1892] 1 Q. B. 91.

2. Writ of Mandamus.

a. In General.

Into what Countries.]—A mandamus cannot be issued into Scotland under 1 Will. 4, c. 22, s. 1, for the examination of witnesses there; but a commission may be issued for that purpose under s. 4. Wainwright v. Bland, 3 D. P. C. 653; 1 Gale, 103.

A mandamus will not in general be granted for the examination of witnesses in one of the British colonies, where the same end may be attained by the less expensive and less dilatory proceeding by commission. Farnworth v. Hyde, 14 C. B. (N.S.) 719; 11 W. R. 783.

By 1 Will. 4, c. 22, the court has power to issue a mandamus to examine a witness in India wheresoever the cause may have arisen. Bain v. De Vetry, 2 D. P. C. 516; 1 Gale, 52.

Distance, and the smallness of the amount of a plaintiff's claim form no ground for refusing a writ in the nature of a mandamus for the examination of witnesses abroad on behalf of a defendant. Dye v. Bennett, 9 C. B. 281; 1 L. M. & P. 92.

Court not Specified.]—A rule nisi for a mandamus to a colonial court to examine witnesses was granted, although the rule did not specify the court. Batchelor v. Oliver, 2 W. R. 517.

b. To India under 13 Geo. 3, c. 63, s. 40.

Who may Apply.]—A defendant may apply for a mandamus as well as a plaintiff. Grillard v. Houge, 4 Moore, 313; 1 Br. & B. 519; 21 R. R. 708.

Who can Grant.]—A judge has no power to grant a writ in the nature of a mandamus or commission to examine witnesses in India, under 13 Geo. 3, c. 63, s. 44. Clarke v. East India Co., 6 D. & L. 278; 2 B. C. Rep. 319; 18 L. J., Q. B. 23.

The application for such writ should be made to the court in term time. Ib.

Cause of Action.]—A captain of an India country trader contracted in India with B. for a crew, according to the custom of the country. He arrived in England with the crew, and then made a voyage with them to the West Indies, and back again. In an action by part of the crew for wages due on the West India voyage:—Held, on motion for a mandamus to examine witnesses in India, that the cause of action did not arise in India, within the statute. Francisco v. Gilmore, 1 Bos. & P. 177.

How Application made.]—In an information at the suit of the crown, the court will grant a rule for a mandamus upon the statement of the attorney-general, that the writ is necessary, and will not require the production of any affidavit in support of that statement. Reg. v. Douglas, 2 D. (N.S.) 416; 7 Jur. 305.

It is not essential that the names should be given in the affidavit to ground a motion for the examination of witnesses in India; a certain description or designation is sufficient. Rickards v. East India Co., 3 Jur. 822.

Issues Pending for Argument.] — It is no answer to a rule for a mandamus to examine witnesses, that it is moved whilst issues in law are pending for argument. Kelsall v. Marshall, 1 C. B. (N.S.) 266.

Indian Courts.]—The Supreme Court of Judicature of Madras is for every purpose substituted for the Mayor's Court formerly in existence there. It is bound, therefore, to receive and obey a mandamus from the Queen's Bench for the examination of witnesses under 13 Geo. 3, c. 63, s. 40. Such writ was directed to the chief justice and other judges of the court, and shewed that the court was held by them only:—Held, that the writ in this respect was properly executed. Reg. v. Douglas, 13 Q. B. 42; 16 L. J., Q. B. 417; 11 Jur. 841.

It appeared from the return that the witnesses were sworn, that the original examinations were taken by the sworn officers in open court and in writing, and subsequently transcribed upon parchment in the Crown office at Madras (by whom did not appear); that the parchment writings were carefully collated and compared by the sworn officers with the originals, and such parchment writings were annexed to the returns, which stated them to be the examinations:—Held, that this was a substantial compliance with the directions of the 13 Geo. 3, c. 63, s. 40, and that such examinations were receivable. Ib.

Copies of Depositions.]—Where a defendant, at his own expense, obtains a mandamus, the plaintiff is entitled to copies of the depositions returned, on paying the expense of making such copies, although he refuses to pay any part of the expenses attending the writ. Davis v. Nicholson, 7 Bing. 358; 1 D. P. C. 220; 5 M. & P. 185; 9 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 114.

Rule nisi.]—A rule for a mandamus to examine witnesses in India under 13 Geo. 3, c. 63, s. 44, is nisi in the first instance. Doe d. Grimes v. Pattison, 3 D. P. C. 35.

Costs.]—The plaintiffs obtained a mandamus for the examination of witnesses in India, and the writ and depositions were returned to this country; but the defendant did not join in the application for the writ, nor examine nor cross-examine witnesses under it, and the plaintiffs obtained a verdict:—Held, that they were not entitled to the costs attending the writ, or of the office copies of the depositions. Fairlie v. Parker, 1 M. & P. 438.

Where a defendant obtained a mandamus to examine witnesses in India, the plaintiff having recovered a verdict, was entitled to his costs of cross-examining such witnesses. Whytt v. Macintosh, 2 M. & Ry. 133; 8 B. & C. 317; 6 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 224.

A mandamus granted to examine a defendant in India, on his own behalf, he being an officer who had left England after action brought, to return to his regiment. The costs in such cases will be costs in the cause, except under special circumstances. Brunton v. Hardy, 10 W. R. 562.

3. When Witness Abroad.

a. When Granted.

In what Cases.]—The court will allow witnesses to be cross-examined vivâ voce, by a commission executed abroad, when the application seems reasonable. Pole v. Rogers, 5 D. P. C. 632; 4 Scott, 479; 3 Bing. (N.C.) 780; 3 Hodges, 83; 6 L. J., C. P. 216.

A commission may be granted to examine a party to a suit resident abroad on his own behalf. But the court may, in its discretion, refuse such commission, if sufficient ground is not shewn for requiring it. Castelli v. Groome, 18 Q. B. 490; 21 L. J., Q. B. 308; 16 Jur. 888.

The court refused a commission where the only specific ground assigned was, that the parties were resident, and were carrying on business in distant places abroad (Leghorn and Constantinople), and that they made the application bonâ fide. Ib.

It is no answer to an application for a commission to examine witnesses abroad (supported by the ordinary affidavit), that the opposite party deposes that there are persons in this country, and documents accessible to the applicant, which would supply him with any information he could obtain from the witnesses he proposes to examine. And after a judge has exercised his discretion on such an application, the court will not disturb his decision unless it is manifestly wrong. Adams v. Corfield, 28 L. J., Ex. 31.

In deciding, on an application by one of the parties to an action, for the issue of a commission to take his evidence abroad, the court must consider whether, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, it is necessary for the purposes of justice, and in the interest of all the parties to the action, and not of the party applying only, that the commission should issue. In so considering the matter, the possibility of the witness not being a credible witness must be assumed, and regard must be had to the importance of cross-examination before a court by which the case is to be tried, and if the court is satisfied that the non-appearance of the witness in court would place the other parties to the action at a disadvantage, the commission should not issue, even though the result may be to prevent the evidence from being given at all. The decision of a court of first instance on such a question is not such an exercise of judicial discretion that the Court of Appeal is fettered in reviewing it. Berdan v. Greenwood, 20 Ch. D. 764, n.; 46 L. T. 524, n.—C. A.

The plaintiff in an action to recover commission on sales of a foreign government on the ground that such sales had been effected through the exercise of his influence with that government, applied for his evidence to be taken by commission abroad, alleging that to cross the channel would be injurious to the health and dangerous to his life:—Held, that to grant the application would be injurious to the defendants, and that it not being shewn satisfactorily that the facts could not be proved by other evidence, or that to come to England would in fact be dangerous to the plaintiff, the commission should not issue. Ib.

L. granted to T. an exclusive licence to use in England a certain patented invention for making sugar. This invention was also patented in America, and M., an American sugar manufacturer, had a licence for its use in the United States. L. brought his action against T. to have the licence rectified, alleging that the real agreement between the parties was that the licence was not to interfere with the importation into England of sugar made abroad under the patent. The statement of claim alleged that M. had introduced L. to T., and that the negotiations between L. and T. had proceeded on the understanding that sugar made abroad under the patent might be imported; but there was no allegation, nor did it appear in evidence, that M. had taken part in the negotiations. L. applied to have a commission to examine M. in America:—Held, that if it appeared that the evidence of M. would be material, the commission ought to be granted, there being nothing to shew that M. was keeping out of the way to avoid cross-examination. Berdan v. Greenwood (20 Ch. D. 764, n.) distinguished. Langen v. Tate, 53 L. J., Ch. 361; 24 Ch. D. 522; 49 L. T. 758; 32 W. R. 189—C. A.

But held, that on the materials before the court, the commission should be refused, there being nothing to shew that M. had taken such part in the negotiations as to make his evidence material. The court, however, as an indulgence, gave the plaintiff an opportunity of adducing evidence to shew that M. could give material evidence. Ib.

Where it is sought to have a material witness examined abroad, and the nature of the case is such that it is important that he should be examined here, the party asking to have him examined abroad must shew clearly that he cannot bring him to this country to be examined at the trial. Lawson v. Vacuum Brake Co., 54 L. J., Ch. 16; 27 Ch. D. 137; 51 L. T. 275; 33 W. R. 186—C. A.

If it is shewn that there are material witnesses resident abroad whom a party wishes to examine, a commission to examine them abroad will be granted if there is any reasonable ground for their not coming here, unless a case is made shewing that it is necessary for the purposes of justice that they should be examined in England. Armour v. Walker, 53 L. J., Ch. 413; 25 Ch. D. 673; 50 L. T. 292; 32 W. R. 214—C. A.

A party is not entitled to a commission ex debito justitiæ upon shewing that a material witness is resident out of the jurisdiction. The granting of the commission is a matter of judicial discretion to be exercised according to the particular circumstances of each case. In a case where it was shewn that witnesses were out of the jurisdiction and their examination on commission abroad would be much less expensive than bringing them to the trial in England, and there was nothing to shew that their presence in court was essential:—Held, that the commission should issue. Cuch v. Allcock, 57 L. J., Q. B. 489; 21 Q. B. D. 178; 36 W. R. 747—C. A.

Under the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, ss. 28, 31, and 32, this court will not issue a commission to examine witnesses orally or upon interrogatories, out of the jurisdiction; but will appoint a special examiner for that purpose. Lawrence v. Maule, 3 W. R. 534.

Motion to examine on affidavit defendant out of the jurisdiction refused. A commission to examine witnesses is not necessary even where the witness is out of the jurisdiction. Crofts v. Middleton, 9 Hare (App.) 18; 17 Jur. 112; 1 W. R. 74, 163.

On a motion for a commission to take the examination of a married woman—order made; but the accountant-general will not be directed to send out a power of attorney for her execution, to enable her to direct payment to her husband (although time would be saved by so doing), on account of the possibility of its influencing the lady's decision. Allat v. Bailey, 1 W. R. 383.

On a petition presented by a ward of court who had married a foreigner without leave of the court, for a settlement, the court directs the usual inquiries on affidavit of facts, and will not direct a commission to issue for the purpose of proving the facts. Reynolds v. Lane, 1 Jur. 330.

On a suggestion that exhibits given in before commissioners on an examination of witnesses, had been since altered and interlined, the court granted a commission to examine the point. Richardson v. Lowther, 1 Ch. Ca. 273.

Practice as to commissions to examine witnesses in a foreign country. Anon., 2 Ir. Ch. R. 92.

Facts not admitted by Attorney-General.]—Plaintiff's claim to have a commission to inquire of facts denied, or not confessed, by the attorney-general. Clayton v. Att.-Gen., 1 Coop. t. Cot. 140.

Petition of Right.]—It is of course that a commission should issue to inquire into the facts stated in a petition of right, unless the attorney-general will admit them. Queen and Canterbury (Viscount), In re, Queen and Baron de Bode, In re, 1 Coop. t. Cot. 143.

On Application of Plaintiff.]—The court has power to order a commission to issue for the examination abroad of a party to an action, though the circumstances which will induce the court to make such an order are different from those required to be shewn on an application for a commission to examine a mere witness. Where a plaintiff residing abroad claimed as an heir-at-law who had been missing for twenty-four years, Kay, J., ordered a commission to issue to take his evidence abroad, without prejudice to the right of the defendant to cross-examine him at the trial in England in the presence of witnesses who could speak to his identity :—Held, on appeal, that the order must be varied by directing that the depositions of the plaintiff were not to be read at the trial without the consent of the defendant. Nadin v. Bassett, 53 L. J., Ch. 253 ; 25 Ch. D. 21 ; 49 L. T. 454 ; 32 W. R. 70—C. A.

A plaintiff who desires to be examined on commission must make out by affidavit a strong primâ facie case why he should not attend and be examined at the trial ; and the onus is not on the defendant in the first instance to shew why he should attend to be examined at the trial. A plaintiff is not entitled to be examined on commission in the absence of any affidavit by himself, shewing strong and positive reasons for his not attending to be examined at the trial. Light v. Anticosti Co., 58 L. T. 25.

On Application of Defendant.]—The court is more favourable to an application by a defendant resident abroad to have his evidence in the action taken by commission or special examiner in the country where he resides, than it is to similar applications by plaintiffs resident abroad suing in the jurisdiction, the principles applicable in the two cases being clearly different. Ross v. Woodford, 63 L. J., Ch. 191 ; [1894] 1 Ch. 38 ; 8 R. 20 ; 70 L. T. 22 ; 42 W. R. 188.

In the absence of special circumstances a commission will be issued on the application of a foreign defendant, to take his evidence in the place where he resides. The fact that, after the service of the writ but before the action was set down, the defendant was in this country for the purpose of settling the action, is not such a special circumstance as to disentitle him to a commission. Ross v. Woodford ([1894] 1 Ch. 38) approved. New v. Burns, 64 L. J., Q. B. 104 ; 14 R. 339 ; 71 L. T. 681 ; 43 W. R. 182—C. A.

To Defendant, when obtained by Plaintiff.]—Where the plaintiff has obtained an order for a commission to examine witnesses, but has not served it, the defendant is entitled as of course to an order for a commission. Markland v. Jones, 6 L. J., Ch. 63.

Commission to examine abroad granted to defendant, who had cross-examined, but not examined in chief, under commission sued out by plaintiff. Steward v. Steward, 2 Ves. & B. 116.

To prove Question of Foreign Law.] — The defendant to an action pleaded the law of Spain, and moved for a commission to be directed to issue to Spain to examine witnesses as to the law. He did not shew that the law could not be proved at the hearing by the production of witnesses in this country ; and the plaintiff opposed the motion :—Held, that the commission would not be granted. The M. Moxham, 1 P. D. 107 ; 24 W. R. 597—C. A.

M., the daughter of C. by B., the ceremony of "nekir" in India having been performed between them, after being treated and having assumed herself in her bill to be the natural daughter, claims to be legitimate, and moves for a commission to examine witnesses in India, as to the legitimacy, in France, as to the domicile, and in Scotland as to the construction of C.'s will :—Held, that being always treated as illegitimate, admitted as such by her own bill, by the answer of B., and found so by the master : and it being evident that no information could be obtained :—Held, that a commission to India be refused ; but those to France and Scotland granted. Lord v. Colvin, 2 Eq. R., Eq. 296 ; 23 L. J., Ch. 469 ; 2 W. R. 134.

A foreign judgment is binding here, and therefore a commission to examine abroad will not be granted in a suit to question such judgment. Martin v. Nicolls, 3 Sim. 458.

To prove Jurisdiction of Foreign Court.]—A commission granted to examine at Paris, as to the extent of jurisdiction of a particular court erected there, but not as to the original constitution of it. Gage v. Stafford (Lady), 2 Ves. 556.

Whether Ship Foreign.]—Where a vessel has been seized by the officers of the customs, on charges of offences against other acts of parliament than that usually called the Navigation Act ; if, on the trial of the information filed thereon, the question be likely to turn on the fact of the ship belonging to a foreign subject, the court will, on motion (a bill having been filed against the attorney-general for that purpose), grant the defendant a commission to examine persons residing abroad, and make it part of the order, that their depositions shall be received in evidence on the trial. Laragoity v. Att.-Gen., 2 Price, 172.

To determine Accuracy of Accounts.]—On an application for an order directing a commission to be issued to examine witnesses abroad with a view of testing the accuracy of accounts rendered by the liquidator of a company, in respect of a charge in which the applicants were largely interested :—Held, that the application ought to be granted. The applicants were in substance mortgage creditors of the company, and the commission was a mere incident to the prosecution of the accounts. Imperial Land Co. of Marseilles, In re, 37 L. T. 588—C. A.

On a reference by the decree to make certain inquiries, and a state of facts brought in by the plaintiff, and witnesses examined charging the defendants with receipt of moneys, as to which the depositions had passed publication ; the defendants then brought in a state of facts, admitting the receipts, but discharge by payment. The court, on motion, gave the latter liberty to issue a commission to examine witnesses in support of such discharge, but not to contradict the plaintiff's state of facts. Parker v. Peet, 1 De G. & Sm. 216.

To value Property of Company—Jurisdiction.]—A company, whose property consisted of gold mines in India, having passed resolutions for voluntary liquidation and reconstruction, a dissentient member of the liquidating company, in an arbitration under the Companies Act, 1862, ss. 161 and 162, claimed to have his interest valued at the price at which the shares in the new company were issued under the scheme of reconstruction ; but the liquidators claimed that such interest should be valued on the footing of a realisation of the assets, and took out a summons under the act for a commission to India to examine witnesses as to the value of the property :—Held (1), that apart from s. 138 of the act, the court had jurisdiction to entertain the application, inasmuch as the arbitration was compulsory ; (2) that the price of the dissentient's interest was not demonstrated by the terms of the scheme ; and (3) that, under the circumstances of the case, the court would make the order as being necessary for the purposes of justice within Ord. XXXVII. r. 5. Mysore West Gold Mining Co., In re, 58 L. J., Ch. 731; 42 Ch. D. 535; 61 L. T. 453; 37 W. R. 794; 1 Meg. 347.

Costs Due.] — The court will not stop the issuing of a commission to examine witnesses abroad, on the ground of the plaintiff being indebted to the defendant for certain costs in equity. Ougham v. Parish, 4 D. P. C. 29.

Purpose of Delay.]—To induce the court to refuse to allow a commission to issue for the examination of the defendant's witnesses, a very strong case of misconduct, on the part of the defendant, must be made out; but where there is reason to suspect the object to be to delay the plaintiff, it will order him to bring the money into court. Sparkes v. Barrett, 5 Scott, 402; 7 L. J., C. P. 65. S. P., Lloyd v. Key, 3 D. P. C. 253.

Hostile Country.]—A commission will not be granted for the examination of witnesses in a hostile country. Barrick v. Buba, 16 C. B. 492; 3 C. L. R. 921; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1020; 3 W. R. 524.

Discretion.]—Where a judge in a court below has made an order, the Court of Appeal will not interfere with his discretion unless it is clear that he has manifestly decided wrongly. Berdan v. Greenwood, 20 Ch. D. 764, n.; 46 L. T. 524, n. S. P., Adams v. Corfield, 28 L. J., Ex. 31.

Discretionary exercise of the jurisdiction of the court as to granting commissions to examine witnesses abroad. Lousada v. Templer, 2 Russ. 561.

Not Incidental to Discovery.]—Commission to examine abroad is not incidental to discovery; therefore, it does not follow that, where court refuses discovery, it will refuse commission. Thorpe v. Macauley, 5 Madd. 219.

By Equity in Aid of Proceedings at Law.]—Either party at law is entitled to assistance of court of equity to obtain commission to examine abroad. Defendant retiring from jurisdiction, service of subpœna to appear to bill for commission, on his attorney at law, ordered good service. Devis v. Turnbull, 6 Madd. 232.

Upon a petition to expunge the proofs upon certain bills of exchange, an action had been directed to be brought against the bankrupts to try the validity of the debts. A material witness being abroad, the court of common law put off the trial: it was ordered, upon petition, that the bankrupt should be at liberty to file a bill for a commission to take the examination of the witness abroad. Coles, Ex parte, Buck. 293.

On a bill for discovery, and a commission to examine witnesses abroad, in aid of the defence to an action, the plaintiff, having obtained the common injunction for want of an answer, was held entitled to a commission, and to extend the injunction to stay trial. Bowden v. Hodge, 2 Swanst. 258.

Plaintiff, on bill of discovery in aid of defence to action against him at law, may have, on motion at sittings after term, a commission to examine abroad, on payment of a considerable part at least of plaintiff at law's demand into court, where cause at law is at issue, and was entered for trial, the term before the term immediately preceding the sittings, and a case of defence has been stated by the bill, although the affidavit on which it has been moved is in the common form; the delay in staying the trial not being a sufficient ground of opposition to such an application. Ebden v. Prince, 8 Price, 290.

On a bill for discovery by plaintiff at law in aid of action, motion for commission abroad is not of course. Anon., 1 Anstr. 201.

In aid of defence at law, court will not grant commission to examine abroad, unless on good ground shewn, although no injunction moved for. Shedden v. Baring, 3 Anstr. 880.

A bill was filed for discovery and relief, and for an injunction to stay proceedings at law; a motion, by the plaintiff, to continue an injunction granted before answer, and for a commission to examine witnesses in aid of the defence at law, was refused. Chimelli v. Chauvet, Younge, 302.

An action having been brought against the plaintiffs, whose witnesses were about to leave London for New York, they applied to the chief justice of the king's bench, under 1 Will. 4, c. 22, for a commission to examine their witnesses before the trial. But his lordship ordered them to be examined vivâ voce before a barrister with liberty to the defendants to attend and cross-examine. The plaintiffs took no proceedings under that order, but, their witnesses having shortly afterwards gone to New York, they filed a bill in this court, and afterwards moved for a commission to examine their witnesses there: motion granted. Grinnell v. Cobbold, 4 Sim. 546.

—— Injunction.]—Where the party applying for a commission to examine witnesses, appears, from the nature of his case, to be entitled to it, the granting an injunction in the meantime is no more than a necessary consequence of that right. Nicol v. Verelst, 4 Bro. P. C. 416.

Injunction obtained two years back, on granting commission to examine in India not yet returned, dissolved. Penney v. Edgar, 1 Anstr. 276.

Under what circumstances a commission to examine witnesses abroad, and an injunction to restrain proceedings at law in the meantime, ought not to be granted. Cujamaul v. Verelst, 4 Bro. P. C. 407.

—— Bill.]—A bill for a commission to examine witnesses abroad, in aid of a defence to an action at law, is not a bill for relief. Mills v. Campbell, 2 Y. & Coll. 389.

Bill for commission to examine abroad must allege that action has been brought. Angell v. Angell, 1 Sim. & S. 83; 24 R. R. 149.

Where, in case of libel, the party injured, instead of proceeding by indictment, brought an action for damages, and the defendant pleaded in justification the truth of the matters, and filed a bill for a commission to examine witnesses abroad for discovery, and for an injunction, &c.: —Held, on demurrer, that the fact of the libel being an indictable offence would not repel the right to the common defences in civil actions, and that the defendant was entitled to the ordinary means of proving the truth of his pleas; but such bill must shew the materiality of the evidence to support his case at law, and the bill ought therefore to shew what are the pleas, or refer to them so as to make them part of the bill; and it is not necessary to allege that the witnesses were residing in England at the time of the publishing of the libel. Macaulay v. Shackell, 1 Bli. (N.S.) 96. And see Shackell v. Macaulay, 3 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 30.

Where no Stay of Trial.]—Quære, whether the court will grant a commission to examine witnesses abroad in aid of the defence to an action at law, where it will not stay the trial of the action till the return of the commission. Hart v. Strong, 2 Russ. 559.

b. Time of Application.

After Issue Joined.]—An application for the examination of a witness resident out of the jurisdiction of the court must be made as early as possible after issue joined. Brydges v. Fisher, 4 M. & Scott, 458.

The rule of practice is, that a commission to examine witnesses in a cause will not be granted before issue joined; but a commission may be so granted in an extreme case, and where without it, justice would be defeated by the exclusion of material evidence. Fynney v. Beesley, 17 Q. B. 86; 20 L. J., Q. B. 395; 15 Jur. 898. S. P., Clutterbuck v. Jones, 6 D. & L. 251; 2 C. B. Rep. 332; 18 L. J., Q. B. 11; 13 Jur. 152.

Where Account Directed.]—The course of the court is, that where an account must necessarily be directed at the hearing, a commission before the hearing shall never be granted to examine witnesses beyond sea, when the granting such commission is after the account is directed. Adams v. Bohun, Barnard. 270.

Commission to examine in West Indies, on bill filed for discovery, in aid of an action at law brought by plaintiff, and for a commission (not praying relief), ordered, on motion, although defendant's will delay the directing the account; and the proper time to apply for such commission answering having expired. Hibberson v. Cambridge, 13 Price, 796.

After Order to Speed.]—It is of course that a plaintiff, even after the peremptory order to speed his cause, should have an order for a commission to examine witnesses, with liberty to execute the same in term time. Field v. Sowle, 1 Russ. 82.

Before Answer.]—A plaintiff is entitled to move for a commission to examine witnesses abroad as soon as the defendant has obtained an order for time, though he has neither filed his answer nor is in contempt. Mendizabal v. Machado, 2 Russ. 540; 4 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 62.

Commission to examine abroad before time for answering expired, refused. Cheminant v. De la Cour, 1 Madd. 208.

Commission granted to examine witnesses abroad, before answer, the object of the suit being merely to obtain evidence for an action. Noble v. Garland, 19 Ves. 372; Coop. 322.

It is practice of the Court of Exchequer not to grant a commission to examine witnesses abroad, until after answer, as in the case of policies of insurance; the bill praying equitable relief, viz. to deliver up for fraud, &c., though not going beyond the motion to dissolve the injunction, as an action will try the question. S. C., 19 Ves. 375.

On bill for discovery, you cannot move before answer, or unless defendant is in contempt, for commission abroad. King v. Allen, 4 Madd. 247.

Leave given to plaintiff, before answer, to sue out a commission in a suit to perpetuate testimony, the defendant having been attached, and still refusing to answer. Lancaster v. Lancaster, 6 Sim. 439.

A plaintiff is not entitled to a commission to examine witnesses abroad, if the defendant is not in contempt, although his time for answering has expired, and an order for time has been obtained by him. Cook v. Stephens, 3 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 226.

A demurrer to a bill for a discovery and a commission in aid of the defence of an action for libel, being overruled, a commission to examine witnesses abroad will be granted, before answer, though the defendant in equity denies, by affidavit, the truth of the justification pleaded at law. Shackell v. Macaulay, 3 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 40.

Defendant, under circumstances, allowed after examination, but before publication, to have commission to examine witnesses as to whether witness for plaintiff who was examined was not interested in suit. Vaughan v. Worrall, 2 Madd. 322.

Commission to examine witnesses abroad will be granted under circumstances, on coming in of answer, although not prayed by original bill, and the injunction granted will be in meantime continued. Kensington v. White, 3 Price, 164.

After Publication.]—After the defendant has been examined on interrogatories, and publication passed, the plaintiff ought not to have a commission to examine witnesses in order to falsify the defendant's examination, this tending to multiply causes, and make them endless. Smith v. Turner, 3 P. W. 413.

After publication in the original cause plaintiffs, in the cross-cause, moved for a commission to examine witnesses, which was granted, though it was urged that it would tend to cure the defects of that evidence which had been adduced in the original suit. Scott v. Allgood, Prac. Reg. Ex. 87.

Commission to examine witnesses abroad upon new matter, stated at the hearing, and not in issue before, granted upon terms of not delaying an action directed to be tried at law. Newland v. Horsman, 2 Ch. Ca. 74.

Order made after publication for liberty to take out a commission, and examine witnesses by general interrogatory, as to credit of witness who had been cross-examined, and as to such particular facts only as are not material to what is in issue in the cause. Wood v. Hammerton, 9 Ves. 145.

A plaintiff gave an undertaking to speed before the answers of all the defendants were put in, and at a future stage attempted to remedy this by getting a commission to examine witnesses after publication has passed:—Held, it could not be supported. Howard v. Prince, 3 Jur. 776.

Delay.]—A cause in the paper for hearing having been ordered to stand over on an application on behalf of the plaintiff, who was at Calcutta, sixteen days afterwards he took out a summons to have evidence taken abroad, but the court, on the ground of such delay and former delay on his part, refused the application with costs. Stewart v. Gladstone, 47 L. J., Ch. 154; 7 Ch. D. 394; 37 L. T. 575; 26 W. R. 277.

The court refused to disallow a commission for examining the plaintiff's witnesses abroad, though there had been great delay on his part; but they referred it to the master to say whether or not the security the plaintiff had given for costs should not be increased. De Rossi v. Polhill, 7 Scott, 836.

A commission to examine witnesses abroad refused, on the ground of the delay of the party who made the application. Hart v. Strong, 2 Russ. 559.

The original bill being for an account, and an injunction to restrain an action, and the injunction being dissolved on the merits nearly ten years after the bill was filed, the plaintiff filed a supplemental bill for a discovery, and commission to examine witnesses in aid of his defence to an action substantially the same: motion for the commission refused, with costs, on the ground of delay. Todd v. Aylwin, 1 Sim. 271.

Notwithstanding the plaintiff in a bill of discovery had been guilty of delay in applying for a commission to examine witnesses abroad, prayed for by the bill, the court will grant it, but will impose severe terms. Mill v. Campbell, 2 Y. & Coll. 402; 7 L. J., Ex. Eq. 5; 1 Jur. 865.

c. Stay of Proceedings.

Effect.]—A rule of court for the examination of witnesses on interrogatories in a foreign country, is not an absolute stay of proceedings, but only a limited one. Forbes v. Wells, 3 D. P. C. 318.

The court discharged so much of an order for a commission to examine witnesses as stayed the proceedings, on the ground of an unreasonable delay in the application. Butler v. Fox, 9 C. B. 199.

Injunction.]—See Armstrong v. Armstrong, 61 L. J., P. 63; [1892] P. 98; 66 L. T. 384. And supra, head a.

d. Form of Application and Order.

Affidavit in Support — Deponent.] — The affidavit of the solicitor for the defendant will be received in support of a motion for commission to examine abroad, and it will be sufficient if he swear that he is informed of and believes the statement in the bill if he also add, that his belief is founded on documents in his possession, and that, from the nature of the defence, involving the question of what country the ship belongs to, he considers the commission necessary. Laragoity v. Att.-Gen., 2 Price, 172.

Affidavit of insurance broker, the agent of underwriters, sued on a policy, will not be received in support of commission to examine abroad; it should be made by party himself, or his attorney. Bonham v. Leigh, 5 Price, 444.

—— Sufficiency.]—Upon what affidavits the master may certify as to the propriety of granting a commission for examining witnesses abroad. Bauer v. Mitford, 2 Coll. 188; 14 L. J., Ch. 374.

—— Belief of Deponent.]—On an application for a commission to examine evidence to shew that the legacies given in two codicils were both intended for the legatee, the legatee ought to swear she believes that to have been the intention. Coote v. Coote, 1 Bro. C. C. 448.

On a bill by underwriters, for a commission to examine abroad, to prove the circumstances under which a ship had been condemned and sold, as not worth repair, the court held an affidavit of the plaintiff's solicitor, stating his information and belief that there were several witnesses abroad whose testimony was necessary for the plaintiffs, to be sufficient, though it did not state any grounds for his belief. Robinson v. Soames, 1 Y. & J. 578.

Names of Proposed Witnesses.] — Upon an application for a commission to examine witnesses abroad, the names of at least some of them should be given; otherwise, the commission will not be allowed to go, unless under very special circumstances. Cow v. Kinnersley, 6 Man. & G. 981; 7 Scott (N.R.), 892; 1 D. & L. 906; 13 L. J., C. P. 114; 8 Jur. 364. S. P., Dimond v. Vallance, 7 D. P. C. 590; 2 W. W. & H. 67; 3 Jur. 385.

The affidavit must either specify the names of the witnesses proposed to be examined, or in some other way describe them. Gunter v. M'Tear or M'Kear, 1 M. & W. 201; 1 Gale, 440; 4 D. P. C. 722; 1 Tyr. & G. 245; 5 L. J., Ex. 115.

It need only state the name of the witness, that he is a material witness, and out of the jurisdiction of the court. Norton v. Melbourne (Lord), 3 Bing. (N.C.) 67; 3 Scott, 398; 2 Hodges, 114; 5 D. P. C. 181; 5 L. J., C. P. 343.

In order to obtain a commission to examine abroad, it is sufficient to state the name of the witness, that his evidence is material, and that he is abroad. Oldham v. Carleton, 4 Bro. C. C. 88.

To obtain a commission to examine abroad, it is not necessary to state the points to which it is intended to examine, or the names of the witnesses. Rougemont v. Royal Exchange Co., 7 Ves. 304.

It is not necessary that the affidavit in support of a motion for a commission to examine witnesses abroad, should state either the names of the witnesses or the matters to which they are to be examined, in a case where it is evident that such examination is necessary. Carbonell v. Bessell, 5 Sim. 636.

Motion for commission to examine abroad in aid of action at law, must be supported by affidavit, stating name of witness and points of examination. Mendizabal v. Machado, 2 Sim. & S. 483; 4 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 142. And see S. C., 2 Russ. 540; 4 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 62.

Upon an application to the court to examine witnesses out of the jurisdiction, it is not a general rule to require the names of the witnesses to be stated, or the affidavit to be made by the party or his solicitor. M'Hardy v. Hitchcock, 11 Beav. 93.

A motion for liberty to examine witnesses upon interrogatories, and that a commission should issue for that purpose, which motion was grounded upon the affidavit of the petitioner's solicitor, stating that A. B. and other persons (not named), when applied to, declined to volunteer evidence by making affidavits in the case, but that the deponent was persuaded that they would attend for examination upon interrogatories, and also stating that some of the witnesses (but not naming them) were resident in England, and that a commission would therefore be requisite, and that the respondent was advised that their evidence was material and necessary to the petitioner's case, was refused with costs. Kirwan v. Lindsay, 2 Ir. Ch. R. 23.

—— Of some.]—On an application to examine witnesses in Ireland, by commission, where the names of seven witnesses are specifically stated, the court will allow the commission to go for the examination of "several others" not named in the rule. Beresford (Lord) v. Easthope, 8 D. P. C. 294; 4 Jur. 104.

If the names of some of the witnesses to be examined on a commission abroad are specified, the court may grant the commission for the examination of the witnesses named "and others." Nadin v. Bassett, supra.

A commission to examine witnesses abroad was granted before the action at law was at issue, on motion for that purpose (and for reviving an injunction dissolved as of course by reason of the order for enlarging time to shew cause against dissolution of injunction being discharged), for the examination of witnesses generally on part of plaintiff, necessary to his defence at law, witnesses residing at four different places in the West Indies, although his affidavit only mentioned two persons, both of whom resided at S., in the West Indies; if it appeared, by answer, that transactions took place in the West Indies generally. Jackson v. Strong, 13 Price, 309.

Materiality.]—An affidavit stating that the facts alleged in the pleadings took place in the presence of the witnesses, that they were resident abroad, and that their evidence was material and necessary, is sufficient; the affidavit need not state that the evidence was admissible, or that the application was bonâ fide and not for delay; no affidavit of merits is necessary. Baddeley v. Gilmore, 1 M. & W. 50; 1 Gale, 410; 1 Tyr. & G. 369; 5 L. J., Ex. 115.

Upon a motion on the part of the defendants for a commission to examine witnesses abroad, it was required that it should appear to the satisfaction of the court, upon an affidavit from their attorney, that the evidence of the witnesses proposed to be examined was material and necessary to the defence of the action. Healy v. Young, 2 C. B. 702.

In an action of slander, the defendant having obtained an order for the examination of two witnesses (whose names were given) in Australia, the court, upon a motion to rescind the order, imposed as a term that the defendant should state what it was that he expected the witnesses to prove. Barry v. Barclay, 15 C. B. (N.S.) 849.

On an application for a commission to examine a party abroad as a witness for the defendant, it must appear that there is a reasonable ground for believing that the evidence will be material on behalf of the defendant. Lane v. Bagshawe, 16 C. B. 576; 3 C. L. R. 919.

On a bill for injunction, the court will not grant a commission to examine a witness in India, without a full affidavit of materiality. Moody v. Steele, 2 Anstr. 386.

To obtain an order for commission in aid of an inquiry in relation to a receiver's securities, there must be an affidavit that the witnesses intended to be examined were expected to give material evidence; any party to an inquiry who unnecessarily sues out a commission, must pay the costs of it in any event. Donovan v. Thompson, 1 Hog. 150.

In affidavit, in support of commission to examine witnesses abroad, it is not necessary to state that applicant would have a good defence, if he could procure evidence under such commission, or that there are necessary facts within their knowledge required by plaintiff to be proved on his defence. Woodhead v. Boyd, 6 Price, 101.

Where Matter Arose.]—Affidavit in support of commission to examine abroad, need not state that matter arose there. Akers v. Chancy, 2 Bro. C. C. 273.

Affidavit in Opposition.]—Quære, whether, according to the strict practice of the court, affidavits can be read in opposition to the motion for a commission. Shackell v. Macaulay, 3 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 40.

Affidavits on former Application.]—The master enlarged publication, and on that occasion evidence was produced that the defendant had not seen the depositions. Immediately afterwards, an application was made for an additional commission, which the master granted without any further evidence, that the defendant had not seen the depositions:—Held, that it was not necessary to bring forward further proof, the master having already in his office evidence of the fact, and the court refused with costs an application to set aside the proceedings. Clark v. Chuck, 9 Beav. 414.

Persons not parties to the suit claimed an interest in the subject-matter in dispute, and applied for and obtained the master's certificate for a commission for the examination of witnesses residing abroad in support of the claim. The claimants did not produce an affidavit, but, there being affidavits in the master's office sufficient to satisfy him that the certificate ought to be given, he granted the same:—Held, that the certificate so granted was regular. Bauer v. Maule, 9 Jur. 860.

Certificate of Master.]—If, in the prosecution of inquiries under a reference to the master, a commission to examine witnesses abroad be necessary, an application must be made to the master for his certificate, before applying to the court for the commission. Bamford v. Bamford, 2 Hare, 642; 13 L. J., Ch. 25; 8 Jur. 733.

Semble, the motion for the commission on the master's certificate is of course. Ib.

Production of Documents.]—On an application by a defendant for a commission to examine witnesses abroad, the court refused to make it a part of the rule to call upon the plaintiff to produce a bill of exchange in his possession at the time of executing the commission. Cunliffe v. Whitehead, 3 D. P. C. 634.

In trover for United States treasury notes, the defence set up was, that the notes had been forged by the plaintiff, who offered them for sale to the defendant, by whom they were detained, and that, to prove this, it was necessary to send out a commission to examine witnesses in America. On granting the commission, the court required the defendant to deposit the notes with the master. On the motion of the defendant, a rule was subsequently made for delivering out the notes to some person to be agreed on, or to be named by the master, for the purpose of producing them to the witnesses under the commission, the defendant giving security, to the satisfaction of the master, for their safe return, and depositing facsimiles in lieu of them. The court considered that this rule was complied with by depositing facsimiles exhibiting in outline the figures and emblematical devices on the face of the notes, together with a tracing of the indorsements. Clinton v. Peabody, 7 Man. & G. 399; 8 Scott (N.R.) 117.

Payment into Court.]—Order for a commission to examine witnesses abroad, returnable without delay, pending an injunction against an action, without paying the money into court. Coch v. Donovan, 3 Ves. & B. 76.

Plaintiff, on bill of discovery in aid of defence to action against him at law, may have, on motion at sittings after term, a commission to examine abroad, on payment of considerable part at least of demand of plaintiff at law into court, where the cause at law is at issue, and was entered for trial the term before the term immediately preceding the sittings, and a case of sufficient defence has been made out by a bill, although the affidavit on which it has been moved is in the common form, the delay in staying trial not being sufficient ground of opposition to such an application. Ebden v. Prince, 8 Price, 290.

In insurance cases it is always a question of circumstances whether, on granting commission abroad, the party obtaining it shall be required to bring the whole or any part of the money alleged to be due into court. Marryatt v. Nobre, M'Clel. & Y. 101. S. P., Jackson v. Strong, 13 Price, 309.

Stay of Application.]—Commission to examine abroad is so far in nature of proceeding at law, that application for it is stayed by injunction to stay proceeding at law. Novaes v. Darrien, 4 Madd. 362.

Form of Order.]—An affidavit in support of a motion for a commission to examine witnesses at Paris and Boulogne for the defendant company, stated that certain Frenchmen residing in Paris (named), and others residing in Paris and Boulogne (unnamed), were necessary witnesses. The defendant company was registered in England; their business was in Paris. The court ordered the commission to issue, on the defendants, if the plaintiff pressed it, adding to their affidavit a statement that great inconvenience and expense would otherwise be occasioned. The costs of the commission were reserved; no security was required; and it was referred to chambers to settle the form in which the commission should issue. Spiller v. Paris Skating Rink Co., 27 W. R. 225.

A testator gave the residue of his property to be held in deposit for the purpose of inquiring whether there were any relations of his blood living, and, if so, the said residue was to be divided equally among them. Upon a reference to the master to make inquiries in conformity with the above residuary bequest, the master reported that a commission ought to be sent to Venice to examine witnesses as to who were the next of kin. The court, upon the application of the executors, made an order for a foreign commission, and also directed what sum should be allowed out of the testator's property for the expenses of the commission. Heath v. Chapman, 21 L. J., Ch. 614.

It is not irregular to intitule an order for a commission to examine witnesses, or the commission, or the return thereof, in a short form as a suit in which "A. and others are plaintiffs," and "B. and others defendants." Lincoln v. Wright, 4 Beav. 166; 10 L. J., Ch. 331.

The order of course for the further examination of witnesses under a commission is not irregular on account of its not being restricted to the examination of witnesses not before examined on the same subject-matter. Forbes v. Forbes, 9 Hare (App.) lxxvii; 1 W. R. 124. And see post, 6. FORM OF COMMISSION.

4. WHEN WITNESS WITHIN JURISDICTION.

a. Examination De Bene Esse.

i. General Principles.

Distinction between examination to perpetuate and de bene esse. In a suit for the former purpose, after the examination there is an end to the issue. Morrison v. Arnold, 19 Ves. 671.

The reason why court allows taking of depositions de bene esse, is either from contempt of party in not answering, and thereby preventing joining of issue, or else where there may be ground to apprehend their not living to be examined in chief; but, if these witnesses do live, and are examined in chief, their depositions de bene esse fall to the ground. Cann v. Cann, 1 P. W. 567.

ii. In What Cases.

Facts known only to Witness.]—A witness ordered to be examined de bene esse, where the thing examined into lay only in the knowledge of the witness, and was a matter of great importance, though the witness was not proved to be old or infirm. Shirley v. Ferrers, 3 P. W. 77; Mos. 389.

Two witnesses ordered to be examined de bene esse, being the only persons who knew material facts. Cholmondeley (Earl) v. Orford (Earl), 4 Bro. C. C. 157.

Motion that a witness be examined de bene esse, being the only witness to a material fact, granted. Hankin v. Middleditch, 2 Bro. C. C. 641.

Witness examined de bene esse, upon the sole ground of his being the only person in whose knowledge a material fact was. Brydges v. Hatch, 1 Cox, 423.

It is a ground for examining a witness de bene esse, that he is the only witness to some material fact in the court, although he be neither aged nor infirm. But the affidavits should state the particular points to which his evidence is meant to apply. Pearson v. Ward, 1 Cox, 177; Dick. 648.

Examination of other Witness.]—Witnesses having been examined de bene esse, with the view to a trial at law, the examination of another witness is not permitted without strong circumstances; as upon a second ejectment brought after verdict for the defendant, the examination of a witness, produced at the trial, who had not been examined under a bill to perpetuate testimony, was permitted; not as to other witnesses. Palmer v. Ailesbury (Lord), 15 Ves. 299.

Witness going Abroad.]—Whenever a necessary witness is going abroad, or is from illness, age or other infirmity likely to be unable to attend the trial, an order will be made for his examination before an officer of the court in the presence of both parties. Warner v. Mosses, 50 L. J., Ch. 28; 16 Ch. D. 100; 29 W. R. 201—C. A.

The court granted a rule (absolute, unless cause shewn on the morrow), for the examination of witnesses upon an affidavit that they were about to sail immediately for India. Pirie v. Iron, 1 M. & Scott, 223; 8 Bing. 143; 1 D. P. C. 252.

The fact of a plaintiff not proceeding promptly in a cause, is no answer to a rule for examining a material witness on interrogatories, who is going abroad. Weekes v. Paul, 5 Scott, 713; 6 D. P. C. 462.

Witness going to the West Indies examined, but he being in Ireland must be examined in chief. Birt v. White, Dick. 473.

Scotland out of jurisdiction. Witness going there may be examined de bene esse. Botts v. Verelst, Dick. 454.

Motion on behalf of plaintiff, that two of their captains, sworn to be material witnesses, who were going to India, and not likely to return in less than eight months, might be examined de bene esse, refused, because the witnesses were plaintiff's servants, and they might keep them at home if they pleased, and because defendant would not, from the shortness of the time, be prepared to cross-examine. East India Co. v. Naish, Bunb. 320; 2 Fowl. Ex. Pr. 127.

If the principal witness of a plaintiff is about to leave the kingdom, and he has process to a sequestration against the defendant, he will be allowed to examine de bene esse, on undertaking not to hear his cause on sequestration without leave of the court. Kirwan v. O'Boyle, 2 Hog. 189.

Commission to examine de bene esse, witness going abroad. See Lee Dicher v. Power, Dick. 112.

Witness above Seventy Years of Age.]—The court has jurisdiction on a proper occasion, when it is "necessary for the purposes of justice," to make an order for an examination de bene esse of witnesses upon an ex parte application, the order being taken by the applicant at his peril, and subject to the risk of being discharged on sufficient grounds. An order was made in chambers on an ex parte application by the plaintiffs to examine de bene esse thirty witnesses upon an affidavit of the plaintiffs' solicitor merely stating that he was advised that they were material witnesses—that they were all above seventy years of age, and that he was advised and believed that by reason of their age it was desirable that their examination should be taken without delay. This order was discharged on motion in court, mainly on the ground that the affidavit was insufficient:—Held, that the affidavit did not satisfy the requirements of Ord. XXXVIII. r. 3, but leave was given to put in a further affidavit stating what information had been obtained, and what steps had been taken to obtain such information as to the age of the different witnesses, and also stating generally the facts which the particular witnesses were going to depose to. Although the fact that a witness is seventy years old is generally a good primâ facie ground for an order for his examination de bene esse, such a practice will not necessarily be applied to an extraordinary case, e.g. where an order has been made to examine thirty witnesses. On a subsequent application made on a further affidavit of the solicitor, in which he divided the witnesses into four parties who were to depose to four different heads of evidence:—The court declined to allow the examination de bene esse of ten of the proposed witnesses who were between seventy and seventy-five years old, without prejudice to a subsequent application for leave to examine them on grounds other than age, but allowed the other twenty witnesses above seventy-five to be examined de bene esse upon the undertaking of the plaintiffs' counsel to produce at the trial, if so requested by the defendant, any of such witnesses who might be then alive. Bidder v. Bridges, 26 Ch. D. 1; 50 L. T. 287; 32 W. R. 445—C. A. Affirming 53 L. J., Ch. 479.

Examination de bene esse, where the witness is above the age of seventy, or is the only witness to a particular fact; refused upon affidavit of the agent of his information from the witness that he can prove the fact, and belief that no other person can prove it. Rowe v. ——, 13 Ves. 251.

Illness.]—In order to obtain a rule to examine a party on interrogatories on the grounds that the party resided three hundred miles off, was eighty-one years old, and had lately met with an accident, an affidavit of a surgeon must be produced, stating his belief that the witness would not be able to attend the trial. Davies v. Lowndes, 6 Scott, 738; 1 Arn. 379; 7 D. P. C. 101; 8 L. J., C. P. 10; 2 Jur. 945.

But where it is sworn that a witness is in a precarious state of health, and cannot attend the trial with safety, he may be examined before the officer of the court. Pond v. Dimes, 2 D. P. C. 730; 3 M. & Scott, 161.

Before the court will permit a witness to be examined before the prothonotary, on the ground of anticipated illness, it must appear that there is strong reason to believe that the illness will exist at the time of the trial. Abraham v. Newton, 8 Bing. 274; 1 D. P. C. 266; 1 M. & Scott, 384; 1 L. J., C. P. 91.

A witness will not be allowed to be examined de bene esse, on an affidavit that she labours under a cancer, but not stating that she is in immediate danger. Anon., 1 L. J., Ch. 76.

The court will not grant a rule absolute in the first instance for the examination of a witness although he be at the point of death. Semble, that s. 46 of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, does not give the court the power of doing so. Thomas v. Von Stutterheim, 5 W. R. 6.

Commission to examine witness on oath of impotency to travel. Wade v. Gwye, Cary, 40.

—— Evidence rejected at Trial—Appeal.]—Where the evidence of a witness had been rejected at the hearing of an action, and there was an appeal against that decision, the witness being dangerously ill, the Court of Appeal allowed his evidence to be taken de bene esse, before a special commissioner pending the appeal; the appellant undertaking to abide by any order which the court might hereafter make as to the costs of the application and the costs of the examination. Treasury Solicitor v. White, 55 L. J., P. 79—C. A.

—— Form of Order.]—In an action for replacement of railway stock alleged to have been transferred from the name of the plaintiff by means of a forged transfer, an attesting witness of the execution of the transfer was dangerously ill. On motion ex parte on behalf of the plaintiff for leave to examine the witness de bene esse, and for the appointment of a special examiner:—Held, that it was a proper case to make the order, the judge directing the order to be drawn up in accordance with the form in Seton on Decrees (4th edit.), 1635, omitting the words, "And it is ordered that the plaintiff be at liberty to give such depositions in evidence at the trial of this action":—That, at the trial of the action, before leave to use the evidence was given, it would be necessary to prove that the witness was not capable of being examined. Barton v. North Staffordshire Ry., 56 L. T. 601; 35 W. R. 536.

—— Appointment of Special Examiner.]—The court refused to appoint a special examiner, holding that the matter must go to the examiner in rotation. Ib.

Witness Deaf.]—There must be a special order for the examination of a witness who is deaf. Hussey v. Bodkin, 2 Hog. 214.

Welsh Witness.]—It is not now the practice of the court to appoint a special examiner to take a country examination, even, for instance, in a Welsh case, where it is alleged to be necessary that the examination should be taken by a person conversant with the Welsh language. In such a case the examination will be referred in the usual way to one of the examiners of the court, who is entitled, if necessary, to the assistance of an interpreter. Bute (Marquis) v. James, 55 L. J., Ch. 658; 33 Ch. D. 157; 55 L. T. 133; 34 W. R. 754.

Unwilling Witness.]—It is no ground of objection to a rule for examining a witness vivâ voce before the master, that it is suggested that he is unwilling to submit to cross-examination, or that he is the son of the party applying, if he appears to be independent of his father's influence. Carruthers v. Graham, 9 D. P. C. 947.

Person making Statements deposed to in Affidavit.]—Where, in an affidavit filed on behalf of the plaintiffs on a motion, which by consent stood over, statements were deposed to as having been made by a person to the deponent, and which were material for the purposes of the plaintiffs' case, leave was, on an ex parte application, given to the plaintiffs to examine such person before an examiner, the deposition to be given in evidence as if it were an affidavit. Turner Pneumatic Tyre Co. v. Dunlop Pneumatic Tyre Co., 75 L. T. 651.

Inconvenience.]—Where country witnesses who had sworn affidavits in London were required to be cross-examined, the court, on affidavit of inconvenience, dispensed with their attendance at the examiner's office, and issued a commission. Ogilby v. Gregory, 25 L. J., Ch. 32; 4 W. R. 67.

To prove Modus.]—A cause went off for want of parties, with leave to amend, and the party, being added, put in his answer and plaintiff replied. On motion, defendant allowed to take out a commission to prove the modus as laid in his answer. Phillips v. Gwynn, 2 Fowl. Ex. Pr. 184.

Criminal Cases.]—But an order for the examination of a witness resident in England, but unable from illness to attend the trial, cannot be made in a criminal prosecution either by the common-law authority of the court, or under 1 Will. 4, c. 22. Reg. v. Upton St. Leonard's, 10 Q. B. 827; 17 L. J., M. C. 13; 12 Jur. 11.

Examination de bene esse not extended to the case of a prisoner charged with a capital felony. Anon., 19 Ves. 321.

Other Cases.]—Upon a question of legitimacy depending upon a chain of distinct circumstances in the knowledge of different individuals, and the defendant, an infant, kept out of the way, an examination de bene esse would have been granted, though not within any of the three cases, viz. witnesses of the age of seventy, on quitting the kingdom, or a fact depending on a single witness. Shelley v. ——, 13 Ves. 56.

Plaintiff's guardian may be examined de bene esse. Payne v. Bosgrave, 2 Fowl. Ex. Pr. 125; Hockley v. Butler, Ib.; Ashley v. Ashley, Ib. So on behalf of defendant. Gwynn v. Yale, Ib.

The court will make an order for an examination de bene esse whenever the justice of the case may appear to require it. Blackwood v. Burrowes, Fl. & K. 630; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 609.

An order will be made under Judicature Act, Ord. XXXVII. r. 4, for examination before an officer of the court in the presence of both parties whenever it shall appear to the court necessary for the purposes of justice. Warner v. Mosses, 50 L. J., Ch. 28; 16 Ch. D. 100; 29 W. R. 201.

Of Party to Suit.]—It is an order of course that defendant may be examined de bene esse, saving just exceptions. Glover v. Faulkner, 1 Vern. 452.

The court cannot make an order to examine a plaintiff de bene esse, saving just exceptions, though they will make such order to examine a defendant; but the defendant ought to have demurred to such immaterial plaintiff; if a corporation would make use of one of their own members as a witness, they must disfranchise him. Colchester Corporation v. ——, 1 P. W. 595.

iii. Order for.

How Obtained.]—If the witness is proposed to be examined with a view to reading his testimony in a suit in chancery the order for his examination may be obtained on motion in that suit and affidavit; but if his testimony is wanted in an action at law, a bill must first be filed for his examination de bene esse, with the proper affidavits annexed; and an application is then made to the court by motion, for the order wanted; also the order may be obtained before appearance, after defendant has been served with a subpœna. Wilson v. Wilson, Newl. Pr. 286.

After commission to examine abroad was sent, witness, before commission had reached its destination, returned to England, and motion made to examine him de bene esse, but refused; and held that bill must be amended. Atkins v. Palmer, 5 Madd. 19.

After publication, decree, and an issue directed, a witness, whose testimony was wanted on the trial of the issue, being examined de bene esse by order obtained on petition in the cause:—Held, irregularly examined, and that a bill should have been filed for his examination de bene esse. Stratford v. Aldborough (Lord), 2 Moll. 326.

Rule for examination of witnesses de bene esse, dispensed with on account of parties living in Virginia. Fitzhugh v. Lee, Ambl. 65.

Order of Course.]—Motion of course to examine de bene esse a witness above seventy or in a dangerous state, or the only witness. Tomkins v. Harrison, 6 Madd. 315.

Where witness is above seventy years old it is motion of course to examine de bene esse, even before appearance, and it is no objection that reference of bill for impertinence is pending. Prichard v. Gee, 5 Madd. 364.

There are certain cases in which the order for an examination de bene esse is made of course, as on the ground of age. Rowe v. ——, 13 Ves. 261.

The fact of a person being in the seventieth year of his age, and in an infirm state of health, is not sufficient to sustain an ex parte order for his examination de bene esse. M'Kenna v. Everitt, 2 Beav. 188; 9 L. J., Ch. 98; 3 Jur. 1166.

But a motion to discharge such an order, which had been obtained ex parte, on the ground that the witness was about to quit the kingdom, with the expectation of being absent for seven years, was refused. Ib.

An order for liberty to examine a witness de bene esse will be made without notice, where the witness is of advanced age. Scott v. Scott, 9 Ir. Eq. R. 261.

An ex parte order for the examination de bene esse of a witness about to go abroad is regular. M'Intosh v. G. W. Ry., 1 Hare, 328; 11 L. J., Ch. 283; 6 Jur. 454.

A motion to suppress depositions taken under an order for the examination of a witness de bene esse, not asking to discharge that order, is not supported by shewing circumstances from which it would merely appear that the order was irregular; for the court will assume, for purpose of the motion, that the order was regular. Ib.

When Notice necessary.]—Motion to examine witnesses de bene esse, except in certain cases, as upon the ground of age, requires notice. The affidavit must be, either that the witness is of the age of seventy, or the only witness to the particular fact, or if upon the ground of health in a dangerous state. Bellamy v. Jones, 8 Ves. 31; 6 R. R. 205. Or is going abroad. Shelley v. ——, 13 Ves. 56.

An application for an order to examine a witness de bene esse, on the ground that he is the only witness to a material fact, ought to be made upon notice and not ex parte. Hope v. Hope, 3 Beav. 317; 10 L. J., Ch. 70; 4 Jur. 1124.

Special Terms.]—Terms imposed on the plaintiff in an issue with regard to the examination de bene esse of an aged witness, where the plaintiff had failed in trying the issue at the time directed by the court. Reeve v. Hodson, 10 Hare (App.) xvii, xxiv; 17 Jur. 341.

Party as Witness.]—Where an order was sought for the examination of the plaintiff as a witness on his own behalf, on the ground that he was about to go abroad, the court, besides requiring him to give security for costs, and imposing other special terms, required a further affidavit, shewing that the application was made bonâ fide. Fischer v. Hahn, 13 C. B. (N.S.) 659; 32 L. J., C. P. 209; 11 W. R. 342.

Affidavit in Support.]—The affidavit in support of the application ought to shew the facts on which it is proposed to examine the witness. Hope v. Hope, 3 Beav. 317; 10 L. J., Ch. 70; 4 Jur. 1124.

An affidavit in support of such an application on belief only, that the witness is the sole witness to a particular fact, is not sufficient; it ought to state the reasons for such belief. Ib.

Place of residence and description of witness whom it is sought to have examined de bene esse, must be given in the affidavit. O'Farrell v. O'Farrell, 2 Moll. 364.

Where it appeared upon affidavit that a material witness was going abroad, an order was made upon motion that the defendant should be at liberty to examine him de bene esse; and it was held not to be necessary that the affidavits should disclose the points to which it was proposed to examine the witness, or that he was the only witness who could give evidence on the points. Grove v. Young, 3 De G. & Sm. 397; 13 Jur. 847.

Before whom.]—On an application to have a witness, within the jurisdiction of the court, examined on interrogatories, the name of the person before whom the examination is to take place must be mentioned, before the rule nisi will be granted. Doe d. Thorn v. Phillips, 1 D. P. C. 56.

On Certificate of Master.]—If on reference in bankruptcy to master, he finds examination of witnesses necessary, he must certify accordingly to court, who will make the order. Anon., 4 Madd. 379.

After a decree, if the master sees cause for a commission to examine witnesses in the country, he certifies that it is necessary, and the depositions, when returned, are filed by the six clerks, but depositions taken before the masters are kept in their offices. Parkinson v. Ingram, 3 Ves. 607.

The decrees in the exchequer always express that the officer is to be armed with a commission to examine witnesses, and power to direct the same to the country: so formerly in chancery. Ib.

On a motion for a commission to take defendant's examination, the time is left to the master, not limited by the order. Hairby v. Emmet, 5 Ves. 683.

It is now the practice in chancery to insert direction in decree, that master is at liberty to examine witnesses, but master may certify that a commission is necessary, which then issues of course. Sandford v. Biddulph, 9 Ves. 36.

A commission for the examination of witnesses, to falsify an examination of a party before a master, cannot be had without the usual certificate from the master, of the necessity of such a commission. Bearcroft v. Berkeley, 2 Cox, 108.

Whether, upon an application to the master for his certificate of the necessity of a commission to examine witnesses, it is necessary to produce before him the interrogatories upon which it is intended to examine the witnesses, quære. The practice in the masters' offices in this respect differs. Nelson (Earl) v. Bridport (Lord), 7 Beav. 195.

The proper form for objecting to a master's certificate, approving of a commission for the examination of witnesses, and the order made thereon. Jones v. Creswick, 15 L. J., Ch. 342; 10 Jur. 404.

iv. At What Stage.

Before Issue Joined.]—An examination of witnesses vivâ voce before the master, cannot in general be had before issue joined. Mondel v. Steele, 8 M. & W. 301; 9 D. P. C. 812; 5 Jur. 511.

The court refused to rescind an order of a judge for the examination by the master of the plaintiff in a cause before issue joined or declaration delivered, which had been obtained on his application, supported by an affidavit that he was master of a ship, and about to sail to Stettin, and was not likely to be present at the trial. Brown v. Mollett, 16 C. B. 514; 3 C. L. R. 925; 24 L. J., C. P. 213.

Where defendant prevents plaintiff rejoining from standing out processes of contempt, plaintiff is entitled to examine de bene esse. Coveny v. Athill, Dick. 355.

After answer, defendants obtained order to examine de bene esse, but before commission could issue plaintiffs replied, and defendants rejoined; and wishing to save expense of commission de bene esse, defendants moved that plaintiffs might issue a commission in a week, and give six days' notice of executing it, which defendants would consent to accept, or that, in default, defendants might issue commission. But court thought time too limited, and gave plaintiffs three weeks to issue the commission. Atwood v. Hurrill, 2 Fowl. Ex. Pr. 126.

Before Answer.]—Plaintiff's witnesses being old, examined before defendant's answer. Bagnold v. Greene, Cary, 48; Dick. 2.

Depositions taken de bene esse before the defendant had put in his answer, or issue joined, admitted to be read. Southwell v. Limerick (Lord), 9 Mod. 133.

Motion, by a defendant before answer, to examine a witness de bene esse, granted. Bown v. Child, 3 Sim. 457.

Liberty to examine de bene esse a witness about to leave the country, may be granted upon application made before answer; but, when the answer is come in, except in a very special case, this cannot be done. Byrne v. Byrne, 2 Moll. 440.

On the application for a commission for the examination de bene esse of a witness above seventy years of age (such witness being the plaintiff in the cause, and a defendant in a cross cause, whose time for answering had expired and whose answer had not been put in, and being also the party who applied for the commission for the purpose of being examined in support of his own case, under the statute 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99), the court refused to impose it as a condition in making the order that the answer should be filed. Forbes v. Forbes, 9 Hare, 461.

Before Appearance.]—A commission to examine witnesses de bene esse, upon a bill to perpetuate testimony, granted though the defendant had not appeared, and was not in contempt. Allen v. Annesley, 2 Jones, 260.

Examination de bene esse granted to plaintiffs in a bill to perpetuate testimony after subpœna served, but before appearance of infant defendants, in contempt by the messenger's return that they had absconded and were not to be found, on affidavit of the materiality of the evidence and danger of its loss, and undertaking to proceed with all due diligence to issue, and examination in chief to be proved before publication of the depositions de bene esse. Frere v. Green, 19 Ves. 319.

Witnesses being old and infirm, and resident out of the jurisdiction, the court, in a suit to perpetuate testimony, before appearance of some of the parties, made an order for their examination de bene esse. Campbell v. Att.-Gen., 11 Jur. (N.S.) 922; 13 L. T. 356; 14 W. R. 45.

After Verdict.]—Order after verdict upon an issue to examine de bene esse a witness above seventy, suggesting an intent to move for a new trial. Anon., 6 Ves. 573.

After Adjournment.]—Leave given to examine witness after adjournment of cause. Bank v. Farques, Ambl. 145.

After Hearing.]—Examination had after hearing. Throckmorton v. Cromwell, Toth. 85; Touch v. Thomas, Ib.; Lenox v. Clifton, Ib. 192; Anon., Cary, 37. But quære, as to the authority of these cases.

v. Publication and User of Depositions.

For Comparison with Evidence in Chief.]—Court refused to publish depositions de bene esse, in order to compare them with the depositions in the same cause taken on an examination in chief. Cann v. Cann, 1 P. W. 567.

Witness Dead, Absent or Incapacitated.]—Depositions de bene esse of witness dead, published to be read at law. Price v. Bridgman, Dick. 144.

Depositions of a witness examined de bene esse, he dying before he was examined in chief, ordered to be read at a trial at law. Marsden v. Bound, 1 Vern. 331.

An affidavit of the death or absence beyond sea of the witness is necessary, before examinations de bene esse can be published. Ward v. Sykes, Ridgw. 193.

In a suit which had been dismissed through the conduct of the plaintiff, the evidence of a witness who was about to proceed to the Cape of Good Hope was taken de bene esse, under an order obtained ex parte at the instance of the plaintiff. Subsequently another suit was virtually instituted between the same parties, and substantially for the same purposes as the former. The witness, as alleged, was still abroad, but he had not been heard of for a long period. The court, on motion by the plaintiff, ordered that the depositions be published, and that when published both parties should have an opportunity of seeing them, and then the defendants should have an opportunity of objecting to or rejecting them, with liberty to both parties to use them as they might be advised. M'Intosh v. G. W. Ry., 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1132. Affirmed, 7 De G. M. & G. 737; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 129.

Depositions taken de bene esse upon incapacity of witness to attend at trial at law, not published but on affidavit of surgeon as to the probability of his attendance; an order was made for officer to attend at trial with the original deposition, to be tendered if the incapacity of the witness to attend should be proved. Andrews v. Palmer, 1 Ves. & B. 21.

Evidence given by a witness examined de bene esse by reason of ill-health is not admissible if the witness be at the hearing of the cause incapable of being re-examined. Wequelin v. Wequelin, 2 Curt. 263.

Where Witness might have been Examined.]—The general rule is, that depositions taken de bene esse are not to be published in cases where the witness might have been, and was not, examined in the usual way; the proper period for such examination being between the time when the case is at issue and when publication passes. But the rule is liable to exception in a special case. Particular cases stated. Forsyth v. Ellice, 2 Mac. & G. 209; 2 Hall & Tw. 424; 19 L. J., Ch. 334. Reversing 7 Hare, 290.

Publication of depositions taken de bene esse, refused after one trial had, on which some of the persons who had been examined de bene esse, and who had since died, were examined, and the others might have been examined vivâ voce. Fitzpatrick v. Webb, 2 Moll. 313.

Application.] — An application to read the deposition of a witness on the trial of an issue at law, directed by the Court of Chancery, on the ground of the witness being so aged and infirm as to be unable to attend in person, must be made to the judge at the trial, and not to the court which directs the issue. Jones v. Jones, 1 Cox, 184.

Objection.]—It is too late, at the hearing of the cause, to object to depositions taken de bene esse, as irregular. The court should have been moved to discharge the order for publication. Ely (Dean) v. Warren, 2 Atk. 189.

A deposition de bene esse having been read at the hearing of a cause, it is of course, if any issue is directed, to order it to be read on the trial, notwithstanding an irregularity in the examination, which might have been effectually taken at the hearing. Whether the court will suppress a deposition taken before commissioners, of whom one is attorney in a cause in Scotland between the same parties on the same question, quære. Gordon v. Gordon, 1 Swanst. 166; 1 Wils. 155.

In Suit to Perpetuate.]—In a suit to perpetuate the testimony of witnesses, liberty given to the plaintiff under the 13 Geo. 3, c. 9, to pass publications of depositions of witnesses examined de bene esse in the cause. Scallan v. M'Coy, Fl. & K. 366.

In Other Court.]—Where a bill was filed in the Court of Chancery impeaching a will, and a suit to recall the probate had been instituted in the Prerogative Court, and a witness, who was examined de bene esse in the chancery suit, died after having been examined, the court will not permit his depositions to be published for the purpose of using them in a suit in the Ecclesiastical Court, issue not having been joined in the suit in chancery, and publication, therefore, not having passed in such suit. Shewell v. Hilliard, 9 Ir. Eq. R. 469.

Lost Commission.]—Commission de bene esse lost on return; witness being dead, paper draft sealed ordered to be sent up unopened, and ingrossed by six clerks, and used as original depositions. Jones v. Donithorne, Dick. 352.

Other Cases.] — Evidence of reputation of exemption of a district from tithe read de bene esse. Donnison v. Elsley, M'Clel. & Y. 24.

Witnesses examined de bene esse in Sweden: council of Sweden refused to let a commission be executed for examining them in chief; the depositions de bene esse may be read. Gasson v. Wordsworth, Ambl. 108; 2 Ves. 325, 336.

The evidence of a clerk to a commission to examine witnesses in a suit, and who has been examined de bene esse, will be admitted on behalf of the plaintiff, saving just exceptions. Lord v. Colvin, 4 W. R. 455.

Depositions of witnesses taken de bene esse in 1711, and not having passed till 1743, under the circumstances, the depositions were ordered to be published, but without prejudice. Hamilton (Duke) v. Meynal, Dick. 788; 2 Ves. 497.

b. Examination Pro Interesse Suo.

When Ordered.]—Orders made that a mortgagee and a person claiming property in goods sequestered might be examined pro interesse suo before the deputy remembrancer. Mackenzie v. Powis, 1 Fowl. Ex. Pr. 192, 193; Martin v. Willis, Ib., 181.

Court will order person to be examined pro interesse suo against receiver, as well as against sequestrator. Gomme v. West, Dick. 472.

A party claiming to have a mortgage on an estate prior to plaintiff's right, was ordered to come in and be examined pro interesse suo; and on his neglecting to put in his examination, an order was made on him to do so, and to procure a report in a fortnight. On the report being made, his claim was allowed, and costs given him. Cooper v. Thornton, Dick. 72. S. P., Bowles v. Parsons, Dick. 142.

A prior mortgagee cannot obtain an examination pro interesse suo in the matter of a petition under which a puisne mortgagee has obtained a receiver. Allen v. Colthurst, 2 Hog. 249.

No examination pro interesse suo, before the sequestrators have made a return. Pelham (Lord) v. Newcastle (Duke), 3 Swanst. 290.

Where the goods of a third person are seized by sequestrators, an order to examine pro interesse suo will be made; and, if the goods taken are found to belong to the party so applying, a reference to ascertain his damages will be granted. Copeland v. Mape, 2 Ball & B. 66.

When Necessary.]—Tenants dispossessed by injunction of lands held by lease from defendant, executed prior to the institution of the suit, in which they were not parties, on application to be restored to the possession, are not to be examined pro interesse suo; such order set aside, and the plaintiff directed to proceed by ejectment to recover the lands. Order to examine pro interesse suo, only made to ascertain priority of incumbrances, or where an interest is claimed in estate in possession of receivers or sequestrators. Dunne v. Farrell, 1 Ball & B. 122.

Upon sequestration, mortgagee must come in to be examined pro interesse suo. Anon., 6 Ves. 288. And see Tatham v. Parker, 1 Sm. & G. 506; 22 L. J., Ch. 903; 17 Jur. 929; 1 W. R. 491.

A tithe owner is entitled, under 4 Geo. 4, c. 99, to one year's arrear of tithe, out of a distress for rent, and is not compelled to apply to be examined pro interesse suo, when the amount is small. Hawkes v. Smith, Sau. & Sc. 326.

It is contempt to disturb sequestrators in possession. If sequestration is executed, a judgment creditor, though prior, can only claim to be examined pro interesse suo; if not executed, he may take execution. Angel v. Smith, 9 Ves. 336; 7 R. R. 214.

Jurisdiction.] — No jurisdiction to compel party to be examined pro interesse suo. Kaye v. Cunningham, 5 Madd. 406.

A person having been examined pro interesse suo, was permitted to prosecute and make out her right in formâ pauperis. James v. Dore, Dick. 788.

Conclusiveness.]—Examination pro interesse suo is conclusive, if not replied to. Att.-Gen. v. Coventry Corporation, 3 Swanst. 311; 18 R. R. 238.

On examination of parties pro interesse suo, leave given to exhibit interrogatories to falsify an examination as of course. Rowley v. Ridley, 3 Swanst. 308; 2 Bro. C. C. 15; 19 R. R. 206.

Procedure.] — The mode of proceeding on examinations pro interesse suo. Hunt v. Priest, Dick. 540.

A party who is to be examined pro interesse suo, must file a charge before he can compel the plaintiff to lodge personal interrogatories for his examination. It is the practice, in the master's office, to require a charge and discharge to be filed in all cases in which there is a controversy between the parties. Crone v. O'Dell, 2 Hog. 144.

Form of Objection.]—Whether the proper form of objecting to the report of a master, or an examination pro interesse suo, is by exception, quære. Empringham v. Short, 3 Hare, 461; 13 L. J., Ch. 300; 8 Jur. 856.

5. The Commissioners.

a. Who may be.

Barrister.]—The evidence in the case being special, a barrister to be chosen by the parties must be special examiner. Reed v. Prest, 1 Kay (App.) xiv.

It is not imperative that commissioners appointed by the court to examine witnesses in a suit should be barristers-at-law. Henderson v. Philipson, 22 L. J., Ch. 1037; 17 Jur. 615.

Solicitor.]—Solicitor in the cause cannot be a commissioner, or the depositions will be suppressed. Fricker v. Moore, Bunb. 289.

Depositions suppressed, plaintiff's solicitor being one of the commissioners. Selwyn v. Gill, Dick. 563.

A deposition de bene esse having been read at the hearing of a cause, it is of course, if any issue is directed, to order it to be read on the trial, notwithstanding an irregularity in the examination which might have been effectually objected to at the hearing. Whether the court will suppress a deposition taken before commissioners, of whom one is attorney in a cause in Scotland between the same parties on the same question, quære. Gordon v. Gordon, 1 Swanst. 166; 1 Wils. 155.

A commissioner should not act as solicitor on behalf of a party. Sayer v. Wagstaff, 5 Beav. 462; 12 L. J., Ch. 35.

Where a party to a suit, who wished to put in accounts, resided at Lyons, and the nearest British consulate was 100 miles distant, the court appointed a solicitor resident at Lyons to be special examiner to take the evidence, on the ground that the consul, before whom an affidavit was to be sworn, resided at too great a distance for that purpose. Drevon v. Drevon, 9 L. T. 406; 12 W. R. 66.

Solicitor's Clerk.]—Under a commission issued to examine witnesses abroad, it is no objection that a clerk to the plaintiff's attorney is appointed one of the commissioners, and settles the draft of the depositions of one of the plaintiff's witnesses. Lopes v. De Tastet, 4 Moore, 424.

Foreign Court.]—A commission having been issued in a cause addressed to individual commissioners to examine witnesses at Pesth, was sent back unexecuted, through the Austrian embassy, on the ground that the Austrian government did not permit any but the tribunals of the country to examine witnesses in Hungary. The court made absolute a rule directing a commission to issue directed to the Imperial Royal Provincial Court at Pesth, to examine the witness. Fischer v. Izataray, or Sztaray, El. Bl. & El. 321; 27 L. J., Q. B. 239; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 632; 6 W. R. 549.

In a divorce suit the petitioner obtained a commission to examine witnesses in India, addressed to "The Judges of the Supreme Court at Calcutta." The Supreme Court was abolished by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 104, by which a "High Court of Judicature at Fort William, in Bengal," was established, with all the jurisdiction, power and authority of the abolished court. Witnesses were examined under the commission, and cross-examined on behalf of the respondent:—Held, that the evidence must be admitted at the trial, as the commission was in effect addressed to the judges of whatever was the highest court at Calcutta, and the judges of the High Court answered the description, and that the cross-examination of witnesses was no waiver of the right to object to the evidence. Wilson v. Wilson, 9 P. D. 8; 49 L. T. 430; 32 W. R. 282—C. A.

The court refused to issue a commission to a foreign court to examine witnesses abroad, because it appeared that under the procedure of the court he would not be examined in the ordinary way. Boyse, In re, Crofton v. Crofton, 51 L. J., Ch. 660; 20 Ch. D. 760; 46 L. T. 522; 30 W. R. 812.

A commission may issue to the judges of a foreign court (as individuals) to examine witnesses, although it appears that according to the foreign law the mode of examination will be conducted differently from the English practice, counsel not being allowed to put questions to the witnesses, except through the judge; and although hearsay evidence is there receivable. Lumley v. Gye, 3 El. & Bl. 114; 2 C. L. R. 936; 23 L. J., Q. B. 112; 18 Jur. 466.

If on the trial it should appear either on the face of the depositions, or by extrinsic proof, that illegal evidence has been admitted, or proper questions refused to be put to the witnesses, the judge would have a discretion as to rejecting the whole or the illegal portion. Ib.

Where a former commission issued to an English commissioner had been abortive by reason of the witnesses, in accordance with the foreign law, refusing to be examined except by a judge of the foreign court, the court granted a fresh commission to the judges of that court on payment of the costs of the former commission. Ib.

Commission to examine witnesses at Madras directed to the judges of the Supreme Court there. Murray v. Lawford, 6 Sim. 573.

—— Letters of Request.]—An order for letters of request to issue to a foreign court under Ord. XXXVII. r. 6A, can only be made where it is sought to examine witnesses under the order, and the court has no jurisdiction to make such an order when production of documents is alone asked for. Cape Copper Co. v. Comptoir d'Escompte, 38 W. R. 763—C. A.

An examination of witnesses abroad before a special examiner, ordered under Ord. XXXVII., r. 5, is not an ordinary commission so as to prevent the issuing of letters of request in addition thereto, under Ord. XXXVII. r. 6A. Mason and Barry v. Comptoir d'Escompte, 38 W. R. 685. But see preceding case.

The court ought not, in the exercise of its discretion, to order the issue of letters of request to a foreign tribunal to take evidence abroad for the purpose of a trial, unless the evidence sought to be obtained is directly material to the question to be tried. It is not sufficient that it may possibly be of use on some collateral matter to corroborate other evidence. Ehrmann v. Ehrmann, 65 L. J., Ch. 745; [1896] 2 Ch. 611; 75 L. T. 37; 45 W. R. 149—C. A.

—— Hostile Judge.]—Upon an application for a commission to issue directed to the judges of a foreign court, to examine witnesses on the part of a defendant; it appeared that the action was brought in formâ pauperis to recover the value of certain shares and coupons, and it was objected by the plaintiff's attorney, that she had already been interrogated by one of the judges (whose name appeared in the commission) in the course of proceedings taken against her abroad, respecting the shares and coupons; and it was stated that this judge had put questions to her suggesting that she had been guilty of fraud; that he had threatened her with imprisonment, and refused to hear evidence on her behalf; and it was requested, that even if the commission was allowed, she might be at liberty to exhibit cross interrogatories to the witnesses for the defence:—Held, that the commission might issue, the name of the judge complained of to be omitted from it, and the foreign court to be requested not to allow him to take part in the examination; the plaintiff to be at liberty to cross-examine on interrogatories, if the foreign court would allow such interrogatories to be used. Valentin v. Hall, 35 L. J., Q. B. 121; 14 W. R. 606.

—— British Minister.] — A plaintiff was desirous of cross-examining some of the defendant's witnesses who were attached to the British embassy at Teheran, in Persia, one of them being the minister's personal attendant. The court, notwithstanding the intimate relations between him and the witnesses, appointed the minister special examiner. Ongley v. Hill, 22 W. R. 817.

Interested Party.]—Depositions suppressed after publication, on the ground that one of the commissioners was the nephew and agent of the plaintiff. Mostyn (Lord) v. Spencer, 6 Beav. 135; 14 L. J., Ch. 1; 9 Jur. 97.

The fact of publication having passed, or the death of the witness, will not prevent the suppression of the depositions, when the commissioner is disqualified by interest, provided the application be made within a reasonable time after the discovery of the objection. Ib.

The selection of a commissioner to take evidence is vested in the discretion of the master, and the court will not vary his appointment upon a charge that the commissioner is interested in the success of the plaintiff in consequence of his friendship for the plaintiff's solicitor, the payment of whose costs depended upon his success in the suit. Malone v. O'Connor, Sau. & Sc. 429.

The 105th General Order, in limiting the discretion of the master, applies to cases where an examination of witnesses is to be held in one place only. Ib.

Special Examiner.] — Where a defendant, whose evidence it was desired to take, was resident in Australia, and it was not known whether in Melbourne or Adelaide, two examiners were appointed in each place, each with power to act in default of the first-named examiner being capable; and liberty was, in the same order, reserved to the principal defendant in the cause to appoint some person in the colony to attend the taking of the examination on his behalf. Crofts v. Middleton, 9 Hare (App.) lxx., lxxv.; 17 Jur. 112; 1 W. R. 163.

The practice of the court is to insert in the order for the examination of witnesses abroad, the names of the special examiners to examine such witnesses instead of issuing a commission. London Bank of Mexico v. Hart, L. R. 6 Eq. 467; 18 L. T. 553.

Under the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, ss. 28, 31, and 32, this court will not issue a commission to examine witnesses orally, or upon interrogatories, out of the jurisdiction; but will appoint a special examiner for that purpose. Lawrence v. Maule, 3 W. R. 534.

Appointment of an examiner to take orally the evidence of a witness residing out of the jurisdiction of the court. Crofts v. Middleton, 9 Hare (App.) xviii.

A special examiner ought only to be appointed after all persons interested in the appointment have been heard thereon. Smith, Knight & Co., In re, L. R. 8 Eq. 23; 17 W. R. 758.

Where, therefore, a special examiner was appointed to take the examination and cross-examination of witnesses in the winding-up of a company:—Held, that a person who had given evidence in opposition to a summons to place him on the list of contributories, and who had not consented to the appointment of the special examiner, could not be required to attend and be examined before him. Ib.

A witness who has made an affidavit may be cross-examined either before one of the examiners of the court or a special examiner, and in the case of a witness abroad, the proper course is to apply for a special examiner. Edwards v. Spaight, 2 John. & H. 617.

An affidavit was made by a plaintiff residing out of the jurisdiction, and he received notice to appear in London to be cross-examined thereon, but refused. An objection taken to its being received, was overruled, on the ground that it was the duty of the defendants' solicitor to have applied, either in chambers or in court, for the appointment of a special examiner, for the purpose of going over to Boulogne, to cross-examine the plaintiff. Rawlings v. Wickham, 4 Jur. (N.S.) 990.

b. Examination of.

A commissioner ordered to be examined to prove a deed, and an interrogatory to be added for the purpose. Maude v. Hartley, 2 Fowl. Ex. Pr. 99.

A commissioner may be examined without an order, but he must be examined before any other witness. Ib. S. P., Bright v. Woodward, 1 Vern. 369.

Under special circumstances, the court will permit a commissioner to be examined, even after the commission has been opened, and the examination of witnesses proceeded with. Grubb v. Grubb, 1 Y. & J. 36.

c. Fees.

Action for.]—The court will restrain commissioners for examining witnesses from bringing an action for their fees against a solicitor in the cause, and will refer it to the master to ascertain what is due to them. Blundell v. Gladstone, 9 Sim. 455 ; 8 L. J., Ch. 109 ; 3 Jur. 413.

Commissioners for the examination of witnesses restrained from prosecuting an action at law for the recovery of their fees, and a reference made to the master to ascertain what was due to them. Ambrose v. Dunmow Union, 8 Beav. 43.

Principle of Payment.]—Commissioners for the examination of witnesses ought not to be paid according to the number of office folios of the depositions, but according to the number of days on which they actually sit. Small v. Attwood, 17 Coll. 53 ; 4 L. J., Ex. Eq. 1.

In respect of what.]—Under particular circumstances, the court allowed the commissioner a small fee for perusing the pleadings. Howell v. Tyler, 2 Y. & C., C. C. 284 ; 12 L. J., Ch. 223 ; 7 Jur. 525.

The defendant assented to the appointment of the person nominated commissioner examiner by the plaintiff. He cross-examined one of the plaintiff's witnesses, but did not examine any witness on the direct :—Held, that he was bound to pay the costs and expenses incurred by reason of his cross-examination, viz. for the attendance of the commissioner during the time occupied by the cross-examination, and for ingrossing the depositions to cross interrogatories ; but not to contribute to the commissioner's travelling expenses. Rogers v. Aylmer, 5 Ir. Eq. R. 516.

Who Liable.] — By consent of plaintiff and defendant, a commission was issued to J. M. to examine witnesses residing more than thirty miles from Dublin, and under it the plaintiff examined on the direct, and the defendant merely cross-examined. On a motion by J. M. against the defendant, for one-half of his fees and expenses as commissioner :—Held, that he was to be considered as having undertaken, and been appointed to the office, on the joint retainer of the parties, and his motion was granted with costs. The question, who is immediately liable to pay the commissioner, has nothing to do with the question as to the costs in the cause to be decided at the hearing. Milner v. Joseph, 5 Ir. Eq. R. 214.

A commission for the examination of witnesses being issued, witnesses were examined under it, both by the plaintiff and the defendant. The court held, that the defendant was liable to pay his proportion of the expenses of the execution of the commission. Grove v. Young, 20 L. J., Ch. 167 ; 15 Jur. 97.

On a petition by the commissioner appointed to examine witnesses in the cause, the solicitor for the defendants was ordered to pay the commissioner's expenses in attending the commission and the costs of his petition, although he had given no personal guarantee for the payment of such expenses. Parsons v. Benn, 19 L. J., Ch. 264. Affirmed—L. C.

Amount of.]—The sum of 2*l.* 2*s.* a day, which a special examiner is entitled to receive for his expenses, is a fixed sum payable in every case, without reference to the amount of expenses actually incurred by him, and does not include the expense of hiring a room for the purpose of the examination. Wright v. Larmuth, L. R. 10 Eq. 139 ; 22 L. T. 903 ; 18 W. R. 1103.

Special examiners are entitled to a fee of five guineas a day only, and, semble, their clerks are entitled to five shillings per diem. No extra fee is payable for an extended sitting during a day, nor for the preliminary labour of reading the papers. Payne v. Little, 21 Beav. 65.

Lien.]—Commissioners for the examination of witnesses have a lien on the depositions for their fees, and will not be compelled to return them until they have received payment. Peters v. Beer, 14 Beav. 101 ; 20 L. J., Ch. 424 ; 15 Jur. 1024.

A barrister has a lien for fees on a commission. Smith v. Hallen, 2 F. & F. 678.

The court will compel a commissioner examiner to deliver, for the purposes of the suit, the documents lodged with him for the examination of witnesses, though he has not been paid his fees or expenses, the solicitor undertaking to return them to the examiner after the termination of the suit. Lucan (Lord) v. O'Malley, 8 Ir. Eq. R. 386.

Duty of Commissioner.]—The commissioner examiner may before accepting the office stipulate for the security or the payment of his fees and expenses ; but if he accepts the office, he cannot stop in the execution of his duty, or refuse to examine witnesses until his fees are paid or secured. His duty is to examine all witnesses tendered to him unconditionally. Doherty v. Doherty, 8 Ir. Eq. R. 379.

d. Misconduct.

Commissioners to be examined, on occasions of partiality and malpractice. Morgan v. Bowdler, Toth. 40.

Commissioners, on affidavits of the facts, were attached for refusing to examine a witness because he was illiterate, and the witness was afterwards ordered to be examined by an examiner. Reilley v. Reilley, How. Pr. Ex. Ireland, 593.

Semble, that on complaint of an irregular examination, an examiner has been ordered to answer personal interrogatories, and not admitted to have a copy of them. Ib.

Defendant's commissioners met at the time and place appointed, but refused to act in the execution of the commission ; upon affidavit of which, the court ordered defendant to name other commissioners. The court doubted whether an attachment lay against defendant's commissioners. —— v. Fortescue, Hardr. 170.

Depositions suppressed for misbehaviour in the commissioners, and a new commission, directed to other commissioners, ordered to issue. Dedore v. Day, 2 Fowl. Ex. Pr. 158.

Some of the commissioners certified partiality in one of the others. Motion for a commission to examine in whom the misdemeanour was, denied; for such collateral certificates are not required of the commissioners; but let them certify the matters committed to their charge, and, if there be misdemeanour, let the party wronged make affidavit thereof, and take out his attachment. Anon., Cary, 43.

A witness examined at a commission swears reflecting words, yet he ought not to pay costs, it being the commissioner's fault to take down such depositions. Anon., 2 P. W. 406.

e. Oath and Qualifying.

In General.]—Where a commission issues for the examination of witnesses in a foreign country, the oath of the commissioners may, under special circumstances, be dispensed with. Boelen or Bolin v. Melladew, 10 C. B. 898; 20 L. J., C. P. 172. S. P., Clay v. Stevenson, 5 N. & M. 318; 3 A. & E. 807; 1 H. & W. 409; 4 L. J., K. B. 212.

By the law of Denmark none but burgomasters have power to administer oaths; and the mode of administering an oath to a witness is by causing him to hold up three fingers of his right hand, and declare that he will speak the truth. A commission having failed for want of the observance of these formalities, the court, on payment of all costs, allowed a second commission to go, addressed to burgomasters. Ib.

The 4 Geo. 4, c. 61, s. 43, applies as well where the witnesses are resident abroad, as where they reside within the jurisdiction of the court, and therefore the court will not make an order that a commission shall issue to take the examination of witnesses resident abroad, with a direction that the examiner shall not be required to qualify as directed by that act: but where the parties will not consent that such a commission shall issue, the court will direct publication to be respited. D'Alton v. Trimleston (Lord), Fl. & K. 663.

Commissioners, to take the examination of witnesses abroad, must qualify under 4 Geo. 4, c. 51, s. 43. Huggins v. Muffett, Fl. & K. 621.

In the Exchequer, commissioners appointed to examine witnesses, in aid of the master, after a decree, are not sworn to secrecy. Hall v. Clee, 2 Y. & Coll. 725; 1 Jur. 918.

Single Commissioner.]—When a single commissioner is appointed to take evidence abroad, the commission should authorise him to administer the oath to himself. Wilson v. De Coulon, 53 L. J., Ch. 248; 22 Ch. D. 841; 48 L. T. 514; 31 W. R. 839.

6. Form of Commission.

Form.]—The court will not, without special grounds, depart from the ordinary form of a commission for the examination of witnesses under 1 Will. 4, c. 22. Follett v. Delany, 7 C. B. 775.

And see Spiller v. Paris Skating Rink Co., 27 W. R. 225; ante, col. 985.

Names of Commissioners.]—The order of a judge for issuing a commission to examine witnesses in places out of the jurisdiction of the court, need not contain the names of the commissioners. Nichol v. Alison, 11 Q. B. 1006; 17 L. J., Q. B. 355; 12 Jur. 598.

The names of such commissioners, as the parties agree upon, may be inserted in the commission. Ib.

The commission need not be tested in term. Ib.

On an application to have a witness, within the jurisdiction of the court, examined on interrogatories, the name of the person before whom the examination is to take place must be mentioned. Doe d. Thorn v. Phillips, 1 D. P. C. 56.

Place, Time, and Manner.]—Where a commission issues for the examination of witnesses abroad, the place of examination must be specified in the rule or order authorising the commission, or in some subsequent rule or order. Greville v. Stulz, 11 Q. B. 997; 17 L. J., Q. B. 14; 12 Jur. 49.

Examinations taken under such commission are inadmissible if the order is produced, omitting to specify the place, though the commission itself, under the seal of the court, contains all necessary particulars. Ib.

When a commission issued under a judge's order, which neither named the commissioners nor the time, place, nor manner of examination, the court set aside a verdict which had been influenced by the evidence so obtained. Steinkeller v. Newton, 1 Scott (N.R.) 148.

But the omission in the order of a judge for issuing a commission to examine witnesses abroad, and in the commission itself, to specify the time and place of examination, is at most only an irregularity. Howkins v. Baldwin, 16 Q. B. 375; 2 L. M. & P. 250; 20 L. J., Q. B. 198; 15 Jur. 749.

A judge ordered a commission to issue for the examination of witnesses vivâ voce at Newfoundland, returnable on a certain day. The commission commanded the commissioners to summon the witnesses at a certain day and place to be appointed by them for that purpose in Newfoundland, and then and there examine them apart on their oath vivâ voce, and reduce the examination into writing; and directed them to send the same on or before the return-day of the commission, closed up under their seals, together with the commission. At the trial a clerk from the master's office produced a packet of papers which he had received sealed up from a person who brought it to the office, but whom he did not know. The commission produced was identified as that issued under the order; and it was proved that the papers professing to be the return were in the handwriting of the commissioners. The depositions purported to contain separate examinations:—Held, first, that the place, the time, and the manner of examining witnesses were regularly provided for by the order and commission. Sims v. Henderson, 11 Q. B. 1015; 17 L. J., Q. B. 209; 12 Jur. 773.

Held, secondly, that it was to be presumed that the witnesses were examined apart. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that there was sufficient proof of the due return of the commission. Ib.

A strict and literal compliance with the directions in an order for a commission, under 1 Will. 4, c. 22, s. 4, for the examination of witnesses abroad is unnecessary. Hodges v. Cobb, 8 B. & S. 583; 36 L. J., Q. B. 265; L. R. 2 Q. B. 652; 16 L. T. 792; 15 W. R. 1038.

An order for a commission to examine witnesses upon interrogatories in the United States directed that the interrogatories should be exhibited to the witness, in the city of S., in the state of New York, and that the commission should be returned in England on or before 1 March, 1848 :—Held, that the order was sufficiently specific as to the place and time of execution of the commission. Bulham v. Mears, 6 W. R. 597.

Name of Defendant.]—Where a commission for the examination of witnesses in Australia omitted the name of the defendant, but no application had been made to set aside or amend the commission :—Held, that it was too late to object at the trial that this defect rendered depositions taken under the commission inadmissible. Hodges v. Cobb, supra.

Pleadings.]—A commission, to examine witnesses, awarded to the judges of one of the supreme courts of India, under 13 Geo. 3, c. 63, s. 44, ought to recite the pleadings at length. Murray v. Lawford, 7 Sim. 139.

7. Compelling Attendance of Witnesses.

Subpœna.]—A witness required to attend before an examiner under Ord. XXXVII. r. 20, is not bound to attend unless served with a subpœna. Stuart v. Balkis Co., 53 L. J., Ch. 791 ; 50 L. T. 479 ; 32 W. R. 676.

Commissioner's summons for attendance of witness, not sufficient ; he must be served with subpœna. Wardle v. Dent, Dick. 334.

If a witness, who has been duly served with a subpœna to attend to give evidence before commissioners in the country, neglects to do so, the court will order him to attend before the examiner in London to be examined, but will not give costs against him. Pepper v. Pepper, 4 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 213.

—— Witness resident in Scotland.]—In a suit to perpetuate testimony, an order has been made appointing a special examiner to take evidence in Scotland. The plaintiff issued a subpœna duces tecum, directed to certain persons resident in Scotland, requiring them to appear in Rolls Yard, before one of the examiners, and there produce certain deeds and documents. An application was then made, under 22 Vict. c. 30, to the Court of Session in Scotland, for an order directing the same persons to appear before the special examiner in Scotland, and produce the deeds and documents. The principal defendant thereupon gave notice of his intention to move to discharge the writ, and the application in Scotland was ordered to stand over until after such motion had been disposed of :—Held, that the motion must be dismissed, inasmuch as the writ might be of some force and use if the persons to whom it was directed should come into England ; but the order was expressly not to prejudice, affect, or interfere with any order which the Court of Session might think fit to make upon the application pending before it. Campbell v. Att.-Gen., 36 L. J., Ch. 600 ; 15 W. R. 915.

Under 6 & 7 Vict. c. 82, s. 5—Scotch Commission.]—The court will only grant a rule nisi in the first instance to compel the attendance of a witness or the production of documents under a commission from the Scotch courts, under this enactment. Kay v. Gennell, 2 D. & L. 21 ; 13 L. J., Q. B. 203.

A rule or order for compelling the attendance of witnesses under the above statute, is not in the nature of a subpœna, but is a rule to shew cause. Reg. v. Alexander, 8 Jur. 380.

—— Order for Production of Documents in Hands of Third Persons.]—An order was made, by consent of the parties in an action pending in Scotland for certain persons who were not parties to the litigation to attend before a commissioner in England and produce certain documents referred to in the order. These persons having failed to attend before the commissioner, an order for their attendance was made under s. 5 of 6 & 7 Vict. c. 82 :—Held, that there was no jurisdiction given by the section to make such an order, inasmuch as it was not an order for the examination of persons as witnesses and for the production of documents by them as ancillary to the examination, but was an order for discovery and production of documents before the trial by third persons who were not parties to and had no interest in the action. Burchard v. Macfarlane, 60 L. J., Q. B. 587 ; [1891] 2 Q. B. 241 ; 65 L. T. 282 ; 39 W. R. 694 ; 7 Asp. M. C. 93—C. A.

New Summons—Witness partially examined.]—Where a witness who had been partially examined did not attend on the day to which the examination had been adjourned, and no fresh adjournment was made, a new summons was necessary to compel his attendance for the purpose of completing the examination. Lawson v. Stoddart, 3 N. R. 241 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 33 ; 9 L. T. 569 ; 12 W. R. 286.

8. Execution of Commission.

At what Place.]—Commission granted to examine witnesses in an enemy's country. Cahill v. Shepherd, 12 Ves. 335.

A commission to take an answer of a person resident in a foreign country at war with us, must be executed in that very country ; a commission to examine witnesses is executed at the nearest neutral point. —— v. Romney, Ambl. 62.

An attachment being taken out against the defendant in Ireland, since he could not be examined in person to the contempt, a commission was granted into Ireland to examine him. Anon., Mos. 85.

Commission for examination of witnesses in the West Indies, and injunction to stay proceedings at law on a policy, granted, as the voyage was at and from Carthagena to Porto Bello, and the facts must necessarily arise in the West Indies. Chitty v. Selwyn, 2 Atk. 359.

Commission to examine, &c., directed to Bencoolen in India, notwithstanding 13 Geo. 3, c. 63, s. 44. Baskett v. Toosey, 6 Madd. 261.

Where a special examiner in the country, and the examiner, solicitor, and parties reside there, the court will order the examination and cross-examination of witnesses generally there, on the assumption that it shall apply to witnesses on both sides. Forster's Trusts, In re, 2 W. R. 679.

At what Time.]—Commission executed after four in the afternoon :—Held, regular. Moreton v. Moreton, Dick. 21.

As to the time which commissioners may be required to sit daily, quære. Blundell v. Gladstone, 9 Sim. 455 ; 8 L. J., Ch. 109 ; 3 Jur. 413.

A special commission was granted, to examine the quantity and value of certain ore, &c. The six clerks appointed time and place ; per cur., the time and place are only for the first meeting of the commissioners ; but afterwards they may adjourn to another time or another place. Thornbrough v. Baker, 1 Ch. Ca. 283.

Examination of Witness—Power of Commissioner.]—After a witness has been examined before an examiner of the court and his depositions have been signed, the examiner has power to adjourn the examination, and the witness may be recalled and is bound to attend upon notice given to him that his attendance is required. Metropolitan (Brush) Electric Light and Power Co., In re, Offor, Ex parte, 54 L. J., Ch. 253; 51 L. T. 816.

Commissioners under a commission to examine witnesses, may adjourn. Brown v. Vermuden, 1 Ch. Ca. 282.

Discretion of commissioners taking depositions, not to examine each witness to all the interrogatories, and to reject what is not evidence. Whitelock v. Baker, 13 Ves. 511; 9 R. R. 216.

Commissioners for examination of witnesses are to act impartially, though to a certain extent they have under their particular care the interest of the party appointing them. Campbell v. Scougal, 19 Ves. 553.

The practice in country causes is to feed the commissioners from time to time with interrogatories, as the witnesses can be presented, either for original or cross-examination, until the commissioners find the supply is exhausted. The chancellor said the practice was formerly different, and, with reference to the general practice both as to commissioners in the country and abroad, he should require the masters to certify the practice. But his lordship said, that in this country, where commissions have been executed, and even where no interrogatories have been exhibited, or are ready, the court has sometimes granted, and sometimes refused, a new commission, at the instance of such a defendant not having interrogatories ready, making it a subject of discretion in each particular case; but this discretion ought to be exercised with a very deliberate attention to circumstances; and the course is, not to suppress the depositions under the first commission, but (if necessary, and a regular account given) to grant defendant a new commission. Ib.

Until the time for closing the evidence in a suit has expired, the examiner may not reject the evidence of any witness tendered for examination by either party, notwithstanding that such party may have stated that he has no more witnesses to produce, and the taking of evidence on the other side has been proceeded with. Witness previously examined allowed to be recalled for further examination. Wood v. Scarth, 3 Eq. Rep. 485; 24 L. J., Ch. 392; 3 W. R. 305.

In an examination taken ex parte, the examiner ought not to refuse to allow questions to be put, unless upon matters which would clearly and palpably not be evidence. Surr v. Walmsley, L. R. 2 Eq. 439; 14 L. T. 621; 14 W. R. 888.

—— Rights of Parties.]—Witness examined on the defendant's part, after the plaintiff's commissioners were gone away with the commission. Trevor v. Treveman, Toth. 189.

On a bill for discovery, and a commission to examine foreign witnesses in aid of an action at law, a motion that the plaintiff might communicate to the defendant the interrogatories exhibited by him, was refused. Butler v. Bulkeley, 2 Swanst. 373.

The common order, giving leave to examine a party, need not be served on the opposite party. In an examination of witnesses before commissioners, a party is not bound to give a list of the names of his proposed witnesses to the opposite side. Smith v. Pincombe, 16 Sim. 497; 18 L. J., Ch. 211; 13 Jur. 91, 158.

—— Priority of Witnesses.] — There is no general rule as to the order of priority in which witnesses are to be examined before an examiner; but the examiner may exercise his discretion as to the most convenient order in which the examination of the witnesses may be taken. Stuart v. Balkis Co., 53 L. J., Ch. 790.

An application was made by a shareholder, under s. 35 of the Companies Act, 1862, for the rectification of the register of the company. When the application came on for hearing, the shareholder applied to have the witnesses who had made affidavits on behalf of the company cross-examined on their affidavits, and an order was made that the witnesses on both sides should attend for cross-examination before an examiner. On attending before the examiner the question was raised whether the shareholder's witnesses or the company's witnesses ought to be cross-examined first:—Held, that, under the circumstances of the case, the shareholder's witnesses should be cross-examined first. Doré Gallery, In re, 62 L. T. 758; 38 W. R. 491.

—— Interrogatories, Disallowance of.] — When interrogatories are administered on a commission to be executed in a country out of the jurisdiction of an English court, the court, in its discretion, will disallow such interrogatories as may deter a witness from giving evidence before the commission. Stocks v. Ellis, 42 L. J., Q. B. 241; L. R. 8 Q. B. 454; 29 L. T. 267; 22 W. R. 17.

After a commission has been granted under 1 Will. 4, c. 22, s. 4, the court will, before its execution, disallow any cross interrogatories which in their discretion they may think improper. Ib.

The court will not restrain commissioners in their examinations, upon an allegation that the object of the examinations is to procure evidence against the parties examined, as to penalties incurred by gaming. Burlton, Ex parte, 1 Glyn. & J. 30.

Verbal Questions.] — When a commission, issued to take evidence abroad, authorises questions beyond the written interrogatories, and the commissioners appoint attorneys to put such questions, the allowance of the expenses occasioned thereby is a matter for the discretion of the master. Potter v. Rankin, 38 L. J., C. P. 130; L. R. 4 C. P. 76; 19 L. T. 383.

In cases of great importance and intricacy, the master may allow the successful party the expenses of sending out an English barrister on a commission to examine witnesses abroad, but as a general rule he would not be justified in so doing. Yglesias v. Royal Exchange Assurance Corporation, 39 L. J., C. P. 173; L. R. 5 C. P. 141; 22 L. T. 269; 18 W. R. 381.

A commission was sent out to Messina to take evidence at the instance of the plaintiff; the defendant did not join in it, but furnished written cross interrogatories to be administered to the plaintiff's witnesses; at the execution of the commission, the plaintiff, who resided at Messina, was not examined, and those witnesses who were called were cross-examined by the defendant's agent verbally, and not from the written cross interrogatories; the defendant did not object until the trial:—Held, first, that there was no irregularity in executing the commission. Grill v. General Iron Screw Collier Co., 35 L. J., C. P. 321; L. R. 1 C. P. 600; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 727; 14 L. T. 711; 14 W. R. 893.

Held, secondly, that the objection was too late. Ib.

An irregularity in the mode of taking the depositions cannot be a ground for refusing to admit them at the trial, but can only be taken advantage of by applying to the court to suppress the depositions. Ib.

An order for a joint commission to examine witnesses in Ireland, beside the provision for the delivery of interrogatories and cross-interrogatories by one party to the other, empowered the commissioners to put, or cause to be put, additional questions when it should appear to them to be necessary and proper, such questions to be put down in writing, and returned with the answers, together with the interrogatories and answers under the commission:—Held, that this power was not well exercised by the commissioners allowing the agent for one of the parties to put additional questions subject to the objection raised by the other party. Williamson v. Page, 1 C. B. 464; 3 D. & L. 14; 14 L. J., C. P. 172.

—— Answer tending to Criminate.]—Commissioners have no right to ask questions, the answers to which may subject the witness to fine or other criminal punishment. Smith v. Beadnell, 1 Camp. 30.

—— De bene esse.]—Examination of witnesses de bene esse is within the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 28. Cook v. Hall, 9 Hare (App.) xx.; 22 L. J., Ch. 12; 16 Jur. 1008; 1 W. R. 31.

Witnesses to be examined de bene esse must in general, unless improper under the special circumstances of each case, be examined vivâ voce, in the manner directed by s. 28 of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86. The evidence will therefore necessarily be known to the opposite parties, but not published within the technical meaning of the term. Ib.

The examination of witnesses de bene esse is to be taken orally, according to the mode of examining witnesses prescribed by ss. 30, 31, and 32 of the statute 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86. Ib.

Documentary Evidence.]—The court has no jurisdiction to control the discretion of a commissioner as to what documentary evidence he shall require to be produced to prove an act of bankruptcy. Groom, Ex parte, Chambers, In re, 4 Deac. & C. 640; 2 Mont. & Ayr. 143; 4 L. J., Bk. 22.

Certificate not Taken up.] — Where an examiner's certificate has not been taken up, its effect will not be allowed to be stated in court. Stuart v. Balkis Co., 53 L. J., Ch. 790.

Use of Foreign Language.]—Court refused to permit depositions in French language to be delivered out for the purpose of being translated. Fauquier v. Tynte, 7 Ves. 292.

Under a commission for the examination of French witnesses who could not speak English, the depositions are not to be taken in French, but must be turned by the interpreter into English, and must be so taken down and returned. Belmore v. Anderson, 2 Cox, 288; 4 Bro. C. C. 90.

Interpreter appointed on oath to witness. Smith v. Kirkpatrick, Dick. 103.

When a commission to take answer of a foreigner issues, a power to take it through an interpreter is virtually implied, if necessary, and if the commissioners certify that defendant was duly sworn to such answers in presence of commissioners, and it appear by affidavit of one of the commissioners that the interpreter was duly sworn, and that he believes defendant understood the contents of answer, it is sufficiently verified. Loughman v. Novaes, 6 Price, 108.

Hostile Witness before Examiner.]—There is no rule that a witness on his examination in chief before the examiner may not be treated as a hostile witness. Ohlsen v. Terrero, 44 L. J., Ch. 155; L. R. 10 Ch. 127; 31 L. T. 811; 23 W. R. 195.

An examiner has no discretion to allow a witness to be treated as hostile by the party calling him, but the court has power to direct the examiner to do so. Wright v. Wilkin, 4 Jur. (N.S.) 804; 6 W. R. 643.

Under the 31st section of 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, this court has no power to delegate to an examiner, whether general or special, the discretion to treat witnesses on examination in chief as adverse, and subject them to cross-examination. Ib.

Rules of Evidence.] — A person appointed under the Evidence in Foreign Suits Act, 1856 (19 & 20 Vict. c. 113), to take an examination in England of witnesses in a foreign action ought not to limit the questions put by the rules affecting the admissibility of evidence in this country. Desilla v. Fells, 40 L. T. 423.

Court of the Examiner.]—The office of the examiner of the court is not a public court, and if the presence of the public is objected to the examiner has no discretion to admit them. Western of Canada Oil, Lands and Works Co., In re, 46 L. J., Ch. 683; 6 Ch. D. 109; 25 W. R. 787.

When a clerk on commission of parties under examination before the examiner of the court was himself interested in the case, and was to be subsequently called as a witness:—Held, that he was not entitled to be present under 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 31, and that he ought properly to be excluded from the office. Ib.

An examiner has discretion to allow a shorthand writer to be present, and has discretion to admit the public, at the examination of witnesses. Wright v. Wilkin, 4 Jur. (N.S.) 804; 6 W. R. 643.

Where a witness under examination before a special examiner has a document exhibited to him by the solicitor in the cause; even although that is the document touching which the examination is taking place, such act, although a highly improper one, is not a contempt of court. Ib.

Irregularity.]—Commission executed before town clerk, instead of commissioners, suppressed. Hereforth v. Gates, Cary, 91.

Commissioners for the examination of witnesses employed as their ingrossing clerk on the execution of the commission one who, little more than three months previously, had been clerk to the solicitor of the plaintiff in the cause:—Held, that previous employment was no disqualification for the office of ingrossing clerk, and such appointment was no ground for suppressing the depositions. Wood v. Freeman, 4 Hare, 552; 14 L. J., Ch. 371; 9 Jur. 549.

—— Depositions.]—Depositions taken by commission suppressed, it appearing that the evidence had been taken by the clerk to the commissioners, and that the effect of some of the depositions had been communicated to the agent on the other side. Lennox v. Munnings, 2 Y. & J. 483.

Depositions suppressed, because the solicitor's clerk in the cause did write as a clerk to the commissioners in the execution of the commission. Newte v. Foot, 2 Ch. R. 393.

Depositions on part of defendant, suppressed after publication, because the clerk of defendant's solicitor acted as clerk to commissioners. Cooke v. Wilson, 4 Madd. 380.

Depositions suppressed, the commissioners having employed the clerk of one of the parties as their clerk. Shaw v. Lindsey, 15 Ves. 380.

Appointment of New Party.]—Pending the examination of witnesses, a new next friend of the infant plaintiffs was appointed:—Held, that it was not necessary to notice the alteration in the proceedings under the commission. Lincoln v. Wright, 4 Beav. 166; 10 L. J., Ch. 331.

Custody of Examination.]—The custody of an examination taken under a dedimus in the country, belongs to the clerk in court, who is entitled to make copies of it. If sworn in town, it belongs to the master. Drake v. Woodford, 1 Smith, 116.

Cross-examination—In what Cases.]—If one of the parties, after publication passed, has an order to examine upon the usual affidavit, the other party may not only cross-examine, but examine at large. Anon., 1 Vern. 253.

Cross-examination as to the execution of deeds. Order in alternative, that the examiner with whom they were should cross-examine, or that they should be delivered to the examiner for the other party for that purpose. Power of the Court of Chancery to examine vivâ voce. Turner v. Burleigh, 17 Ves. 354.

Where, after depositions have been suppressed for irregularity, a re-examination is permitted, all the same witnesses must be examined and cross-examined. Perry v. Silvester, Jac. 83.

After the close of the examination of witnesses by commission under a decree to account, and after a return of the depositions, and copies of them being given out by the master, the plaintiff permitted to cross-examine the defendant's witnesses, upon an affidavit of his agent denying that he knew the contents of the depositions, and asserting that the defendant had examined his witnesses without giving any notice of their places of abode. Tynte v. Roche, Wall. Lyn. 36.

New commission granted to cross-examine plaintiff's witnesses abroad, upon subsequent discovery of matter material for such examination; but held that the plaintiff could only be allowed to re-examine on a special case being made, and then only as to matters not comprised in the former interrogatories. Hanover (King) v. Wheatley, 4 Beav. 78; 10 L. J., Ch. 253.

Form of the order in such cases. S. C., 4 Beav. 85, n.

In a country cause, an order to file cross-interrogatories, for the cross-examination of the witnesses of the adverse party, is an order of course. Anon., 6 L. J., Ch. 21.

Two witnesses to whom an interrogatory was exhibited by the examiner, with respect to certain drafts of deeds, then produced to them, were unable to answer the particulars of the interrogatory, by reason of their not having had an opportunity of previously inspecting the drafts. The drafts were marked, however, by the examiner as having been produced to the witnesses. The witnesses having afterwards inspected the drafts, an application was made that they might be re-examined to the same interrogatory, and the court, upon satisfying itself, by seeing the depositions already taken, that the former examination was nugatory, in consequence of the want of the previous inspection, allowed the re-examination to take place, the other party having liberty to cross-examine. Stanney v. Walmsley, 1 Myl. & Cr. 361.

A party who intends to cross-examine a witness must himself make an appointment, for that purpose, with the examiner, and give notice of the time appointed to the witness and the solicitor of the opposite party. Keymer v. Pering, 10 Sim. 179; 8 L. J., Ch. 355.

Party examining witness is bound to keep him in town forty-eight hours after his production at seat of adverse clerk in court, and if cross-interrogatories are left with examiner within forty-eight hours, party must keep him in town till cross-examination is finished; and if witness departs, party must bring him back at his own expense, or examination in chief will be suppressed. Whittuck v. Lysaght, 1 Sim. & S. 446.

The obligation of producing a witness lies with the cross-examining party, and personal service dispensed with where impossible. Winthrop v. Elderton, 1 W. R. 318.

A party attending proceedings in chambers under an administration decree is entitled to cross-examine before an examiner of the court as to matters in question connected with the accounts, an executor, whose accounts are being settled by the chief clerk. But notice of such cross-examination should be given before the chief clerk's decision has been given, and the cross-examination should be strictly confined to the particular matter in dispute. Glover v. Ellison, 41 L. J., Ch. 288; 26 L. T. 234; 20 W. R. 408.

Where a defendant received notice to attend before the examiner in order to be cross-examined, and actually attended, but refused to be sworn, and it was alleged on his behalf that in consequence of certain irregularities he need not have attended, so that, in fact, his attendance was voluntary:—Held, nevertheless, that the attendance was a waiver of the irregularities (if any), and that the defendant must attend to be cross-examined at his own expense. Lawton v. Price, 17 L. T. 163; 16 W. R. 73.

—— At what Stage.]—A party who omits to cross-examine a witness under a commission at the usual period, will be allowed to exhibit interrogatories for that purpose on a subsequent day. Carter v. Draper, 2 Sim. 52.

Cross-interrogatories must be lodged before the direct examination of the witness to whom they are to be exhibited is closed, unless a special order is obtained for the purpose on notice. Keogh v. Pentland, 2 Hog. 221. Varied, on appeal, 3 Moll. 44. And see Sandford v. Seymour, 2 Moll. 392. Hickson v. Aylward, 3 Moll. 37.

Cross-interrogatories must be filed whilst the witness is under his direct examination; otherwise, they are not to be received without a special order of the court, and the motion to suppress them for irregularity must be made after publication passed. Aylward v. Hickson, 2 Moll. 391; 2 Hog. 1.

Objecting to Answer.]—A witness objecting to answer interrogatories before the examiner or the commissioners, demurs by stating his objection on oath; his demurrer may then be set down for argument, and if overruled the witness pays the same costs as a defendant on demurrer. Demurrer to interrogatories by an attorney overruled, without prejudice to the witness's demurring on his re-examination, stating his reasons. Parkhurst v. Lowten, 2 Swanst. 194; 19 R. R. 63.

A witness objecting to answer interrogatories cannot be admitted to state by affidavit what would be the effect of his answer. Ib. 213.

Motion, that demurrer to interrogatories by witness be overruled, not being supported by affidavit, refused. S. C., 3 Madd. 121.

Witness objecting to interrogatory before examiner, must demur. Bowman v. Rodwell, 1 Madd. 266.

Demurrer to interrogatory by witness, being too general, overruled, but leave given to put in written demurrer on re-examination. Morgan v. Shaw, 4 Madd. 54.

9. Notice of Proceedings.

Execution.]—A plaintiff may serve any two of defendant's commissioners with notice of the execution of a commission, and is not bound to those only whom defendant might choose; otherwise, if the two commissioners chosen by defendant should be absent or dead, the commission could not be executed, wherefore the court suffers four on each side. Anon., 3 Atk. 633.

Where it appeared that no notice of the execution of a commission was given until after publication, depositions taken on plaintiff's part were suppressed as against some of the defendants. But, on evidence that the omission arose from a mistake of the clerk to plaintiff's solicitor, in giving at the examiner's office the name of the clerk in court for others of the defendants, as the name of the clerk in court for all the defendants, in consequence of which plaintiff's witnesses were produced only at the seat of the clerk in court so named, and on the examiner's certificate that the name of that clerk in court only was delivered to him, the Lord Chancellor gave defendants the option either of permitting plaintiff to re-examine the same witnesses, or of allowing the depositions to stand, with leave to cross-examine those witnesses, and examine others. Cholmondeley v. Clinton, 2 Mer. 81; 16 R. R. 167.

Commission to take the answer of two defendants, provided notice of the execution of the commission be given to J. S., who was the plaintiff's attorney. The commissioners gave notice of their intention to execute a commission to examine witnesses, and thereupon executed the commission as to one defendant:—Held, that the execution was good, inasmuch as J. S. could not be deceived by the notice. Hall v. Connell, 3 Y. & Coll. 528.

If there be a general demand of tithes, and a general replication put in, if plaintiff on the commission gives notice that he will proceed only as to certain matters, it is as well as if the demand had been abridged in the replication, sed quære. Anon., Bunb. 22.

Leave given to sue out a commission to examine persons obliged to go abroad, de bene esse, defendants to have four days' notice of executing the commission. Lee Dicher v. Power, Dick. 112.

Notice must be given to the party before an examination de bene esse should be proceeded on, so as to give him an opportunity of joining in the commission, or the depositions will be suppressed. Loreden v. Milford (Lord), 4 Bro. C. C. 540.

Examination of Witnesses.]—The Order of the 5th of February, 1861, r. 22, requiring the party summoning a witness to give to the opposite party "forty-eight hours' notice at least of his intention to examine or cross-examine such witness," will not be applied strictly in the case of an examination taken abroad before examiners specially appointed. De Britto v. Hillel, 42 L. J., Ch. 307; L. R. 15 Eq. 213; 28 L. T. 59; 21 W. R. 379.

One who altogether disclaims having anything to do with a commission issued for the examination of witnesses under 1 Will. 4, c. 22, s. 4, is not entitled to notice of the proceedings thereunder. M'Combie v. Auton, 6 Scott (N.R.) 923; 6 Man. & G. 27.

Notice to Witness.] — A witness, who is required to attend and give evidence before the examiner, is not entitled absolutely under the 22nd rule of the order on evidence of the 5th February, 1861, to forty-eight hours' notice of such examination, but to such notice, whether more or less, as under the circumstances may be reasonable. North Wheal Exmouth Mining Co., In re, 31 Beav. 628; 1 N. R. 42; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 1168; 7 L. T. 306; 11 W. R. 58.

Where a witness, residing in the neighbourhood of London, received twenty-four hours' notice of examination, and he appeared before the examiner at the time appointed:—Held, to be no ground for objecting to be examined, that forty-eight hours' notice had not been given. Ib.

Cross-examination.]—See last head.

Computation of Time.] — Under the 86th general order the ten days' notice to be given of examining witnesses is exclusive both of the days of serving the notice, and of the day named for commencing the examination. Att.-Gen. v. Ball, 9 Ir. Eq. R. 463.

10. Return of Commission.

a. In General.

By Post.]—Depositions of witnesses who were examined in India, and by mistake transmitted from thence to the plaintiff's solicitor by post, will be received, if the packet is delivered unopened to the master, and the facts are verified by affidavit. Kennedy v. Kennedy, 1 Hog. 311.

The court directed a commission to examine witnesses abroad, to be delivered to a master to send the same by the post, and when executed to receive it back again. Newland v. Horsman, 2 Ch. Ca. 76.

Proof by Affidavit.]—Where commission is executed abroad, the sending it out and the receiving it back again must be proved by affidavit. Bourdillon v. Alleyne, 4 Bro. C. C. 100.

Carried off by Commissioners.]—A joint commission to examine on both parts, directed to three, four, or two commissioners; three met and examined witnesses, and appointed a new day to examine more; defendant's commissioners carried away the commission, and came not at the day appointed. Plaintiff's commissioners then came and examined witnesses, without having the commission, and certified these with the former depositions taken, and the whole matter. The court ordered the depositions certified to be sealed up again, and remain in court, and awarded a subpœna duces tecum against the commissioners to bring in the commission, and thereupon the court would take further order. Anon., Pr. Reg. 126.

Premature Return.]—Under a commission for the examination of witnesses abroad, the commissioners examined the witnesses for the plaintiffs; and under an impression that the defendant had no witnesses to examine (whether he had or had not given notice of his intention to examine witnesses, was disputed), they closed the commission, and returned it to England; after the commission had been sent off, the defendant examined his witnesses before some of the commissioners; and the depositions of those witnesses, and the interrogatories upon which they were taken, were sealed up and forwarded to England. On motion to annex the last-mentioned depositions and interrogatories to the commission, and the depositions on the part of the plaintiff, the court expressed an inclination to grant the defendant a new commission, unless the plaintiff would consent to the motion; and upon such consent being given, the court made the order. When a commission to examine witnesses is returned, it is opened by the junior sworn clerk for the purpose of entering the names of the acting commissioners in the commission book, and the commission is then kept under lock and key until publication is passed. Irving v. Viana, 1 Y. & J. 416.

b. Form, Signature and Amendment.

Signature.]—The commissioner appointed to take the examination of witnesses in a cause should sign the interrogatories exhibited, as well as the depositions taken under the commission. Staniland v. Willatt, 17 L. J., Ch. 373; 12 Jur. 392.

Commissioners for examining witnesses need not sign every skin of the interrogatories; it is sufficient if they sign the last skin. Brydges v. Branfill, 12 Sim. 334; 11 L. J., Ch. 12. And see cases, 12 Sim. 346, n. et seq.; 11 L. J., Ch. 13, n., 14, n.

Although it is usual to express, in the title to depositions, that they have been taken by virtue of a commission, "to us (naming only the acting commissioners) and others directed," yet, if the names of all the commissioners are inserted, the depositions will not be suppressed because they are not signed by all the commissioners, provided they are signed by those who acted. Ib.

Execution on Commission itself.]—Return to commission to take an answer abroad, must be executed on the back of the commission, and not on the envelope inclosing it. Philips v. Philips, 4 Jur. 599.

Mistaken Title.]—Deposition of witnesses taken under commission, the title of which was mistaken, ordered to stand till mistake rectified. Robert v. Millechamp, Dick. 22.

Where Stamp Cannot be Had.]—Depositions taken in India, where no proper stamps could be had, ordered on motion of course to be ingrossed on parchment and stamped. Chitty v. East India Co., 2 Cox, 190.

Form.]—Form of separate examination of a married woman, taken by commission. Bryant, Ex parte, 1 Ves. & B. 507; 12 R. R. 213.

Amendment.]—The return of a commission from Jamaica, which omitted to state that the commissioners and their clerks had taken the oaths, ordered to be amended, and to be received in evidence, though, in addition, the signature of the commissioners had not been affixed to the interrogatories. Davis v. Barrett, 14 Beav. 25.

Commissioners for examining witnesses omitted to certify, in their return to the commission, that they and their clerks, before acting, took the oaths annexed to the commission. The court first ordered the deposition to be suppressed; but on being satisfied, by the affidavit of one of the commissioners, that the oaths had been duly taken, allowed the return to the commission to be amended by inserting that fact. Brydges v. Branfill, 12 Sim. 334; 11 L. J., Ch. 12. And see cases, 12 Sim. 346, n. et seq.; 11 L. J., Ch. 13, n., 14, n.

Where, owing to special circumstances, the acknowledgment of a married woman, residing in Canada, had not been taken until two days after the time when the commission was returnable, the judge amended the commission nunc pro tunc, by extending the time of the return, so as to validate the acknowledgment already had. Arabella Grierson, In re, Ir. R. 4 C. L. 232.

c. Time for.

A commission returnable without delay, must be executed before the second return of next term. Jones v. Mitchell, 2 Vern. 197.

Home commissions to examine must be returned before third return of following term, but no period fixed for foreign commissions. Wake v. Franklin, 1 Sim. & S. 95.

Where the defendant obtains a commission to examine witnesses under the 17th amended Order of April, 1828, the commission must be made returnable the first return of the second term next following the date of the order for such commission. M'Gregor v. Topham, 2 Hare, 516.

If a commission issued in term time be made returnable without delay, it is returnable the first day of the next term; if issued in vacation, the last day of the next term. Anon., 2 Ken., Ch. 30.

Court cannot extend time mentioned in a commission to examine. Hall v. De Tastet, 6 Madd. 269.

If a commission be taken out in vacation, and has not a certain return, it does not expire the first day of the following term, but may be continued in execution the whole of the next term to the last return. Barnsley v. Powell, 3 Atk. 593.

In a country commission the party is not entitled to twenty-eight days, and as much more time as may be necessary for the post. Henderson, Ex parte, Coop. 227.

An order for a commission to examine witnesses, returnable upon a day subsequent to that to which publication stands enlarged, with liberty to apply to the master to enlarge publication, is irregular. Maund v. Allies, 4 Myl. & Cr. 503; 3 Jur. 309.

Dedimus.]—A dedimus issued to take the acknowledgment of a husband and wife, who were resident in Jamaica. Owing to accidental circumstances, the dedimus was not returned until a year after the teste; and on this account the cursitor refused to receive it, as being contrary to the practice of their office. But the court directed the cursitor to receive it. Townsend v. Lowe, 1 Cox, 410.

11. Quashing, Abatement, and Discharge of Commission.

Application to Quash.]—When an application is made by a plaintiff to quash a commission obtained by himself for the examination of witnesses abroad, the court will grant a rule absolute in the first instance. Hodges v. Daly, 8 D. P. C. 308; 4 Jur. 988.

Abatement.]—A commission being granted to examine witnesses at Algiers, the plaintiff died, by which in strictness the suit abated, but the witnesses were examined there before notice of plaintiff's death; the examination held regular, though one of the witnesses was yet living. Thompson's Case, 3 P. W. 195.

Feme sole sues out a commission to examine witnesses; before they are examined she marries. Their depositions ordered to stand. Winter v. Dancie, Toth. 99.

After commission to examine abroad was sent, witness, before commission had reached its destination, returned to England, and motion made to examine him de bene esse, but refused, and held that bill must be amended. Atkins v. Palmer, 5 Madd. 19.

Discharge.]—The plaintiff neglected to obtain an order for a commission to examine witnesses until after the expiration of three weeks from the time of filing the replication, when he obtained an order for that purpose ex parte:—Held, that the defendant's proper course was, not to move to dismiss the bill for want of prosecution, but to move to discharge the order for a commission. Strickland v. Strickland, Cr. & Ph. 151; 10 L. J., Ch. 261. Affirming 4 Beav. 120; 5 Jur. 319.

An order of the Court of Chancery directed the new trial of an issue, and a commission for examination abroad; and that the trial of the issue should be stayed until the return of the commission. The parties having improperly delayed the execution and return of the commission, upon application to the court the whole of the original order was discharged. But upon appeal:—Held, that the laches as to the commission ought not to affect the right to proceed to a new trial of the issue; and as regarded this last point the order was reversed. Clovin v. Campion, 8 Bli. (N.S.) 253.

Motion is proper step to discharge order for commission to examine on master's certificate. Chaffen v. Wills, Dick. 377.

Transfer into Court.]—A claim in an administration suit was brought in against a testator's estate which was disputed by the executors. A special examiner had been appointed at the instance of the executors, before whom the cross-examination of the claimants and their principal witnesses had been taken. The executors now moved to have the examination and cross-examination of the witnesses, and the hearing of the claim and the evidence thereon, transferred into court:—Held, notwithstanding the fact that the evidence had already been nearly completed before the special examiner, that the executors were entitled to have the whole matter transferred from chambers into court; all costs being reserved. Commercial Union Assurance Co. v. Uzielli, 39 L. T. 665; 27 W. R. 356.

12. Second Commission.

In General.]—It is sufficient to shew a probable cause for the granting of such commission. Jessup v. Duport, Barnard. 192.

Where Party has joined in Commission.]—Where a party hath a commissioner present at the examination, he shall not have another commission to examine as to the merits; but upon a suggestion that exhibits after being proved, before the commissioners, had been altered, a new commission was granted to examine as to that point. Richardson v. Louther, 1 Ch. Ca. 273.

Defendant present at execution of commission, though without interrogatories, cannot have new commission. Mineve v. Row, Dick. 18. But see Coventry v. Coventry, Dick. 25.

A defendant who has joined in commission, cannot obtain a new commission except upon a special application and with notice. Bond v. Bond, 4 Sim. 518.

Mistake.]—Under an impression that the tithe commissioners had power to determine the matters in issue, the defendants had neglected to examine witnesses under a commission from the Court of Exchequer: on motion of the defendants, supported by an affidavit of facts, a new commission was granted on payment of the costs thereof. Wetherell v. Bellward, 3 Y. & Coll. 319; 8 L. J., Ex. Eq. 85.

The plaintiff is first entitled to sue out a commission to examine witnesses; and if the defendant hath an opportunity to examine his witnesses, and doth not, he is not entitled to a new commission, but if the plaintiff neglect to sue out a commission, the defendant may. Barnsley v. Powell, Dick. 793 ; 3 Atk. 593.

But where the plaintiff's commissioners closed the commission before the proper time by mistake, and without the knowledge of the defendant or his solicitor, the court, after the depositions had been seen, granted a new commission, but confined the defendant to the proving exhibits, and examining to credit and cross-examining a witness examined under the former commission ; but he was not to examine new witnesses. Ib.

Ignorance.]—Where commissioners on one side do not attend, in order to have a new commission, the affidavit must state that the party, or his agents, have not seen, heard, nor been informed of the depositions on the other side. Geast v. Barber, 2 Bro. C. C. 1.

Publication enlarged, and new commission to examine defendant's witnesses issued, on affidavit of ignorance of contents of former depositions. Dingle v. Rowe, Wightw. 99.

Upon commission, notice only given to one of defendants ; new commission is granted, and defendants to have carriage. Hollingworth v. Lucy, Cary, 91.

Where no Cross-examination.]—Commission to examine witnesses abroad executed and returned ; the defendant, who had not interrogatories prepared, not having had the opportunity of cross-examining, a new commission granted for that purpose ; the defendant to state whom he wishes and undertakes to cross-examine ; but the plaintiff's depositions not suppressed. Campbell v. Scougal, 19 Ves. 552.

The court having directed a commission to issue for the examination of witnesses upon the certificate of the master, and that commission having miscarried by reason of the defendant being deprived of an opportunity of cross-examining the plaintiff's witnesses, a new commission was directed by the court to issue without any further certificate of the master. Forsyth v. Ellice, 21 L. J., Ch. 590.

Fresh Evidence.]—New commission granted to cross-examine plaintiff's witnesses abroad, upon subsequent discovery of matter material for such examination ; but held that the plaintiff could only be allowed to re-examine on a special case being made, and then only as to matters not comprised in the former interrogatories. Hanover (King) v. Wheatley, 4 Beav. 78 ; 10 L. J., Ch. 253.

A general affidavit of having material witnesses beyond sea, is not sufficient for a new commission, but the witnesses must be named in the affidavit, and the point mentioned to which they can materially depose. Anon., 1 Vern. 334.

Amendment.]—Bill to perpetuate testimony as to modus, being amended by adding an essential party after the commission executed, but before publication, a new commission was granted. Biddiford v. Partridge, 3 Anstr. 646.

A commission to examine witnesses was issued by the defendant ; the plaintiff joined in the commission and named commissioners. The plaintiff, afterwards, with leave of the court, withdrew his replication, and amended the bill, to which an answer was put in, and a replication filed thereto, and then the commission was re-sealed :—Held, that it was not necessary to issue a new commission, and that, if the commissioners named by the plaintiff, on the first issuing of the commission, were now unable to attend they ought to make a special application. And a motion by the plaintiff to discharge the commission for irregularity was refused with costs. Page v. Fletcher, Younge, 271.

Misconduct.]—Where the plaintiff by his conduct renders it impossible to examine all the witnesses under the first commission, and afterwards applies for a second commission, the court will order him to pay the extra costs occasioned by the second commission, as well as the defendant's costs of the motion, and will likewise put him under terms with respect to the time and mode of executing the second commission. Morris v. Davies, 1 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 220.

A new commission granted, and publication enlarged, on the ground of misconduct of one of the commissioners nominated by the party applying. Sayer v. Wagstaff, 5 Beav. 462 ; 12 L. J., Ch. 35.

Other Cases.]—Where witness had demurred to interrogatory as tending to subject him to a penalty, and demurrer was overruled as too general, it was ordered without costs, and that new commission should issue, plaintiff undertaking by interrogatories, to make no use of the answer, for the purpose of enforcing such penalties. Jackson v. Benson, 1 Y. & J. 36.

Depositions under a commission having been suppressed with costs, the payment of those costs was made a condition for granting a new commission. Chameau v. Riley, 6 Beav. 419 ; 7 Jur. 711.

New commission ; witnesses not appearing on former. Shepheard v. Shepheard, Cary, 111.

New commission to defendant ; publication stayed of witness examined in court by plaintiff. Mackworth v. Swayefield, Cary, 112.

A second commission granted on special circumstances. Turbot v. ———, 8 Ves. 315.

13. Lost Commission.

Afterwards Found.]—Commission executed ; lost on road, and found ; on affidavit by finder, that it had not been opened, received. Smales v. Chayter, Dick. 99.

User of Draft.]—Commission de bene esse lost ; on return, witness being dead, paper draft sealed ordered to be sent up unopened and ingrossed by six clerks, and used as original deposition. Jones v. Donithorne, Dick. 352.

A commission for examination of witnesses in Lisbon was executed, but the ship in which the depositions were sent to England was lost on the passage. The court ordered the commissioners to transmit the drafts of the depositions, and to certify the circumstances of the return of the commission, but would not make any order for the reading the drafts on the hearing of the clause until after the commissioners had made their return and certificate. Burn v. Burn, 2 Cox, 426.

Carried off by Commissioners.]—See Anon., Pr. Reg. 126, ante, col. 1015.

14. Depositions.

a. Form, Title, and Signature.

Form.]—Depositions taken before commissioners in the country may be read, although taken in the third person, the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 94, s. 27, referring only to such as are taken before the examiners. Dryden v. Frost, 8 Sim. 380.

Where depositions were returned on paper, the court allowed them to be ingrossed on parchment, and the ingrossment to be filed. Willis v. Garbutt, 2 Y. & J. 326. S. P., Chitty v. East India Co., 2 Cox, 190.

Title.]—Depositions, taken under a commission, suppressed for irregularity, because, although the commission was intituled in an original cause of revivor, the deposition and the interrogatories upon which they were taken were intituled in the original cause only. Pritchard v. Foulkes, 5 Myl. & C. 330; 10 L. J., Ch. 17; 4 Jur. 1006. Affirming 2 Beav. 133.

Depositions in the Exchequer were suppressed for irregularity, there being no counsel's name attached to the ingrossment of the interrogatories, and the depositions being headed as taken under a commission out of the Court of Chancery. Campbell v. Dickens, 3 Y. & Coll. 720; 9 L. J., Ex. Eq. 33.

Where after publication had passed it was discovered that, in the title of the interrogatories and depositions filed on behalf of the plaintiff, the names of two of the defendants in the cause had been omitted by mistake, leave was given to amend the title of the interrogatories and depositions, and after the amendment that the several witnesses should be re-sworn to the truth of the depositions so altered. Mitchell v. Roe, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 144.

Depositions wrongly intituled cannot be read, but the party who seeks to use them will be allowed to have them re-sworn upon terms. O'Hara v. Creagh, 2 Ir. Eq. R. 419.

A commission to examine witnesses and the depositions taken thereunder were intituled in an original and revived suit, but the interrogatories were intituled as in a single suit, though in a manner applicable either to the original suit or to the suit as revived:—Held, that the interrogatories were not wrongly intituled, and a motion to suppress them was refused. Jones v. Smith, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 42; 12 L. J., Ch. 432; 6 Jur. 1078.

When a bill has been dismissed against one defendant, his name is properly omitted in the title of the cause at the head of depositions taken after such dismissal. Prince Albert v. Strange, 2 De G. & Sm. 652.

An order for a commission to examine witnesses was made, on the application of the plaintiffs, in a cause in which Sir J. Brydges and another were plaintiffs, and C. E. Branfill and others were defendants, by original and amended bill: and in which Sir J. Brydges and another were plaintiffs, and Lady Brydges and others were defendants, by bill of revivor and supplement. The commission was made out in a cause in which Sir J. Brydges and another were plaintiffs, and C. E. Branfill and others were defendants, by original bill and bill of revivor and supplement. In the title to depositions taken under that commission, both the original and amended bill and the bill of revivor and supplement were mentioned, and the names of the parties to each bill were set forth at length. A motion by the defendants to suppress the depositions, grounded on the variance between the title of the depositions, was refused. Brydges v. Branfill, 12 Sim. 334; 11 L. J., Ch. 12. And see the cases in 12 Sim. 346, n. et seq., and 11 L. J., Ch. 13, n. & 14, n.

Depositions are not vitiated by a difference between the title of the depositions and the title of the cause, where the suit in which the depositions are taken is clearly identified. Harford v. Rees, 9 Hare (App.) lxviii., lxx.

Signature of Witness.]—When an order for a commission described that the depositions of every witness should be signed by him, and by the commissioner, and the depositions were not signed by the witnesses but were authenticated by the seal of the commissioner:—Held, that this provision in the order was directory only, and that the non-compliance with it did not make the depositions taken under the commission inadmissible, no hardship to the party objecting having been proved. Hodges v. Cobb, 8 B. & S. 583; 36 L. J., Q. B. 265; L. R. 2 Q. B. 652; 16 L. T. 792; 15 W. R. 1038.

Where the commissioner for the examination of witnesses omitted to copy on the ingrossment of the depositions the signatures which the witnesses had affixed to the drafts, a motion to suppress the depositions on this ground was refused, and the clerk of records and writs was directed to supply the omission. Lee v. Egremont, 2 De G. & Sm. 363; 17 L. J., Ch. 437; 12 Jur. 860.

The court refused to suppress depositions, where, after publication passed, the officer of the court had, without the sanction of the court, erased the name subscribed to the depositions. Nash v. Cochrane, 1 Jur. 70.

Signature of Commissioner.]—The omission by an examiner to sign his name to the depositions of a witness, taken by him, and returned to the record and writ clerk's office, is not such an irregularity as to prevent the court from directing them to be filed on terms. Stephens v. Wanklin, 19 Beav. 585.

But where, in a suit at issue before the new practice, a special examiner had been appointed by order of the court, but no commission had been issued according to the old practice, and witnesses were examined upon interrogatories, and not orally, and there had been great delay, the court refused to order the depositions to be filed. Ib.

Depositions taken in the colonies, signed by, but not in the handwriting of, the examiner, received in evidence. Cooper v. Macdonald, 36 L. J., Ch. 304.

Depositions taken before an examiner who had died before affixing his signature to them, allowed to be received in evidence as if they had received such signature. Bryson v. Warwick and Birmingham Canal Co., 1 W. R. 124.

The examiner to the court before whom a witness had been examined, died without having signed the deposition; the deposition was ordered to be filed without any signature. Felthouse v. Bailey, 14 W. R. 827.

Handwriting of Examiner.]—A witness's depositions de bene esse, not taken down by the examiner, specially appointed, in his own handwriting, as directed by 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 32, but taken down in the presence of the other parties and certified by the examiner to have been read over to the witness and signed by her in his presence were, under Ord. XXXVII. r. 4, ordered to be filed. Bolton v. Bolton, 2 Ch. D. 217; 34 L. T. 123; 24 W. R. 426.

It is not enough that evidence be taken down in the presence of the examiner, and the depositions signed as directed, and authenticated by him, according to s. 34 of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86. Examiners are bound under the act to take down the depositions in their own handwriting. Stobart v. Todd, 2 Eq. R. 1144; 23 L. J., Ch. 956; 18 Jur. 618; 2 W. R. 617.

Filing.]—A special examiner, appointed to take the cross-examination of witnesses who had made affidavits on a motion for injunction, is at liberty to file the depositions from time to time, without waiting until the examination has been concluded. Clark v. Gill, 1 Kay & J. 19; 2 Eq. R. 1108; 23 L. J., Ch. 711; 2 W. R. 652.

Foreign Depositions — Authentication.] — Depositions taken in a foreign country may be filed if taken before persons duly authorised by the law of the country to administer oaths, and take similar depositions in the courts there. Levitt v. Levitt, 2 Hem. & M. 626.

In the case of a deposition taken in the United States of America, a certificate by the clerk of the supreme court, sealed with the seal of the court, is sufficient evidence that such a deposition has been taken before a proper officer. Ib.

b. Admissibility.

In General.]—Witnesses examined under a judge's order, in expectation of their going abroad, are examined as much for one side as the other, and either party may use their evidence on the trial, if it is shewn that the witnesses are abroad; but it must be proved that they are abroad, and the statement in their depositions, that they are going abroad, is not sufficient for this purpose. Proctor v. Lainson, 7 Car. & P. 629.

The evidence taken by any parties to a cause may be used by any of the other parties. Sturgis v. Morse, 26 Beav. 562.

Copies.]—A commission to examine witnesses at Hamburgh having issued, the commission, contrary to the directions of the court, was directed to the judges of the chamber of commerce at Hamburgh, and not to the judges as individuals. The evidence was returned as an extract from the records of the court, with the examination of the witnesses in German, of which a translation was made, and put in at the trial of the cause:—Held, that the evidence was inadmissible, as it purported to be a copy of, and was not the examination itself. Clay v. Stephenson, 2 N. & P. 189; 7 A. & E. 185; W. W. & D. 537; 6 L. J., K. B. 211; 1 Jur. 448.

Translation, when made.]—Where a commission directed the commissioners to examine the witnesses on interrogatories, and to reduce the examinations into writing in the English language, and send the same to this country, and to swear an interpreter to interpret the depositions of such witnesses as did not understand the English language, and it appeared by the return that the depositions in the first instance were reduced into writing in the foreign language, and translated by the interpreter into English within an interval of six weeks:—Held, that the commission was well executed by the commissioners returning the depositions so translated into the English language. Atkins v. Palmer, 4 B. & Ad. 377.

Affirmation by Person not qualified to affirm —Time for Objection.]—A commission was issued abroad for the purpose of taking the evidence of a witness touching certain matters relating to an action brought by the plaintiffs against the defendant. The witness objected to be sworn and was allowed by the commissioner to affirm. His evidence was then taken. The deposition was regular upon the face of it, and was returned by the commissioner in the following terms: "Affirmed before me, the witness objecting to an oath." The plaintiffs were represented at the commission, but took no objection at the time to the evidence being given upon affirmation; subsequently, however, they applied at chambers to have the deposition taken off the file, on affidavits shewing that the witness was not a person who was entitled to affirm:—Held, that the objection should have been taken at the time, and ought not now to be entertained, there being nothing on the face of the deposition itself to shew that it was not properly taken. Richards v. Hough, 51 L. J., Q. B. 361; 30 W. R. 676.

Opportunity of Cross-examination.]—In order to render depositions taken under any judicial proceedings evidence against a party, he must have had an opportunity to be present at the examination, and to cross-examine the witnesses. Att.-Gen. v. Davison, M'Clel. & Y. 160; 29 R. R. 774.

A commission having issued, to be executed at New York, returnable in a month, with leave to the defendant to cross-examine, there was, some weeks afterwards, a consent by him that no objection to the admissibility of the evidence taken should be made by reason of the time of taking or returning such evidence, saving all just exceptions to the evidence. The commission was returned executed two or three days after such consent, having been executed without any notice to the defendant of the time at which he might attend his execution:—Held, that nevertheless the evidence taken under it was admissible at the trial. Whyte v. Hallett, 28 L. J., Ex. 208; 7 W. R. 408.

The deposition of a deceased witness is admissible on condition, not only of its having been taken under the sanction of an oath, but also of sufficient notice having been given to the party against whom it is tendered, to have enabled him to attend and cross-examine the witness. Where notice was given, about two p.m. on a Saturday, to the respondent's solicitor in London, that a witness was to be examined at Bath on Monday, under an order of the court obtained by the petitioner:—Held, that the notice was insufficient to enable the respondent's solicitor to attend and cross-examine, and that the evidence so taken without cross-examination was inadmissible. Fitzgerald v. Fitzgerald, 3 Sw. & Tr. 397. Affirmed on appeal, 3 Sw. & Tr. 400.

Where the plaintiffs filed a bill in chancery for the examination of a witness de bene esse, to which the defendant did not put in any answer, and the plaintiff afterwards obtained an order of the court for the examination of the witness, and gave notice to the defendant, and of the interrogatories intended to be put, and on the same evening examined the witness, who left London the next day for a foreign country, and never returned; and the plaintiffs afterwards obtained a further order that the deposition of the witness should be published, in order that it might be read in evidence at the trial:—Held, that the deposition was admissible at the trial, for as the defendant had notice of the time of the examination, he might have cross-examined at that time, or applied for further time for that purpose: and it must be presumed from his not having done either that he did not wish to cross-examine. Cuzenove v. Vaughan, 1 M. & S. 4; 14 R. R. 377.

It is no objection to the reception of the depositions taken on interrogatories, that there was an alleged breach of faith on the part of the defendant in examining witnesses on interrogatories at all. But if there was any irregularity in proceeding with the commission, as for instance, if it was executed without any notice to the plaintiff to enable him, if he pleased, to put cross-interrogatories, such irregularity is a good objection to the admissibility of the depositions, and the court, if they have been received at nisi prius, will grant a new trial, and direct a fresh commission to be issued. Steinkeller v. Newton, 1 Scott, (N.R.) 148; 8 D. P. C. 579; 9 Car. & P. 313; 6 Man. & G. 30, n.; 9 L. J., C. P. 262.

The Order of 5th February, 1861, r. 22, as to forty-eight hours' notice being given, will not be applied strictly in the case of an examination taken abroad before examiners specially appointed. De Britto v. Hillel, 42 L. J., Ch. 307; L. R. 15 Eq. 213; 28 L. T. 59; 21 W. R. 379.

On motion to suppress plaintiff's deposition for not producing his witnesses to be cross-examined, a new commission was ordered, defendant to have the carriage of it; the depositions of such witnesses already examined by plaintiff, as he would produce for cross-examination, to stand; the others to stand suppressed. Charlton v. Robson, 2 Fowl. Ex. Pr. 158.

Commission to examine witnesses abroad executed and returned; the defendant, who had not interrogatories prepared, not having had the opportunity of cross-examining, a new commission granted for that purpose; the defendant to state whom he wishes and undertakes to cross-examine; but the plaintiff's depositions not suppressed. Campbell v. Scougal, 19 Ves. 552.

Witness examined in chief, but before cross-examination secretes himself; unless produced a fortnight after notice his depositions suppressed. Flowerday v. Collet, Dick. 288.

—— Ex Parte Deposition.]—In a cause to be heard on motion for decree, an ex parte deposition before the examiner is irregular; but, if necessary to prevent substantial injustice, the court will allow a slip to be remedied. In a cause in which notice of motion for decree had been given, a deposition on behalf of the plaintiff had, by inadvertence, been taken ex parte before the examiner: the defendant having first tried to keep the witness out of the way, refused to cross-examine him when tendered for the purpose, and took the objection that the deposition was irregular. When the objection was taken, the time for the plaintiff to file evidence had expired. The court ordered the ex parte deposition to stand, with liberty for the defendant to cross-examine. Smith v. Baker, 4 N. R. 321; 2 Hem. & M. 498; 10 L. T. 599.

A plaintiff, replication not having been filed, subpœnaed before the examiner some witnesses who had refused to make affidavits. The examination took place, and the depositions were treated as ex parte by the examiner, notwithstanding a protest by counsel for the defendant, who, on its being overruled by the examiner, thereupon left the room. The plaintiff subsequently gave notice of a motion for a decree, reference to these depositions being appended to the notice; and the defendant afterwards applied for an enlargement of the time for answering the plaintiff's motion. A motion on behalf of the defendant, that these depositions might be taken off the file as being ex parte and irregular, having been dismissed by Malins, V.-C. (16 L. T. 408; 15 W. R. 828), on the ground that the case fell within the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 40:—Held, on appeal, that s. 40 was confined to proceedings actually before the court; and that notice of the motion for a decree not having been given at the time of the examination, the examination in the present case had been irregular; but that the defendant, having had notice of the plaintiff's intention to use the depositions on the hearing of the motion for a decree, and having applied for further time to answer the motion which rested upon them, without in the interval complaining of them as having been taken ex parte, could not complain of them. Coles v. Morris, 36 L. J., Ch. 833; 17 L. T. 155; 15 W. R. 1157.

—— Witness Dead.]—Witness examined for the plaintiff, and was to be cross-examined by the defendant, but before he could be cross-examined he died, yet the Court of Chancery ordered his depositions to stand. Arundel v. Arundel, 1 Ch. Rep. 90.

A witness dying after his examination in chief, and before he was cross-examined, his depositions may be read, valeant quantum; but if his death happened before his examination in chief was completely finished, no use could be made of his testimony. Nolan v. Shannon, 1 Moll. 157.

Depositions of a witness read, though he had died before cross-examination; the cross-interrogatories not going to any point to which the witness had been examined in chief, nor to his credit, but to matters capable of proof by other witnesses. O'Callaghan v. Murphy, 2 Sch. & Lef. 158.

Where a witness dies after examination, but before such examination is signed by him, the depositions cannot be made use of. But yet, where the defendant, after publication, examined a witness, and on the usual affidavit that the defendant, his clerk or solicitor, had not seen the depositions, got an order to re-examine this witness, but the witness died before a re-examination, the court gave leave to the defendant to make use of the former depositions of the same witness. Copeland v. Stanton, 1 P. W. 414.

—— Refusal of Witness.]—The refusal of a witness to be cross-examined is no reason for suppressing his deposition, but the adverse party must at the same time enforce such right of cross-examination as he has. Courtenay v. Hoskins, 2 Russ. 253.

Reference to Documents in Answers.]—A witness, who had been examined on interrogatories in a foreign country, stated in one of his answers the contents of a letter, which was not produced:—Held, on the trial of the cause in England, that so much of the answer as related to the contents of the letter was not receivable. Steinkeller v. Newton, 1 Scott (N.R.) 148; 8 D. P. C. 579; 9 C. & P. 313; 6 Man. & G. 30, n.; 9 L. J., C. P. 262.

The depositions of a witness are admissible, though it appears that, on his examination, he referred to papers which he refused to allow the commissioners to see. Steinkeller v. Newton, 2 M. & Rob. 372.

If a witness examined upon interrogatories refers to a writing in itself not evidence, as containing a statement of the facts as to which he is interrogated, this writing may be read as part of his deposition. Falconer v. Hanson, 1 Camp. 171; 10 R. R. 663.

On an issue raising the question whether due diligence had been used to obtain the answer of A. to a bill in chancery, a witness stated on interrogatories that he did with due diligence endeavour to obtain the answer, but could not, and that he wrote a letter on that occasion to A.'s agent. The letter itself was not in evidence; and there was no proof that any endeavour had been made, except writing such letter:—Held, that the deposition to the extent above stated was admissible, though the part immediately following set forth the contents of the letter, and was therefore excluded. Tufton v. Whitmore, 12 A. & E. 307; 9 L. J., Q. B. 405.

Where, upon the examination of a witness before a special examiner, documents were placed in his hands for the purpose of being proved as exhibits, and no question was put to him on behalf of the defendant, whose witness he was, except such questions as merely led to the proof of handwriting, it was held that the counsel or solicitor for the plaintiff had no right, as mere matter of course, and in the absence of any special grounds, to inspect the documents so placed in the witness's hands. Lord v. Colvin, 5 De G. M. & G. 47; 23 L. J., Ch. 469; 18 Jur. 253; 2 W. R. 298.

Paper Annexed to Depositions.]—A witness for a defendant was examined on a commission; on his cross-examination a paper signed by him was produced to him, and a portion of his cross-examination and re-examination related to it and was founded on it; the paper was annexed to the deposition:—Held, that this paper was not to be read as a part of the cross-examination of the witness, but that, if the plaintiff's counsel wished it to be read before the cross-examination was read, it must be read as his evidence, so as to entitle the defendant's counsel to observe on it in a special reply. Stephens v. Foster, 6 Car. & P. 289.

Deposition taken under a joint commission—"I have nothing further to say. I hand you a legalised copy of a deposition (D.) which I made at the English consulate, and which I now confirm. Any discrepancies that may be between this document and my present deposition must be attributed to the length of time that has elapsed since this occurrence":—Held, that the copy of deposition (D.) was inadmissible. Alcock v. Royal Exchange Assurance Corporation, 13 Q. B. 292; 18 L. J., Q. B. 121; 13 Jur. 445.

Secondary Evidence of Contents of Written Documents received without Objection.]—Under a commission to take evidence abroad in an action, copies of certain documents and answers of witnesses with regard to the contents of such documents were received by the commissioners in evidence on behalf of the plaintiff, without objection on the part of the defendant who joined in the commission. The copy documents were appended to the depositions and returned by the commissioners:—Held, that the secondary evidence of the documents having been taken under the commission, without objection on the part of the defendant, was receivable before an arbitrator to whom the action was referred, and that it was too late then to take objection on the ground that the original documents were not produced. Robinson v. Davies, 49 L. J., Q. B. 218; 5 Q. B. D. 26; 28 W. R. 255.

Discretion as to admitting.]—An interrogatory being objected to as a leading question, and the answer obtained by it as objectionable for that reason, the judge caused part of the interrogatory and part of the answer to be suppressed, and the remainder, which appeared not affected by the context, to be read in evidence:—Held, that the judge was not bound to reject the interrogatory and answer, merely because the question was a leading one, but might exercise a discretion as to excluding or admitting the whole or part of the answer obtained by the leading question, and that the course taken at the trial was correct. Small v. Nairne, 13 Q. B. 840.

Part or Whole.]—Where the examination of an absent witness is read on the part of the plaintiff, the whole, including the answers to the cross-interrogatories, must be read as part of his case. Temperly v. Scott, 5 Car. & P. 341.

A party cannot abandon an interrogatory in part; he must abandon the whole. Wheeler v. Atkins, 5 Esp. 246.

Legality of.]—Illegal questions or answers returned by commissioners may be objected to and struck out at the trial; but counsel cannot object to answers to illegal questions put on his own side. Hutchinson v. Bernard, 2 M. & Rob. 1.

When Lost.]—Answers to lost interrogatories may be read as admissions by the answering party, although some of the answers are unintelligible per se. Rowe v. Brenton, 3 M. & Ry. 271; 8 B. & C. 765.

The court refused to order copies of depositions to be recorded and exemplified where the original had been lost, and in trials at law subsequent to the dismission of the suit the witnesses had sworn contrary to their depositions. Brabant v. Perne, 2 Ch. Rep. 36.

On Petition of Right.]—On a petition of right a commission issued and an inquisition was thereupon found and returned into chancery. Before any further proceeding the suppliant filed a bill against the attorney-general to perpetuate testimony, reciting the petition. A commission to examine witnesses issued thereupon. The suppliant proposed to the Crown to join in the commission, but the Crown did not consent and the commission issued ex parte. The Crown having traversed the inquisition, and the record being sent into the Queen's Bench:—Held, that depositions taken under the commission to examine witnesses were admissible on behalf of the suppliant, where the deponents were without the jurisdiction of the court. De Bode's (Baron) Case, 8 Q. B. 208.

Absence of Witness.]—In order to let in the depositions of a witness examined on interrogatories, his absence must be shewn by someone who can speak to the fact of his own knowledge. Robinson v. Markis, 2 M. & Rob. 375. S. P., Proctor v. Lainson, 7 Car. & P. 629.

Proof to satisfy the court that a witness whose evidence has been taken abroad under a commission is out of the jurisdiction when the evidence is tendered may be less stringent when he is resident abroad than when the evidence has been taken of a witness going out of the jurisdiction for a temporary purpose. Mills v. Mills, Pollack v. Pollack, 2 Sw. & Tr. 310; 30 L. J., Mat. 183; 4 L. T. 479.

Where in an affidavit to found an order for a commission it was stated that the object was to examine A., resident abroad, and the summons was served on the co-respondents:—Held, that the presumption was that the witness continued abroad, unless the contrary was shewn, and the court allowed the evidence to be used. Ib.

—— Proof of Sailing.]—It will not be sufficient to prove, that on the evening before the trial the witness was, with his luggage, on board a ship bound for Montreal, the ship being then three-quarters of a mile below Gravesend, waiting for the captain to come on board. Carruthers v. Graham, Car. & M. 5.

But proof by a person that he had prepared the witness's outfit for Australia, and had seen him start by the Blackwall railway to go on board the "Asia," which lay at Gravesend, bound for Australia, and that he had received a letter from the witness from Sheerness, and another from Plymouth, at both of which places the "Asia" had put in, is sufficient for this purpose, as being evidence that his voyage had been commenced. Varicas v. French, 2 Car. & K. 1008.

—— When driven Back.]—Where, by a rule of court, a witness was examined upon interrogatories, on the ground of his being about to leave the kingdom, his depositions might be read, if he had actually sailed, though the vessel had been driven back into port by contrary winds. Ward v. Wells, 1 Taunt. 461; 10 R. R. 581. S. P., Fonsick v. Agar, 6 Esp. 92.

—— Nature of Voyage.]—A party was not entitled to read a deposition taken upon interrogatories, upon proof that the witness was a seafaring man, and that he lately belonged to a vessel in the Thames; he must likewise have shewn of what nature the vessel was, and whither bound, or that inquiry had been made for the witness. Falconer v. Hanson, 1 Camp. 171; 10 R. R. 663.

—— Whether Permanent—On proof of Sickness or Infirmity of Witness.]—The 1 Will. 4, c. 22, s. 10, which requires, before depositions taken under it can be read in evidence, that it should appear to the satisfaction of the judge that the deponent is unable from permanent sickness to attend the trial, does not mean that the sickness should be incurable, but that it should be of that degree of permanency as to make it last beyond the then impending trial. Beaufort (Duke) v. Crawshay, 1 H. & R. 638; 35 L. J., C. P. 342; L. R. 1 C. P. 699; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 709; 14 L. T. 729; 14 W. R. 989.

The decision of the judge at the trial, that the deponent whose deposition has been taken is unable from permanent sickness to attend the trial, is subject to review by the court, but the court will not exercise such jurisdiction unless satisfied that the judge has been misled by a fraudulent representation, or that injustice would otherwise be done. Ib.

Quære, whether an affidavit of a medical man is admissible to satisfy the judge as to the illness of the witness. Ib.

Quære, whether pregnancy and imminent delivery be a cause for the examination of a witness by the prothonotary under 1 Will. 4, c. 22, as a permanent sickness or infirmity in the contemplation of the statute. Abraham v. Norton, 1 D. P. C. 266; 1 M. & Scott, 384. S. C. nom. Abraham v. Newton, 8 Bing. 274; 1 L. J., C. P. 91.

If so, it must be shewn by affidavits of competent persons, that the delivery will probably happen about the time fixed for the trial of the cause. Ib. S. P., Davies v. Lowndes, 6 Scott, 738; 8 L. J., C. P. 10. Pond v. Dimes, 3 M. & Scott, 161.

A will purported to have been executed in the presence of two attesting witnesses. One was abroad, and the other in England. The executors who propounded the will applied for a commission for the examination de bene esse of the second attesting witness, who was resident in London. The affidavit alleged no physical infirmity, but described him as an elderly person. The court ordered the commission to issue, but intimated that if it was proposed at the trial to read the evidence taken under it, strict proof of inability to produce the witness would be required. McPherson v. Parnell, 40 L. J., P. 30; 24 L. T. 742; 19 W. R. 784.

Use of by Opposite Party.]—The defendant interrogated a witness as to a conversation between the witness and the plaintiff's testator. Quære, can the plaintiff read the deposition, the defendant declining to do so. Long v. Long, 5 Ir. Eq. R. 38.

The plaintiff had examined a witness respecting a conversation between the defendant and the witness. The plaintiff declined to read the deposition at the hearing of the cause, as it made against him. The defendant then proposed to read the deposition, as his evidence. But the Vice-Chancellor ruled that the defendant was not at liberty to read the deposition, as it was not evidence for the defendant as to whose conversation it related. Wilson v. Calvert, 5 Sim. 194.

Taken during Abatement.]—Depositions from abroad published, though taken during abatement. Sinclair v. James, Dick. 277.

Depositions allowed to be read though taken during abatement. Thompson v. Took, Dick. 115.

Feme sole sues out a commission to examine witnesses; before they are examined she marries. Their depositions ordered to stand. Winter v. Dancie, Toth. 99.

Where witnesses were examined during the abatement of a suit occasioned by the death of parties, the depositions of those who did not at the time of their examination know of the death of the parties which had caused the abatement, were received, and the depositions of those who did know such facts were suppressed. Curtis v. Fulbrook, 8 Hare, 29; 19 L. J., Ch. 65; 13 Jur. 1044.

Effect of Amendment of Bill.]—After witnesses examined upon original bill, amended bill was filed against new parties, some infants; court would not allow evidence taken on the original bill to be read against new defendants, the infants. Quantock v. Bullen, 5 Madd. 81.

Where a fact is put in issue by the original cause, and evidence examined to it, no evidence can be adduced upon that fact upon a supplemental bill; neither will equity assist a party to make out a different case upon a second trial at law, upon that which he made upon the first. Cockburne v. Hussey, 2 Ridgw. P. C. 504.

An amendment, making the plaintiffs in the original bill sue on behalf of themselves and all other persons having the same interest, does not so alter the parties or the frame of the record, that depositions taken in the original suit cannot be used in the amended suit. Milligan v. Mitchell, 3 Myl. & C. 72; 7 L. J., Ch. 37; 1 Jur. 888. And see S. C., 1 Myl. & Cr. 433, 511.

If a bill is amended, by adding parties, after witnesses have been examined, their depositions cannot be read against the new parties. Pratt v. Barker, 1 Sim. 1; 4 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 149; 6 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 186; 27 R. R. 136.

After publication, a bill filed by husband and wife was amended by making the wife sue by her next friend:—Held, that the evidence was still receivable. Davis v. Prout, 7 Beav. 288.

In a suit instituted jointly by husband and wife, in relation to the wife's separate estate, where the bill has been amended by making the husband a defendant, and adding a next friend for the wife, the depositions previously taken cannot be read at the hearing. Haynes v. Jackson, 4 Jur. 457.

A testator bequeathed the residue of his estate to his wife A. G. for her life, and the legatee, describing herself a A. G., widow, filed a bill against the executors for the administration of the estate; but, it appearing that J. P., the first husband of the legatee, was living at the time the ceremony of marriage was performed between her and the testator, and at the time of filing the bill, she filed a supplemental bill, describing herself as A. P. alias A. G., by her next friend, against J. P., for the purpose of making her husband a party to the suit:—Held, that this was not such an alteration of the frame of the record as to render the evidence taken in the first cause, inadmissible at the hearing of the two causes; and that the amended description of the plaintiff, in the supplemental bill, could not affect the liability of a witness, examined in the original suit, to be indicted for perjury if he swore falsely. Giles v. Giles, 1 Keen, 685; 5 L. J., Ch. 46.

After evidence taken in a cause, the bill was amended, and the title of the cause became thereby altered:—Held, that such change did not prevent the evidence being used, though taken in a cause differently intituled. Penfold v. Giles, 6 L. J., Ch. 4.

c. Amendment of.

Where Mistake.]—A deposition of a witness permitted to be amended after publication, where there clearly appeared to be a mistake made by him in a material part of his evidence. Rowley v. Ridley, 1 Cox, 281; Dick. 677.

A deposition of a witness amended after publication. Griells v. Gansell, 2 P. W. 646.

Deposition of witness rectified, he having been first examined by examiner before court. Darling v. Staniford, Dick. 358.

Upon an affidavit of the witness that the examiner had mistaken him, his depositions amended on examination in court. Penderil v. Penderil, Kel. 25.

But a similar application was subsequently refused. Traherne v. Burdus, Kel. 26.

Motion for liberty for witness to rectify his depositions after publication, the point appearing not to be mere mistake, and his affidavit not explaining it satisfactorily, refused with costs. Kenny v. Dalton, 2 Moll. 386.

Upon appeal against a decree after the case printed, and an appendix of the evidence, as entered in the registrar's notes of proofs on the hearing, it is irregular to proceed by order upon motion in the court below, to expunge any part of such evidence as entered by mistake, but the course is to apply to the House by petition for leave to proceed in the court below to rectify it. Lopdell v. Creagh, 1 Bli. (N.S.) 225.

The Christian name of one of the defendants having been mistaken in the title to interrogatories and depositions, an order was made for correcting that error, and re-swearing the witnesses. Curre v. Bowyer, 3 Swanst, 357.

Motion to amend depositions after publication, refused. Ingram v. Mitchell, 5 Ves. 297.

d. Suppressal of.

i. For Irregularity.

Want of Notice.]—Depositions of witnesses de bene esse, taken ex parte, and without notice of striking the names of commissioners, or of the execution of the commission, suppressed. Loreden v. Milford, 4 Bro. C. C. 540.

Depositions taken on the part of the plaintiff having been suppressed, as against some of the defendants, on the ground of no notice until after publication, upon evidence that the omission arose from a mistake committed by the clerk to the plaintiff's solicitor in giving at the examiner's office the name of the clerk in court for others of the defendants, as the name of the clerk in court for all the defendants, in consequence of which the plaintiff's witnesses were produced only at the seat of the clerk in court so named; and, upon the examiner's certificate that the name of that clerk in court only was delivered to him; the Lord Chancellor gave to the defendants the option; either of permitting the plaintiff to re-examine the same witnesses, or of allowing the depositions to stand, with liberty for them to cross-examine those witnesses, and to examine others. Cholmondeley v. Clinton, 2 Mer. 81; 16 R. R. 167.

On the 4th August, 1836, the plaintiff issued a commission to examine witnesses. Defendant did not join. Depositions returned October 23rd, and publication passed November 25th. Defendant takes out commission, gives notice on the 9th December of intention to execute it, and examine witnesses on the 23rd December:—Held, that depositions were irregular, and motion to suppress granted. Heap v. Haworth, 1 Jur. 351.

The court is not bound to suppress depositions in every case of irregularity, and where from a misconception of the 86th Order, nine days' notice of examining witnesses was only given, but the examination was not commenced till after ten days, and no party was prejudiced thereby, and publication passed without objection, the court refused, under the circumstances, to suppress the depositions. Att.-Gen. v. Ball, 9 Ir. Eq. R. 463.

Where a plaintiff's solicitor knew the names, &c., of the witnesses who were examined before a commissioner, and was at the inn where the examination took place, but had not received any notice respecting them from the other side, an application to suppress the depositions after publication, no objection being made at the time, was refused, with costs. Smith v. Pincombe, 1 Hall & Tw. 250; 16 Sim. 497; 18 L. J., Ch. 211; 13 Jur. 158, 191.

Where witnesses are to be examined before a commissioner, whether it is necessary to give notice to the other side, of the names, &c., of the proposed witnesses, quære. Ib.

On Fresh Interrogatories.]—The plaintiffs and defendants applied to the master for a certificate for a commission to examine witnesses abroad, and they produced to him the proposed interrogatories. He certified in both cases that a commission was necessary to examine witnesses "under the said interrogatories," and orders were made accordingly. The parties afterwards by consent obtained an order for a single commission directed to a sole commissioner. The plaintiffs examined on fresh interrogatories:—Held, that under the first orders the proceeding of the plaintiffs was irregular: and secondly, that it was equally so under the consent order. The court, however, refused to suppress the depositions, but made the plaintiffs pay the costs of the application, and gave leave to the defendants to apply to be put on a footing of equality with the plaintiffs. Nelson (Earl) v. Bridport (Lord), 7 Beav. 195.

Plaintiff and defendant having joined in a commission, witnesses were examined on both sides; the commissioners of one party were present while the witnesses of the other were examined, and cross-examined them, and exhibited interrogatories before the commissioners, and examined several witnesses on their part, and having thereby discovered what the witnesses had sworn, they exhibited other interrogatories before a baron in London, differing in many material points from the interrogatories before the commissioners. Depositions taken on those interrogatories, varying from those exhibited before the commissioners, ordered to be suppressed. Durham v. Newcastle-on-Tyne, Colles's P. C. 18.

Subsequent Examination.]—Under a commission for the examination of witnesses, several witnesses on the part of the defendant having appeared and been examined by the plaintiff, the defendant then declining to examine them, their depositions on a subsequent examination by the defendant in the examiner's office without leave of the court, not suppressed. Pearson v. Rowland, 2 Swanst. 266.

A second set of depositions taken upon the same interrogatories, rejected. Hadow v. Barnett, 1 Y. & Coll. 164.

Where Cross-cause.]—A party defendant being examined as a witness without an order to examine him, his depositions cannot be read, although he be afterwards struck out of the bill in the original cause, if he is continued as a party in the cross-cause. Barden v. Gorman, 2 Moll. 376.

An order made by the Vice-Chancellor, for the suppression of depositions which had been taken in a cross-cause without leave of the court, after publication had passed in the original cause, and which related principally, but not exclusively, to matters at issue in the original cause, affirmed upon appeal, the parties by whom the depositions had been taken, having in the court below declined a reference to the master to distinguish what parts thereof related to matters not in issue in the original cause, and it being held that they were not entitled, under such circumstances, to have the objection to the evidence reserved to the hearing. Pascall v. Scott, 1 Ph. 110; 12 Sim. 550; 6 Jur. 251.

Acquiescence in.]—On the examination and cross-examination of an aged and infirm witness labouring under deafness, the questions were put and answers received through the medium of the daughter of the witness; and the examiner certified that the state of the witness did not permit the examination to be proceeded with without danger to her life, and that much of the cross-examination and all the re-examination had been pretermitted. The defendant afterwards obtained an order for his costs, which recited that the testimony of the witness had been taken:—Held, that the defendant having concurred in the mode of examination adopted, could not afterwards object to the use of the testimony by impeaching its fidelity on that ground. Watkins v. Atchison, 10 Hare (App.) xlvi.

A supplemental bill was filed, in which a deceased person was named as co-plaintiff, and as next friend of infant plaintiffs, and in the title of the plaintiffs' interrogatories for the examination of witnesses his name was mentioned as being still a party:—Held, that a defendant who had acquiesced, and intituled his interrogatories in a similar manner, could not, after publication, move to suppress the depositions. Lincoln v. Wright, 4 Beav. 166; 10 L. J., Ch. 331.

How Shewn.]—A motion to suppress depositions taken under an order for the examination of a witness de bene esse, not asking to discharge that order, is not supported by shewing circumstances from which it would merely appear that the order was irregular; for the court will assume, for purpose of the motion, that the order was regular. M'Intosh v. G. W. Ry., 1 Hare, 328; 11 L. J., Ch. 283; 6 Jur. 454.

Time to Move.]—The proper time to move to suppress depositions for irregularity is after publication has passed. Dobbyn v. Adams, 9 Ir. Eq. R. 275.

ii. Where Answers prepared before Examination.

By Witness Himself.]—Before the commencement of any suit between the parties, affidavits were made by certain persons in order to attest what passed in their presence, with a view, as it appeared, of vindicating the character of the present appellant. A suit being afterwards commenced, the same persons were examined on interrogatories as witnesses in the cause; and after publication passed, their depositions appeared to be in several instances in the same words as the affidavits they had before voluntarily made. This was held no ground for suppressing these depositions. Bland v. Armagh (Archbishop), 3 Bro. P. C. 620.

Depositions to direct interrogatories will not be suppressed upon the ground that the witness had been furnished with a copy of the interrogatories, previously to his examination, by the party producing him, or had written the answers he could give thereto upon the margin. Kelly v. French, Ll. & G. t. Plunk. 166.

By Solicitor.]—The court will not reject depositions, on the certificate of the commissioners before whom they were taken, on the ground that the witness under examination had not only consulted minutes of her own, but a document drawn out for her by plaintiff's attorney, and had given her testimony upon them. Anon., 2 Ken. Ch. 27.

Deposition suppressed on account that the whole was written down in the exact form of it by the attorney before it was taken. Anon., Ambl. 282; 3 Keen, 27.

Witness cannot give as his evidence answers in writing prepared before the examination; nor is any suggestion to him by the attorney, counsel, or any other person, during the examination, permitted; and in equity, whenever such fact is disclosed, the deposition will be suppressed. Shaw v. Lindsey, 15 Ves. 381.

Deposition suppressed and a re-examination directed, the deposition being taken from the witness using, during the examination, full minutes in writing, which she stated to have been originally her own, put into method by the attorney, and so copied with some corrections by herself. Ib.

Depositions before publication suppressed, being taken by the commissioners ready prepared, the witness being agent in the cause; and the mode in which the court receives the information, whether from the commissioners or otherwise, is not material. The commission directed to proceed, for the purpose only of re-examining that witness; substituting another commissioner for one who, having refused to qualify, was not permitted to be present at the examination. This order not to prevent the court's opening the depositions, if a case of necessity should arise; as, if the witness could not again be examined. Ib.

A solicitor may communicate with a witness before his examination, and take down in writing what he can depose to; but to prepare the depositions of a witness beforehand would be improper, and form a ground for suppressing the depositions. Sayer v. Wagstaff, 5 Beav. 462; 12 L. J., Ch. 35.

By Party to Suit.]—The depositions of a witness who was examined in perpetuam rei memoriam were suppressed on a petition after his death, and the examiner discharged and committed for foul practice and irregularity in the taking of them, the plaintiff being suffered by the examiner to instruct him, and the witness being corrupted; and as he had been examined on a trial to the same points, the plaintiff might give evidence of what he swore. Hosier v. Hart, Mos. 321.

A motion to suppress the depositions of witnesses examined on behalf of the defendant after a conversation by him with one of the plaintiff's witnesses on the subject of his testimony, refused; the conversation not having been communicated to his solicitor before the defendant's interrogatories were prepared, but without costs; communications between witnesses and parties being disapproved. Boughton v. Pierrepoint, 3 Swanst. 550.

Depositions under Previous Order.]—Depositions were suppressed for irregularity in the order under which they had been taken. The examiner, on the witnesses again going before him for examination under an order for that purpose, read over to them their depositions taken under the former order, and inquired whether they were correct, and on being answered in the affirmative, he caused them to be signed by the witnesses. The court suppressed the depositions as having been irregularly taken. Att.-Gen. v. Nethercoat, 10 Sim. 311; 9 L. J., Ch. 17.

iii. Other Grounds.

Mistake.]—Upon a motion by the plaintiff to suppress a deposition, on the ground of a mistake of the witness in making it, the defendant has a right to choose whether the motion should stand over and come on with the cause, or whether the plaintiff should have liberty, without prejudice to the deposition, to examine the witness again upon the same interrogatory, with liberty for the defendant to cross-examine him at large; and, on the defendant selecting the latter alternative, the court ordered accordingly, directing the costs of the motion and the additional examination to be paid by the plaintiff. Edwards v. Brown, 9 Jur. 421.

Upon the motion by a defendant to suppress depositions supported by the affidavit of a witness, that the evidence which she gave before the commissioners was not truly represented in the depositions, and that she had mistaken the meaning of a technical expression used in the interrogatories, the court refused to suppress the depositions, but gave the parties liberty to re-examine and cross-examine the witness vivâ voce before the master (the commission being issued after decree), upon the disputed parts of the depositions; and also gave the plaintiff liberty in the same manner to examine, and the defendant to cross-examine the commissioner and his clerk. Dobson v. Land, 7 Hare, 296; 18 L. J., Ch. 240; 13 Jur. 823.

Depositions set down in a wrong sense, suppressed, and witness re-examined. Peacock v. Collens, Cary, 47.

On a motion made on behalf of the relator, after the cause had been argued, to suppress the depositions of the trustees, it was ordered that they should be suppressed, on the relator entering into admissions, and on the defendants being permitted to add to their evidence; but on appeal the order was discharged, the Lord Chancellor being of opinion that even on these terms the relator could not be relieved from the mistake. Att.-Gen. v. Dew, 3 De G. & Sm. 488.

Fraud.]—Witness examined by fraud, suppressed, and parties to fraud to be proceeded against by bill. Walford v. Walford, Cary, 56.

Impertinence.]—Court refused (with costs) to order interrogatories, however impertinent, to be suppressed, if witnesses have answered them; they should demur: answering them waives impertinence. Jefferis v. Whittuck, 9 Price, 486.

Where a witness deposed to facts to which he could not have been examined, the court upon motion suppressed the depositions. Smith v. Harding, Fl. & K. 347; 3 Ir. Eq. R. 336.

Presence of Third Party.]—A commissioner-examiner having permitted a solicitor in the cause to come into the room during the examination of witnesses, and being also in communication and concert with the solicitor, the court suppressed the depositions. Doherty v. Doherty, 8 Ir. Eq. R. 379.

Fresh Objection.]—The court refused to suppress depositions on a ground of objection to which the attention of the commissioners had not been called, where a different objection had been made before them, and had been properly overruled. Wood v. Freeman, 4 Hare, 552; 14 L. J., Ch. 371; 9 Jur. 549.

Where Witness has demurred.]—Where a commissioner for the examination of witnesses had taken upon himself, notwithstanding the demurrer of a witness, to examine her:—Held, that the deposition must be suppressed, although upon hearing the demurrer the court held it to be untenable. Goodale v. Gawthorn, 4 De G. & Sm. 97.

Held, in the same case, that where the witness was not informed by the commissioner that her statement as to the reasons for her demurrer should be upon oath, her demurrer was not invalid by reason of her not having been sworn to the truth of the statement; and also that the commissioner ought not to have been served with a petition to suppress the depositions, and the petition as against him was dismissed with costs. Ib.

Delay in Prosecution of Cause.]—Where nothing has been done in a cause for many years till November, 1847, the court, after having refused the defendant leave to file a new replication, and having refused to dismiss the cause, but having ordered it to be set down, refused to suppress depositions taken in December, 1847. Lewis v. Thomas, 12 Jur. 67.

iv. Practice on.

Application—Time for.]—Motion to suppress depositions upon groundless objections, and not only after publication, but even after the cause had been called on and struck out, refused. Whitelocke v. Baker, 13 Ves. 511; 9 R. R. 216.

Depositions will not be suppressed before the hearing of the cause, unless in a case where the party ought to be allowed to examine over again. Lysaght v. Lysaght, 1 Hog, 208.

Party is too late to move to suppress a deposition for irregularity, after having exhibited articles to discredit the witness. Malone v. Morris, 2 Moll. 324.

Cross-interrogatories must be lodged before the examination in chief has closed, and the motion to suppress them for irregularity must be made after publication passed. Aylward v. Hickson, 2 Hog, 1.

—— By Consent.]—Motion by consent, that depositions taken during the long vacation, 1852, might be suppressed, and that both sides might proceed to examine witnesses orally under the new statutes. The vice-chancellor said, that applications by consent, for suppression of depositions, ought in general to be made at chambers; but as this application was besides to take the evidence orally under the new practice, it was proper to make the application in court. Anon., 16 Jur. 1129.

Notice.]—Motion by one of several defendants, that the deposition of a witness who had been examined by the plaintiff should be suppressed:—Held, that notice of the motion ought to have been served on the other defendants. Barnett v. Papineau, 18 L. J., Ch. 466. S. C. nom. Barnard v. Papineau, 3 De G. & Sm. 498.

Time to find whether Deposition regular.]—When the interval is short between the publication and the hearing, the court will grant time to examine whether the deposition was regularly taken, it being too late to object during the hearing. Gordon v. Gordon, 1 Swanst. 171.

15. Costs.

Defendant's Commission—Verdict.]—Where a commission issued at the instance of a defendant for the examination of a witness abroad, and he obtained a verdict:—Held, that he was not entitled to the costs of the commission. Bridges v. Fisher, 1 Scott, 485; 1 Bing. (N.C.) 510; 1 Hodges, 36; 4 L. J., C. P. 117.

Irregularity.]—An order and commission to examine a witness residing out of the jurisdiction did not specify the time or place of examination:—Held, on motion to review the taxation, that the master acted rightly in allowing these costs, as the defect was an irregularity merely, which the opposite party had, by cross-examining the witness, waived. Howkins v. Baldwin, 2 L. M. & P. 250; 16 Q. B. 375; 20 L. J., Q. B. 198; 15 Jur. 749.

Not used.]—A witness was examined on interrogatories, but his examination was not used at the trial:—Held, that the costs thereof were properly disallowed. Curling v. Robertson, 8 Scott (N.R.) 288; 2 D. & L. 307; 7 Man. & G. 525; 13 L. J., C. P. 169.

If a witness is so old and infirm that it is a prudent course to take his examination, but he is afterwards able to attend the trial, the plaintiff may be allowed the costs of the commission, as well as the costs of the witness's attendance at the trial. Beaufort (Duke) v. Ashburnham (Earl), 13 C. B. (N.S.) 598; 32 L. J., C. P. 97; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 822; 7 L. T. 710; 11 W. R. 267.

A commission was taken out by the defendant to examine a witness at Paris. At the trial, the plaintiff's counsel abandoned that part of his case to which the evidence under the commission applied, and the defendant had a verdict on that issue:—Held, that he was entitled to the costs of the commission. Jewell v. Parr, 17 C. B. 636; 25 L. J., C. P. 179.

Where New Trials.]—A. sued B. upon two bills of exchange and a promissory note, and obtained a verdict, subject to a bill of exceptions. A venire de novo was awarded, and upon the second trial the evidence obtained by B. under a commission to Paris, induced A. to abandon the second bill, and he had a verdict on the other bill and the note, subject to a second bill of exceptions. Proceedings were afterwards instituted in chancery, which resulted in a decree that the bill of exceptions should be abandoned, and the second bill given up to B., and the cause retried, striking out the count upon that bill. Upon that trial B. succeeded:—Held, that on the taxation of the costs, B. was not entitled to the costs of the commission as costs in the cause, the evidence taken thereunder not being applicable to any part of the record as it then stood. Jewell v. Parr, 2 C. B. (N.S.) 809.

When Costs in Cause.]—The costs of executing a commission in a foreign country, under 1 Will. 4, c. 22, s. 4, are costs in the cause, unless some special ground is laid for ordering otherwise. Prince v. Samo, 4 D. P. C. 5.

The costs of taking the evidence of a witness under the 1 Will. 4, c. 22, s. 4, cannot be allowed to the party taking it as costs in the cause, unless the deposition has been used at the trial by the party taking it. Ridley v. Sutton, 1 H. & C. 741 ; 32 L. J., Ex. 122 ; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 358 ; 7 L. T. 693 ; 11 W. R. 314.

Party having Benefit.] — Party obtaining commission to examine abroad, pays costs ; but if other party examines under it in chief, he pays proportionately. Jackson v. Strong, 13 Price, 309.

The defendant assented to the appointment of the person nominated commissioner-examiner by the plaintiff. He cross-examined one of the plaintiff's witness, but did not examine any witness on the direct :—Held, that he was bound to pay the costs and expenses incurred by reason of his cross-examination, viz., for the attendance of the commissioner during the time occupied by the cross-examination, and for ingrossing the depositions to the cross interrogatories ; but not to contribute to the commissioners' travelling expenses. Rogers v. Aylmer, 5 Ir. Eq. R. 516.

Where a commission to examine witnesses issues at the instance of one of the parties to the suit, the other not concurring in it, the party issuing it must pay all the expenses of the commissioner, even though the other party should cross-examine the witnesses of the person issuing the commission ; but if the opposite party examines under the commission on the direct, he must pay the commissioner for the examination and cross-examination of his own witnesses. Lucan (Earl) v. O'Malley, 2 Jo. & Lat. 681 ; 8 Ir. Eq. R. 712.

On demurrer allowed to bill for commission to examine de bene esse, the plaintiff having, on an ex parte application, obtained an order to examine witnesses, was ordered to pay to the defendants, besides the usual costs of the demurrer, the costs of the depositions, but not those taken on cross-examination. Dew v. Clarke, 1 Sim. & S. 115 ; 1 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 37.

A party who sues out a commission at his own expense, must pay the costs of cross-examination of his witnesses by his opponent. O'Hara v. O'Hara, 1 Hog. 234.

Costs of discovery refused ; a commission having gone out, the defendant, taking the benefit of it, cannot have all the costs. Noble v. Garland, 19 Ves. 376 ; G. Coop. 222.

Plaintiff sued out a commission ; defendant's commissioners joined and signed plaintiff's interrogatories, and witnesses were examined on plaintiff's part, and defendant's commissioners signed the depositions, after which it was discovered that in the commission the title of the cause was mistaken. On a motion to suppress the depositions, Lord Chancellor ordered the commission to be amended, but plaintiff to pay the costs of the motion, and to be at the expense of sealing a new commission for the examination of defendant's witnesses, and the Master to settle a time and place for the execution of such commission. Robert v. Millechamp, Dick. 22.

Discretion of Master.]—It is a question for the discretion of the Master, in each particular case, whether the expenses of witnesses brought from abroad should be allowed on taxation : the 1 Will. 4, c. 22, for the examination of witnesses on interrogatories has made no alteration in this respect. M'Alpine v. Powles, 1 C. & M. 795 ; 3 Tyr. 871 ; 2 D. P. C. 299 : 2 L. J., Ex. 272.

The master having allowed a large sum for costs incurred in the execution of a commission for the examination of witnesses in India, without exercising any discretion as to the propriety of the particular charges, the court directed him to review his taxation. Stewart v. Steele, 4 C. B. 460.

Counsel on Execution of Commissions.] — Though the increased expenses occasioned by sending out counsel to act as commissioner in taking evidence abroad will not generally be allowed, yet it may be allowable under the circumstances of a particular case ; and if the master has used his discretion the court will not interfere unless it sees he is clearly wrong. Yglesias v. Royal Exchange Assurance Corporation, 39 L. J., C. P. 173 ; L. R. 5 C. P. 141 ; 22 L. T. 269 ; 18 W. R. 381.

But to entitle a successful party to the costs of counsel's attendance on a commission abroad, special circumstances must be shewn for such attendance. Leecy v. S. E. Ry., 7 B. & S. 415 ; 14 L. T. 401 ; 14 W. R. 649.

Solicitor.] — Where a commission has been issued to examine witnesses abroad, the court will not interfere with the discretion of the master in granting or refusing the costs of an attorney to attend the commission. Cornet v. Dempsey, 1 D. (N.S.) 422 ; 6 Jur. 86. S. P., Potter v. Rankin, 38 L. J., C. P. 130 ; L. R. 4 C. P. 76 ; 19 L. T. 383.

Costs of solicitor attending execution of commission abroad, not allowed. Hammond v. Wordsworth, Dick. 381.

In Colony.]—The costs incurred in a colony, under a commission to examine witnesses, must be taxed in England upon the scale which would be allowed in the colony, and the Master, in case of difficulty, ought to refer to the colony for information, but not to send the bill of costs there for taxation. Wentworth v. Lloyd, 34 Beav. 455 ; 13 L. T. 226 ; 13 W. R. 486.

Examination to Credit.] — Commission to examine to credit should be executed before decree : costs given on this ground. White v. Fussell, 1 Ves. & B. 151.

Bill for Discovery and Commission.]—The bill praying discovery and a commission, the defendant cannot have the costs of the discovery till the return of the commission. Anon., 8 Ves. 69.

On a bill for discovery and commission abroad and injunction, defendant was entitled to costs on the discovery and injunction as incidental thereto, but costs refused to either party as to commission. London Assurance Co. v. Hankey, 1 Anstr. 9.

Production of Deponent for Cross-examination.]—See cases, post, col. 1103.

VIII. PERPETUATION OF TESTIMONY.

(See Ord. XXXVII. rr. 35–38.)

1. General Principles.

Nature of Suit.]—Distinction between examination to perpetuate and de bene esse. In a suit for the former purpose, after the examination, there is an end to the issue. Morrison v. Arnold, 19 Ves. 671.

Distinction between a bill to perpetuate testimony and a bill of discovery. The former is not a bill of discovery in the strict technical sense of the term. Ellice v. Roupell, 32 Beav. 299; 2 N. R. 3; 32 L. J., Ch. 563, 624; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 530; 8 L. T. 191; 11 W. R. 579. And see 32 Beav. 308.

A bill of discovery must be in aid of proceedings pending or about to be instituted, but the existence of such proceedings would be fatal to a bill to perpetuate testimony. Ib.

A bill to perpetuate testimony cannot, by amendment, be converted into a bill of discovery. Ib.

Where Substantive Action brought.]—The plaintiffs filed a bill to perpetuate testimony as to the validity of a deed, which question, they alleged, could not at present be tried. After the defendants had, by answer, admitted the plaintiffs' right to perpetuate the testimony, the plaintiffs filed another bill, raising the question of the validity of the same deed. A motion by the defendants to stay proceedings in the suit to perpetuate testimony, on the ground of the existence of the second suit, was refused with costs. Ellice v. Roupell, 32 Beav. 318.

Effect of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 69.]—It was not intended by the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 69, to give a party seeking to perpetuate testimony rights stronger than those which would belong to him in an actual and present litigation. Campbell v. Dalhousie (Earl), L. R. 1 H. L. (Sc.) 462; 22 L. T. 879.

And it is of course that, when parties are in immediate litigation, they cannot investigate the title-deeds of the opponent. Ib.

2. Action for, when Proper.

Plaintiff must establish Right at Law.]—A bill to examine witnesses in perpetuam rei memoriam is not proper, until the party has established his right at law. Pawlet v. Ingres, 1 Vern. 308.

A man cannot bring a bill to examine witnesses in perpetuam rei memoriam to establish his title, until he has made it good by a verdict at law, if he is under no impediment of trying his title at law. Parry v. Rogers, 1 Vern. 441.

Devisee shall not examine witnesses in perpetuam rei memoriam, to prove a will against a purchaser without notice, till the will has been established by a verdict at law. Beckinall v. Arnold, 1 Vern. 354.

Court will not give leave to plaintiff to examine witnesses to perpetuate testimony, though in case of a purchase of reversion, where there can be no trial at law during the estate for life. Hitchcock v. Sedgwick, 2 Vern. 159.

A man who is in possession of a fishery, may bring a bill to examine his witnesses in perpetuam rei memoriam, and establish his right, though he has not recovered an affirmance of it at law. Secus, if he is not in possession. Dorset v. Girdler, Pre. Ch. 531.

Unless Impossible.]—Bill will not lie to perpetuate testimony, &c., before trial, unless affidavit be made of the witnesses being infirm and unable to travel. Philips v. Carew, 1 P. W. 171.

Where lands are devised by will, and there is no opportunity to prove and establish it at law, a bill to perpetuate testimony thereto will lie. Anon., Pr. Reg. 74.

Parties must have an Interest.]—A bill to perpetuate testimony cannot be filed but by a person who has some interest, present or future, and not by those who would be next of kin to a lunatic if he was to die immediately. Smith v. Att.-Gen., Romilly's Notes of Cases, 54; 6 Ves. 256, 260.

To support a bill to perpetuate testimony, the plaintiff must have an interest; but the minuteness or remoteness of it is no objection. A mere contingency, however near and valuable (with the exception of the case of a wager), the expectation of issue in tail, heir-apparent, or next of kin of a lunatic, is not sufficient; therefore a demurrer to a bill by tenant in tail in remainder and his issue, to perpetuate testimony of the validity of his marriage, allowed. Allan v. Allan, 15 Ves. 130.

Bill to perpetuate testimony of legitimacy of plaintiff, entitled to remainder in tail, after estate for life. Demurrer by seventh and eighth in remainder, after plaintiffs, and other defendants, all infants, overruled; any interest, however slight, being sufficient. Dursley (Lord) v. Berkeley, 6 Ves. 251; 5 R. R. 285.

Next of kin of lunatic, however hopeless his condition, have no interest whatever in the property, and cannot, therefore, restrain bill to perpetuate testimony. So heir-apparent cannot have a writ de ventre inspic. in life of his ancestor; but they may contract upon their expectations, and may perpetuate testimony with reference to interest so created. Id. 260.

Bill to perpetuate will not lie where defendant might immediately bar that right. Id. 262.

In other Cases.]—Landlord may file a bill to perpetuate evidence of a demand, made under the Tenantry Act, on his tenant to renew. Keating v. Sparrow, 1 Ball & B. 372.

Bill lies to perpetuate the testimony of witnesses to prove a modus; but quære if it will lie to establish a modus. Somerset v. Fotherby, 1 Vern. 185.

Demurrer to bill to perpetuate the testimony of witnesses in aid of plaintiff's defence to an action, because the agreement relied on as a defence, and touching which the testimony of witnesses was sought to be perpetuated, was, as stated by the bill, corrupt and illegal, and because the subject-matter of the bill was altogether unfit to be the subject of discussion in a court of equity, allowed at the rolls; overruled on appeal. Longfield v. Aubrey, 2 Moll. 426.

When Refused.]—This court will not take the least step against a purchaser for valuable consideration without notice, not even to perpetuate testimony against him. Jerrard v. Saunders, 2 Ves. J. 458.

A bill will not lie to perpetuate the testimony of witnesses to a lunatic's will in his lifetime, made before his lunacy. Sackvill v. Ayleworth, 1 Vern. 105.

A tenant in tail out of possession, cannot bring bill to perpetuate testimony. Brandlyn v. Ord, 1 Atk. 571.

A bill to perpetuate testimony relating to a matter which is the subject of an existing suit against the plaintiff is demurrable, although the plaintiff could not himself have made such matter the subject of present judicial investigation. Spencer (Earl) v. Peck, L. R. 3 Eq. 415; 15 W. R. 478.

Jurisdiction.]—Semble, this court has jurisdiction to perpetuate testimony with a view to proceedings in foreign courts. Morris v. Morris, 2 Ph. 205; 16 L. J., Ch. 286; 11 Jur. 93.

Quære, whether equity has jurisdiction to entertain bill to perpetuate testimony to claims to a dignity. Belfast (Earl) v. Chichester, 2 Jac. & Walk. 439.

Issue in tail cannot file bill to perpetuate testimony, even in case of an entail that cannot be barred. Ib.

A dignity is entailed on A., who dies leaving issue two sons, B. and C. To bill filed in lifetime of B., by his eldest son, for perpetuating testimony of his father's marriage, demurrers by eldest son of C., who was dead, and attorney-general, were allowed. Ib.

Illegitimacy — How Action brought.] — A lunatic, having several children, obtained a divorce from his wife on the ground of her adultery. It was alleged that one of the children born before the divorce was illegitimate, and the committee presented a petition that proceedings might be taken to perpetuate the testimony of the illegitimacy:—Held, that the proper course was for the court to settle some of the lunatic's property on his children, and the legitimate children, having raised the question as to the right of the child, who it was alleged was illegitimate, to participate, could then bring an action to perpetuate the testimony. Stoer, In re, 9 P. D. 120; 51 L. T. 141; 32 W. R. 1005—C. A.

3. Taking Evidence.

Subpœna.]—Affidavit must be made of service on defendant of subpœna to examine witnesses in perpetuam rei memoriam before they can be so examined. Hatcham v. Winchcombe, Cary, 34. S. P., Porter v. Baker, Id.

By Commission.] — Commission to examine in perpetuam rei memoriam granted to examiner of court. Barentine v. Harbert, Cary, 43.

Commission to examine in perpetuam rei memoriam granted. Hearing v. Fisher, Cary, 110.

Commission to examine in perpetuam rei memoriam, on oath that witness is impotent and sick. Bagshawe v. ——, Robins v. Foster, Cary, 35.

Leave given to plaintiff, before answer, to sue a commission in a suit to perpetuate testimony, the defendant having been attached, and still refusing to answer. Lancaster v. Lancaster, 6 Sim. 439.

A commission to examine witnesses de bene esse, upon a bill to perpetuate testimony, though the defendant had not appeared, and was not in contempt. Allen v. Annesley (Earl), 2 Jones, 260.

Examination de bene esse granted to plaintiffs in a bill to perpetuate testimony after subpœna served, but before appearance of infant defendants, in contempt by the messenger's return that they had absconded and were not to be found, on affidavit of the materiality of the evidence and danger of its loss, and undertaking to proceed with all due diligence to issue, and examination in chief to be proved before publication of the depositions de bene esse. Frere v. Green, 19 Ves. 319.

Witnesses being old and infirm, and resident out of the jurisdiction, the court, in a suit to perpetuate testimony, before appearance of some of the parties, made an order for their examination de bene esse. Campbell v. Att.-Gen., 11 Jur. (N.S.) 922; 13 L. T. 356; 14 W. R. 45.

Amendment of Bill.] — Bill to perpetuate testimony of modus being amended, by adding essential party, after commission executed, but before publication, a new commission was granted. Biddiford v. Partridge, 3 Anstr. 646.

Order for.]—After a replication filed in a suit to perpetuate testimony, it is not necessary to obtain an order to examine witnesses. Allen v. Hacket, 11 Ir. Eq. R. 355.

Suppressal of Depositions.]—The depositions of a witness who was examined in perpetuam rei memoriam were suppressed on a petition after his death, and the examiner discharged and committed for foul practice and irregularity in the taking of them, the plaintiff being suffered by the examiner to instruct him, and the witness being corrupted; and as he had been examined on a trial to the same points, the plaintiff might give evidence of what he swore. Hosier v. Hart, Mos. 321.

Further Examination.] — In a suit to perpetuate testimony, motion for a further examination of witnesses as to the facts lately discovered, refused on the ground that a demurrer to a supplemental bill for the same purpose had been allowed. Knight v. Knight, 1 Jac. & Walk. 165.

Discovery.] — The only discovery which a plaintiff in a bill to perpetuate testimony can require from a defendant is a sufficient admission of his title to examine such witnesses as they may think fit, on the various matters and issues stated in the bill. Ellice v. Roupell, 32 Beav. 308.

An appellant, on a bill to perpetuate testimony, under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 63, obtained from the Court of Chancery a subpœna duces tecum, directed to the respondents. The appellant, being unable to enforce this writ against the respondents who were resident in Scotland, applied to the Court of Session, under 22 Vict. c. 20, to compel them to search for and exhibit the documents mentioned in the subpœna. The respondents stated as a reason for non-search and non-production of the documents, that they were locked up in the muniment room at a certain castle, and that though they were, as trustees of the late owner of the castle, in possession of the key of the muniment room, yet they could not search that room, because there was a dispute between them and the present owner of the castle as to the right of the possession of the documents:—Held, that the respondents could not be compelled to produce the documents. Campbell v. Dalhousie (Earl), L. R. 1 H. L. (Sc.) 462; 22 L. T. 879.

It was not intended by 5 & 6 Vict. c. 69, to give to the person who wished to perpetuate testimony, as against the person with whom he contemplated a future litigation, rights of any stronger character than those which would be possessed by him in a suit actually commenced; and it is of course that, when parties are in immediate litigation, they cannot investigate the title-deeds of the opponent. Ib.

4. PUBLICATION AND USER OF DEPOSITIONS.

In General.]—Semble, there has been no alteration in the rule, that, in suits to perpetuate testimony, the evidence given ought to be kept secret until the time for using it arrives. Ellice v. Roupell, 2 N. R. 3; 32 Beav. 299; 32 L. J., Ch. 563, 624; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 530; 8 L. T. 191; 11 W. R. 579.

On a bill for examining witnesses in perpetuam rei memoriam:—Held, that publication of the depositions should not be allowed unless in a strong case. Harris v. Cotterell, 3 Mer. 678.

Witness Dead.]—Witnesses examined in perpetuam rei memoriam, one dead other sick, moved to use testimony, and granted. Senhawes v. Senhawes, Cary, 88.

Publication of depositions of witnesses examined in perpetuam rei memoriam, cannot pass by a side bar rule; but there must be a special motion for the purpose. Green v. Green, 1 Hog, 312.

Depositions in in perpetuam rei memoriam not published in the life of the witness, except on incapacity to travel by sickness, &c.; such orders, except in the excepted cases, proceeding on affidavit of the death of the witness, some expressly declaring that the depositions of the other witnesses shall not be read. Morrison v. Arnold, 19 Ves. 670.

Publication of depositions of witness who is dead taken on bill to perpetuate may be moved for as of course. Bourne v. Bligh, 1 Price, 307; 16 R. R. 732.

Publication ordered of the depositions of a deceased witness, examined on the behalf of the defendant, under the plaintiff's commission, on a bill to perpetuate testimony. Abergavenny (Earl) v. Powell, 1 Mer. 434.

The court will not make an order for the publication of depositions taken in a suit to perpetuate testimony, whilst the witnesses are alive. Barnsdale v. Lowe, 2 Russ. & M. 142.

—— Abroad.] — Depositions of witnesses examined under a bill to perpetuate testimony, in aid of an ejectment, and who were resident abroad and refused to come to this country, ordered to be published. Biddulph v. Camoys (Lord), 19 Beav. 467.

—— Infirm.]—A similar application refused, as to a witness in England, who, on account of blindness and infirm state of health, was stated to be unable to leave home, and who had stated his age to be eighty-three. Ib.

A witness, examined under a bill to perpetuate testimony, was very old, and unable, through illness, to leave his home without danger; another was resident in Canada. Their depositions were ordered to be published and produced at the trial about to take place, and that either party might make such use of them "as by law they can." S. C., 20 Beav. 402.

Order to read on the trial of an issue, the depositions of a living witness taken in a suit to perpetuate testimony, the witness being too infirm to attend at the trial. Watkins v. Atchison, 10 Hare (App.) 46.

The defendant having obtained an order for the payment of his costs by the plaintiffs, which order recited that the testimony of the witness had been taken, the depositions of the witness must be regarded as having been completely taken, and are not therefore to be excluded on the ground of the want of a sufficient cross-examination. Ib.

On the examination and cross-examination of an aged and infirm witness labouring under deafness, the questions were put, and answers received, through the medium of the daughter of the witness; and the examiner certified that the state of the witness did not permit the examination to be proceeded with without danger to her life, and that much of the cross-examination and all the re-examination had been pretermitted. The defendant afterwards obtained an order for his costs, which recited that the testimony of the witness had been taken:—Held, that the defendant having concurred in the mode of examination adopted, could not afterwards object to the use of the testimony by impeaching its fidelity on that ground. Ib.

In Subsequent Suit.] — Depositions in the custody of the court, which were taken in a former suit to perpetuate testimony, were ordered to be published, on the application of one of the parties to a subsequent suit, the other of whom was a stranger to the former suit, and the time for taking evidence in the second suit was extended in order to give both parties an opportunity of considering the information so obtained; the court being of opinion that though the depositions might not themselves be evidence, they might be the means of supplying valuable information to both parties. Vane v. Vane, 45 L. J., Ch. 589; 24 W. R. 565—C. A. Varying 34 L. T. 477.

For Use in Foreign Court.]—It is no objection to the publication of depositions which have been taken in a suit to perpetuate testimony, that the proceedings for which they are required are in the court of a foreign country, or that other depositions taken in a similar suit in that country have already been published. Morris v. Morris, 2 Ph. 205; 16 L. J., Ch. 286; 11 Jur. 93.

Taken de bene esse.]—In a suit to perpetuate the testimony of witnesses, liberty was given to the plaintiffs, under the 13 Geo. 2, c. 9, to pass publication of depositions of witnesses examined de bene esse in the cause. Scanlan v. M'Coy, Fl. & K. 366.

To Show Title.]—Court will not order copies of depositions taken to perpetuate testimony of witnesses to be delivered out for the purpose of perfecting title to an estate, even where witnesses are dead. Teale v. Teale, 1 Sim. & S. 385.

Time.]— Commission having been issued, &c., to examine witnesses in perpetuam rei memoriam a year past, publication ordered. Gravenor v. Brearton, Cary, 33.

5. Pleading.

Bill.]—Bill to perpetuate cannot pray other relief. Anon., 2 Vent. 366.

In a bill to perpetuate testimony of a right of common and way, the plaintiffs claimed in right of their estates, or otherwise; this is too loose; a demurrer therefore allowed. Cressett v. Mytton, 3 Bro. C. C. 481. And see 1 Ves. J. 449.

Demurrer to bill to perpetuate, and that plaintiff could try eo instanti, allowed. North v. Gray, Dick. 14.

Demurrer will lie to bill to perpetuate, if it does not state that no action can be immediately brought. Angell v. Angell, 1 Sim. & S. 83; 1 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 6; 24 R. R. 149.

Bill to perpetuate testimony merely, ought not to be brought to a hearing; but if it prays relief, the defendant may set it down for dismissal. Vaughan v. Fitzgerald, 1 Sch. & Lef. 316.

Upon a bill to perpetuate the testimony of witnesses touching a right to a way, the plaintiff must set out the way exactly in his bill per et trans, as he ought to do in a declaration at law. But such a bill ought not to be brought for such trivial things as right of common, or for ways or watercourses, or at least not till after a recovery at law. Gell v. Hayward, 1 Vern. 312.

Answer.]—To a bill to perpetuate the testimony of witnesses with respect to the execution and attestation of a will of 1845, whereby a will of 1838, under which the defendant claimed, was stated to be revoked; the defendant pleaded that the plaintiff put the defendant by force out of a part of the lands, and that the remainder was in the occupation of tenants under leases or from year to year, who had not acknowledged the plaintiff's title or paid him rent due, and that the plaintiff would, by action at law against the tenants, forthwith try the title:—Held, on the authority of Dew v. Clarke (1 Sim. & S. 108), that the plea was good. Lindesay v. Lindesay, 12 Ir. Eq. R. 508.

The plaintiffs filed a bill to perpetuate testimony. The defendants put in a full answer, and replication having been filed, witnesses were examined. The plaintiffs afterwards amended their bill, and filed fresh interrogatories. The defendants pleaded to the amended bill that the plaintiffs, since filing the original bill, had instituted another suit, in which they made the several matters raised in issue by the amended bill the subject of judicial investigation:—Held, that the plea was bad; that although it might have been good if filed to the original bill, yet that the defendants, having answered the original bill, could not plead to the amended bill. The plea was ordered to stand for an answer, with liberty to the defendants to except. Ellice v. Roupell 32 Beav. 299; 2 N. R. 3; 32 L. J., Ch. 563, 624; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 530; 8 L. T. 191; 11 W. R. 579.

The plaintiffs having excepted:—Held, that although a bill to perpetuate is, to a certain extent, a bill of discovery, yet it is so only to the extent of enabling the plaintiffs to obtain the relief asked by the bill, viz., the examination of witnesses as to the issues raised by the bill; and that the answer already put in being sufficient for that purpose, the plaintiffs could not require a further answer. Ib.

A bill to perpetuate testimony alleged that the plaintiff was in possession of lands, and if any proceedings were taken by the defendant to recover the land, the plaintiffs would be able by the testimony of creditable witnesses to prove their title, and disprove that of the defendant. The defendant put in a voluntary answer, whereby he deposed that it was not true that the plaintiff was in possession, but, on the contrary, that he (the defendant) was in possession. The plaintiff replied. Thereupon the defendant did not plead, but moved to dismiss the plaintiff's bill, on the ground that a plaintiff out of possession could not bring the bill without alleging that he could not immediately bring an ejectment:—Motion ordered to stand over, with liberty to either party to examine such witnesses as he might be advised to prove that he was in possession. Brigstocke v. Roch, 7 Jur. (N.S.) 63; 3 L. T. 401.

Delivery of Defence, Default in.]—In an action to perpetuate testimony, the time for delivery of defence having expired, and the defendant not having applied for an extension of time, the plaintiff obtained, on motion, an order that the action might proceed, notwithstanding the defendant's default, and that he might be at liberty to examine the witnesses (one of whom was of advanced age and in failing health) as if the pleadings were closed. Bute (Marquis) v. James, 55 L. J., Ch. 658; 33 Ch. D. 157; 55 L. T. 133; 34 W. R. 754.

6. Dismissal of Action for Want of Prosecution.

Application and Order.]—A motion to dismiss a bill to perpetuate testimony for want of prosecution is irregular. The proper application is that the plaintiff may proceed within a given time, or may pay the defendant his cost. Wright v. Tatham, 2 Sim. 459. And see Barham v. Longman, id. n.

A bill to perpetuate testimony is not dismissed for want of prosecution, but the plaintiff is ordered to proceed forthwith, and complete his examination, or pay the defendant his costs. Skrine v. Powell, 10 L. J., Ch. 18.

A bill for a commission to examine witnesses abroad in aid of an action at law cannot be dismissed under the 93rd General Order. Parr v. Howlin, Sau. & Sc. 124.

An order for a commission to examine witnesses should specify the time within which it is to be executed, but where no time has been specified, the proper application is that the plaintiff should proceed within a given time, or pay the defendant his costs, or semble, that the defendant might apply to discharge the order for a commission, on the ground of unreasonable delay in proceeding upon it. Ib.

Time for.]—Bill to perpetuate testimony may be dismissed for want of prosecution any time before replication and examination. If cause is set down to be heard, the bill will be dismissed with costs, so as not to prejudice the perpetuating the testimony. Anon., Ambl. 237; 2 Ves. 497.

The court will not, even before replication, dismiss a bill to perpetuate testimony for want of prosecution, but will order the plaintiff to reply, and examine his witnesses, and procure the examination to be completed by a certain time, and in default thereof to pay to the defendant his costs of the suit. Beavan v. Carpenter, 11 Sim. 22.

7. Costs.

When Defendant entitled to.]—Bill to perpetuate by devisee and no relief prayed, defendant has costs, if he do not examine witnesses. Blinkehorne v. Feast, Dick. 153.

On a bill brought to prove a will per testes, and to perpetuate the testimony of witnesses, the defendant has no other remedy to have his costs than by moving for them. —— v. Andrews, Barnard. 333.

And though the defendant has cross-examined the plaintiff's witnesses, yet if he has examined no witnesses of his own, he shall be allowed his costs. Ib.

And the circumstance that the defendant has brought a cross bill makes no difference as to his right to costs in the original cause upon the return of the commission. Ib.

Where a devisee brings a bill merely in perpetuam rei memoriam and the heir-at-law only cross-examines the witnesses produced to confirm the will, he is entitled to his costs; but if he examines witnesses to encounter the will, he shall not have his costs. Berney v. Eyre, 3 Atk. 387.

Plaintiff having examined his witnesses under a bill to perpetuate, defendant moved for his costs. Order to shew cause granted. Bower v. Thomson, 1 Fowl. 50.

On a bill to perpetuate testimony, defendant entitled to costs of answering, there being no examination of witnesses. Lecky v. Murray, 1 Ball & B. 391.

Defendant to a bill to perpetuate testimony, entitled to his costs immediately after the commission executed, upon the allegation that he did not examine any witnesses. Foulds v. Midgley, 1 Ves. & B. 138.

Where a plaintiff in a bill to perpetuate the testimony of witnesses has examined, and thereby had the fruit of her bill, neither herself nor defendant is entitled to costs. Coddrington v. England, 2 Atk. 167.

When a multiplicity of actions has been brought where the custom might have been tried in one, it is such a vexation that the plaintiff in equity shall have the costs both in law and equity. Ib.

Where it appears reasonable, though not absolutely necessary, to perpetuate the testimony of witnesses to a will, the court will, in the case of a purchaser, allow him his costs. Mackrell v. Hunt, 2 Madd. 37, n.

Bill for Discovery and to Perpetuate.]—A defendant to a bill of discovery, and to perpetuate the testimony of witnesses, is entitled to his costs of the discovery, although he has examined witnesses in chief. Skrine v. Powell, 15 Sim. 81; 9 Jur. 1054.

Where Bill brought to Hearing.]—A bill for perpetuating testimony only ought not to be brought to a hearing; if it be, it will be dismissed with costs; but plaintiff has the benefit of the depositions at law, notwithstanding such dismissal. Hall v. Hoddesdon, 2 P. W. 162. Anon., 2 Ves. 497; Ambl. 237.

Bill to perpetuate testimony merely ought not to be brought to a hearing; but if it prays relief, the defendant may set it down for dismissal. Vaughan v. Fitzgerald, 1 Sch. & Lef. 316.

A bill for perpetuating testimony, if brought to a hearing, will be dismissed with costs. Ellice v. Roupell, 32 Beav. 308.

Order as to.]—A wealthy lunatic had made two wills before he was found lunatic. The court, without giving any opinion whether a bill to perpetuate testimony as to their validity would lie, ordered that such costs as the master should think proper of a bill to be filed with his approbation for that purpose should be paid out of the lunatic's estate. Tayleur, In re, L. R. 6 Ch. 416.

IX. Evidence on Affidavit.

1. Before whom Taken.

a. In England.

Statute.]—See 53 Vict. c. 7.

Commissioners—Duty of.]—Observations as to the duty of commissioners to administer oaths where a witness is swearing to the contents of an affidavit. Bourke v. Davis, 44 Ch. D. 110; 62 L. T. 34; 38 W. R. 167.

—— Authority Apparent.]—The court will not receive an affidavit unless it distinctly appears to have been sworn before a party competent to take it. Reg. v. Bloxham, 6 Q. B. 528; 14 L. J., Q. B. 13.

The taking of an affidavit is a ministerial not a judicial act. Kerr v. Ailsa (Marquis), 1 Macq. H. L. 736.

No affidavit can be used on an application for a new trial, unless sworn before a commissioner of the court in which it is to be used. Blakeley v. Abeles, 11 Jur. (N.S.) 325; 11 L. T. 716.

On the trial of an indictment for perjury, assigned on an affidavit sworn in the Queen's Bench, proof of the defendant's signature to the affidavit, and proof that under a jurat "sworn in open court at Westminster Hall, on the 10th day of June, 1846," the words "by the court," are in the handwriting of one of the masters of the court, is sufficient evidence of the swearing of the affidavit in the Queen's Bench, without any further proof that the master was in court when the affidavit was sworn. Reg. v. Turner, 2 Car. & K. 732.

An affidavit of the acknowledgment of bail is properly sworn before a commissioner, for the purpose of taking bail. Anon., 2 Y. & J. 101.

An affidavit sworn before a commissioner acting as such, is admissible without proof of the commission. Rex v. Howard, 1 M. & Rob. 187.

—— Jurisdiction.]—Oaths may be taken by the commissioners appointed to administers oaths in chancery under the act 16 & 17 Vict. c. 78, not only at their respective places of business, but anywhere within the limits of their jurisdiction. Record and Writ Clerk, In re, 3 De G. M. & G. 723; 23 L. J., Ch. 1002; 18 Jur. 499.

A commissioner may administer an oath at any place within ten miles of his residence. Oaths in Chancery Act, In re, 2 Eq. R. 175; 2 W. R. 140.

A commissioner may administer an oath at any place within ten miles of Lincoln's Inn Hall, notwithstanding such place may be a public office. Oaths in Chancery Act, In re, Hill v. Tollit, 18 Jur. 499; 2 W. R. 504.

In a pressing case an affidavit which was wanted for the purpose of a motion was allowed to be sworn in open court. Mercers' Co. v. Witham Navigation Co., 14 Beav. 20; 20 L. J., Ch. 557.

—— Title.]—It is no objection to an affidavit that it is not intitled "in the King's Bench," or that it appears to have been taken before "A. B., a commissioner, &c.," without adding "of the court of K. B.," if in fact he was a commissioner of that court. Kennet and Avon Canal Co. v. Jones, 7 Term Rep. 451.

The commissioner before whom the answer was sworn described himself as "a commissioner to administer oaths in the High Court of Justice":—Held, that the answer must be filed notwithstanding the inaccuracy of the description. Barwick v. Yeadon Local Board, 33 L. T. 322; 24 W. R. 23.

—— Under 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 70, s. 4.]—The swearing of an affidavit of debt is "a business depending in court," within this section, over which the judges of all the courts have a jurisdiction in common. Griffin v. Taylor, 6 D. P. C. 620; 4 Bing. (N.C.) 369; 6 Scott, 141; 2 Jur. 305.

—— Judicial Notice of.]—The court will not take judicial notice of who are its commissioners, or inspect the list to see if A. B. is one. Frost v. Hayward, 10 M. & W. 673; 2 D. (N.S.) 566; 12 L. J., Ex. 84; 6 Jur. 1045.

Under Bills of Sale Acts.]—See BILLS OF SALE.

Solicitors' Clerks.]—It is no objection to the admissibility of an affidavit of a party to a cause who is a solicitor, that it is sworn before a clerk in the employ of the firm of which such party is a member, such clerk being duly qualified to administer oaths in chancery, the firm not being—but the town agents of the firm, as independent solicitors, being—the solicitors on the record for the deposing party. Foster v. Harvey, 4 De G. J. & S. 59; 2 N. R. 443; 9 L. T. 404; 11 W. R. 899.

The rule which forbids the admission of affidavits sworn before the solicitors in the cause or any of their clerks should not be extended. Ib.

The rule against swearing an affidavit before the solicitor conducting proceedings or his clerk, does not necessarily extend to his agent to get the affidavit sworn. Gregg, In re, and Prance, In re, 39 L. J., Ch. 107; L. R. 9 Eq. 137; 23 L. T. 234; 18 W. R. 589.

An affidavit sworn before a commissioner employed as clerk to the attorney in a cause, in his character of clerk to the commissioners for the sale of the land-tax, is good. Goodtitle d. Pye v. Badtitle, 8 Term Rep. 638.

An affidavit sworn before the clerk to an attorney, who makes an application that his client may be admitted as a party to a cause, is not within the prohibition of the above rule. Doe d. Grant v. Roe, 5 D. P. C. 409; W. W. & D. 68.

Affidavits sworn before a master extraordinary, who was the clerk of plaintiff's attorney, rejected. Wood v. Harpur, 3 Beav. 290.

—— Partners.]—In an action in the Chancery Division, the plaintiff's London solicitors, who were his only solicitors on the record, employed a firm who were his country solicitors in getting up evidence. This business was done entirely by one of the partners in the country firm, but some of the affidavits filed on behalf of the plaintiff were sworn before the other partner:—Held, that such affidavits were inadmissible. Northumberland (Duke) v. Todd, 47 L. J., Ch. 343; 7 Ch. D. 777; 38 L. T. 746; 26 W. R. 350.

The university of Cambridge employed, in making a claim of conusance, T., an attorney, who had been appointed attorney to the university. M., an attorney, was in partnership with T., but was not attorney to the university, and had taken no part in making the claim of conusance; it did not appear whether or not he had any share in the profits of the proceeding. M. and T. had not jointly or severally been concerned in the cause of which conusance was claimed:—Held, no objection to affidavits in support of the claim that they were sworn before M., who was a commissioner. Turner v. Bates, 10 Q. B. 292.

Solicitor struck off Roll.]—A solicitor was in 1875 appointed by the Court of Exchequer a commissioner to administer oaths; he was struck off the rolls in 1883, but his commission had never been superseded:—Held, that as the duration of the commission was the pleasure of the Court of Exchequer, there was no power to take off the file an affidavit sworn before him. The commission could only be put an end to at the present time by the Lord Chancellor under the Commissioners for Oaths Act, 1889. Ward v. Gamgee, 65 L. T. 610; 40 W. R. 39.

Whether engaged in Cause.]—Affidavits taken before a person who was a solicitor in the cause, cannot be read. Hogan, In re, 3 Atk. 813.

Where affidavits in support of a petition were sworn before the solicitors in the cause, he was ordered to pay the costs. Ib.

Affidavits in future were directed not to be sworn before the attorneys in the cause. Smith v. Woodroffe, 6 Price, 230.

The affidavit verifying a petition, under the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 109, s. 30 (Tithe Rent-charge Act), may be in a proper case made by the agent of the petitioner; as where the agent has peculiar knowledge of the facts. Kellett v. Sturgeon, 5 Ir. Eq. R. 159.

A plaintiff cannot sign judgment after a plea in abatement, because the affidavit was sworn before the defendant's attorney. Horsfall v. Matthewman, 3 M. & S. 154.

A plea in abatement set aside for irregularity, on the objection that the affidavit had been sworn before the plaintiff's attorney as commissioner for taking affidavits in the Court of Exchequer in the country. Cooper v. Archer, 12 Price, 149.

An affidavit made before a commissioner or an attorney who acts as the attorney of the defendant, before an appearance is entered, cannot be used, but it must be clearly shewn that he acted as such attorney at the time of taking the affidavit: it is not sufficient to shew that he is so at the time of making the objection. Kidde v. Davis, 5 D. P. C. 568. S. P., Beaumont v. Dean, 4 D. P. C. 354.

Such an objection is made sufficiently to appear by the general declarations of the party himself, though it is not positively stated he was the attorney at the time the affidavit was sworn. Haddock v. Williams, 1 W. W. & H. 415; 7 D. P. C. 327.

The description of a particular attorney, as the attorney to the plaintiff, in a declaration, sufficiently shews him to be such attorney, in order to support an objection that the affidavit has been sworn before him. Doe d. Pryme v. Roe, 8 D. P. C. 340.

If a rule is obtained on affidavits of a party, sworn before his own attorney in the cause, the court will discharge it with costs. Hopkinson v. Buckley, 8 Taunt. 74.

An affidavit cannot be used in court if sworn before a commissioner who is acting in the matter as attorney for the applicant, though there is no action pending, and no attorney on the record. Gray, In re, 1 B. C. C. 93; 21 L. J., Q. B. 380.

Attachments.]—The court will in no case issue an attachment against a party at the suit of another, where the affidavits on which the motion is founded are sworn before the agents of the prosecutor. Rex v. Wallace, 3 Term Rep. 403.

The rule does not apply to proceedings on the Crown side of the court. Reg. v. Mizen, 1 D. (N.S.) 865.

b. In Scotland.

An affidavit made by a defendant in a suit in the exchequer, and sworn before a magistrate in Scotland, was permitted to be read. Ellis v. Sinclair, 3 Y. & J. 273.

Affidavit, sworn before a baron of the exchequer in Scotland, admitted to be read. Braham v. Bowes, 1 Jac. & Walk. 296.

Affidavits sworn before a justice of the peace in Scotland are admissible, if his handwriting is authenticated. Turnbull v. Moreton, 1 Chit. 463, 721.

It is no objection to an affidavit sworn in Scotland, that it is taken before a justice of the peace, and not before a lord of session. Watson v. Williamson, 1 D. P. C. 607.

No instance of this court taking notice of an affidavit before a justice of peace in Scotland, though the courts of late have acted upon affidavits before judges of the superior courts there. Hyde v. Whitfield, 19 Ves. 345; 13 R. R. 215.

c. In Ireland.

Evidence of Authority.]—The chief justice's clerk's list of commissioners is conclusive evidence as to whether a particular person is a commissioner of the English Court of Common Pleas, pursuant to 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42. Sharp v. Johnson, 2 Bing. (N.C.) 246; 2 Scott, 407; 4 D. P. C. 324; 1 Hodges, 298; 5 L. J., C. P. 11.

If an affidavit in a cause in an English court is sworn in Ireland before one who is not a commissioner of the English courts, the signature of such person must be verified. Ib.

Where it appears from the jurat of an affidavit that it was sworn before a commissioner of the Court of Queen's Bench in Ireland, such affidavit cannot be received in the Queen's Bench in England. Griffin v. Smith, 8 D. P. C. 490; 4 Jur. 413.

The courts, by the courtesy which subsists between the two countries, take judicial notice that so great an officer as the chief justice of a superior court in Ireland is competent to administer an oath, and therefore will be satisfied with a mere verification of his handwriting. French v. Bellew, 1 M. & S. 302.

Affidavit before master extraordinary in Ireland, read in court, but not affidavit from plantations, unless under seal of Ireland. Annesley v. Anglesey (Earl), Dick. 90. Johnson v. Smith, Dick. 592.

The court allowed an affidavit, sworn before a commissioner of the Court of Exchequer in Ireland, to be read. Kilby v. Stanton, 2 Y. & J. 75.

An affidavit purporting to be sworn before a master extraordinary of the Court of Chancery in Ireland is, under the statute 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, s. 10, admissible in evidence in a matter before this court without proof of the signature or official character of the person before whom it is stated to have been sworn. Mahon's Trust, In re, 9 Hare, 459; 22 L. J., Ch. 75.

d. Abroad.

British Consul.]—The 6 Geo. 4, c. 87, s. 20, only empowered a British consul abroad to administer such oaths and take such affidavits as might be administered or taken before a justice of the peace in this country; and an affidavit of service of a rule to shew cause, sworn before a British consul in Paris, was insufficient, although it was suggested that a magistrate in France had no power to administer an oath. Williams v. Welch, 3 D. & L. 357; 1 B. C. Rep. 71, n.; 15 L. J., Q. B. 7; 9 Jur. 1078.

Where, by foreign law, a British consul is not allowed to administer an oath, the affidavit may be sworn before a foreign judge. Fauveus, In goods of, 54 L. J., P. 47; 9 P. D. 241; 33 W. R. 323; 48 J. P. 743.

British Vice-Consul.] — An affidavit sworn before a British vice-consul, will be admitted as cause against a conditional order for a receiver. Walsh v. Prendergast, Hayes, 334.

Secretary of British Legation.]—The affidavit verifying the execution of a power of attorney executed at Brussels, was sworn by one of the witnesses to the execution of the power, before the secretary of the British legation at Brussels, and when produced, appeared to be under the seal of the legation. There was no affidavit verifying the signature of the secretary of legation to the affidavit taken by him, but an attorney of the court stated in open court, that he knew the signature to be that of the secretary: —Held, that the affidavit should be acted upon as being properly taken. O'Connor v. Bernard, 4 Ir. Eq. R. 689.

Colonial Commissioner.]—An affidavit sworn in a colony before an officer describing himself as "a commissioner for taking affidavits," receivable, whether sworn antecedently to the act or not, on the ground that the court is to take judicial notice of the signature of any person lawfully authorised to administer oaths. Anon., 1 W. R. 187.

Affidavits taken in the colonies previously to the passing of the act 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, in the presence of a person lawfully authorised to administer oaths, are receivable in this country under the 22nd section of that act, without verification of the signature of the person before whom they have been taken. Bateman v. Cooke, 3 De G. M. & G. 39; 22 L. J., Ch. 744; 17 Jur. 170; 1 W. R. 242.

Foreign Consul.]—Affidavits having been sworn before the United States consul at Vera Cruz, as there was no English consul or diplomatic agent there :—Held, that the court had no power to receive them. De Salazar, In goods of, 21 W. R. 776.

Foreign Magistrates.]—The courts will take cognisance of affidavits sworn before foreign magistrates, if properly authenticated to them. Dalmer v. Barnard, 7 Term Rep. 251.

An affidavit not signed by the deponent, but having been sworn before a justice of the peace in America, whose signature was duly certified by the governor of that state, was refused to be filed by the clerk in the affidavit office. On motion, the court refused to order the clerk to file the affidavit. Anderson v. Stather, 9 Jur. 1085.

Quære, whether the defect could be supplied by the production of another affidavit verifying the former as an exhibit. Ib.

Where an affidavit in a proceeding in a court here is made in a foreign country, it must distinctly appear that the functionary before whom it is sworn abroad is authorised by the laws of his own country to administer an oath. Warren v. Swinburne, 9 Jur. 510.

Affidavits in an English suit are properly sworn before a juge de paix and certain other officials in Belgium having limited jurisdiction within the district where such affidavits were sworn, and with power to administer oaths there only for certain purposes. Kevan v. Crawford, 45 L. J., Ch. 658—C. A.

In a suit in which infants jointly with their mother were plaintiffs, an affidavit, sworn abroad, by the defendants, not before a British consul or vice-consul, as required by 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 22, but before the burgermeister of the town at which the defendants resided, was allowed, with the consent of the mother, to be filed. Bell v. Turner, L. R. 17 Eq. 439 ; 22 W. R. 391.

Foreign Governor.]—Affidavits made by parties in the United States of America, and attested by the governor as being sealed with the great seal of the state, will be received and ordered to be filed in this country. Scriven, In re, 17 L. T. 641.

Clerk of Foreign Court.]—An affidavit was sworn before the clerk of the circuit court of Monroe county, in the state of Wisconsin, U.S., Chicago, distant about 250 miles from Monroe county, being the nearest place where a British consul or vice-consul was resident. The British vice-consul at Chicago certified that the clerk of the circuit court had authority to administer oaths. The court, on motion ex parte for leave to file the affidavit, made the order. Brittlebank v. Smith, 50 L. T. 491.

Evidence of Authority.]—Where an affidavit had been sworn in Wisconsin, in the United States of America, a certificate of the clerk of the circuit court of Walworth county, state of Wisconsin, was held sufficient evidence that the official before whom the affidavit was sworn had power to administer an oath. O'Neill v. Doran, Ir. R. 10 Eq. 187.

The court will judicially notice the seal on a notarial certificate verifying an affidavit sworn before a magistrate abroad. Cole v. Sherard, 11 Ex. 482.

Affidavit to prove a foreign debt must be attested by a notary. Moens, Ex parte, Maiden, In re, Mont. 15.

Notary.]—All parties to account, &c. ; plaintiff residing at Amsterdam, allowed to swear affidavit before notary public there, according to law of Holland. Chicot v. Lequesne, Dick. 150.

Where a fund only amounted to 35*l.* the court dispensed with the verification of the signature to an affidavit abroad of a notary public, on the personal undertaking of the solicitor. Mayne v. Butler, 11 L. T. 410 ; 13 W. R. 128.

An affidavit sworn at a place out of the jurisdiction, before a notary public having authority there to administer oaths, and verified in the manner usual before the statute 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 22, is still receivable as evidence in a suit. Haggett v. Ineff, 5 De G. M. & G. 910 ; 3 Eq. R. 144 ; 24 L. J., Ch. 120 ; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 49 ; 3 W. R. 141.

Where an affidavit is sworn before a notary public of a foreign country not under the dominion of the Queen, the signature of the notary must be verified before the affidavit can be filed, unless by consent, and the court cannot take judicial cognisance of the notarial seal alone as a sufficient verification. Earle's Trusts, In re, 4 K. & J. 300.

Affidavits sworn before a notary public in America ordered to be filed without proof of the notary filling that character. Smith v. Davies, 19 L. T. 376 ; 17 W. R. 69.

When an affidavit is sworn before a notary abroad, the signature must be verified by affidavit before it can be received here, though the rule has been relaxed where the fund was very small. Davis, In re, L. R. 8 Eq. 98.

The court, on a petition under the Trustee Relief Acts, allowed an affidavit, sworn in the United States of America before a notary public instead of before a consul, to be filed, on the solicitor who acted for all parties giving a written consent. Lane's Trusts, In re, 22 W. R. 39.

Affidavits made on behalf of a plaintiff, sworn abroad before a notary at a place a considerable distance from the residence of any of her Majesty's consuls, were, on the written consent of the solicitor for the defendant, allowed to be filed. Lyle v. Ellwood, 42 L. J., Ch. 80 ; L. R. 15 Eq. 67 ; 27 L. T. 671 ; 21 W. R. 69.

Where an affidavit sworn before a notary in foreign parts is tendered, it must appear that none of the British authorities authorised by 18 & 19 Vict. c. 42, s. 2, were resident in such place. Bernard, In goods of, 2 Sw. & Tr. 489 ; 6 L. T. 726.

Before and after the act 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, affidavits sworn in foreign parts out of her Majesty's dominions before a notary public might be filed, and that practice continued in force down to the time when the Rules of the Supreme Court, 1883, came into operation :—Held, that this practice is not abrogated by Ord. XXXVIII. r. 6, and Ord. LXXII. r. 2, of the Rules of 1883 ; and may be followed at any rate in cases where the practice under the Rules of 1883 would be very inconsistent. Cooke v. Wilby, 53 L. J., Ch. 592 ; 25 Ch. D. 769 ; 50 L. T. 152 ; 32 W. R. 379.

Translation.]—It is no objection to an affidavit sworn before a native court, that it is originally in a foreign language, if it is translated, and the translation verified ; and the oath may be administered in the foreign language if it is translated by an interpreter to the deponent. Eady, In re, 6 D. P. C. 615.

Affidavits sworn in a foreign language, with an English translation attached (such translation not being verified by an interpreter) allowed by consent to be filed, and office copies of the English parts only authorised to be issued. Reimers v. Druce, 4 W. R. 665.

2. By Whom Made.

By Marksmen.]—When affidavits made by marksmen had been properly read over to them before they made their mark, but the jurat, stating that they had been so read, had been omitted, and the commissioner after the deponent had made his mark refused to supply the omission, the court, on the refusal of the clerk of records and writs to file the affidavits without the jurat, ordered the affidavits to be filed as they stood. Fernyhough v. Naylor, 23 W. R. 228.

If the jurat of an affidavit made by a marksman omits to state that he made his mark, it is bad; but it may be amended without re-swearing. Wilson v. Blakey, 9 D. P. C. 352; 5 Jur. 367.

A marksman signed an affidavit with his name at length, his hand having been guided on the occasion. It was ordered to be taken off the file. —— v. Christopher, 11 Sim. 409; 10 L. J., Ch. 145.

The practice of verifying the mark of a marksman in an affidavit sworn in America before a notary public, not requiring, as in this country, the notary to insert in the jurat that "the witness saw the deponent make his mark": —Held, that the omission of these words was immaterial. Savage v. Hutchinson, 3 Eq. R. 368; 24 L. J., Ch. 232.

Where an affidavit is made by a marksman, the jurat should state that it was read and explained by the commissioner to the party before it was sworn by him; and a statement in the margin that the affidavit was read and explained to the party by a third person, is insufficient. Bredin v. Bredin, 7 Ir. Eq. R. 501.

An affidavit that P. was a marksman, and that a certain mark was his mark:—Held, sufficient proof of his signature. Pearcy v. Dicker, 13 Jur. 997.

Illiterate Person.]—Observations on the value of testimony given by affidavit, when the witness is illiterate and ignorant, the language is not his own, but that of the person preparing the affidavit; being taken ex parte it is almost always incomplete, and often inaccurate. Johnston v. Todd, 5 Beav. 597.

By Insane Persons.]—Before an affidavit of a person suffering from mental delusions, and in confinement in a lunatic asylum, can be received, his mental condition must first be ascertained by preliminary inquiry before the court or some person specially delegated for that purpose; and therefore an affidavit by a person in a lunatic asylum, without any notice in the jurat of the circumstances under which or the place where it was sworn, was ordered to be taken off the file. Spittle v. Walton, 40 L. J., Ch. 368; L. R. 11 Eq. 420; 24 L. T. 18; 19 W. R. 405.

By Foreigners.]—The court will give credit to its own officers, that they have observed all proper forms in taking affidavits. Therefore, where a jurat to an affidavit made by a foreigner, certified "that the affidavit was interpreted by F. C., professor of languages (he having first sworn that he understood the French and English languages), to the deponent, who was afterwards sworn to the truth thereof":—Held, that the jurat was sufficient, though it did not appear thereby that the deponent understood the language in which the affidavit was interpreted, or that the interpreter was sworn truly to interpret. Rose v. Solliers, 6 D. & R. 514; 4 B. & C. 358. S. P., Marzetti v. Du Jouffroy (Comte), 1 D. P. C. 41.

Evidence of Counsel.]—The practice is not to allow an affidavit by counsel as to matters that occurred within his knowledge as counsel at a trial to be read, but to request such counsel to attend, and to state to the court what occurred. Kempshall v. Holland, 14 R. 336—C. A. S. P., Hickman v. Berens, 64 L. J., Ch. 785; [1895] 2 Ch. 638; 12 R. 602; 73 L. T. 323—C. A.

3. Title.

Causes.]—A motion on behalf of the same plaintiff in two different actions, upon the same ground of application, may be made upon one affidavit, intitled in both actions. Pitt v. Evans, 2 D. P. C. 226.

An affidavit cannot be intitled in two causes. Harper v. Mount, 2 Jur. 990.

Where a rule is obtained in two causes, the affidavits must be intitled in both of them, though the plaintiff and defendant are the same in both. Corry v. Wharton, 2 Scott, 436.

The title of affidavits in a cause should pursue the writ of summons. Marshall v. Adams, 2 Jur. 944; 1 W. W. & H. 296.

An affidavit to verify a plea puis darrein continuance, which refers to the plea which was intitled in the cause, is sufficient without being itself specially intitled. Prince v. Nicholson, 1 Marsh. 70; 5 Taunt. 333; 15 R. R. 612.

When a prohibition is applied for, the affidavit of the applicant ought not to be intitled in a cause, but "in the matter of an action" in the inferior court. Wallace v. Allan, 44 L. J., C. P. 351; L. R. 10 C. P. 607; 32 L. T. 830; 23 W. R. 703.

The affidavit in support of the application to discharge the solicitor from custody, should be intitled in the cause in respect of which the privilege is claimed. Keane, In re, Sau. & Sc. 81.

In consideration of an indictment being allowed to stand over, P., an attorney, gave a personal undertaking for the costs, &c.:—Held, that "In the matter of P." was a proper title for the affidavits in support of a rule calling on P. to pay such costs. Philip, In re, 1 W. R. 449.

No objection to an affidavit, that it was not headed in the matter of bankruptcy in which it was used, if from the accompanying circumstances it is manifest that it was judicially used in the bankruptcy. Simmonds, Ex parte, 2 Glyn. & J. 44; 3 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 99.

Where the affidavit of a judgment creditor for a receiver in a petition matter under 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 55, was intitled as in a cause, and the parties were styled plaintiff and defendant, and the petitioner was apprised of the irregularity:—Held, that the affidavit was insufficient. Fawcett v. Fawcett, 6 Ir. Eq. R. 388.

—— In the Matter of an Act.]—By an order, intitled in a cause and in the matter of the Trustee Act, A. was ordered to transfer a sum of money into court. The affidavit of service of this order on A. was intitled in the cause only. A. was committed for contempt for refusing to obey the order. The writ of attachment was discharged for irregularity, on the ground of the difference between the title of the order and the title of the affidavit. Mackenzie v. Mackenzie, 21 L. J., Ch. 386; 16 Jur. 723.

An affidavit in support of an application to serve a defendant out of the jurisdiction, should be intitled in the contemplated action and also in the Judicature Act. Young v. Brassey, 45 L. J., Ch. 142; 1 Ch. D. 277; 24 W. R. 110.

—— No Title.]—When affidavits are made abroad and sworn, but without any heading, shewing in what cause or matter they are made, they will be ordered to be filed, on a special application for that purpose. Salvidge v. Tutton, 20 L. T. 300.

—— With Statutory Declaration.]—A statutory declaration not intitled in a cause will be filed in an affidavit intitled in the cause, verifying the signatures of the declarants. Whiting v. Bassett, 41 L. J., Ch. 551; L. R. 14 Eq. 70.

Names of Parties.]—In affidavits in support of or against a rule, as well the christian as the surnames of all parties, as well plaintiffs as defendants, must be inserted in the title. Fores v. Diemar, 7 Term Rep. 661; 2 East, 182. S. P., Noel v. ——, 1 Smith, 457; Theobald v. Brame, W. W. & D. 219; Masters v. Carter, 4 D. P. C. 577; 1 H. & W. 672.

The parties should be described as "plaintiff" and "defendant." Harris v. Griffiths, 4 D. P. C. 289; 1 H. & W. 515.

In an affidavit made by a defendant in a cause in support of a rule moved for by him, it is not necessary for him expressly to swear that he is the defendant: it will be sufficient if it appears with reasonable certainty, from the language of the affidavit, that he is so. Loutreuil v. Philippe, 1 B. C. Rep. 87; 10 Jur. 757.

When a case is de facto in the Court of Queen's Bench, all affidavits should be intitled in the names of the parties. Johnson v. Simpson, 1 L. T. 60.

An order, obtained on affidavit of service, discharged with costs, on the ground of a misnomer of a party in the affidavit. Salomon v. Stalman, 4 Beav. 243; 10 L. J., Ch. 327.

—— In Particular Cases.]—Affidavits must be intitled "A. v. B." and not "B. at suit of A." Richards v. Isaac, 2 D. P. C. 710; 1 C. M. & R. 136; 4 Tyr. 863.

An affidavit intitled in the name of the plaintiff against "B. and another," or "and others," as defendants, is defective, as it should have described such defendants. Doe d. Spencer v. Want, 2 Moore, 722. Thomkins v. Geach, 5 D. P. C. 509.

Where an action has been brought against a defendant by the initial of his christian name "W.," and has been proceeded in to execution so intitled, an affidavit in support of an application against the sheriff for not returning a fi. fa. cannot be read, if it describes the defendant by the christian name of "William." Reg. v. Surrey (Sheriff), 8 D. P. C. 510; 4 Jur. 559.

An affidavit, intitled "W. W., carrying on business under the name or style of W. T. & Co., plaintiff, and C. F. defendant"—the plaintiff having so described himself in the writ, is sufficient. White v. Feltham, 3 C. B. 658.

Where a defendant was described in the writ as "Frederick C. Prosser," an affidavit to set aside a judgment for irregularity intitled, "Henry Symes v. Frederick Coulston Prosser" (his real name), is insufficient. Symes v. Prosser, 15 M. & W. 151; 3 D. & L. 49; 15 L. J., Ex. 199.

A defendant was described in the writ as "W. W. Kilpin." He entered an appearance as William Wells Kilpin, sued as W. W. Kilpin. In the title of an affidavit he was described as "William Wells Kilpin":—Held, well intitled. Lomax v. Kilpin, 16 M. & W. 94; 16 L. J., Ex. 23.

Where a defendant, whose name was J. G., had been described in the writ as H. G., and a person named H. G. had appeared:—Held, that affidavits were rightly intitled "B. v. J. G., sued by the name of H. G." Belcher v. Goodered, 4 C. B. 472; 4 D. & L. 814; 16 L. J., C. P. 176.

In the writ and declaration the cause was described as "T. v. S. & H." They appeared under that title, and pleaded:—Held, that an affidavit, on which a rule to set aside a judgment was obtained, was incorrectly intitled "T. v. S. & P., sued as H." Tugg v. Simmons, 4 D. & L. 582; 16 L. J., Q. B. 319.

In a writ the plaintiff described the defendant as James S. Hodson; he entered an appearance as James Shirley Hodson; in affidavits to set aside an interlocutory judgment, the title described him as James Shirley Hodson, sued as James S. Hodson:—Held, well intitled. Dunn v. Hodson, 1 D. & L. 204; 7 Jur. 971. S. P., Jones v. Elridge, 1 D. (N.S.) 10; 4 Scott (N.R.) 751; 4 Man. & G. 266; 11 L. J., C. P. 192. Hodgson v. May, 7 D. & L. 4; 18 L. J., Q. B. 249; 14 Jur. 653.

A rule nisi for a commission to examine witnesses was obtained upon an affidavit intitled "H. J., plaintiff, and G. A. F. L. Curzon, commonly called Viscount Curzon, defendant," the title of the cause being "H. J. v. G. A. F. L. Howe, commonly called Viscount Curzon":—Held, insufficient. Joll v. Curzon (Lord), 5 C. B. 205.

A rule was obtained in a cause of B. v. D., calling upon A. to render an account of and pay over money due to B.; and the matters of this rule were, by a subsequent rule, referred to the Master. B. afterwards died. A rule was then obtained, calling upon A. to shew cause why B.'s executors should not be made parties to the rules instead of B. This rule, and the affidavits on which it was granted, were intitled "B., deceased, v. D." Held, a fatal objection, there being no such cause as "B., deceased, v. D." Bland v. Dax, 15 L. J., Q. B. 1; 10 Jur. 8.

—— "The Elder."]—An affidavit on which a rule was founded, was intitled, "Between J. S., plaintiff, and G. J., defendant." An affidavit in answer stated that there were two G. J.'s, and that all former proceedings in the cause were intitled "J. S. v. G. J. the elder":—Held, sufficient. Singleton v. Johnson, 9 M. & W. 67; 1 D. (N.S.) 356; 11 L. J., Ex. 88; 5 Jur. 114.

An affidavit by one of the parties in a cause, to whose name the title of elder was not added:—Held, nevertheless, that it must be presumed to be that of the elder. Young v. Young, 1 D. (N.S.) 865; 6 Jur. 916.

If no addition is given to the surname of a party in the title of an affidavit, it will be assumed to be that of the elder. Ib.

But an affidavit intitled "G. S. v. W. C. the elder," sued as "W. C.," the cause being "G. S. v. W. C.," is badly intitled. Shrimpton v. Carter, 3 D. P. C. 648.

—— Omission of Name.]—A notice of motion, and affidavit in support, professed in its title to give names of all the parties, but omitted one; the court would not proceed, but gave leave to amend, and re-swear. Davis v. Barrett, 7 Beav. 171.

Affidavit intitled by mistake in a suit between X., plaintiff, and A., B., C., and D., defendants, admitted in a suit between X., plaintiff, and A., B., C., D., and E., defendants, on its being shewn that no suit existed in which X. was plaintiff, and A., B., C., and D., defendants, except that between X., plaintiff, and A., B., C., D., and E., defendants. Fisher v. Coffey, 1 Jur. (N.S.) 956.

Alteration of Title.]—Use of affidavits filed in support of a petition after the title of the petition has undergone alteration since the filing of the affidavits, and therefore differs from the title of the affidavits. Varley Iron Works Wesleyan Chapel, In re, 10 Hare (App.) xxxv.

An affidavit was filed and intitled in a cause in which there were three defendants. Afterwards the plaintiff struck out the name of one of the defendants, and then obtained the injunction on the affidavit, as it was originally intitled: —Held, that the injunction was regularly obtained. Hawes v. Bamford, 9 Sim. 653.

On Change of Names.]—Where, pending an action against a company, the name of the company is changed by act of parliament, and a motion is afterwards made in such action, a suggestion should be entered of the change of name and the affidavits intitled in the new name. Hibblethwaite v. Leeds and Thirsk Ry., 21 L. J., Ex. 37; 15 Jur. 1015.

Surplusage.]—Intitling an affidavit by describing the plaintiff as "gent., one, &c." he not being an attorney, does not vitiate it, but the description may be rejected as surplusage. Reeves v. Crisp, 6 M. & S. 274.

So, an addition of "widow" in the title of a cause is not necessary. Miller v. Miller, 2 Scott, 117.

Money had been paid into court under the Trustee Relief Act, and an affidavit of the trustees was intitled "In the matter of the trusts of the settlement bearing date the 12th July, 1812, and made on the marriage of." A petition was presented for payment out of court of part of the money so paid in, and an affidavit in support was intitled "In the matter of the trusts of an indenture of settlement bearing date the 12th July, 1812, and made on the marriage of": —Held, that the variation was not material, and that the affidavit might be received. Harris In re, 8 Jur. (N.S.) 166.

Idem Sonans.]—An omission of a letter in the name of a party in the title of an affidavit, the word being idem sonans, is no ground for discharging a rule obtained upon such affidavit. Gray v. Coombes, 10 C. B. 72. S. P., Cooper v. Tilly, 7 Jur. 679.

Where a writ of summons ran "Baldwin v. H. W. B.," appearance was entered as "Henry William B.," and the declaration described the defendant as "Henry William B., sued as H. W. B.," the court admitted an affidavit intitled "Baldwin v. Hilary John B.," sued as Henry William B., as the identity of the cause sufficiently appeared from the declaration. Baldwin v. Bauerman, 12 C. B. 152; 21 L. J., C. P. 160; 16 Jur. 892.

Mala Grammatica.]—An affidavit in a cause in which A., suing by his next friend, was plaintiff, intitled the cause as "A. suing by her next friend": —Held, an immaterial variance. Abrahams v. Taunton, 1 D. & L. 319; 7 Jur. 678.

Representative Parties.]—Where a party sues or is sued in a representative character, the affidavits in the cause should be intitled accordingly. Engler v. Twysden, 6 Scott, 580; 1 Arn. 269, 4 Bing. (N.C.) 714: 8 L. J., C. P. 128. Bland v. Dax, 15 L. J., Q. B. 1; 10 Jur. 8.

The court declined to act upon an affidavit which was intitled "A. v. B.," executor, &c., or administrator, &c., without specifying the party to whom he was executor or administrator. Clarke v. Martin, 3 D. P. C. 222. Fletcher v. Lechmere, 5 Man. & G. 265; 2 D. (N.S.) 848; 6 Scott (N.R.) 173; 12 L. J., C. P. 151.

Affidavits intitled in a cause, without giving the plaintiff the addition of "assignee," cannot be used in a cause where he sues as assignee. Wright v. Hunt, 1 D. P. C. 457. S. P., Steyner v. Cottrell, 3 Taunt. 377.

"Phillips, assignee, &c.," is an irregular mode of describing a plaintiff. Phillips v. Hutchinson, 3 D. P. C. 20. S. P., Casley v. Smith, 4 D. P. C. 477.

Consequences of non-compliance with Rule.]—If affidavits which require a title are put in without, the court cannot take any notice of them though the counsel on the other side do not wish to take the objection. Owen v. Hurd, 2 Term Rep. 644.

Appearing to oppose a rule does not waive an objection to the form of an affidavit upon which the rule was obtained, such as the omission of the christian name of one of the parties in the title of the cause. Clothier v. Ess, 3 M. & Scott, 216; 2 D. P. C. 731. S. P., Barham v. Lee, 2 D. P. C. 779; 4 M. & Scott, 327.

The court cannot entertain an objection patent on a proceeding attached to an affidavit bringing that objection before the court, if from wrong intitling the affidavit cannot be read. Harris v. Mathews, 4 D. P. C. 608.

If there is a defect in intitling affidavits produced on shewing cause against a rule, the court will allow the rule to be enlarged, in order that the title may be amended. Anderson v. Ell, 3 D. P. C. 73.

Where a rule has been substantially disposed of, it cannot afterwards be objected that the affidavits upon which the rule was drawn up are not correctly intitled. Viner v. Langton, 5 D. P. C. 92.

4. Contents.

a. Certainty.

What Errors Vitiate.]—Where the meaning is plain, mere ungrammatical construction will not vitiate. Anon., Lofft, 274.

Nor are clerical errors and bad spelling sufficient grounds of rejection. Bromley v. Foster, 1 Chit. 562.

Such as "defendant" instead of "deponent," or "court" instead of "office," where the meaning is clear; otherwise, where the mistake leaves the meaning doubtful. Anon., 1 Chit. 562, n.

An affidavit with the word "said" instead of

"says" is insufficient. Howorth v. Hubbersty, 3 D. P. C. 455.

What Certainty required.]—That an affidavit is so framed that perjury could not be so assigned thereon, is a defect not to be cured by waiver. Watson v. Walker, 1 M. & Scott, 437.

The following words, "and deponent further objects" that there was no notice, &c., are bad, as not amounting to a categorical allegation. Reg. v. Manchester and Leeds Ry., 3 N. & P. 439; 7 L. J., Q. B. 192; 2 Jur. 857.

An affidavit in support of a rule to set aside an interlocutory judgment must state in express terms that judgment has been signed. Classey v. Drayton, 6 M. & W. 17; 8 D. P. C. 184; 9 L. J., Ex. 145.

It is sufficient in an affidavit of service of a rule to swear to the service of "a true," without adding the word "copy." Rex v. Stafford (Sheriff), 5 D. P. C. 238.

An affidavit of service must swear to the service of the "rule annexed," and not merely of the "rule in this cause." Fidlett v. Bolton, 4 D. P. C. 282.

To make a rule absolute, on no cause being shewn, it is not sufficient that a deponent should swear to notice of the rule nisi having been left at the dwelling-house of the opposite party in his absence, with a person who afterwards told the deponent that she had delivered the notice; the deponent must state that he believes this to be true. Doe d. Hungate v. Roe, 4 A. & E. 83, n.

The affidavits in support of a motion made pursuant to the 1st Order of April, 1842, ought to be not only sufficient in substance, but technically sufficient, and to adopt the very words of the order. Edwards v. Bromfield, 11 L. J., Ch. 256; 6 Jur. 831.

Omission of "Oath."]—The omission in the formal part of an affidavit of the words "make oath and," will render it inadmissible. Allen v. Taylor, 39 L. J., Ch. 627; L. R. 10 Eq. 52; 22 L. T. 512.

The omission of the word "oath," or some equivalent expression, is not cured by the jurat representing it as duly sworn. Doe d. Britton v. Clark, 2 D. (N.S.) 393; 12 L. J., Q. B. 69; 7 Jur. 327.

An affidavit omitting the word "oath" is bad. Oliver v. Price, 3 D. P. C. 261.

An affidavit which does not express that the deponent "made oath," is not admissible. Phillips v. Prentice, 2 Hare, 542; 12 L. J., Ch. 497; 7 Jur. 528.

Objection after Filing.]—In an affidavit the words "severally make oath and say" were omitted by mistake:—Held, that the affidavit could not be objected to on that ground after it had been filed. Torkington, Ex parte, Torkington, In re, L. R. 9 Ch. 298; 22 W. R. 602.

Joint and Several Affidavit.]—An affidavit, instead of being headed, "We, A. B., C. D., and E. F., severally make oath and say," was headed, "The joint and several affidavit of A. B., C. D., and E. F. We, the said A. B., C. D., and E. F., say as follows." Leave to file it was refused. Newton, In re, 4 De G. F. & J. 3; 8 W. R. 425.

In Third Person—Number and Kinds of Trees.]—Affidavits made in the third person, and sworn in America, admitted in evidence. Husband, In re, 12 L. T. 303.

By the 23 & 24 Geo. 3, c. 39, s. 1 (Irish), for the encouragement of planting timber trees, tenants for lives, by settlement, &c., impeachable of waste, or tenants for years, exceeding fourteen unexpired, who should plant or cause to be planted any timber trees, might fell and dispose of them at any time during the term. To secure the landlords, s. 2 enacted, that "any tenant so planting," "should within twelve calendar months after such planting lodge with the clerk of the peace of the county," "an affidavit" "reciting the number and kinds of trees, and the name of the lands, in form following:—I, A. B., do swear that I have planted," &c., "on the lands of ——, in the parish of ——, held by me from ——, the following trees, (here reciting the number and kinds of trees,)" &c. The form throughout was couched in the first person, and in fact, in its terms, was only applicable to a tenant for years. A lessee for three lives having planted many trees, his agent made the affidavit required, in his own name, as agent for the lessee:—Held, that as the form given in the statute could not possibly apply to the majority of the cases which its provisions sought to meet, it did not mean that no one but the tenant was to make the affidavit; and that the form, if another person made the affidavit, might be varied. Mountcashell (Earl) v. O'Neill (Viscount), 2 Jur. 1030.

Held, also, where the tenant for life held two denominations of land under the same landlord of both, but by different demises, that the affidavit was sufficient if it stated the total number and kinds of trees, without distinguishing how many, or what kinds, were planted on each denomination of land. Ib.

But where the two denominations of land were held under different landlords, it was necessary in the affidavit to specify the number and kinds on each. Ib.

Sums of Money.]—Sums of money ought to be written in words at full length and not in figures. Crook v. Crook, 3 Eq. R. 544; 24 L. J., Ch. 504; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 654; 3 W. R. 398.

In an affidavit made upon payment of money into court under the Trustee Relief Act, the sum to be paid in must be expressed in words, and not in figures. Watts's Will, In re, 34 L. T. 647; 24 W. R. 701.

Date.]—In the statement of a particular date, where that date is essential, it must be stated positively. Willes v. James, 1 D. P. C. 498.

An affidavit in support of a motion to set aside a judgment, stated that the judgment was signed "this day":—Held, that the jurat might be looked to in order to fix the date. Holmes v. L. & S. W. Ry., 13 Q. B. 211; 6 D. & L. 536; 18 L. J., Q. B. 87; 13 Jur. 81.

So where an affidavit stated the date of an event, as "the 19th of this present month of January":—Held, that the jurat might be looked at to see that the month of January, 1849, was intended. Craig v. Lloyd, 3 Ex. 232; 6 D. & L. 487; 18 L. J., Ex. 165; 20 L. J., Q. B. 89.

Means of Knowledge.]—An affirmation not stating the affirmant's means of knowledge will not be received. Fry v. James, Ir. R. 4 Eq. 255.

"It was Understood."]—In 1843 a tenant in tail joined in re-settling one of two family estates. He disputed the validity of the transaction, and subsequently, in 1845, married. On that occasion a settlement was executed, making provision for the younger children only of the marriage. The instructions stated that it was desired to keep his landed estates free from any settlement, and contained this note: "N.B. The eldest son will take the family estate." In a suit to set aside the re-settlement of 1843, affidavits were produced on behalf of the infant eldest son of the marriage, to shew that, on the negotiation for the marriage, it was understood, that under existing settlements, the eldest son would become entitled to considerable landed estates, and therefore, that it was only necessary to provide for the younger children:—Held, first, that these affidavits were inadmissible under Sir George Turner's Act (13 & 14 Vict. c. 35); and, secondly, that if admitted, they did not shew that the marriage proceeded on the faith of the re-settlement of 1843, and that in this suit no decree or inquiry could be made in favour of the infant. Hoghton v. Hoghton, 15 Beav. 278; 21 L. J., Ch. 482; 17 Jur. 99.

Letters "without Prejudice."]—Letters written "without prejudice" not to be introduced into affidavits, and the costs thereof to be disallowed on taxation. Fripp v. Bridgwater and Taunton Canal Co., 3 W. R. 356.

Scandalous.]—If an affidavit is filed containing scandalous statements, the court can act in the matter, not only on the application of the aggrieved party, but also on the application of any party to the action, or without any application at all. Cracknell v. Janson, 48 L. J., Ch. 168; 11 Ch. D. 1; 39 L. T. 32; 27 W. R. 55.

b. Information and Belief.

As to affidavits as to hearing and belief. Carpenter v. Poe, 2 Moll. 338.

The not swearing expressly to words spoken, but adding to that effect, is a proper caution in an affidavit. Ayliffe v. Murray, 2 Atk. 60.

Quære, whether affidavit of notice must state positively that the person served acts as clerk in court, or whether upon information and belief only is sufficient. M'Cauley v. Collier, 1 Ves. J. 141.

If material fact be charged in injunction bill and deposed to in affidavit in support of it, not positively, but as plaintiff has reason to know, and that he believes it to be true, and fact is one which, if true, lies only within knowledge of defendant, and who may, if not true, deny it, the court will grant injunction, it not being denied by him. Scott v. Becher, 4 Price, 346.

An application to the court under the 4th section of 5 Vict. c. 5, must be founded on affidavit expressed in positive terms. Field, Ex parte, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 1; 5 Jur. 984.

An affidavit that the deponent has inquired of and been informed by the clerk in court, and the deponent believes it to be true, that no appearance has been entered by the defendant, is sufficient to satisfy the court of that fact. Tatham v. Williams, 1 Hare, 159; 11 L. J., Ch. 117.

An affidavit in support of an application to examine a witness de bene esse, on belief only that the witness is the sole witness to a particular fact, is not sufficient; it ought to state the reasons for such belief. Hope v. Hope, 3 Beav. 317; 10 L. J., Ch. 70; 4 Jur. 1124.

Security required where, after an order to pay costs, the party went abroad, upon belief (not denied) to avoid payment, and proceedings in the meantime stayed. The effect of an affidavit as to belief is, to put the other side on answering the fact sworn to. Bush v. Beetham, 2 Beav. 537.

Upon an application for an injunction to stay proceedings at law, affidavits cannot be read against the answer, as to facts therein stated on information and belief. Barwell v. Barwell, 5 Beav. 373; 12 L. J., Ch. 9; 7 Jur. 272.

An affidavit of the service of a petition respecting the trustees of a corporation, which stated that it had been served on A., who was, "as the deponent had been informed and believed," the clerk of the trustees:—Held, insufficient. Lichfield Municipal Corporation Charities, In re, 12 L. J., Ch. 439.

Evidence of belief only is admissible on interlocutory application, though not at the hearing of a cause, and the grounds of such a belief are properly stated in the affidavit, even in the case where such grounds consist in great part of conversations with third persons, who might be, but are not produced, and where the deponent swears that he disbelieves the statements made to him by such persons. Bird v. Lake, 1 Hem. & M. 111; 8 L. T. 632.

The words "I am informed," where there is no personal knowledge, are the same as "I believe"; and where an affidavit is sworn at different places, by different defendants, one date is sufficient. Woodhatch v. Freeland, 11 W. R. 398.

In a suit by a married woman to establish her equity to a settlement of leasehold and personal estate to which she was entitled as next of kin of her father and of her brother, a defence was set up by answer, on the part of the husband, on the ground of her intemperance and adultery, part of the evidence in support of that defence being an affidavit of a person stating a conversation with the plaintiff's alleged paramour, in which the latter admitted acts of adultery:—Held, that after replication filed, apart from the ground of scandal, an affidavit of mere hearsay evidence ought to be removed from the file on the ground of irrelevancy. Kernick v. Kernick, 9 L. T. 800; 12 W. R. 336.

Upon a proceeding, which, though interlocutory in form, finally decides the rights of the parties, evidence on information and belief is not admissible, and the party against whom it is adduced is not bound to contradict it; but if in the court below he deals with the evidence as admissible, he may be precluded from objecting to it before the Court of Appeal. Gilbert v. Endean, 9 Ch. D. 259; 39 L. T. 404—C. A.

As to Defence on the Merits.]—See post, col. 1074.

c. Addition and Description of Deponent.

When Necessary.]—The addition and true place of abode of every person making an affidavit shall be inserted therein. D'Argent v. Vivant, 1 East, 334.

An affidavit in which the addition or place of abode of a deponent is not inserted will not be admitted. Bernard, In goods of, 2 Sw. & Tr. 489; 31 L. J., P. 89; 6 L. T. 726.

Where a joint affidavit was made by A. and by B., and B.'s addition was omitted, the court treated the affidavit as that of A. only. Woodburn, In goods of, 31 L. J., P. 89, n.

In affidavit in a cause, plaintiff need not state his residence. Crockett v. Bishton, 2 Madd. 446.

Affidavits made in actions by a plaintiff or a defendant are exempted from the operation of this rule. Shirer v. Walker, 2 Man. & G. 917; 3 Scott (N.R.) 235; 9 D. P. C. 667; 10 L. J., C. P. 228. S. P., Angel v. Ihler, 5 M. & W. 163; Jackson v. Chard, 2 D. P. C. 468, contrà; Lawson v. Case, 1 C. M. & R. 481; 3 Tyr. 489; 2 D. P. C. 40; 2 L. J., Ex. 216.

An affidavit made in an action by one of the parties thereto, who is described in the affidavit as plaintiff or defendant, need not contain the addition or residence of the deponent. Harte v. M'Cullagh, Ir. R. 5 C. L. 537.

Description—"Gentleman."]—On an application to appoint new trustees it is not sufficient to describe a person making an affidavit of fitness merely as "gentleman." Orde, In re, 52 L. J., Ch. 832; 24 Ch. D. 271; 49 L. T. 430; 31 W. R. 801—C. A.

In support of a petition for the appointment of a new trustee in the place of a trustee who had become lunatic, two affidavits were filed as to the fitness of the person proposed to be appointed. The deponent of one affidavit was described as a "gentleman," the other deponent being described as an accountant. Each affidavit described the proposed new trustee as a "gentleman," but also stated that he was a person of independent means:—Held, that the description of the deponent as a "gentleman" was insufficient, that the position in life of the deponent ought to be stated so as to enable the court to judge whether his evidence was reliable, but that the other affidavit was sufficient. Horwood, In re, 55 L. T. 373—C. A.

In an affidavit it is not sufficient to describe the deponent as a "gentleman" if he has a trade or profession. Spaddacini v. Treacy, 21 L. R., Ir. 553.

For the filing of an affidavit, a description of the deponent as "gentleman" is sufficient. Orde, In re (24 Ch. D. 271), explained. Dodworth, In re, Spence v. Dodworth, 60 L. J., Ch. 768; [1891] 1 Ch. 657; 64 L. T. 282; 39 W. R. 362.

—— "Esquire."]—A. was described in an affidavit as an "esquire." Upon objection taken it was proved that he was a miller and a farmer, but it was not disproved that he was an "esquire":—Held, that the affidavit was sufficient. Doughty, In re, 18 L. T. 188; 2 Ir. Eq. 235.

"Agent."]—A deponent who describes himself as "agent of the above-named plaintiff (or defendant) in this cause," is sufficient. Luxford v. Groombridge, 2 D. (N.S.) 332; 12 L. J., Q. B. 99; 7 Jur. 87. S. P., Mathewson v. Bairstow, 3 D. & L. 327; 15 L. J., Q. B. 40.

"Clerk."]—But "H. B., clerk to the above-named defendant," is not. Elton v. Martindale, 5 D. & L. 248. S. P., Daniels v. May, 5 D. P. C. 83.

A deponent's addition is not sufficiently stated by styling him "articled clerk," without saying to whom, or in what profession. Reg. v. Reeve, 4 Q. B. 211; 3 G. & D. 560.

So where a deponent was described as M. B., clerk S. N. (the word "to" being omitted):—Held, insufficient. Shakespear v. Willan, 19 L. J., Ex. 184; 14 Jur. 92.

Abode.]—An affidavit commencing in these terms: "R. J., late of the city of W., victualler, but now of, &c.," without any further addition, is sufficient. Angel v. Ihler, 5 M. & W. 163.

By Ord. XXXVIII. r. 8, every affidavit shall state the description and true place of abode of the deponent; where therefore a deponent gave an illusory address or no address at all, the court would not allow them to be used. Hyde v. Hyde, 59 L. T. 523.

An affidavit by a person who is a stockbroker does not state the description and true place of his abode by describing him as "Stock Exchange, stockbroker." Levy, In re, Levin v. Levin, 60 L. T. 317; 37 W. R. 396.

A foreigner, whose general residence is abroad, and who only landed here for a temporary purpose, viz. to make an affidavit, may properly describe his place of abode to be in his own country, and not at the place where the affidavit was sworn. Bouhet v. Kittoe, 3 East, 154.

A description, as "late" of a place, is not sufficient. Sedley v. White, 11 East, 528.

But an affidavit, in which a deponent described himself as "late of Tyrone, in the county of Tyrone, in Ireland, but now in Dublin Castle," is sufficient. Stuart v. Gavernan, 1 H. & W. 699.

But where a deponent had been a few days before discharged out of prison, but, by permission, had continued to lodge there at night, having no other place of residence, his describing himself bonâ fide as "late" of such prison, was sufficient. Ib.

—— Residence of Clerk.]—In an affidavit by an attorney's clerk, it is unnecessary for him to state his own residence, if he states that of his master. Strike v. Blanchard, 5 D. P. C. 216; 2 H. & W. 329. S. P., Cooper v. Folkes or Folks, 2 Scott (N.R.) 200; 1 Man. & G. 942; 9 D. P. C. 46.

Therefore "A. B., clerk to Mr. K., 73, Basinghall-street," is sufficient. Allen v. Thompson, 1 H. & N. 15; 25 L. J., Ex. 249; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 451; 4 W. R. 506.

So, the residence of an attorney's clerk need not be given in an affidavit made by him jointly with his master, in which the residence of the latter is stated. Bottomley v. Bellchamber, 4 D. P. C. 26; 1 H. & W. 362.

A deponent described himself as S., "clerk to E. J., Esq., barrister-at-law, and assessor of the court of passage at the borough of L.":—Held, insufficient, for not stating his place of residence. Winch v. Williams, 12 C. B. 416; 21 L. J., C. P. 216; 16 Jur. 935.

"A. B., clerk to B. & Co., of 201, Regent-street, music sellers," is a sufficient description of a deponent. Philip, In re, 1 W. R. 449.

Omissions may be Waived.]—The omission of a deponent's addition in an affidavit constitutes an irregularity only, and may be waived. King, Ex parte, 41 L. J., C. P. 59; L. R. 7 C. P. 74; 25 L. T. 935; 20 W. R. 316.

When a rule nisi had been obtained to strike two attorneys in partnership off the rolls, and on shewing cause against the rule, they appeared separately, and counsel for one took objection to the affidavit on which the rule had been obtained, on the ground that it did not give the deponent's addition, but counsel for the other waived the objection so far as his client was concerned:—Held, that though the rule must be quashed so far as it related to the one, counsel for the other might proceed to shew cause against the rule so far as it concerned his client. Ib.

Effect of Omission.]—The omission of the addition is an irregularity merely, and the party seeking to take advantage of it must come to the court within a reasonable time. Seymour v. Maddox, 1 L. M. & P. 543; 15 Jur. 629.

A reasonable time dates from the time when the party complaining of the irregularity had the means of knowing it; although, in point of fact, he did not know of it till afterwards. Ib.

If an affidavit is joint, an objection to the description of one of the deponents does not render the statements of the other inadmissible. Edmonds, Ex parte, 5 D. P. C. 702; W. W. & D. 369; 1 Jur. 515. S. P., Nathan v. Cohen, 3 D. P. C. 370; 1 H. & W. 107.

Where, in an affidavit to found a motion, the addition of a deponent is omitted, the court will not inquire whether the facts sworn to by a co-deponent are sufficient to support the application. Rex v. Caernarvon JJ., 5 N. & M. 364.

d. Signature.

Proof of.]—An affidavit cannot be used as evidence even against him by whom it is sworn, without proof of the handwriting. Barnes v. Parker, 15 L. T. 218.

An affidavit described a deponent as "Edward Charles Pownall"; the signature at the end was "Charles E. Pownall":—Held, no objection. Hands v. Clements, 11 M. & W. 816; 1 D. & L. 379; 12 L. J., Ex. 437; 7 Jur. 658.

An affidavit signed by a deponent in some foreign character, which is illegible, may be read in court. Nathan v. Cohen, 3 D. P. C. 378; 1 H. & W. 107.

Re-swearing.]—An affidavit re-sworn need not be re-signed. Liffin v. Pitcher, 1 D. (N.S.) 767; 6 Jur. 537.

Statutory Declarations.]—A statutory declaration not intitled in a cause will be filed with an affidavit intitled in the cause verifying the signatures of the declarants. Whiting v. Bassett, 41 L. J., Ch. 551; L. R. 14 Eq. 70.

Of Husband to Wife's Affidavit.]—An affidavit by a married woman made before a notary abroad, was signed by the husband as well as the wife:—Held, that it might be received. Gates v. Buckland, 13 W. R. 67; 5 N. R. 32.

5. Jurat.

Names of several Deponents.]—The rule that the names of the several parties shall be written in the jurat, applies as well to affidavits sworn before a judge as to those sworn before a commissioner. Luckington v. Atherton, 6 Scott (N.R.) 240; 2 D. (N.S.) 904.

The rule is imperative. Pardoe v. Terrett, 6 Scott (N.R.) 273; 5 Man. & G. 291; 2 D. (N.S.) 903; 12 L. J., C. P. 143; 7 Jur. 217.

Where a rule is obtained on an affidavit, the jurat of which is defective in this respect, the court will discharge the rule with costs. Cobbett v. Oldfield, 4 D. & L. 492; 16 M. & W. 469; 16 L. J., Ex. 150.

But where the names of the deponents are omitted in the jurat through the inadvertence of the judge's clerk, it will be amended by the direction of the judge. Smith, Ex parte, 2 D. P. C. 607.

The notarial jurat appended to an affidavit was worded "sworn to and subscribed before me," without specifying by whom the affidavit was sworn:—Held, that the affidavit might be received. Gates v. Buckland, 13 W. R. 67; 5 N. R. 32.

Interlineations and Erasures, avoiding.]—A line drawn through two lines in the jurat, leaving them, however, perfectly legible, is an erasure, though the omission or retention of the words would not vary the sense. Williams v. Clough, 1 A. & E. 376.

The jurat is not vitiated by an erasure of words which form no necessary part of the jurat, and might be separated from it without altering the sense. Wills v. Dawson, 10 M. & W. 662; 2 D. (N.S.) 465; 12 L. J., Ex. 24; 6 Jur. 1068.

Part of the jurat was written on one side of the paper, and below it the words "a commissioner for taking affidavits in this court" were erased; the remainder of the jurat was written on the other side of the paper:—Held, that the affidavit was not vitiated thereby. Ib.

If the words "before me," in a jurat, are struck out, and the words "by the court," introduced, it is not an objection. Austin v. Grange, 4 D. P. C. 576; 1 H. & W. 670.

An affidavit in which the christian names of two persons were interlined in the place where they were first mentioned allowed to be filed. Vorweig v. Barwiss, 3 W. R. 259.

Motion to file altered affidavits, refused. Gillbart v. Gill, 1 W. R. 4.

The same paper contained the affidavits of two persons, A. and B., sworn before a notary public in the United States of America; there were certain erasures and alterations in the affidavit of A. On a motion that the affidavit might nevertheless be filed, the Vice-Chancellor said, he was not aware that there was any authority for allowing an affidavit, which had been altered, to be filed, without proof that the alteration was made before the affidavit was sworn. S. C., nom. Gill v. Gilbard, 9 Hare (App.) xvi.

Application was subsequently made to the court to expunge that part of the document which contained the alterations and erasures, and allow the rest to be filed; the Vice-Chancellor ordered the document to be filed as the affidavit of B., rejecting the affidavit of A. Ib.

—— As to Date.]—If the date mentioned in the jurat is struck out with a pen, and the right date introduced, it is an erasure. Chambers v. Barnard, 9 D. P. C. 557.

The alteration of a figure in the date in the jurat, by writing one figure over another, does not constitute an erasure or interlineation. Jacob v. Hungate, 3 D. P. C. 456.

The court set aside an order for better particulars of set-off, on the ground that the plaintiff's attorney's clerk had, without authority, altered the date of the jurat of the affidavit on which the order had been obtained. Finnerty v. Smith, 1 Bing. (N.C.) 649; 1 Scott, 743.

Time of Swearing.]—An affidavit must state in the jurat the day on which it was sworn. Doe d. Roe, 1 Chit. 228.

A rule obtained on an affidavit, the jurat of which is without date, will be discharged with costs. Blackwell v. Allen, 7 M. & W. 146, 10 L. J., Ex. 65; 4 Jur. 1137. S. P., Frost v. Heywood, 6 Jur. 1045.

A jurat as follows: "Sworn by A. B., at my chambers, Rolls' Gardens, Chancery Lane, dated the 24th April. E. V. W.":—Held, defective, for not stating the time when it was sworn. Lloyd, In re, 1 L. M. & P. 545; 15 Q. B. 682; 19 L. J., Q. B. 457; 14 Jur. 621.

But where a jurat was as follows: "Sworn by A. B., at Glasgow, in the county of Lanark, in Scotland, the fifth day of June, One thousand eight hundred and fifty years, before me, G. R. T., a commissioner for Scotland, for taking affidavits in the Court of Queen's Bench at Westminster":—Held, that the date and the authority of the commissioner were sufficiently stated. Bell v. Port of London Assurance Co., 1 L. M. & P. 691.

In the jurat the day of the month was omitted:—Held, a fatal objection. Brunswick (Duke) v. Harmer, 1 L. M. & P. 505; 19 L. J., Q. B. 456; 4 Jur. 620. S. P., Wood v. Stephens, 3 Moore, 236.

The jurat of an affidavit purported to be "sworn in court this 9th day of November, 1845":—Semble, that as the 9th of November, 1845, was a Sunday, the jurat was defective. Doe d. Williamson v. Roe, 3 D. & L. 328.

—— Reference.]—The want of a date in a jurat is not cured by reference to it in another affidavit, "as an affidavit of A. B., sworn on such a day." Brunswick (Duke) v. Slowman, 8 C. B. 617; 7 D. & L. 251.

Place of Swearing.]—Affidavits in answer to a rule sworn must contain in the jurat the place sworn, otherwise they cannot be read. Cass v. Cass, 1 D. & L. 698; 13 L. J., Q. B. 52; 7 Jur. 1087.

A jurat which stated an affidavit to have been sworn at the judge's chambers, in the county of Middlesex, was sufficient. Hemsworth v. Brian, 2 D. & L. 844; 1 C. B. 131; 14 L. J., C. P. 134.

An affidavit so sworn need not state in the jurat that it was sworn before the judge. Empey v. King, 2 D. & L. 375; 13 M. & W. 519; 14 L. J., Ex. 48; 8 Jur. 1034.

So an affidavit, intitled in a superior court, and sworn before a judge of that court, as stated in the jurat "at the Central Criminal Court, in the city of London," is sufficient. Thomas v. Stannaway, 2 D. & L. 111; 13 L. J., Q. B. 263.

An affidavit intitled "in the Exchequer" is sufficient, if it appears to have been sworn before an officer of the plea side of the court. Hands v. Clements, 11 M. & W. 816; 1 D. & L. 379.

"Sworn in court the 5th day of November, 1846, before E. V. W." (the judge's signature), is a sufficient jurat. Thorne v. Jackson, 3 C. B. 661.

Where an affidavit was sworn at judge's chambers, but through mistake was not laid before the judge, and therefore the jurat was not signed by him:—Held, irregular. Bill or Bell v. Bament, 8 M. & W. 317; 9 D. P. C. 810; 10 L. J., Ex. 302; 5 Jur. 510.

The place of swearing an affidavit may be stated in the jurat by reference to the place in the body of the affidavit. Grant v. Fry, 8 D. P. C. 234.

Where the jurat of an affidavit, sworn by a person confined in a lunatic asylum, did not state the place where it was sworn, it was ordered to be taken off the file. Spittle v. Walton, 40 L. J., Ch. 368; L. R. 11 Eq. 420; 24 L. T. 18; 19 W. R. 405.

An answer taken by commission will be taken off the file, if the jurat does not state where it was sworn. Kenny v. Costello, 1 Hog. 130.

Affidavit sworn abroad ordered to be filed, although the place at which it was sworn was omitted in the jurat. Meek v. Ward, 10 Hare (App.) i.; 1 W. R. 275.

Before Commissioners.]—The jurat of an affidavit, sworn before a commissioner in the country, must state him to be a commissioner. Howard v. Brown, 4 Bing. 393; 1 M. & P. 22; 6 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 9.

An affidavit was sworn before a commissioner to administer oaths, but in the jurat he merely signed his name, and did not add his title as commissioner:—Held, that notwithstanding this omission, the affidavit was sufficient. Johnson, Ex parte, Chapman, In re, 53 L. J., Ch. 762; 26 Ch. D. 338; 32 W. R. 693—C. A.

An affidavit intitled in the proper court, and purporting to be sworn before A. B., "a commissioner, &c.," is sufficient; the jurat need not state that he is a commissioner for taking affidavits in that court. Burdekin v. Potter, 9 M. & W. 13; 1 D. (N.S.) 134; 11 L. J., Ex. 82; 5 Jur. 992. S. P., Munden v. Brunswick (Duke), 4 C. B. 321; 4 D. & L. 807.

It was objected on shewing cause against a rule nisi, that the affidavits were in the jurat attested thus: "A. B., commr.," instead of commissioner written in full; but it also appearing, from the office copy of the affidavits on which the rule was granted, that a similar abbreviation existed, the court (as the office copies are always copies of the original) discharged the rule nisi on the objection raised against the affidavits in shewing cause. Hill v. Royston, 7 Jur. 930.

An affidavit purporting to be sworn "before H. B. by commission," sufficiently shews that H. B. was a commissioner for taking affidavits. Hopkins v. Pledger, 1 D. & L. 119; 12 L. J., Q. B. 313; 7 Jur. 941. S. P., Fairbrass v. Pettitt, 1 D. & L. 622; 12 M. & W. 453; 13 L. J., Ex. 121.

An affidavit sworn before a commissioner, omitting in the jurat the words "before me," is bad. Graham v. Ingleby, 1 Ex. 651; 5 D. & L. 737. S. P., Reg. v. Norbury, 2 New Sess. Cas. 344; 15 L. J., Q. B. 264.

The court being satisfied that an affidavit was sworn before the person who signed the jurat, though it was not so stated in it, made an order under Ord. XXXVIII. r. 14, that the affidavit should be received. Eddowes v. Argentine Loan Co., 59 L. J., Ch. 392; 62 L. T. 514; 38 W. R. 629—C. A.

Although an exhibit is annexed, having subscribed to it the words: "This is the notice referred to in the annexed affidavit, sworn before me." Reg. v. Bloxham, 6 Q. B. 528; 2 D. & L. 168; 1 New Sess. Cas. 370; 14 L. J., Q. B. 13; 8 Jur. 1117.

A jurat of an affidavit sworn before a commissioner, stating it to have been received "by virtue of a commission forth," and omitting the word "issued," is sufficient. Daley v. Mahon, 6 D. P. C. 192; 1 Jur. 798.

An affidavit filed with a bill of sale was intitled

"In the Queen's Bench," and the person before whom it was sworn described himself as "a commissioner for taking affidavits in the Exchequer of Pleas at Westminster":—Held, sufficient; for that the court would presume until the contrary was shewn omnia rite esse acta, and, if the commissioner had, in fact, authority to take the affidavit, perjury might be assigned on it. Cheney v. Courtois, 13 C. B. (N.S.) 643; 32 L. J., C. P. 116; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1057; 7 L. T. 680. S. P., Bell v. Port of London Assurance Co., 1 L. M. & P. 691.

—— In Scotland.]—An affidavit not intitled in any court, but sworn in Scotland before a commissioner, who states himself to be a commissioner by virtue of a commission from the courts of Common Pleas and Exchequer, is sufficient. White v. Irving, 2 M. & W. 127; 5 D. P. C. 289; 2 Gale, 230; 6 L. J., Ex. 15.

—— In Ireland.]—Where an affidavit was sworn in Ireland, before a commissioner of the common pleas and exchequer:—Held, that the title of the court need not be prefixed to the affidavit when sworn; but that the affidavit might be taken before such commissioner, to be afterwards intitled and used in either court. Perse v. Browning, 1 M. & W. 362; 1 Tyr. & G. 864.

Initialling Alterations.]—A commissioner need not put his initials opposite to an immaterial alteration in an affidavit sworn before him. Imeson, In re, 8 D. P. C. 651.

Effect of Defective Jurat.]—There is no inflexible practice to discharge a rule with costs in all cases where it has been drawn up on reading an affidavit with a defective jurat. Lloyd, In re, 15 Q. B. 612; 19 L. J., Q. B. 457.

Where a rule has been obtained on an affidavit which is defective, in not having a proper jurat, the party moving cannot, when cause is shewn and the objection taken, remove the effect of it, by producing a fresh affidavit similar to the first, with a proper jurat; the proper way is to re-swear the original affidavit, and the court will enlarge the rule for that purpose, or allow the new affidavit to be filed. Goodricke v. Turlay, 4 D. P. C. 392; 2 C. M. & R. 636; 1 Tyr. & G. 146.

Illiterate Deponent.]—See post, cols. 1081, 1082.

Heathen Deponent.]—As to the form of the jurat of answer of a heathen or disbeliever. See Ramkissenseat v. Barker, 1 Atk. 19.

6. When Stale.

Rejection.]—The court will not reject affidavits merely upon the ground of their staleness. Wynne v. Wynne, 2 Scott (N.R.) 615; 9 D. P. C. 306; 5 Jur. 72.

An affidavit more than a year old cannot be used on moving for a rule. Burt v. Owen, 1 D. P. C. 691.

Afterwards, held that such an affidavit may be used in moving for a rule, unless the case is one in which the lapse of time affects the matters of the affidavit. Doe d. Clarke v. Stillwell, 3 N. & P. 701; 1 W. W. & H. 532; 8 A. & E. 645; 2 Jur. 591.

An affidavit is not considered stale till it is a year old. Ramsden v. Maugham, 4 D. P. C. 403; 2 C. M. & R. 643; 1 Tyr. & G. 40.

7. Of Merits.

By whom to be made.]—An affidavit of merits must appear to have been made either by the party himself, or his attorney or agent. Morris v. Hunt, 1 Chit. 97. S. P., Rowbotham v. Dupree, 5 D. P. C. 557.

It may be made by the managing clerk to the defendant's attorney, who may know more of the cause than the attorney himself. Anon., 1 Smith, 61. S. P., Neeson v. Whytock, 3 Taunt. 403.

Or by some person who has had such a connection with the cause as acquaints him with the merits. Rowbotham v. Dupree, 5 D. P. C. 557.

An affidavit by the London agent to the country attorney, stating that he believed, from the instructions received from the country attorney, that the defendant had a good defence to the action on the merits, is sufficient. Schofield v. Huggins, 3 D. P. C. 427. S. P., Johnson v. Popplewell, 2 Tyr. 715.

An affidavit of merits, sworn by the managing clerk of the defendant, must state, not merely that he is the managing clerk generally, but must state that he had the management of the particular cause. Doe d. Fish v. M'Donnell, 8 D. P. C. 501; 4 Jur. 578.

Advice and Belief.]—An affidavit is not sufficient which states that both the defendant and his attorney "are advised and believe" that there is a good defence on the merits. Worthington v. Price, 2 C. M. & R. 315; 5 Tyr. 1029; 4 L. J., Ex. 292.

An attorney must swear positively to his belief of a defence on the merits, and not that he is instructed and advised, as a party may. Ib.

An affidavit, swearing to merits, by the defendant, "as he is advised and believes," is sufficient. Crossby v. Innes, 5 D. P. C. 566; W. W. & D. 192; Westerley v. Kemp, 1 Tyr. 261.

An affidavit by a clerk of the defendant's attorney, in which he deposed that he had the management and conduct of the defence to the action, and that the defendant had been advised by counsel that the defendant had a good defence to the action on the merits, and which the deponent verily believed to be true, is insufficient. Nash v. Swinburn or Swinburne, 4 Scott (N.R.) 326; 1 D. (N.S.) 190; 3 Man. & G. 630.

So an affidavit by a clerk to the defendant's attorney, "that he hath had the conduct of the cause, and is apprised and believes, that the defendant has good grounds of defence upon the merits," not saying, "upon the merits in the cause," is insufficient. Bromley v. Gerish or Geridge, 1 D. & L. 768; 7 Scott (N.R.) 516; 6 Man. & G. 750; 13 L. J., C. P. 16; 7 Jur. 1136.

See further as to information and belief, ante, cols. 1065, 1066.

Affidavit verifying Petition—Statement as to Belief.]—Notwithstanding the 3rd rule of Ord. XXXVII., which provides that "affidavits shall be confined to such facts as the witness is able of his own knowledge to prove, except on interlocutory motions," the common affidavit by a petitioner verifying a petition (according to r. 4, and form 2 of schedule 3 to the General Order of November, 1862) is sufficient, although some of the allegations in the affidavits are only as to belief, and although there are other affidavits in support of the petition, which shew the source of the petitioner's belief:—Semble, that the court will not now consider the question whether a rule of the Order of November, 1862, made under the Companies Act, 1862, is ultra vires. New Callao Co., In re, 47 L. T. 175; 30 W. R. 647—C. A.

Terms.]—Where a defendant swore that he was informed and believed that he had a good, substantial and available defence to the action:—Held, insufficient; and that he ought to have sworn distinctly and in terms to merits. Page v. South, 7 D. P. C. 412.

An affidavit that the defendant has a good defence on the merits, without words applying it to the particular action, is insufficient. Tate v. Bodfield, 3 D. P. C. 218.

So, an affidavit that the defendant had merits, and a good cause of defence to the action, is insufficient. Lane v. Isaacs, 3 D. P. C. 652.

It is not sufficient to say that the deponent believes the defendant has a "defence on the merits"; he should say, "a good defence." Kenney v. Hutchinson, 4 Jur. 106.

When Necessary.]—Where a defendant moves to set aside proceedings for irregularity—as for not giving notice of the execution of a writ of inquiry—it is not necessary to swear to merits. Williams v. Williams, 2 C. & M. 473; 4 Tyr. 368.

Where a defendant makes an affidavit of merits to set aside a judgment, the plaintiff cannot make an affidavit in answer, to shew that the defendant has no merits. Blewitt v. Gordon, 1 D. (N.S.) 815; 6 Jur. 825. S. P., Heane v. Batterby, 3 D. P. C. 213.

8. Filing.

When not allowed.]—The court, under 30 & 31 Vict. c. 44, s. 108 (Ir.), corresponding with the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 35, s. 28, will allow no affidavit to be filed to prove a matter not directly in issue, even after the cause has been heard, but before judgment delivered. Hewson v. Hewson, 20 W. R. 310.

A party to a cause will not, except under special circumstances be allowed to file affidavits after he has cross-examined witnesses on the other side. Mayes v. Mayes, 11 Jur. (N.S.) 1033; 13 L. T. 549; 13 W. R. 169.

Duty of Solicitor.]—Under rr. 10 and 15 of Ord. XXXVIII. it is the imperative duty of the solicitor of any party to any proceedings to cause to be filed every affidavit sworn and used in the course of such proceedings. Taylor v. Gates, 72 L. T. 436—C. A.

Necessity of.]—All affidavits used in court must be filed. Elderton, Ex parte, 2 D. P. C. 560.

Whether the motion is granted or refused. Dicas, Ex parte, 2 D. P. C. 92.

In order to obtain a rule calling on a party to file affidavits which have been used in applying for a rule, the party must first have been expressly required to file them; it is not enough that copies have been demanded, although it is the duty of the party to file them in the first instance. Pilmore v. Hood, 8 D. P. C. 21; 3 Jur. 1153.

Where a party improperly delayed serving a rule, and on that ground the rule was enlarged, the court would not compel the party enlarging the rule to file his affidavits previously to shewing cause. Reg. v. Anderson, 9 D. P. C. 1041.

Motion cannot be grounded on an affidavit to be filed. Reeves v. Nagle, 8 Ir. Eq. R. 521.

Affidavit mentioned in notice to be filed to be used on motion, cannot be read unless actually filed before notice served. Nolan v. Lewis, 2 Moll. 369.

—— Foreign Affidavits.]—Foreign affidavits must be either filed or made exhibits. Hewitson, Ex parte, 1 W. R. 58.

Time for.]—When a plaintiff applies for leave to use, at the hearing of a cause, affidavits and depositions, most of which had been made within the proper time, but through misapprehension none of them filed till after it, the court, on being satisfied as to bona fides, and that no injury could result to the defendant, granted the application. Armstrong v. Armstrong, Ir. R. 7 Eq. 84.

On the hearing of a summons adjourned from chambers into court, affidavits filed after the time fixed by the chief clerk for the filing of the evidence cannot be used before the judge in court unless special leave to use the new affidavits has been given either by the judge or the chief clerk. This rule does not apply where no time has been fixed by the chief clerk for the filing of evidence. Chifferiel, In re, Chifferiel v. Watson, 58 L. J., Ch. 137; 58 L. T. 877; 36 W. R. 806.

An affidavit used on a motion, but not filed until afterwards, may be entered in the order as read, even though the fact of its not having been filed has not been brought to the notice of the court, provided it does not interfere with the date of the order, as where the filing is on the same day. King & Co.'s Trade Mark, In re, 62 L. J., Ch. 153; [1892] 2 Ch. 462; 66 L. T. 491.

An affidavit filed after, but sworn before issue joined, may be read at the hearing without special leave. Nicholl v. Jones, 36 L. J., Ch. 554.

Affidavits filed while a case stands over part heard will not be admitted in evidence if objected to. General Provident Assurance Co., In re, Cross, Ex parte, 38 L. J., Ch. 583.

Affidavits on petitions in bankruptcy may be filed after petition day, but petition must stand over to give time to answer them. Sparrow, Ex parte, 2 Madd. 184.

A petition having received the Lord Chancellor's fiat. The affidavits were filed. An informality being discovered, the petition was then amended, and received the Lord Chancellor's fiat anew, and was ordered by his lordship to be received into the petition paper:—Held, that the petition could not be heard, because the affidavits were filed before the amended petition was regularly in court. Bygrove, Ex parte, 2 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 147.

The court will, at any time previous to the hearing of a motion, postpone the hearing, in order to allow time for filing affidavits; but no affidavits filed after the hearing has begun may be read. Electric Telegraph Co. v. Nott, 2 Coop. C. C. 67; 11 Jur. 273.

It is only in very special cases and not at the option of the parties, that affidavits are admitted on a motion, after it has been opened to the court. East Lancashire Ry. v. Hattersley, 8 Hare, 86.

Where the court directs that affidavits shall be filed on both sides by a certain day, and some of the affidavits on one side happen not to be filed on that day, it is the established rule of the court not to enlarge the order further, that the other side may be required to give an answer to those affidavits. Burton v. Maloon, Barnard. 401.

No objection to a motion that the affidavit was filed only the day before, if it is an affidavit that cannot be answered, as that the plaintiff cannot go to trial with safety until the answer comes in. Jones v. ——, 8 Ves. 46.

Affidavits in answer, filed twenty-four hours before motion made, can be used on it, and always allowed in the costs to the party on whose behalf made, if he gets the costs of the motion. Hynde v. Holmes, 2 Moll. 378.

An affidavit must be filed in time to be read on the day when the application is to be made. Watson v. Fairlie, 4 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 53.

A party cannot, on a motion, use affidavits filed prior to service of notice of motion, or after the day for which notice is given, without giving notice of his intention to do so. Clement v. Griffith, C. P. Cooper, 470.

Affidavits will be received, although filed after a time appointed, if a failure of justice or great inconvenience would be occasioned by their rejection. Anderton v. Yates, 15 Jur. 883.

Where an act of parliament required that to all bills which should be filed under its provisions an affidavit of a certain form should be annexed: —Held, that it was no objection to an affidavit which had been annexed to a bill filed under the act, that it had been sworn three days before the bill was filed. Walker v. Fletcher, 1 Ph. 115; 12 Sim. 420; 11 L. J., Ch. 103; 6 Jur. 4.

Affidavits filed so far back as the day of the notice of motion may be used on the motion, although the notice was not served until some days after the day of its date. Bowdler v. Bowdler, 9 L. J., Ch. 394.

On a motion to discharge an order made by the Vice-Chancellor, affidavits may be read, sworn after the order was made, and stating facts which were not before the Vice-Chancellor. Const v. Barr, 2 Russ. 161.

Affidavit sworn in June and not filed until the next February after the death of the person swearing it, was received as evidence quantum valeat. Morley v. Morley, 5 De G. M. & G. 610; 25 L. J., Ch. 1; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1097; 4 W. R. 75.

An affidavit sworn on the day before the filing of the bill, is not admissible in evidence. Fennall v. Brown (18 Jur. 1051), not followed. Francome v. Francome, 5 N. R. 289; 12 L. T. 123.

Extending Time.]—The court, upon reasonable ground being shewn, will extend the time within which affidavits must be filed. Reg. v. Keen, 4 D. & L. 622; 1 B. C. Rep. 285; 11 Jur. 308.

Where additional time for filing affidavits is required, application for an extension of time ought, in the first instance, to be made to the opposite solicitor. Moclare v. Moclare, 8 Ir. Ch. R. 610.

Affidavits by way of evidence should only contain legal evidence directed to the matters put in issue by the pleadings. Ib.

Where it appears that the plaintiff's evidence under the new practice cannot be completed within the prescribed time, the court will enlarge the time, though there have been already several orders for enlarging the time. McIntosh v. G. W. Ry., 2 W. R. 439.

Where notice of replication filed was not served on the defendant until after a month from the actual filing of the replication, the court refused to set aside the service for irregularity, or to take the replication off the file, but enlarged the time for closing the evidence to eight weeks from the service of the notice, exclusive of the long vacation, and gave no costs, the defendant not having previously communicated with the plaintiff. Lloyd v. Solicitors' and General Life Assurance Society, 3 Eq. Rep. 951.

Where a witness has been examined upon affidavit, four weeks additional beyond the nine weeks will be allowed before the evidence will be closed, and the plaintiff will have four weeks beyond the first four weeks to set down his cause for hearing, before the expiration of which no motion to dismiss can be made. Jenkyn v. Vaughan, 3 Eq. Rep. 300; 3 W. R. 151.

Time for Defendant to file Affidavits where Plaintiff files none.]—In an action in which the evidence is directed to be taken by affidavit, and no affidavits are filed by the plaintiff, the time for the filing of the defendant's affidavits does not commence to run (in the absence of an agreement between the parties, or a special order limiting such time), until the plaintiff gives the defendant express notice that he does not intend to file affidavits. Eames v. Brady, 5 L. R., Ir. 580.

Re-swearing.]—A party is not precluded from using an affidavit sworn before the day fixed, but re-sworn after that day, for the purpose of rectifying a mistake in the jurat. Ouchterlony v. Gibson, 5 Man. & G. 579.

In Enlarged Rules.]—Affidavits to shew cause against an enlarged rule must be filed a week before the term to which it is enlarged. Gilson v. Carr, 4 D. P. C. 618.

Although not so expressed in the rule of enlargement. Barker v. Richardson, 1 Y. & J. 362; 30 R. R. 795.

And the court will refuse to hear affidavits filed afterwards. Turner v. Unwin, 1 H. & W. 186. S. P., Wright v. Lewis, 8 D. P. C. 298; 4 Jur. 124.

Unless clearly shewn that the not filing them arose from inevitable accident. Ib.

When a rule is enlarged upon the motion of the party required to shew cause, that the affidavits used against the rule shall be filed a certain number of days before the ensuing term, the party cannot use affidavits which have not been so filed, and he will not be allowed a further postponement of the rule, unless he has been prevented by some special cause from filing his affidavits within the time. Cosby v. Betts, 3 Man. & G. 882.

A rule having been enlarged, upon the terms that all affidavits to be used in shewing cause should be filed one week before the ensuing term, the court nevertheless allowed the plaintiff to shew cause upon an affidavit sworn and filed for the purposes of the motion to enlarge. Chambers v. Bryant, 2 D. (N.S.) 671; 12 L. J., Q. B. 139.

Where a rule is enlarged from one term to another, and the rule states that affidavits to be used on shewing cause are to be filed by a certain day before the term, if affidavits are filed accordingly, and the other party takes office copies of them, the latter has a right to use them, though the party filing them may not be desirous of doing so. Price v. Hayman, 4 M. & W. 8; 7 D. P. C. 47; 1 H. & H. 191; 7 L. J., Ex. 297.

Waiver of Objection.]—Affidavits not having been filed within a prescribed time, an objection was raised to them on that ground; but the party raising the objection having taken copies of the affidavits, held precluded from availing himself of the objection. Mackay, In re, 1 D. & L. 206; 12 L. J., Q. B. 337; 7 Jur. 945.

Excuses.]—Poverty and residence of the party at a distance from London are no excuses for not filing them in time. Lewis v. Kirby, 8 Scott, 179.

Or when he omits, by excusable accident, to do so, the court will only grant a rule nisi for him to use such affidavits. Pryor v. Swaine, 2 D. & L. 37; 13 L. J., Q. B. 214.

Used at Chambers.]—Where affidavits used before a judge out of court are required to be produced before the ordinary time for returning them, the proper course is to give notice to the judge's clerk to that effect. Needham v. Bristow, 1 D. (N.S.) 700.

Not in Writing of Special Examiner.]—A witness's depositions de bene esse, not taken down by the examiner, specially appointed, in his own handwriting, as directed by 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 32, but taken down in the presence of the other parties and certified by the examiner to have been read over to the witness and signed by her in his presence, were, under Ord. XXXVII. r. 4, ordered to be filed. Bolton v. Bolton, 2 Ch. D. 217; 34 L. T. 123; 24 W. R. 426.

Interlineation—Jurisdiction of Masters.]—A Master of the Queen's Bench Division has no jurisdiction to initial an interlineation in an affidavit sworn in support of an application in the Chancery Division. According to the practice in the Chancery Division, such an affidavit ought not to be filed without an order of the court. Cloake, In re, 61 L. J., Ch. 69; 65 L. T. 455; 40 W. R. 74.

Effect of Delay.]—Where unnecessary delay in filing affidavits had taken place, injunction granted till next seal, with liberty to file affidavits. Carew v. Yates, 1 W. R. 11.

After Evidence Closed.]—After the time for closing the evidence in a cause has expired, the court will not, under the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 38, extend it, except under special circumstances. Thompson v. Partridge, 4 De G. M. & G. 794; 2 Eq. R. 73; 23 L. J., Ch. 158; 17 Jur. 1108; 2 W. R. 113.

Both parties may abstain from filing their affidavits till immediately before the expiration of the time fixed for closing the evidence. Ib.

Therefore where the time for closing the evidence in a suit, after having been once enlarged at the instance of the plaintiff, had been fixed, the court, holding the grounds alleged to be insufficient, refused to enlarge the time for closing the evidence upon the application of the defendant, grounded upon an affidavit stating that, having received notice of affidavits filed by the plaintiff only on the last day of the time so fixed, he, the defendant, took copies thereof, and submitted them to counsel, who thereupon advised him to enter into evidence, although before he had seen those affidavits he had advised him not to do so. Ib.

Three days after the time fixed for closing evidence had expired, the plaintiff filed an affidavit, founded upon allegations which appeared in an affidavit of the defendant, and containing matter which, as was alleged, ought properly to have been brought forward by way of reply:—Held, on motion, that the plaintiff was at liberty to read such affidavit at the hearing; the time for cross-examination to be enlarged for one month. Phillips v. Wardle, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 608; 4 W. R. 305.

The plaintiff moved under the 38th section of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, on notice immediately before the hearing of a cause, for leave to read thereat an affidavit already sworn, or that the time for closing the evidence might be enlarged, on the ground that the defendant's affidavits were not filed till the day when the evidence closed. The plaintiff deposed that such affidavit was necessary. The court gave special leave to read the affidavit, and the defendant not requiring to answer the affidavit, the court directed the cause to proceed, reserving to the defendant all right of examination, if asked. Hope v. Threlfall, 1 Sm. & G. (App.) xxi.; 2 Eq. R. 49; 17 Jur. 1021; 2 W. R. 4.

Leave granted, after time for closing evidence had passed, to file affidavits verifying extracts from a register of a Scotch court of law. M'Lachlan v. Lord, 14 L. T. 98.

Semble, where an affidavit, filed after the expiration of the period for closing the evidence, relates to matters which happened after that period, the court may take upon itself at the hearing, and without a special application, to give leave for its admission. Boyse v. Colclough, 1 Kay & J. 124; 24 L. J., Ch. 7; 3 Eq. R. 78; 3 W. R. 8.

Where the plaintiffs, by affidavits filed immediately before the time for closing evidence, made specific charges against two of the defendants' witnesses, with a view to discredit their testimony, the bill not clearly raising any issue which could prepare the defendants to meet such charges, though the persons against whom they were made were named in the bill in connection with the transaction as to which their evidence was given:—Held, that an order allowing the defendants to file affidavits as to these charges, after the time for closing the evidence, had been properly made. Scott v. Liverpool Corporation, 1 De G. & J. 369; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 832. Affirming 26 L. J., Ch. 651.

By inadvertence, an affidavit was not filed until after the evidence had closed, though prepared before. The court, on motion, gave liberty to use it on payment of the costs of the motion. Douglas v. Archbutt, 23 Beav. 293; 5 W. R. 393.

A witness made an affidavit on behalf of the plaintiff on the 10th November, 1856, and died on the 10th May, 1857. On the 22nd May, the day appointed for closing the evidence, the plaintiff filed this affidavit. Held, that although the affidavit ought to have been filed before, and had lost much of its value, it could not be taken off the file. Abadom v. Abadom, 24 Beav. 243.

There must be some special reason for allowing further evidence to be filed. If at the hearing it is found that the defendants have been taken by surprise, an opportunity of producing further evidence will be given them. Poupard v. Fardell, 18 W. R. 37.

After evidence is closed the court will not, under 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 38, allow new evidence to be received on the ground that a material witness has since been discovered, whose evidence the party who desired that the affidavit of such witness should be filed, had no previous means of knowing to be obtainable. Thexton v. Edmonston, 37 L. J., Ch. 329; L. R. 5 Eq. 373; 16 W. R. 833.

It is not of itself a sufficient ground for admitting evidence in a cause after the time for closing evidence has expired that material evidence has been discovered since that time. Ib.

Circumstances under which the court will receive such evidence. Ib.

After the time for closing evidence has expired, application, to read further affidavits, should be made at the hearing. Bayley v. Cass, 10 W. R. 370.

In a cause where replication is filed, if the question turns upon a particular matter of fact not specifically alleged in the pleadings, the court will not give the defendant leave to put in further evidence after the evidence is closed, but will at the hearing direct an inquiry as to such fact. Weston v. Empire Assurance Corporation, L. R. 6 Eq. 23.

9. Taking off File.

Irregularity.]—Semble, the court will not take the deposition of a witness off the file for irregularity in taking it. De Britto v. Hillel, 42 L. J., Ch. 307; L. R. 15 Eq. 213; 28 L. T. 59; 21 W. R. 379.

Notice was given by the party that had obtained a commission to examine witnesses at Lisbon that their agent was proceeding there, and notice of the time and place of examination could be obtained of him at the hotel D. at Lisbon. The court refused to take the deposition of a witness examined at Lisbon off the file. Ib.

The court has power to dispense with notice under r. 22 of the Orders of the 5th February, 1861, ex post facto. Ib.

—— Illiterate Witness.]—Affidavits made by an illiterate person were sworn with the usual form of jurat not containing the certificate required by Ord. XXXVIII. r. 13. The managing clerk of the deponent's solicitor deposed that he had prepared the affidavits from the deponent's personal instructions, that he carefully read them over to him before they were sworn, and that the deponent appeared perfectly to understand them. It was not, however, deposed that the affidavits were read over in the presence of the commissioner:—Held, that there was no sufficient evidence to satisfy the court that the affidavits were read over to and appeared to be perfectly understood by the deponent within the meaning of Ord. XXXVIII. r. 13, and that the affidavits must be taken off the file. Longstaffe, In re, Blenkarn v. Longstaffe, 54 L. J., Ch. 516; 52 L. T. 681.

Where an answer is put in by a defendant who cannot read or write, his solicitor swears to having read the contents of the answer to the defendant, and that he appeared perfectly to understand the same, and this is stated in the jurat; where, therefore, the jurat stated the answer to have been read over to the defendant by one of the commissioners, and that the defendant appeared to understand it, the answer was on motion taken off the file for irregularity, with costs. Att.-Gen. v. Malim, Younge, 376.

Where an answer had been put in by an illiterate defendant, unaccompanied by any affidavit by his solicitor, as to its having been read over and explained to him previous to his being sworn, and the jurat did not state that he had affixed his mark to it in the presence of the commissioners; ordered, upon motion, that the answer should be taken off the file for irregularity, with costs. Objections to the form of this part of an answer cannot be waived by the parties to the suit. Pilkington v. Himsworth, 1 Y. & Coll. 612; 5 L. J., Ex. Eq. 47.

The court held the jurat on taking an answer to be regular, though the officer who signed it did not add his description to his name, and though, it being the case of an illiterate party, there was no statement that he appeared to understand the answer. Wilton v. Clifton, 2 Hare, 535; 12 L. J., Ch. 425; 7 Jur. 215. And see Johnson v. Todd, 5 Beav. 597.

Witness examined ex parte.]—In a cause in which notice of motion for decree was given, a witness was examined ex parte. On a motion to take the deposition off the file for irregularity:—Held, that the deposition was taken irregularly, but under the circumstances it was ordered to stand on the file, with liberty for the opposite party to cross-examine. Smith v. Baker, 2 Hem. & M. 498; 4 N. R. 321; 10 L. T. 599.

The plaintiff, replication not having been filed, subpœnaed before the examiner some witnesses who had refused to make affidavits. The examination took place, and the depositions were treated as ex parte by the examiner, notwithstanding a protest by counsel. The plaintiff subsequently gave notice of motion for a decree, reference to these depositions being appended to the notice; and defendant afterwards applied for an enlargement of the time for answering the plaintiff's motion. On motion by defendant that these depositions might be taken off the file as being ex parte and irregular:—Held, that s. 40 of 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, was confined to proceedings actually before the court; and that notice of the motion for a decree not having been given at the time of the examination, it was irregular; but that defendant, having had notice of plaintiff's intention to use the depositions on the hearing of the motion for a decree, and having applied for further time to answer the motion which rested on them, without complaining of them as having been taken ex parte, could not now complain. Coles v. Morris, 36 L. J., Ch. 833; 17 L. T. 155; 15 W. R. 1157.

For Purpose of being Used in another Case.]—The court will not allow documents, necessary evidence in a case sub judice, to be taken off the file for the purpose of being sent out of the kingdom for identification by witnesses to be examined abroad upon a mandamus in an action brought in another court. Stephens, In re, L. R. 9 C. P. 187; 22 W. R. 615.

Where a plan has been filed in support of a motion, at the instance of a particular party, and which has been disposed of, the court will not allow that plan to be taken off the file, at the instance of the same party, in order to enable him to make a defence to another proceeding. Price v. Seeley, 8 D. P. C. 653.

Objection to, for want of Form.]—In an affidavit the words "severally make oath and say" were omitted by mistake:—Held, that the affidavits could not be objected to on that ground after it had been filed. Torkington, Ex parte, Torkington, In re, L. R. 9 Ch. 298; 22 W. R. 602.

Petition and affidavits in support, filed under an incorrect title. The petition was amended and affidavits were ordered to be taken off file, amended as to title, and re-sworn. Burton, Ex parte, 18 L. J., Bk. 17 ; 13 Jur. 297 ; Id. 420.

Affidavits erroneously entitled allowed to be taken off the file and re-sworn in their proper title, without a fresh stamp. Pearson v. Wilcox, 1 Eq. Rep. 239 ; 10 Hare (App.) xxxv. ; 1 W. R. 492.

Motion to take off File.]—A motion to take off the file the affidavits of a deponent who, after an order to attend before the examiner at his own expense, had not been produced for cross-examination, is irregular, as the affidavits could not be used as evidence except by special leave. Meyrick v. James, 46 L. J., Ch. 579.

Discretion.]—The court has a discretion to take affidavits or depositions off the file, at the request of the parties or otherwise. Fox v. Bearblock, 46 L. T. 145 ; 30 W. R. 342—C. A. See also Cracknell v. Janson, 48 L. J., Ch. 168 ; 11 Ch. D. 1 ; 39 L. T. 32 ; 27 W. R. 55.

Cross-examination—Withdrawal of Affidavit.]—Where a person has made and filed an affidavit for the purpose of being used in a matter pending before the court, he cannot be exempted from cross-examination by the withdrawal of the affidavit. Clarke v. Law (2 K. & J. 28) approved, and held to be applicable where the person making the affidavit is not a party to the proceedings. Quartz Hill Consolidated Gold Mining Co., In re, Young, Ex parte, 51 L. J., Ch. 940 ; 21 Ch. D. 642 ; 31 W. R. 173—C. A.

In the High Court the deponent can be cross-examined even if the affidavit were not used by the party who filed it. Child, Ex parte, Ottaway, In re, 51 L. J., Ch. 494 ; 20 Ch. D. 126 ; 46 L. T. 118 ; 30 W. R. 282.

Affidavits in Reply—Leave at Trial to Answer.]—Affidavits filed by a plaintiff in reply will not upon interlocutory motion be ordered to be taken off the file upon an allegation by the defendant that they are not confined to matters strictly in reply ; though at the hearing, if it should turn out to be so, the court will not regard them, or may give leave to the defendant to answer them. Gilbert v. Comedy Opera Co., 16 Ch. D. 594 ; 43 L. T. 665 ; 29 W. R. 169.

Other Cases.]—Where an affidavit was made by one who had been convicted of subornation of perjury, the court made a rule absolute to take it off the file. Sawyer, In re, 2 G. & D. 141 ; 2 Q. B. 721 ; 11 L. J., Q. B. 234. S. P., Holmes v. Grant, 1 Gale, 59.

Although affidavits cannot be read in reply, yet the court will under particular circumstances, either grant a rule for taking off the file an affidavit into which matters have been introduced, disclosed in professional confidence, or for preventing such portions of the affidavit from being read. Bury v. Clench, 1 D. (N.S.) 848 ; 6 Jur. 346.

When a rule calling on an attorney to answer the matters of an affidavit is discharged by consent, the court will not allow the affidavits filed in support of the rule to be taken off the file. Anon., 12 W. R. 1012.

When an affidavit has been read and filed, it becomes a record of the court, and cannot be taken off the file. Beal v. Langstaff, 2 Wils. 371. S. P., Plant v. Butterworth, 5 Tyr. 183.

Where Scandalous.]—See post, col. 1093, et seq.

10. EXHIBITS.

When inadmissible in Evidence.]—A witness who made an affidavit on behalf of a plaintiff, had at another time made statements to the solicitor for the defendant which were inconsistent with those which he made in his affidavit. The solicitor had taken down these statements in writing at the time, and the witness had signed the written statement. The solicitor made this statement an exhibit to an affidavit which he made in the cause on behalf of the defendant :—Held, that this exhibit was inadmissible. Hemming v. Maddick, 41 L. J., Ch. 522 ; L. R. 7 Ch. 395 ; 26 L. T. 565 ; 20 W. R. 433.

The proper way to make it admissible would have been to summon the witness for cross-examination, and to put the written statement into his hand and question him upon it, but even then it could only be used to discredit him. Ib.

What may be.]—A statutory declaration made in New South Wales by husband and wife will be allowed to be annexed as an exhibit to an affidavit filed in the cause. Whiting v. Bassett, 41 L. J., Ch. 551 ; L. R. 14 Eq. 70.

Foreign affidavits must be either filed or made exhibits. Hewitson, Ex parte, 1 W. R. 58.

Certificate as to.]—A commissioner before whom an affidavit is sworn, ought to certify that any exhibit annexed is the document referred to in the affidavit. Allison, In re, 10 Ex. 561 ; 3 C. L. R. 319 ; 3 W. R. 62.

Handing in.]—Documents referred to in affidavits, and exhibited, must be handed in with the affidavits, and remain in court until the matter, in respect of which the affidavits are sworn, has been disposed of. Attenborough v Clark, 2 H. & N. 588.

Retained by Deponent—Production.]—The committee of a lunatic jointly interested with the lunatic in certain property under a will, being desirous of having the trusts of the will administered, obtained leave to add the lunatic as a co-plaintiff in the action on affidavit evidence with certain exhibits, which, according to the present practice, are not filed with the affidavit but retained by the deponent. The lunatic died, and her executor, disapproving of the action, and desiring to impeach the proceedings of the committee, demanded all the documents in the possession of the committee, including the exhibits to the above-mentioned affidavit. The committee refused to produce them :—Held, that the exhibits being described in the affidavit as "hereto annexed," were part of the evidence, and that the committee was bound to produce them. Hinchliffe, In re, 64 L. J., Ch. 76 ; [1895] 1 Ch. 117 ; 12 R. 33 ; 71 L. T. 532 ; 43 W. R. 82—C. A.

Copies.]—Where exhibits have been made in the course of an inquiry before the Master, the court will not, after the conclusion of the inquiry, compel the party exhibiting to give copies of those exhibits to his opponent. Devonport v. Jones, 8 D. P. C. 497 ; 4 Jur. 720.

Parties are not bound to take office copies of exhibits. Hawkyard or Hawks v. Stocks, 2 D. & L. 936 ; 9 Jur. 451.

If a paper is used as an exhibit in connection with an affidavit, but is not annexed thereto, the party against whom it is exhibited is entitled to have a copy in the same manner as though it were filed. Tebbut v. Ambler, 3 Jur. 435; 7 D. P. C. 674.

Erasures.]—An erasure in an affidavit occurring in a recital of the contents of an exhibit, is immaterial. Savage v. Hutchinson, 3 Eq. R. 368; 24 L. J., Ch. 232.

How Identified.]—It is not enough to identify a document that it should be inseparably connected with and referred to as so connected in the affidavit. The document must be impressed with some mark to which the affidavit refers. Hewetson v. Todhunter, 2 Sm. & G. (App.) ii.

An affidavit connected by a ribbon under a consular seal with a copy of a deed, referring to the deed and stating that the copy is correct, but where the paper so annexed contains no reference to the affidavit, is irregular, and may not be filed. Neither will it be received valeat quantum. S. C., 2 W. R. 298.

11. Office Copies.

Proof by.]—It being necessary to prove the death of a person, office copies of affidavits, which had proved that death to the satisfaction of the Courts of Chancery and of Probate in other matters, were allowed to be taken as sufficient evidence of the death in the present case. Woolley's Trusts, In re, 24 W. R. 783.

On an application for a new trial one of the witnesses made an affidavit. The same witness was called on the second trial. It was proposed to cross-examine the witness from an office copy of her affidavit, which was ordered by the judge's order (in the usual form) to be admitted as a true copy:—Held, that this might be done, and that it was not necessary to have the original affidavit to cross-examine upon. Davies v. Davies, 9 Car. & P. 252.

In an action for maliciously holding plaintiff to bail, the declaration stated, that defendant had sued out the writ, which he caused to be indorsed for bail, by virtue of an affidavit for that purpose filed:—Held, that a copy of the affidavit was admissible in support of this allegation. Cook v. Dowling, 3 Doug. 75.

Necessity of Taking.]—The court will in no case dispense with the practice which requires a party shewing cause against a rule to take office copies of the affidavits upon which it is moved. Chaffers, In re, L. R. 8 C. P. 376.

A party who has not taken office copies of affidavits cannot be heard to shew cause against a rule. Hilton v. Green, 10 W. R. 627.

An office copy is the only evidence the court will admit of the filing of the affidavit. North, Ex parte, Buck. 396.

Where counsel, on appearing to shew cause, is not prepared with office copies of the affidavits, on which a rule has been obtained, it is a matter of discretion in the court, whether time shall be allowed to take office copies. Rogers, In re, 9 D. P. C. 926.

The practice that, when cause is to be shewn in a different term from that in which a rule nisi was obtained, office copies of the affidavits on which the rule was moved, must be taken by the party intending to shew cause before he can be heard, applies equally to motions for an attachment as to other motions. Reg. v. Carttar, 1 L. M. & P. 274; 19 L. J., Q. B. 422; 15 Jur. 176.

That office copies of affidavits upon which a rule is moved have not been taken, is not an objection which the court will entertain after the argument has been allowed to commence. Mason v. Haddan, 6 C. B. (N.S.) 526.

On shewing cause against a rule nisi for a new trial in a cause tried before the sheriff, the party shewing cause must be provided not only with an office copy of the affidavits on which the rule was obtained, but of the sheriff's notes also. Walker v. Needham, 3 Man. & G. 557; 4 Scott (N.R.) 222; 1 D. (N.S.) 220.

Office copies of affidavits were dispensed with on the hearing of an appeal, on the ground of expense, and an order was made that the officer having the custody of the original affidavits should attend with them upon the hearing of the appeal. Sickles v. Norris, 45 L. J., C. P. 148; 24 W. R. 102—C. A.

Cause cannot be shewn till an office copy is taken of the affidavit on which the rule nisi was obtained. Brown v. Probert, 1 D. P. C. 659.

Office Copy of Office Copy.]—The plaintiff in an action of ejectment on a judgment-mortgage, omitted to prove that the actual office copy of the affidavit on the judgment had been lodged in the registry office as required by the act, but produced an office copy of the document lodged there:—Held, that the office copy last mentioned was sufficient evidence that the document lodged in the registry office was the actual office copy of the affidavit. Moriarty v. Moriarty, 18 W. R. 145.

Costs.]—If notice that certain affidavits will be read at the hearing of appeal be given to one of the parties, to the admission of which he objects, his proper course is to inform the party, who has given him notice, of his objection, and to oppose their reading at the opening of the appeal without having taken copies, and, if the court decides that they are admissible, to ask for time to furnish himself with copies. If, however, he has previously taken copies, and the affidavits be not read, he will have to bear the cost of the copies, although he gets the cost of the appeal. Brampton and Longtown Ry., In re, Shaw's Claim, 44 L. J., Ch. 670; L. R. 10 Ch. 186; 33 L. T. 5; 23 W. R. 813.

12. User of.

a. Generally.

Power of Court.]—The court, if it be of an opinion that such a course is necessary for the purposes of justice, has authority to exclude affidavit evidence altogether, and to direct that the same shall not be used, but that the witnesses shall be examined orally at the trial. Lovell v. Wallis, 53 L. J., Ch. 494; 49 L. T. 593.

On motion for judgment the court has no power under the Rules of Court, 1875, to order that the evidence shall be taken by affidavit. Ellis v. Robbins, 50 L. J., Ch. 512.

Where Inquiry Pending.]—The court will not try by affidavits a fact, respecting which an inquiry is pending before the Master. Stag v. Grey (Earl), 4 Jur. 1007.

Where Not the Best Evidence.]—On interlocutory applications, which are necessarily heard upon affidavits, the court does not dispense with the rule, that on disputed points, the best evidence in the power of the parties must be given; and therefore, it is not sufficient for a party to state, upon affidavit, the purport and effect of a document which he has the means of producing. Stamps v. Birmingham, Wolverhampton, and Stour Valley Ry., 7 Hare, 251; 2 Ph. 673; 17 L. J., Ch. 431.

To Control Deed.]—Affidavits are inadmissible to control the operation of a deed. Cowlishaw v. Hardy, 25 Beav. 169.

When Sworn.]—An affidavit sworn before the bill was filed cannot be used on a motion for an injunction. Bowen v. Bowen, Ir. R. 7 Eq. 251.

An application, that affidavits in support of an interim injunction might be received in evidence, notwithstanding that they were sworn before the filing of the bill, refused. Francome v. Francome, 11 Jur. (N.S.) 123; 11 L. T. 757; 13 W. R. 355.

Upon an interlocutory motion, counsel are entitled to use any affidavit which is in existence at the time when they are called upon to address the court. Munroe v. Wivenhoe and Brightlingsea Ry., 4 De G. J. & S. 723; 12 L. T. 562; 13 W. R. 880.

Affidavits by a defendant before pleading allowed to be used in support of a motion. Kitchen v. Turnbull, 20 W. R. 253.

Although unfiled affidavits may be read on an ex parte application, they cannot be read when the respondent has been served but does not appear, and the application is made on affidavit of service on him of the notice of motion. Furrer v. Sykes, 43 L. J., Ch. 392.

The court refused to allow an affidavit (on which a rule for a new trial had been obtained), sworn after the first four days of the term, to be used in support of the rule, though (the cause having been entered in the list of motions for new trials) the rule had in fact been obtained after the affidavit was sworn. Williams v. Mortimer, 11 M. & W. 104; 12 L. J., Ex. 164.

It is no objection to an affidavit used in opposing a motion, that it has been sworn after the day upon which the rule was due, if sworn before cause is actually shewn. Graham v. Beaumont, 5 D. P. C. 49; 3 Scott, 287; 5 L. J., C. P. 270. S. P., Braine v. Hunt, 2 D. P. C. 391. Pin v. Grazebrook, 3 Man. & G. 863; 4 Scott (N.R.) 567. Hicks v. Marreco, 3 Tyr. 216.

Cross Suits.] — On the day on which the evidence was closed in a suit in which replication had been filed, the plaintiffs in a cross suit served notice of motion for decree in their suit. A month's time was obtained by the plaintiff in the original suit for putting in his evidence upon the motion for decree, and the plaintiffs in the cross suit subsequently filed a large mass of affidavits in reply. On motion by the plaintiff in the original suit to suppress this evidence in reply, on the ground that it was an unfair attempt by the plaintiffs in the cross suit to obtain an advantage by putting in new evidence on matters in issue in the original suit after publication had passed: — Held, that there had been no such irregularity on the part of the plaintiffs in the cross cause in the conduct of their suit, as to justify the court in suppressing the evidence filed by them in reply, but that the cross-examination in court would be directed upon the affidavits in reply notwithstanding such affidavits were filed in a suit intended to be heard on motion for decree. Hall v. Hargreaves, 40 L. J., Ch. 255; L. R. 11 Eq. 414; 24 L. T. 126; 19 W. R. 560.

In Different Suits.] — Two days before the closing of the evidence, the defendant obtained an order of course to use at the hearing the bill and some affidavits in another suit instituted by the same plaintiffs, but raising a different issue. The court, being of opinion that the order was obtained because the defendant's own evidence was not ready, discharged the order with costs. Peru Republic v. Ruzo, 32 L. T. 598; 23 W. R. 546.

Though against the same defendant, there must be affidavit in every cause that he is not to be found. Lumbrozo v. White, Dick. 150.

On Appeals and Renewed Applications.]—In the absence of arrangement, affidavits used on a motion cannot be used at the hearing of the cause except by agreement between the parties. Perkins v. Slater, 45 L. J., Ch. 224; 1 Ch. D. 83; 24 W. R. 39.

Affidavits, which had been used before the chief clerk, were rejected by the Vice-Chancellor, on the ground that no notice of intention to read them had been given by the defendant. The plaintiff in his notice of appeal gave notice of motion for leave to read them on the appeal:— Held, that they were "further evidence," within the meaning of Ord. LVIII. r. 5, and leave to read them was given. Chennell, In re, Jones v. Chennell, 47 L. J., Ch. 80; 8 Ch. D. 492; 38 L. T. 494; 26 W. R. 595.

Further Consideration — Affidavit not before Chief Clerk.]—Where proceedings in an action had been carried on under an order made in pursuance of Ord. XV., and there had been no trial of the action, the court, on further consideration of the action, allowed an affidavit to be read which had not been before the chief clerk, and therefore was not mentioned in the certificate. Michael, In re, Dessau v. Lewin, 52 L. T. 609.

Filed on Interlocutory Motion.]—At the trial of a cause with vivâ voce evidence, the court admitted in evidence an affidavit filed upon an interlocutory motion which had been ordered to stand over to the hearing, although the deponent had since died, and had not been cross-examined. Elias v. Griffith, 46 L. J., Ch. 806.

Affidavits in support of a motion, which the plaintiff is prevented from making, may be read, if the answer is not filed until the day for which the notice is given. Semble, Goodman v. Whitcomb, 1 Jac. & Walk. 589.

Admissibility.] — Affidavits made by third persons on behalf of the plaintiff upon an interlocutory application, are admissible as evidence against him at the trial. Campbell v. Rothwell, 38 L. T. 33.

A party shewing cause against a rule has a right to read an affidavit of his filed in court, which was made in support of a former application for a rule involving the same question, and of which the other side took an office copy. Ryan v. Smith, 9 M. & W. 223; 11 L. J., Ex. 77.

Where a rule obtained in the name of the plaintiff to set aside an order had been discharged on an affidavit of the plaintiff, that the application was made without his authority or consent, the court allowed a second application to be made on the same affidavits in the name of the party on whose behalf the action was brought. Tilt v. Dixon, 4 C. B. 736; 17 L. J., C. P. 61.

Where an affidavit has been used on one rule, it cannot be used on another, to prove facts stated in it, which, though material on the second rule, were immaterial on the first. Reg. v. Mixen, 1 D. (N.S.) 865.

Affidavits sworn in opposition to one rule, on which the allegations in them may be immaterial, cannot be used without reswearing, in opposition to another rule, on which they may become material, although the same question might be intended to be raised on the first rule, which was actually raised on the second. Quelly v. Boucher, 3 D. P. C. 107; 1 Scott, 283.

An affidavit sworn in order to resist an application to a judge at chambers, may be used on showing cause before the court against the same application, if referred by the judge to the court. Worthington v. Price, 5 Tyr. 1029.

So, affidavits sworn at chambers, and used before the judge, may be used in court on moving to set aside the order. Pickford v. Ewington, 1 Gale, 357.

Made after Notice of Trial.]—Evidence by affidavit taken under a judge's order after notice of trial has been given, may be used at the trial notwithstanding R. S. C. (1875) Ord. XXXVIII. r. 6. Waring v. Lacey, 24 W. R. 318.

At Hearing.]—An affidavit, which was filed to verify a fact, of which the court at the hearing required some information, was received. Gay's Case, 1 De G. M. & G. 347; 21 L. J., Ch. 284; 16 Jur. 183.

Altered.]—An affidavit cannot be used if altered after it is sworn. Wright v. Skinner, 5 D. P. C. 92.

Of Opposite Party.]—A petitioner may read as his evidence a portion of a respondent's affidavit, without making the whole his evidence. Archbold v. Scully, 9 Ir. Ch. R. 152.

Though a petitioner may read a portion of the respondent's affidavit by way of answer without making the whole his own evidence, he cannot read any other affidavit filed on behalf of the respondent without making the whole his own evidence. Farrer v. Mercer, 10 Ir. Ch. R. 502.

Shewing to Opponent.]—Affidavits intended to be used on shewing cause against a rule should be handed to the opposite party. Reg. v. Hudson, 9 Jur. 355.

As to Practice.]—Affidavits cannot be read as to practice. Christy, Ex parte, Barrow, In re, 3 Mont. & Ayr. 94. See S. C., 2 Deac. 113; 6 L. J., Bk. 68.

As to Proceedings.]—Affidavit verifying proceedings at law, not evidence, and taken off the file with costs. Barnes, Ex parte, Mont. & M'Ar. 9.

Where Evidence taken Orally—Former Practice in Chancery.]—Where, before the month of January, 1855, issue was joined in a cause in which the plaintiff elected to take evidence orally, and had examined his witnesses, a defendant applied, under the 7th order of January 13th, 1855, for leave to prove his case by affidavit, Lord Justice Turner, agreeing with the master of the rolls in the particular case before the court, refused the application. Musgrove v. Smith, 24 L. J., Ch. 439.

When the evidence in a cause is taken orally, a general application, under the 36th section of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, to be at liberty to use at the hearing affidavits already filed, is irregular. The particular facts or circumstances proposed to be proved by affidavits should be specified both in the notice of motion and in the order. Ivison v. Grassiot, 17 Beav. 321.

Case in which a plaintiff was held not to be entitled to take the evidence of a witness on his behalf by affidavit under the 36th section of the statute 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86. Crofts v. Middleton, 9 Hare (App.), xviii.

Undertaking not to use.]—An affidavit in a suit, but being objected to was withdrawn, on an undertaking that it should not be used at the hearing, and it was not used accordingly. On an inquiry in the suit the same affidavit was sought to be used, but objected to on the ground that the undertaking precluded its being used at all: —Held, admissible. Jenner v. Morris, 10 W. R. 640.

b. Notice to Read.

When required.]—Where affidavits are intended to be read in support of a motion made on notice, the general rule of the court requires that notice that such affidavits are filed, and are intended to be read, be given, in the notice of motion; and unless this be done, the affidavits cannot be read. The rule does not apply to affidavits of service of notices of motion. Rock v. Unett, Younge, 268.

Answering an affidavit is a waiver of any objection which might be taken to it, on the ground of notice not having been given that it was to be used. Blackmore v. Glamorganshire Canal Co., 5 Russ. 151.

Affidavits taken before notice of motion cannot be read on motion without notice of reading them, unless they are answered subsequent, and with reference to the notice of motion. Longman v. Tyson, per Vice-Chancellor, 10th November, 1829.

Case in which affidavits filed before the bankrupt and wife were made parties to the suit, were used against the assignee, though no notice was given that they would be read. Pearson v. Kensit, 6 Jur. 982.

If a plaintiff gives notice of his intention to read an affidavit on the hearing of a motion, but declines to do so, the defendant is nevertheless entitled to read it. Cauty v. Houlditch, 14 Sim. 75.

Where notice is given to read affidavits on motion, and they are actually filed and briefed, they must be entered in the order as read, though not even mentioned on the hearing of the motion. Catholic Printing and Publishing Co. v. Wyman, 1 N. R. 49; 32 L. J., Ch. 53; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 436; 11 W. R. 49.

c. Leave to Read.

When Unfiled.]—An affidavit, though not filed, may be read, upon an undertaking to file it. Baker, Ex parte, 2 Deac. & C. 362.

In the long vacation, when a matter presses, the court will sometimes take the original affidavits into its custody and act upon them as if they had been filed; but when the court is sitting, office copies alone can be used. Att.-Gen. v. Lewis, 8 Beav. 179.

In a pressing case an affidavit which was wanted for the purpose of a motion was allowed to be sworn in open court. Mercers' Co. v. Witham Navigation Co., 14 Beav. 20; 20 L. J., Ch. 557.

When, on account of the offices of the court being closed, the filing of a bill has been delayed, the court may grant an injunction before bill filed, and direct the bill and affidavit to be filed as on the day when the offices were closed. Carr v. Morice, 42 L. J., Ch. 787; L. R. 16 Eq. 125.

When Filed too Late.]—When in a cause heard on replication it is sought to put in evidence filed after the time for closing evidence has expired, leave to read such evidence must be applied for previously to the hearing, in order to enable the court to provide an opportunity to the adverse party to answer such evidence. It will not be sufficient to deliver a copy of the evidence to the other party in time for him to answer it. Smith v. Pilgrim, 2 Ch. D. 127; 34 L. T. 408.

If a party seeks to read affidavits not duly filed, a substantive motion must be made for liberty to do so. Mackay, In re, 1 D. & L. 206; 12 L. J., Q. B. 337; 7 Jur. 945.

In another Suit.]—When the defendants in one suit were some of the defendants in another suit instituted by the same plaintiff, and the facts to be proved were the same, but different relief was prayed in the two suits, the court on an ex parte application by the plaintiff allowed the affidavits sworn and to be sworn in the first suit to be read as evidence in the second suit against such of the defendants therein as were defendants in the first suit. Brown v. White, 24 W. R. 456.

Two days before the closing of the evidence, the defendant obtained an order of course to use at the hearing the bill and some affidavits in another suit instituted by the same plaintiffs, but raising a different issue. The court, being of opinion that the order was obtained because the defendant's own evidence was not ready, discharged the order with costs. Peru (Republic) v. Ruzo, 32 L. T. 598; 23 W. R. 546.

A defendant having given evidence in another suit, to which she was not a party, affecting the statements contained in the answer, the plaintiff applied, after the cause was in the paper, for leave to use such evidence upon the hearing. The plaintiff having been guilty of no laches, leave was given; the defendant to be at liberty to file affidavits in explanation, and to use the evidence of the plaintiff in the same cause, subject to like conditions. Watson v. Cleaver, 20 Beav. 137; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 270; 3 W. R. 265.

B. instituted two suits against A., in which A. put in answers, and also made an affidavit upon an interlocutory application. Replication was filed on both suits, and A. died after the time for taking evidence had expired and without having made any affidavit verifying the answers, or having given notice of his intention to read the affidavit at the hearing. The executors of A. afterwards instituted a suit against B., relating to the same matters as the former suit, and applied for liberty to read the answers and affidavit as evidence in the new suit:—Held, that neither the answers nor affidavit could be so read. Williams v. Williams, 3 N. R. 701; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 608; 10 L. T. 286; 12 W. R. 663.

A plaintiff cannot use against one defendant evidence taken in another suit, and referred to in an affidavit of a co-defendant. Rhodes v. Rhodes, 3 N. R. 701; 14 W. R. 515.

Affidavits made and used in a cause for one purpose may be used again instead of new affidavits; but the party using them a second time will not be allowed to charge for them, though he would have been entitled to charge for new affidavits. Westmeath v. Westmeath, 1 Hog. 354.

Where original petition is filed and affidavits put in, and then petition is amended by adding the name of another party as respondent, those affidavits cannot be read against him. Mascarenas, Ex parte, Dawson, In re, 1 Deac. & C. 507.

Affidavits made in one cause or matter in this court used as evidence in another cause or matter. Pickance's Trust, In re, 10 Hare (App.), xxxv.

Affidavits filed in the suit allowed to be made use of on the hearing of a petition. Jones v. Turnbull, 22 L. J., Ch. 1055; 17 Jur. 851.

Depositions in the custody of the court, which were taken in a former suit to perpetuate testimony, were ordered to be published, on the application of one of the parties to a subsequent suit, the other of whom was a stranger to the former suit, and the time for taking evidence in the second suit was extended in order to give both parties an opportunity of considering the information so obtained; the court being of opinion that though the depositions might not themselves be evidence, they might be the means of supplying valuable information to both parties. Vane v. Vane, 45 L. J., Ch. 589; 24 W. R. 565—C. A. Varying 34 L. T. 477.

Attesting Witness not to be Found.]—In a suit for revocation of probate on the grounds of undue execution and incapacity, where it appeared that every effort had been made to find one of the attesting witnesses, but without success, the court allowed the affidavit made by him eight years before, at the time of proving the will at the district registry, to be admitted as evidence of execution and capacity. Gornall v. Mason, 56 L. J., P. 86; 12 P. D. 142; 57 L. T. 601; 35 W. R. 672; 51 J. P. 663.

Party wishing to Cross-Examine.] — When affidavits have been filed in support of an interlocutory application in an action, the court has no power to authorise the reading of the affidavits at the trial if the other side bonâ fide desires the production of the witnesses for cross-examination, and the witnesses can be produced. Blackburn Union v. Brooks, 47 L. J., Ch. 156; 7 Ch. D. 68; 37 L. T. 427; 25 W. R. 57. And see cases infra, CROSS-EXAMINATION.

When not in Form.]—When an application was made to the court that an affidavit should be allowed to be given in evidence notwithstanding its not being in the form required by 30 & 31 Vict. c. 44, s. 104 (15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 37, England): it appeared that the affidavit proposed to be used was sworn before issue was joined in the cause, that the defendant kept it in his possession for more than a year without giving any notice of it, that the deponent had died since the affidavit was sworn, and before notice of its being sworn was served, and that when notice was served after the death of the deponent no mention was made of his being dead: under these circumstances the affidavit was not allowed to be used, independently of any mere technical objections. Evans v. Cook, 22 W. R. 252.

d. Containing Irrelevant or Scandalous Matter.

Irrelevant or Prolix.]—When long affidavits are filed in support of a motion, a great part of which is unnecessary, the court will refer them to the Master, and make the party applying pay the costs of the unnecessary affidavits. Lewis v. Woolrych, 3 D. P. C. 692.

Where affidavits contain irrelevant matter, the court will direct the Master to ascertain what parts are material to bring the question in dispute before the court, and to allow costs to the parties making the affidavits for such parts only as are material, and to the opposite party the costs occasioned by the irrelevant matter. Cassen v. Bond, 2 Y. & J. 531. S. P., Balls v. Smythe, 2 Man. & G. 350; 2 Scott (N.R.) 495.

The court will not order an affidavit which is not shewn to be scandalous or irrelevant to be taken off the file merely because it cannot, upon some technical ground, such as a defect in the jurat, be read in the cause in which it is filed. Brunswick (Duke) v. Sloman, 1 L. M. & P. 247.

Where an affidavit was filed which the court considered to be of unnecessary length, a direction was made, under the 122nd Order of May, 1845, that the taxing-master should, on taxing the costs, look into the affidavit, and distinguish those parts which he might consider to be of unnecessary length, and disallow the costs occasioned thereby. Skidmore's Estate, In re, 24 L. J., Ch. 711; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 696; 3 Eq. R. 736; 3 W. R. 584.

Where, in an interpleader suit, the plaintiffs filed an affidavit of some length as to merits:—Held, that in making an order on the defendants to interplead, and for taxation of costs, there should be a direction to the Master to have regard to any prolixity in the affidavits. Scottish Union Insurance Co. v. Steele, 9 L. T. 677.

Directions given to the taxing-master under rule 18 of Ord. VI. of the additional Rules of Court, August, 1875, to look into and disallow costs of affidavits of unnecessary length. Cracknell v. Janson, 48 L. J., Ch. 168; 11 Ch. D. 1; 39 L. T. 32; 27 W. R. 55.

Remarks as to the effect of the 122nd Order of May, 1845, as to costs of prolix or unnecessary affidavits, and jurisdiction of Master in respect of them on their taxation. Moore v. Smith, 14 Beav. 393.

Impertinent.]—Where libellous and impertinent matter was introduced into an affidavit in support of a rule, the court deprived the party of the costs of the rule, to which otherwise he would have been entitled. Thompson v. Dicas, 2 D. P. C. 93.

A person who has himself introduced into his evidence matter not relevant to the real issues between himself and his opponent cannot be heard to complain if his opponent, in answer to the matter so introduced, inserts in his affidavit passages which would otherwise be liable to be expunged for impertinence. Bruff v. Cobbold, 26 L. T. 786; 20 W. R. 734—L. JJ.

When affidavits alleged to be impertinent are not read, the court refers it to the officer to disallow, in taxation, costs of all affidavits which in his opinion are impertinent. Harvey, Ex parte, Box, In re, 2 Mont. & Ayr. 593; 1 Deac. 571.

On dismissing a claim, the court may direct the defendant to pay the costs of any scandalous and impertinent portion of his affidavits. Dufaur v. Sigel, 4 De G. M. & G. 520; 22 L. J., Ch. 678.

Quære, whether it can also order the defendant to pay any portion of the costs of the suit. Ib.

Anciently, where affidavits were prolix or impertinent, it was thought to be too late to complain after the party had used the affidavits; but now the court will apply itself to set right the extra costs caused by the prolixity or impertinence at any time. Townsend, Ex parte, 3 Moll. 74.

An affidavit made to resist a motion may be used on the motion, notwithstanding that it has been referred for impertinence and scandal, and that the reference is still pending. Birch v. Alt, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 228.

Scandalous.]—If an affidavit is filed containing scandalous statements, the court can act in the matter, not only on the application of the aggrieved party, but also on the application of any party to the action, or without any application at all. Cracknell v. Janson, 48 L. J., Ch. 168; 11 Ch. D. 1; 39 L. T. 32; 27 W. R. 55. S. P., Fox v. Bearblock, 46 L. T. 145; 30 W. R. 342—C. A. Devonsher v. Ryall, Ir. R. 11 Eq. 460.

Where an affidavit is reported to be scandalous, the agent in London who files the affidavit, is responsible for the costs as between attorney and client, notwithstanding the country attorney may have himself drawn the affidavit. Wake, Ex parte, 3 Deac. & C. 246; Mont. & Bli. 259; 2 L. J., Bk. 38.

Affidavits ordered to be taken off file for containing scandalous and irrelevant matter. Goddard v. Parr, 24 L. J., Ch. 783; 3 W. R. 633.

The statement in an affidavit that is irrelevant to the action will be ordered to be struck out. National Folding Box and Paper Co. v. National Folding Box Co., 13 R. 60; 43 W. R. 156.

Striking out.]—Semble, that, after an affidavit has been entered in an order of the court as read, the court cannot entertain an application to strike out of it impertinent and scandalous matters. Bruff v. Cobbold, supra.

Although there is no rule of court specially giving power to the court to take affidavits off the file for prolixity, yet the court has an inherent power to do so in order to prevent its records from being made the instruments of oppression. Hill v. Hart-Davis, 53 L. J., Ch. 1012; 26 Ch. D. 470; 51 L. T. 279—C. A.

e. Fresh Evidence and in Reply.

When Allowed.]—When, after replication, the plaintiff's evidence raised new issues of fact not raised in the bill, the court allowed the defendant to file fresh affidavits after the time for closing evidence had expired; but the fresh evidence was to be strictly confined to the new issues raised by the plaintiff; and the plaintiff was to be at liberty to cross-examine. Leech v. Bolland, L. R. 10 Ch. 362; 33 L. T. 87; 23 W. R. 763.

In a patent suit which had been set down for hearing, an application made by the defendant, after notice given to the plaintiff, for leave to produce at the hearing of the cause the evidence as to prior user of a new witness discovered since the closing of the evidence, was allowed. Wilson v. Gann, 23 W. R. 546.

On a rule for a new trial, on the ground of rejection of evidence, an affidavit in answer alleging that it was withdrawn and not rejected, the affidavit in reply, stating how it came to be withdrawn, is not receivable, as stating new matter arising out of the affidavit in answer. Whitehouse v. Hemmant, 27 L. J., Ex. 295.

This court will not lay down any rule of practice under the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 125, s. 45), as to the cases in which affidavits in answer to affidavits disclosing new matter will be allowed. Pritchard v. Leech, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 475.

Affidavits in reply are only to be permitted in cases where new matter is introduced in the affidavits, answering the petition. Shayle, Ex parte, Dick. 244.

Affidavits, in reply to answers, may be read in support of motion. Coates v. Baldwin, 2 Jur. 775.

By the practice of this court, a supplemental affidavit cannot be used upon a motion to make a conditional order absolute. Smithwick v. Bradshaw, 2 Ir. Eq. R. 94.

In a motion from one branch of the court to another leave is always given to add to the evidence, if necessary. Gay's Case, In re, London and Birmingham Extension and Northampton, Daventry, Leamington and Warwick Ry., 1 De G. M. & G. 347; 21 L. J., Ch. 284; 16 Jur. 183.

Leave to read an affidavit in rejoinder on a motion for decree refused. Richards v. Curlewis, 2 W. R. 481.

Time.]—At no period of a cause is it too late to produce additional evidence for the purpose of shewing that confusion or error has arisen from the double signification of a name or word. Bigsby v. Dickinson, 46 L. J., Ch. 280; 4 Ch. D. 24; 35 L. T. 679; 25 W. R. 89—C. A.

Affidavits filed on behalf of a plaintiff in reply to a defendant's affidavits may contain matter which is merely confirmatory of the plaintiff's general case, and need not be absolutely restricted to matter cutting down or negativing the defendant's evidence. The practice of the court in this respect has not been altered by the orders and rules of the Supreme Court. Peacock v. Harper, 47 L. J., Ch. 238; 7 Ch. D. 648; 38 L. T. 143; 26 W. R. 109.

The proper time for an application for leave to file affidavits in answer to new matter is when the new matter has been brought before the court by the other side. Swinfen v. Swinfen, 1 C. B. (N.S.) 364; 26 L. J., C. P. 97; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 85; 5 W. R. 203.

Time will not be enlarged to allow of affidavits in reply being filed after cross-examination of a witness on the other side. Edwards v. Spaight, 2 J. & H. 617.

Where a plaintiff filed affidavits in reply, introducing a new state of facts in the nature of a new assignment, the defendants were allowed at the hearing to read affidavits in reply without having given notice of them, the cause being allowed to stand over in order to give the plaintiff time to answer them. Heath v. Wallingford, 12 L. T. 631.

The day before the time for closing the evidence in a suit, the plaintiffs filed an affidavit impeaching the credibility of a material witness of the defendants. After the time for closing the evidence, the defendants applied for special leave to file an affidavit in reply. The court held that as the point was not raised by the pleadings, but arose out of the evidence, it was a proper case for indulgence, and granted the application. Scott v. Liverpool Corporation, 3 Jur. (N.S.) 533; 5 W. R. 669.

It is only in very special cases, and not at the option of the parties, that affidavits are admitted on a motion, after it has been opened to the court. East Lancashire Ry. v. Hattersley, 8 Hare, 86.

The rule, that no new evidence can be adduced on a motion after it has been opened, extends to the case of documents which it is proposed to verify viva voce by the attesting witness. Bird v. Lake, 1 H. & M. 111; 8 L. T. 632.

Renewed Application.]—On motion to set aside a judge's order, made at chambers upon reading certain affidavits, the party moving omitted to bring before the court the affidavits produced at chambers; and the rule was therefore discharged with costs:—Held, that he might, after payment of costs, renew the same motion, putting in fresh affidavits. Pocock v. Pickering, 18 Q. B. 789.

On motion to rescind an order made at chambers on affidavit, as having been erroneously granted, the party moving cannot impeach the order on affidavits not used at chambers and containing matters which were known to the party moving, or of which he could have obtained knowledge, before the order was made. Edwards v. Martyn, 17 Q. B. 693; 21 L. J., Q. B. 86.

Where a summons was taken out before a judge at chambers, for an order for the plaintiff's costs, on the ground that the case was one in which the superior courts had concurrent jurisdiction with the county court, and the judge on the facts refused to make the order, upon a like application to the court, affidavits in addition to those used at chambers may be used. Sanderson v. Procter, 10 Ex. 189; 2 C. L. R. 1283; 23 L. J., Ex. 320; 18 Jur. 702.

An application to discharge a defendant out of custody, on an affidavit that he had never been served with process, and that it had not been brought to his knowledge, having been made at chambers, and answered by an affidavit of the party who had made the affidavit of service, fixing the place and circumstances of the supposed service, the defendant was allowed on a subsequent application to the court, to use fresh affidavits disproving the supposed service by shewing a mistake as to identity on the occasion alluded to; and this being clearly shewn:—Held, that the defendant was entitled to be discharged without any terms. Moseley v. Blake, 28 L. J., Ex. 35.

Where a judge refuses to make an order, the unsuccessful party, in moving the court for the same purpose, is not confined to the same affidavits, but may use further ones, disclosing additional facts; although, upon a motion to rescind an order made at chambers, he is confined to the same materials. Cesarini v. Ronzani, 4 Jur. (N.S.) 813; 6 W. R. 678.

After a rule nisi has been obtained, the party obtaining it will not be allowed to file additional affidavits containing new matter. Ransome v. Eastern Counties Ry., 6 Jur. (N.S.) 998; 2 L. T. 237.

When a judge dismisses a summons, on the ground of the insufficiency of the affidavit in support of it, the party cannot, in renewing his application to the court, use fresh affidavits. Hawkins v. Akrill, 1 L. M. & P. 242; 14 Jur. 1069.

—— Formal Defect.]—A party failing upon an objection to the affidavits will not be allowed to make a second application upon amended affidavits, unless the defect occurred exclusively in the title of the affidavits or the jurat. Reg. v. G. W. Ry., 5 Q. B. 597; D. & M. 471; 1 D. & L. 742; 3 Railw. Cas. 700; 13 L. J., Q. B. 129; 8 Jur. 107. S. P., Reg. v. Jones, 8 D. P. C. 307; 4 Jur. 654.

Amending.]—An affidavit in support of motion for costs of the day for not proceeding to trial, allowed to be amended. Larkin v. Bovill, 2 Tyr. 746.

The title of an affidavit, on which a rule has been obtained, may be amended on payment of costs, the opposite party having leave to file affidavits in reply. Rex v. Warwickshire JJ., 5 D. P. C. 382.

On shewing cause against a rule, the court allowed an affidavit which omitted the deponent's addition, to be amended and resworn. Boskay v. Luster, W. W. & D. 216. S. P., Marriott v. Chapman, 1 W. W. & H. 309.

But the court will not allow a defendant's affidavit to be amended after cause is shewn against the rule. Robinson v. Gardner, 7 D. P. C. 716.

Where a rule is obtained upon affidavit erroneously entitled, the court will not discharge it, but will permit the affidavit to be amended and resworn. Cooper v. Talbot, 7 Scott, 345; 2 Arn. 50.

But, if an affidavit of merits in opposition to a rule is insufficient, the court will not, on hearing the rule, allow the affidavit to be amended and resworn. Rowbotham v. Dupree, W. W. & D. 215.

Where a rule has been discharged on the ground of defective materials to support it, the court will not allow the application to be renewed on amended affidavits, although it is made by a prisoner, on a suggestion that the process on which he is detained is a nullity. Saunderson v. Westley, 8 D. P. C. 652.

Affidavits amended by permission of the court were allowed to be read without the addition of fresh jurats. Grantham, In re, 10 Jur. 1038.

Where a party obtained a rule nisi upon affidavits which were badly entitled, and, discovering his mistake, applied for leave to take the affidavits off the file, and amend and reswear them, the court refused to allow such a course to be taken, on the ground that the affidavits would appear to have been sworn after the rule was drawn up; and also refused to allow a fresh rule to be drawn up on amended affidavits, but suggested a new motion upon affidavits disclosing the circumstances of the error, giving no opinion, however, upon the validity or effect of such new motion. Doe d. Hill v. Tollett, 1 D. & L. 121; 8 Jur. 60.

—— Alteration.]—If an affidavit has an interlineation, which has not the initials of the Master in the margin, it cannot be read at all. Doe d. Cox v. ——, 5 Jur. 531.

Ex parte Application.]—An application under the 26th Order of the 7th August, 1852, for liberty to use further evidence on a motion for a decree, cannot be made ex parte. Richards v. Gurlewis, 18 Beav. 462.

f. Consent to Trial by.

Vivâ voce or by Affidavit.]—The only exceptions to the rule, that the evidence at the trial of an action shall be taken vivâ voce and in open court, are where the evidence is by agreement taken by affidavit, and where it appears to the judge necessary for the purposes of justice that an examination of particular witnesses shall be taken before any officer of the court or other person. Warner v. Mosses, 50 L. J., Ch. 28; 16 Ch. D. 100; 43 L. T. 401; 29 W. R. 201—C. A.

Rule 14 of Ord. XXXVIII. R. S. C., 1876, is copied from 1 Will. 4, c. 22, and like that statute can only be made use of where the person to be examined cannot be examined at the trial. Ib.

If a party to an action by mistake consents to the evidence being taken by affivadit, he will, on proving to the satisfaction of the judge that to his surprise witnesses will not make affidavits, be relieved from the consequences of his mistake. Ib.

Witnesses Refusing to make Affidavit.]—After consenting that the evidence should be taken by affidavit a solicitor for one part was unable to get his witnesses to make affidavits:—Held, that the court had no jurisdiction to allow him to "examine witnesses ex parte" before a special examiner, and to use the depositions on the trial subject to cross-examination of the witnesses at the trial. Ib.

Consent—What is.]—The "consent for taking evidence by affidavit" under R. S. C., 1876, Ord. XXXVIII. r. 1; must be a formal consent in writing. New Westminster Brewery Co. v. Hannah, 1 Ch. D. 278; 24 W. R. 137. See also preceding case.

—— Who may Give.]—The guardian ad litem of an infant is competent to give the consent requisite for taking evidence by affidavit. Knatchbull v. Fowle, 1 Ch. D. 604; 24 W. R. 629. S. P., Fryer v. Wiseman, 45 L. J., Ch. 199; 33 L. T. 779; 24 W. R. 205.

Matter tried by Judge alone.]—When parties agree that the evidence shall be taken by affidavit, and numerous affidavits are filed and the evidence is closed, it is the duty of a judge in the exercise of his judicial discretion under Ord. XXXVI. r. 26, to direct that the action shall be tried before a judge without a jury. Brooke v. Wigg, 47 L. J., Ch. 749; 8 Ch. D. 510; 38 L. T. 732; 26 W. R. 729—C. A.

In such a case an application that the action may be tried before a judge and jury can only be entertained if the applicant comes to the court soon after the agreement, and then only upon the terms that he pays, as between solicitor and client, all costs, charges and expenses that have been incurred in taking the evidence by affidavit up to that date. Ib.

Part of Evidence by Affidavit.]—The words of Ord. XXXVII. r. 1, "In the absence of any agreement in writing," apply to the taking of part of the evidence by affidavit as well as the whole; accordingly, an application for an order that the affidavit of a particular witness may be read at the hearing should not be made without a consent having been previously tendered. Miller v. Dwyer, 27 L. R., Ir. 510.

Not by Affidavit only.]—Where an agreement has been come to between the parties to an action, that the evidence at the trial shall be taken by affidavit—the agreement not stating that the evidence shall be taken by affidavit only—a witness who is present in court for the purpose of being cross-examined on his affidavit, may be called by the party on whose behalf he has made the affidavit, and give fresh evidence vivâ voce. Glossop v. Heston and Isleworth Local Board, 47 L. J., Ch. 536 ; 26 W. R. 433.

g. Cross-Examination.

In what Cases.]—When a motion is ordered to stand on terms till the hearing of the cause, no new evidence can be filed by the parties on the motion, which must be dealt with at the hearing in the manner in which it was originally brought on ; and if the motion stands over in consequence of an affidavit of the defendant, the motion is not a matter depending in or a proceeding before the court, which entitles the plaintiff to cross-examine the defendant on his affidavit ; even although the plaintiff may have given notice that he is going to use it at the hearing of the cause. Singer v. Audsley, 41 L. J., Ch. 229 ; L. R. 13 Eq. 401 ; 26 L. T. 238 ; 20 W. R. 438.

After affidavits received as evidence by order, by the Master, the opposite side was at liberty to cross-examine the same witnesses generally, although other witnesses could not be examined after the case made by the affidavits is disclosed, nor the same witnesses by the party on whose behalf they made the affidavit, except upon interrogatories to be settled by the Master ; Lord Chancellor disregarding the objection, that the party cross-examining would do so with the advantage of knowing what the witnesses were brought to prove, and expressing his opinion in favour of an alteration in the course of examination, by which interrogatories should be open in all cases. Booth v. Parks, 2 Moll. 314.

—— Summons for Administration by Infants.]—Infants were entitled under a will to legacies of considerable amount, and they were also entitled in remainder subject to the life interests of four persons to seven-elevenths of the residuary estate. An originating summons was taken out by one of the tenants for life and the infants asking for administration of the testator's estate. Affidavits were filed in support of the summons, and the witnesses were cross-examined at considerable length :—Held, that the cross-examination was most improper, and that it should not be resorted to in such a case, and a direction was given that in future cross-examinations should not be resorted to in such cases without an application to the court. Wilson, In re, Alexander v. Calder, 54 L. J., Ch. 487.

—— Production of Affidavit.]—A witness cannot be cross-examined as to what he swore in an affidavit, unless the affidavit is produced. Sainthill v. Bound, 4 Esp. 74.

A party may be cross-examined as to the contents of an affidavit which is not put in. Sladden v. Sergeant, 1 F. & F. 322.

At what Stage.]—Notice of motion for decree was served on the 21st of April, and a defendant then had notice of an affidavit to be used against him. The time for filing affidavits in reply expired in the ensuing long vacation. On the 12th of November, after the cause was in the paper for hearing, the defendant gave notice to cross-examine the witness :—Held, that he was entitled to do so. Ranken v. Alfaro, 24 W. R. 53.

An accounting defendant, who has carried in an account and verified it by affidavit, may be cross-examined on his affidavit as well before he has vouched his account as afterwards. Meacham v. Cooper, 42 L. J., Ch. 876 ; L. R. 16 Eq. 102 ; 21 W. R. 745.

The fourteen days from the filing of an affidavit in support of a petition having been allowed to expire without notice having been given to cross-examine on the affidavit as provided by r. 19 of Order of 5th February, 1861 :—Held, that the court was not thereby precluded from exercising its discretionary power under 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 40, and leave to cross-examine was granted accordingly. Sadler's Wells Theatre, In re, 42 L. J., Ch. 737.

Where the defendant had filed an affidavit denying that he ever assented to the terms of a certain agreement, and the plaintiff had, after the enlarged time for closing evidence had expired, filed an affidavit in reply, the court, on motion by the plaintiff that he might read and use such affidavit on the hearing, notwithstanding the expiration of the time for closing evidence, or that the time for closing evidence might be further enlarged, ordered that the plaintiff should be at liberty to read the affidavit, and that the time for cross-examination should be enlarged for a month. Philips v. Warde, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 608 ; 4 W. R. 305.

Where a cause is set down for hearing in the ordinary course, a defendant cannot be compelled to come in and be cross-examined after the expiration of a month from the time fixed for closing the evidence ; but this rule does not apply to the case of a cause being set down upon motion for decree, in which case a party can be cross-examined, and affidavits may be filed up to the actual time of hearing. Bedwell v. Prudence, 8 W. R. 702.

A party to a cause, filing or giving notice to read an affidavit before the evidence is closed, may be cross-examined upon such affidavit at once, without waiting until the evidence is closed. Clarke v. Law, 2 Kay & J. 28 ; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 228 ; 4 W. R. 35.

Injunction bill by the plaintiff. On the motion one of the defendants filed and used an affidavit. All the defendants afterwards put in answers (sufficiently long before the present motion) to interrogatories on the bill. By the direction of the court a cross-bill had been filed, to which the plaintiff was not required to answer. The time for closing the evidence had not arrived when the plaintiff moved that the defendant, who had made the affidavit used on the motion for an injunction, might be cross-examined :—Held, that he was liable to cross-examination, although the evidence was not yet closed. Ib.

Though the fourteen days limited by the 19th rule of the Order of the 5th February, 1861, for the production for cross-examination of a party witness who has made an affidavit have expired, the court, on motion, will order him to attend for examination within a specified time. Spittle v. Hughes, 11 Jur. (N.S.) 151; 11 L. T. 691.

Where affidavits made before decrees were subsequently used in chambers, and the witnesses objected, before the examiner, to be cross-examined, the objection not having been made in chambers, they were ordered to be cross-examined within two months, before the examiner, but not at their own expense, and no costs of a motion to compel them were given. S. C., nom. Hughes v. Spittal, 13 W. R. 251.

The 19th rule of General Orders, February 5th, 1861, is merely permissive, and does not abrogate the practice under 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 40. Singer Sewing Machine Manufacturing Co. v. Wilson, 2 Hem. & M. 584; 5 N. R. 268; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 58; 11 L. T. 670.

Therefore, a deponent served with a subpœna under that act is bound to submit himself to cross-examination on his affidavit, notwithstanding the lapse of fourteen days from the time when it was filed. Ib.

When a plaintiff has filed an affidavit on a motion for an injunction, his witnesses may be cross-examined, under the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 40, before the defendant files his affidavits. Besemeres v. Besemeres, 1 Kay (App.), xvii.; 2 Eq. R. 668; 23 L. J., Ch. 198; 2 W. R. 124.

The 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, and the Orders made in pursuance thereof, do not so far change the practice of taking evidence in equity as to make it essential that a defendant should know all the plaintiff's evidence before he adduces his own. Londonderry (Marchioness) v. Bramwell, 2 Kay & J. 162; 5 W. R. 247. And see Morey v. Vandenberg, 14 L. T. 542.

Therefore the court will not, on a motion for decree, enlarge the time for the defendant to file his affidavit, simply to enable him to cross-examine the plaintiff's witnesses before so doing. Ib.

But the court would probably grant this indulgence if the defendant could not afford the expense of a special examiner, and if his application for an enlargement of time were made without delay. Ib.

Subpœnas ad testificandum et duces tecum for the cross-examination of a defendant at the hearing ordered to be sealed, notwithstanding that more than fourteen days had elapsed since the closing of the evidence, but the hearing of the cause not to be delayed by reason of such order. Coæ v. Stephens, 2 N. R. 436; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1144; 8 L. T. 721; 11 W. R. 929.

On a motion for a decree, the plaintiff's affidavit in reply was filed on the 4th August. The defendant took no steps to cross-examine until after the long vacation, and he then asked that the cause might stand over, to enable him to cross-examine the plaintiff:—Held, that he was not entitled as of right, and that it was matter of discretion; and the court, having heard the cause, and seeing no necessity for a cross-examination, made a decree. Bourdillon v. Baddeley, 26 Beav. 255.

By the General Orders, evidence in a cause is to close within eight weeks after issue joined, but a witness who has made an affidavit may be cross-examined within one month after such eight weeks. Hart v. Roberts, 32 Beav. 231.

A defendant may move to dismiss, if the plaintiff does not set down the cause "within four weeks after the evidence closed." Ib.

Where there was no cross-examination, the evidence closed at the end of eight weeks, and not of twelve weeks. Ib.

Filing Affidavits after Cross-examination.]—As a general rule, a party should file his affidavits before cross-examining a party on the other side. Lancefield v. Iggulden, 41 L. J., Ch. 473; 26 L. T. 687; 20 W. R. 621.

Therefore an affidavit filed in a creditors' administration suit by executors subsequently to their cross-examination of the plaintiff upon his affidavit in support of his claim is not generally admissible in proceedings in chambers for the adjudication of the claim, but it was allowed to be used upon leave given to the deponent to reply. Ib.

In an administration action inquiries were directed and the plaintiff was ordered to furnish certain accounts. After the plaintiff had filed his accounts and affidavits in the matter the defendants obtained an order for his cross-examination. By direction of the judge, the general practice in his chambers, of which the defendants were aware, was not to make an order for cross-examination until the evidence was closed. After the plaintiff had been cross-examined the defendants applied for leave to file further evidence generally:—Held, that, there being no rule of court expressly referring to the point, the judge had a discretion, provided he made no hard-and-fast rule, to adopt a general practice in such matters, and therefore the defendants were not entitled to the leave asked as a matter of right, but only on shewing special circumstances. Davies, In re, Issard v. Lambert, 59 L. J., Ch. 516; 44 Ch. D. 253; 62 L. T. 715; 38 W. R. 584—C. A.

Notice and Attendance of Witnesses.]—A plaintiff, having filed three affidavits, goes to Paris. The defendant desires to cross-examine him upon them, but he refuses to come to England. A motion made for an order that he shall come to this country to be cross-examined refused; costs to be costs in the cause. Wellesley v. Mornington, 5 W. R. 393.

A witness who has made an affidavit has no right to insist upon having his cross-examination taken at the place where the affidavit has been made, it being in the discretion of the court to excuse his attendance for cross-examination in London. Such witness should communicate with the party on whose behalf the affidavit has been made, throwing upon him the duty of applying for a special examiner. Townsend v. Williams, 6 W. R. 734.

A question arose whether the other side was entitled to cross-examine on the affidavit, and, if so, on whom the onus lay to produce the witness; and whether the signing of the certificate by the chief clerk, and a reference to the objection in such certificate, make any difference:—Held, that there was a right of cross-examination, that the other side must produce the witness, and that the signing of the certificate did not affect the question, although the chief clerk was wrong in inserting a reference to the objection. Jenner v. Morris, 10 W. R. 640.

The cross-examination of one of the defendants to a suit was proceeded with without any notice being given to a co-defendant who had given notice to read the first defendant's evidence:—Held, that this proceeding was utterly void. Pennell v. Davison, 13 L. T. 533; 14 W. R. 174.

The practice as to closing evidence does not apply to motions for decree, and a notice to cross-examine, given after the seven days, for filing affidavits in reply, is regular. Bedwell v. Prudence, 1 Dr. & Sm. 221; 8 W. R. 702.

An accounting defendant will not be ordered to submit to cross-examination upon his account and the affidavits filed in support of it, without notice of the points on which the cross-examination is required. M'Arthur v. Dudgeon, 42 L. J., Ch. 263; L. R. 15 Eq. 102; 21 W. R. 166.

A defendant who is summoned to be cross-examined on an account he has filed, is entitled to notice of the items objected to. Ib.

Form of Notice requiring Production of Deponents.]—On the prosecution of an inquiry added to a decree, one party filed an affidavit by a person resident in South America, and gave notice to read it, whereupon the opposite party gave notice that he required to cross-examine the deponent, not saying when, where, or before whom:—Held, that Ord. XXXVIII. r. 28, excluding an affidavit from being read, except by special leave, unless the deponent is produced for cross-examination—even supposing that Ord. XXXVIII. rr. 21, 22, make that rule applicable to evidence on an inquiry, and supposing that Ord. XXXVIII. r. 28, applies to a witness resident out of the jurisdiction—did not exclude the present affidavit, as the notice for cross-examination did not follow the terms of Ord. XXXVIII. r. 28:—Held, also, that the order of the Court of Appeal admitting the affidavit as evidence, without prejudice to any application by the opposite party, within fourteen days, for the cross-examination of the deponent in any place in South America, before some proper person to be appointed for that purpose, was right under all the circumstances. Concha v. Concha, 56 L. J., Ch. 257; 11 App. Cas. 541; 55 L. T. 522; 35 W. R. 477—H. L. (E.)

Expenses of Production of Deponent.]—The provision in Rules of Court, 1875, Ord. XXXVIII. r. 4, that the party producing deponents for cross-examination upon their affidavits shall not be entitled to demand the expenses thereof in the first instance from the party requiring such production, is confined to a cross-examination of the deponent before the court at the trial of the action, and does not apply to a cross-examination on an affidavit filed after decree for the purpose of proceedings in chambers. Knight, In re, Knight v. Gardner, 53 L. J., Ch. 183; 25 Ch. D. 297; 49 L. T. 545; 32 W. R. 469—C. A.

The direction in Ord. XXXVIII. r. 23, of Rules of the Supreme Court, 1883, that the party producing a dependent for cross-examination shall not be entitled to demand the expenses thereof in the first instance from the party requiring such production, taken in conjunction with Ord. XXXVII. r. 21, of the same rules, which provides that evidence taken subsequently to the hearing or trial of any cause or matter shall be taken as nearly as may be in the same manner as evidence taken at or with a view to a trial, is not confined to the cross-examination of the deponent before the court at the trial of the action, but applies also to a cross-examination before the chief clerk in chambers or before an examiner. Backhouse v. Alcock, 54 L. J., Ch. 842; 28 Ch. D. 669; 52 L. T. 542; 33 W. R. 407.

The effect of Ord. XXXVIII. r. 28, of the Rules of the Supreme Court, 1883, which provides that the party producing a deponent for cross-examination shall not be entitled to demand the expenses thereof in the first instance from the party requiring such production, taken in conjunction with Ord. XXXVII. r. 22, which provides that the practice with reference to the examination, cross-examination and re-examination of witnesses at a trial shall extend and be applicable to evidence taken in any cause or matter at any stage, is that the expenses of production of a witness for cross-examination upon affidavit before a trial must be borne in the first instance by the party producing such witness. Mansel v. Clanricarde, 54 L. J., Ch. 982; 53 L. T. 496.

—— After Judgment in Administration Action.]—The plaintiff after judgment in an administration action obtained an order for cross-examination of defendant (the executor) upon his affidavit, in answer to inquiries directed by the judgment, denying possession of any part of the testator's estate. The defendant declined to attend before the examiner until plaintiff had paid his expenses. The plaintiff having subsequently served defendant with a subpœna, moved that he be ordered to attend at his own expense:—Held, that it was open to the plaintiff to combine the two methods of procedure, and that the defendant was bound to produce himself at his own expense for cross-examination; and further, that regarding the defendant as a deponent whose attendance was required for cross-examination, the penalty imposed by Ord. XXXVIII. r. 28, of having his affidavit rejected, did not relieve him from the obligation to attend at his own expense. Baker, In re, Connell v. Baker, 54 L. J., Ch. 844; 29 Ch. D. 711; 52 L. T. 421.

—— Discretion of Court or Judge.] — The court or judge has a discretion in making an order under Ord. XXXVIII. r. 1, for the attendance for cross-examination of a person who has made an affidavit, and is not bound to make such an order. La Trinidad v. Browne, 36 W. R. 138.

On what Affidavit.]—When a plaintiff has given notice of motion for a decree, and filed an affidavit in support of his motion, he may be cross-examined by the defendant as in the case of any other motion. Williams v. Williams, 1 W. R. 318.

A common affidavit as to documents is not the subject of cross-examination. Manby v. Bewicke, 8 De G. M. & G. 470; 26 L. J., Ch. 20; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 672; 4 W. R. 757.

A defendant, who at the instance of the plaintiff makes the common affidavit as to the possession of documents, is not thereby made liable to be cross-examined, unless he afterwards gives notice to use the affidavit as evidence for himself. Ib.

The true construction of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 40, is, that a party in any cause or matter, who has made an affidavit, is liable to be cross-examined if the affidavit was made to be used or is used as evidence for himself on any claim, motion, petition, or other proceeding before the court on which evidence can be received. Ib.

The case of Kay v. Smith (20 Beav. 566; 24 L. J., Ch. 788; 3 W. R. 622) overruled. Ib.

An affidavit made under an administration decree in support of a claim of debt is made in a proceeding under the meaning of the 40th section of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, so as to subject the deponent to cross-examination. Cust v. Poyser, 3 Sm. & G. 369; 26 L. J., Ch. 93; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 38. Affirmed 26 L. J., Ch. 353—L. JJ.

The leave of the judge is not necessary to authorise the examiner to take the cross-examination. Ib.

When a notice has been served upon a party under General Ord. XIX. of February, 1861, requiring his attendance for cross-examination on an affidavit filed by him, the court will not compel his attendance for that purpose when the affidavit has been used on a motion for an injunction, and an order has been made which disposes of the matter. Hooper v. Campbell, 12 L. T. 755; 13 W. R. 1003.

On the hearing of a cause the plaintiff is not at liberty to cross-examine a defendant whose affidavit has not been read. Fielden v. Goschen, 18 W. R. 85.

An order had been obtained by a plaintiff to amend his bill. Before the order was obtained the plaintiff's solicitor had filed an affidavit in support of the application to amend, and the defendant had served a summons for the solicitor to be cross-examined on the matters of his affidavit:—Held, that, as the order to amend had been actually made before the cross-examination could take place—the same state of circumstances not existing—the defendant was not entitled to cross-examine the solicitor on the affidavit. Catholic Publishing Co. v. Wyman, 1 N. R. 468; 7 L. T. 849; 11 W. R. 399.

Upon a motion for an injunction, the defendant asking for time to answer affidavits, was put upon terms to file his affidavits in two days, and an interim injunction being granted until the next seal. He then applied for an order appointing a special examiner, and directing the plaintiff, who had made an affidavit in support of the motion, to attend on the next day, without further notice, before such special examiner, to be cross-examined upon his affidavit:—Held, that the plaintiff, upon an interlocutory motion for an injunction, was under the control of the court, and that the indulgence which was asked was only to enable the defendant to do what he could have done without any order, if the examiner had been at liberty; and the application was accordingly granted. Held also, that the plaintiff should have the like liberty of cross-examining the defendant upon an affidavit by him, denying a simple fact alleged by the plaintiff, and made for the purpose of gaining time; and that the defendant would not be prevented by such cross-examination and his own re-examination from afterwards filing further affidavits. Besemeres v. Besemeres, 1 Kay (App.), xvii.; 2 Eq. R. 668; 23 L. J., Ch. 198; 2 W. R. 124.

A person coming in under an administration decree to prove a debt in chambers, and making an affidavit in support of his claim, is liable to cross-examination before an examiner, and a subpœna may issue against him as of course, without leave of the judge. Londonderry (Marchioness) v. Bramwell, 3 Kay & J. 162; 5 W. R. 247.

A motion for an injunction was ordered to stand over, with liberty to bring an action:—Held, that a witness, who had made an affidavit on the occasion, might, afterwards and before the trial, be cross-examined, under the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 40. Lloyd v. Whitty, 19 Beav. 57.

Where no Cross-examination.]—No weight is to be attached to an affidavit where the oppposite party has had no opportunity to cross-examine the witness. Wightman v. Wheelton, 23 Beav. 397; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 124; 5 W. R. 337.

An application in an injunction suit for leave to bring an action should be supported by an affidavit of the plaintiff's title; such an affidavit, however, will be sufficient to found the application upon, although the defendant may have had no opportunity of cross-examining the plaintiff upon it. Mayer v. Spence, 29 L. J., Ch. 552; 1 John. & H. 87; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 672; 2 L. T. 536; 8 W. R. 559.

On a motion to dissolve an injunction to stay proceedings at law, the plaintiff in equity has no right, under the 40th section of the statute 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, to require that the motion shall stand over, in order that he might examine orally witnesses who had made an affidavit for the defendant. Normanville v. Stanning, 10 Hare (App.), xxvi.

Where Impossible.]—A plaintiff filed an affidavit made by a dying witness, and offered an opportunity for cross-examination, and afterwards filed replication, and having omitted to give notice of reading the affidavit within the prescribed time, took out a summons for leave to read the affidavit, which summons was adjourned to the hearing of the cause. The plaintiff printed the affidavit, with the others proposed to be read at the hearing, and thereupon the defendant moved to take it off the file and expunge it from the printed affidavits:—Held, that this motion was irregular. Lautour v. Att.-Gen., 43 L. J., Ch. 313.

A suitor in the Court of Appeal in chancery is not entitled as of right to examine or cross-examine witnesses upon merely serving notice for the purpose: the court will itself exercise a spontaneous discretion in ordering such examination during the progress of the hearing. Long v. Donegan, Ir. R. 7 Eq. 494.

Liberty given to read the affidavit of a witness, who had been prevented by illness from being cross-examined, but the court intimated that little attention would be paid to such an affidavit. Braithwaite v. Kearns, 34 Beav. 202.

Liberty given, under the 19th General Order of February, 1861, to use the affidavits of persons who, by death and lunacy, could not be cross-examined, saving just exceptions. Ridley v. Ridley, 34 Beav. 339.

An affidavit was made in favour of the plaintiff, who, after a long delay, filed it after the death of the witness, whereby no cross-examination could be had. A motion to take it off the file was refused, though the court intimated that it would have less weight. Abadom v. Abadom, 24 Beav. 243.

A plaintiff whose evidence was of great importance to the issue in the suit, made an affidavit which was duly sworn and filed. He then died. No notice of the affidavit was given to the defendants, and they had not cross-examined the plaintiff upon it. The court allowed the affidavit to be received at the hearing of the cause on motion for decree. Tanswell v. Scurrah, 11 L. T. 761.

The affidavit of a witness who dies before he can be cross-examined, is admissible, unless the witness had kept out of the way to avoid cross-examination. Davis v. Otty, 35 Beav. 208; 5 N. R. 391; 34 L. J., Ch. 252.

A witness made an affidavit and died four days afterwards, and before she could be cross-examined. Her evidence was admitted at the hearing. Ib.

—— Withdrawal of Affidavit.]—The non-production of a witness for cross-examination is no ground for a postponement of the hearing if the affidavit of the witness is withdrawn. Sykes's Trusts, In re, 2 John. & H. 415; 6 L. T. 350.

Where a witness, who has made an affidavit for the plaintiff, and whom the defendant desires to cross-examine, is unable through illness to be present at the day fixed for the hearing of the cause, the defendant may insist upon the affidavit being withdrawn, or the cause standing over till the witness can appear; and the court will not proceed with the examination of the other witnesses. Nason v. Clamp, 10 L. T. 682; 12 W. R. 973.

An affidavit was made by a plaintiff residing out of the jurisdiction, and he received notice to appear in London to be cross-examined thereon, but refused. An objection taken to its being received, was overruled, on the ground that it was the duty of the defendants' solicitor to have applied for the appointment of a special examiner to cross-examine the plaintiff. Rawlings v. Wickham, 4 Jur. (N.S.) 990.

Withdrawal to avoid Cross-examination.]—A party having filed or given notice to read an affidavit, is not at liberty to withdraw it. Clarke v. Law, 2 Kay & J. 28; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 228; 4 W. R. 35.

The court will not allow a party to withdraw an affidavit, bearing upon the merits of a case, so as to avoid cross-examination; otherwise, where an affidavit is filed unnecessarily. National Insurance and Investment Association v. Carstairs, 2 N. R. 255; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 955; 11 W. R. 866.

It is the established practice of the court that a witness, not a party to the suit, may be cross-examined on an affidavit made by him for the purposes of an interlocutory application. Catholic Publishing Co. v. Wyman, 1 N. R. 468; 7 L. T. 849; 11 W. R. 399.

An affidavit after being filed cannot be withdrawn, so as to prevent the other side from making use of it, on the hearing of the petition. Labrey, Ex parte, 3 Deac. & C. 232.

After an affidavit has been read at the hearing of a matter, it cannot be withdrawn without the consent of the other party. Prole v. Soady, L. R. 3 Ch. 220; 17 L. T. 485; 16 W. R. 294.

Where a person has made and filed an affidavit for the purpose of being used in a matter pending before the court, he cannot be exempted from cross-examination by the withdrawal of the affidavit. Clarke v. Law (2 Kay & J. 28), approved, and held to be applicable where the person making the affidavit is not a party to the proceedings. Quartz Hill Consolidated Gold Mining Co., In re, Young, Ex parte, 51 L. J., Ch. 940; 21 Ch. D. 642; 31 W. R. 173—C. A.

In the High Court the deponent can be cross-examined even if the affidavit were not used by the party who filed it. Child, Ex parte, Ottaway, In re, 51 L. J., Ch. 494; 20 Ch. D. 126; 46 L. T. 118; 30 W. R. 862.

A party will not be allowed to withdraw an affidavit in order to escape cross-examination. Pike v. Dickinson, 21 W. R. 862.

Leave to Read after Notice of Cross-examination.]—At the hearing of a cause on replication, the plaintiff proposed to read the affidavit of a witness occupying an official position in the United States. Notice to cross-examine this witness had been given, and he had come over to this country for the purpose of being cross-examined, but had been obliged to return before the cause came on to be heard. The plaintiff had given the defendant only one day's notice before the witness left the country:—Held, that the affidavit could not be read. Dunne v. English, L. R. 18 Eq. 524.

When one party desires the production of a witness for cross-examination, the court has no power to order an affidavit used on a previous application to be read at the trial. Blackburn Union v. Brooks, 47 L. J., Ch. 156; 7 Ch. D. 68; 37 L. T. 427; 26 W. R. 57.

Used before Cross-examination completed.]—Semble, that the fact that a cross-examination on affidavit is not concluded does not prevent the court from looking at the affidavit. Lewis v. James, 54 L. T. 260—C. A.

Abuse of Process of Court.]—The court will prevent the process of the court from being abused for the purpose of oppression. Mundell, In re, Fenton v. Cumberlege, 52 L. J., Ch. 756; 48 L. T. 776.

The plaintiff in an administration action having without any necessity made an affidavit for the purpose of an application in chambers for accounts, the defendants proposed to cross-examine her on her affidavit, and on her refusing to appear, applied for an order on her to attend:—Held, that the affidavit having been immaterial to the relief sought, and no reason having been suggested for supposing that the cross-examination could be productive of any result, the application was an abuse of the process of the court for the purpose of oppression, and must be refused. Ib.

Several Defendants—Order of Cross-examination.]—Where one defendant calls a witness who has made an affidavit filed by the plaintiff, it is a convenient practice that the defendant calling the witness shall proceed to cross-examine him, that then the defendants in the same interest with the plaintiff shall cross-examine the witness, and the defendant calling the witness shall re-examine upon the points touched upon in the cross-examination. Harrison v. Southampton, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 435.

Evidence to be taken orally.]—Where time for taking evidence has not expired, but replication only applies to some answers of many defendants, the court will order one replication for all on the terms of its being filed instanter, but will not allow affidavits filed and to be filed to be used in cross-examination, where parties have elected to take evidence orally. Rogers v. Hooper, 2 Drew. 97; 2 Eq. Rep. 452; 23 L. J., Ch. 449; 2 W. R. 215.

Answer used as an Affidavit.]—A notice of motion for a decree gave a list of affidavits intended to be read, and that the plaintiff would read the defendant's answer. The plaintiff gave notice of intention to cross-examine the defendant on the answer, but it was objected before the examiner, that the plaintiff had made the defendant his witness, and the examiner allowed the objection:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to cross-examine the defendant on his answer. Brumfit v. Hart, 9 Jur. (N.S.) 12; 7 L. T. 310; 11 W. R. 53.

On a motion for a decree the answer is an affidavit, and the defendant may be cross-examined on it. Wightman v. Wheelton, 23 Beav. 397 ; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 124 ; 5 W. R. 337.

Semble, on a motion for an injunction, the plaintiff who has compulsorily obtained an answer cannot cross-examine the defendant on it, unless it is to be used on the defendant's behalf. Ib.

Semble, upon motion for injunction, the plaintiff is at liberty to cross-examine a defendant upon his answer. Ib.

On a notice of motion for a decree, the plaintiff had given notice to use the answers of some of the defendants :—Held, that he might cross-examine those defendants on their answers without prejudice to the right of the other defendants to object to the cross-examination being used against them. Rheden v. Wesley, 26 Beav. 432 ; 28 L. J., Ch. 797.

But held, also, that the plaintiff could not examine in chief other witnesses not mentioned in his notice of motion for a decree. Ib.

The answer of a defendant who was unable to be cross-examined on account of illness was not allowed to be read as evidence on his behalf. Parker v. M'Kenna, 43 L. J., Ch. 802 ; 30 L. T. 807.

h. Other Cases.

Suits pending when Judicature Acts came into Force.]—A motion was made for leave to take evidence in a suit by affidavit. It was opposed by the defendants, who were trustees, and the court held that they were entitled to have the evidence taken vivâ voce, but reserved the costs of the motion. On the cause coming on for hearing no witnesses were called, and no reason was given for insisting upon the evidence being taken vivâ voce :—Held, that the costs of the motion must be paid by the defendants, the trustees, who had perversely, unreasonably and unjustly refused to adopt the cheaper and more familiar mode of taking evidence. Patterson v. Wooler, 45 L. J., Ch. 274 ; 2 Ch. D. 586 ; 34 L. T. 415 ; 24 W. R. 455.

Admissibility.]—If a party on motion before a judge uses the affidavit of another person, such affidavit is, on any subsequent occasion, admissible against him who so used it ; even on a trial, when the person who swore the affidavit is present in court and is not called. Brickhill v. Hulse, 7 A. & E. 454 ; 2 N. & P. 426 ; 7 L. J., Q. B. 18.

On the trial of an information by the attorney-general, for penalties, the defendant (who had been held to bail) had subpœnaed the officer from the Queen's Remembrancer's office, to produce the affidavit on which he had been held to bail, with a view of being able to give it in evidence to cross-examine the person who had made the affidavit, if he should be called as a witness on the trial. The person who made the affidavit was called as a witness on the trial, and, for the purpose of cross-examining him, the defendant's counsel wished to put in the affidavit :—Held, that the officer was bound to produce it, and that the defendant had a right to make use of it in this way ; but that, if the affidavit was made by another deponent besides the witness, and related to other persons besides the defendant, the latter would be only entitled to use so much of the affidavit as was sworn by the witness and related to the defendant himself. Att.-Gen. v. Bond, 9 Car. & P. 189.

An affidavit to ground a commission of bankruptcy is conclusive evidence against the deponent of the fact of the bankruptcy. Ledbetter v. Scot, 4 Bing. 623 ; 1 M. & P. 597 ; 6 L. J. (O.S.), C. P. 147.

An affidavit filed in court on a motion may be read in evidence at the sittings, without proof of its being sworn. Cameron v. Lightfoot, 2 W. Bl. 1190.

The affidavit of a deceased solicitor, made and filed in the course of a chancery suit, may be admitted in evidence in conjunction with an order of the court made upon a motion in the suit shortly afterwards, although it does not appear on the face of the order that the affidavit was upon the motion. Whaley v. Carlisle, 17 Ir. C. L. R. 792.

—— As to Title.]—On motion for an issue to try the plaintiff's heirship, affidavits of facts of which the defendant, by his answer, professes to be ignorant, are inadmissible. Lancashire v. Lancashire, 9 Beav. 259.

Where a plaintiff moves upon the answer, he is not allowed to verify by affidavit any allegation in the bill of a fact connected with his title, though such allegation be neither admitted nor denied by the answer. Where the bill set forth a letter as containing an admission of the plaintiff's title, and which it charged to have been written by the defendant ; but the defendant, who was very old, and nearly blind, stated that such a letter might have been written by somebody about him, but that to the best of his recollection and belief he had never written such a letter :—Held, on a motion for production of documents, that the letter, with an affidavit of its being in the defendant's handwriting, could not be admitted as evidence of the plaintiff's title for the purpose of the motion. Edwards v. Jones, 1 Ph. 501 ; 13 Sim. 632 ; 13 L. J., Ch. 371 ; 8 Jur. 416.

Where the defence was that the deed of assignment under which the plaintiff claimed was executed after bill filed, and was in trust for the assignor against whom the defendant filed a cross-bill :—Held, that the assignment could not be proved by affidavit at the hearing under the 97th General Order. Joly v. Swift, 9 Ir. Eq. R. 195.

In Cases of Lunatics and Infants.]—In cases of lunatics and infants, the court will look at all the affidavits, however numerous, and will not insist on an undertaking to file no more. Dyce Sombre, In re, 1 Coop. C. C. 332.

Sufficiency—By Third Party.]—An affidavit by a third party is not sufficient evidence that proposed trustees will consent to act. Semble, that such consent may be sufficiently shewn by the instruction of counsel or by letter. Parke's Trust, In re, 1 W. R. 477.

The affidavit of a person present at the seizure of a vessel, though not the seizer himself, is sufficient to ground a monition, citing the Master in particular, and all others in general, to appear, &c. Evidence of the owner's claim, not tendered in the court below, received by the judicial committee on the hearing of the appeal. Guimaraens v. Preston, 4 Moore, P. C. 167.

The only evidence of notice of a settlement to a subsequent mortgagee, was an affidavit by E. that he had apprised him thereof :—Held, fact of notice sufficiently put in issue to let in this evidence. Stuart v. Ferguson, Hayes, 452.

On Motion for Inquiry as to Damages.]—Motion to stay the execution of a writ of inquiry of damages, not supported by the ordinary affidavit upon a motion to stay trial, refused with costs. Rodenhurst v. Tudman, Turn. & R. 305.

X. COSTS OF EVIDENCE.

1. OF WITNESSES.—See ante, cols. 874 et seq.

2. OF PREPARATION FOR TRIAL.

In former Stage.]—An injunction obtained by a plaintiff having been dissolved with costs on motion by the defendant, the plaintiff gave notice to read, on motion for decree, his evidence on the motion to dissolve the injunction. The decree, which was made with costs, recited part of this evidence:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to include the charges for this evidence in his bill of costs. Stempson v. Jepson, 18 W. R. 962.

A cause and cross-cause being dismissed with costs:—Held, that the costs of evidence, taken in the former cause, but used in both, should be paid for in the cause in which it was taken. Arundel Corporation v. Holmes, 4 Beav. 325; 5 Jur. 884.

Abandoned Motion or Discontinuance of Action.]—On an abandoned motion, or on the discontinuance of an action, the costs of all work in preparing, briefing or otherwise, relating to affidavits or pleadings are allowed; provided, in the opinion of the taxing-master, such work has not been prematurely done. Harrison v. Leutner, 50 L. J., Ch. 264; 16 Ch. D. 559; 44 L. T. 331; 29 W. R. 393.

Abstracts of Documents.]—In an action a defendant justified under a distress for a fee-farm rent, deducing his title so far back as the reign of Charles II. After issue joined the plaintiff discontinued:—Held, that the defendant was not entitled to the costs of taking any abstracts or documents relating to his proposed defence. Davis v. Hatton, 8 D. P. C. 164; 4 Jur. 28.

Evidence to meet Right denied on Pleadings.]—In trover for goods seized under a claim of toll, alleged to be due by reason of landing them at a particular wharf, it is open to a defendant to set up his claim to the toll under the plea of not possessed, and the plaintiff ought, therefore, to be prepared with evidence against the claim; and he will be allowed the costs of such evidence, though, at the trial, the defendant does not raise the question. Webb v Tripp, 1 D. (N.S.) 589; 6 Jur. 237.

Necessary for Conduct of Litigation.]—On taxation of costs as between party and party, the only costs chargeable against the unsuccessful party are such as are necessary for the conduct of the litigation. Therefore, in a suit to restrain the infringement of a patent, in which the defendant had set up several cases as anticipations, the costs of drawings of exhibits for the purpose of affixing to the margin of counsel's briefs were disallowed. Smith v. Buller, 45 L. J., Ch. 69; L. R. 19 Eq. 473; 31 L. T. 873; 23 W. R. 332.

Shorthand Notes.]—It is a settled rule that the costs of shorthand writer's notes of evidence will not be allowed on taxation unless there is in the order a direction to that effect. Such a direction will only be inserted in exceptional cases: the notes of the judge, supplemented by those of counsel, being amply sufficient, if not better, for all ordinary purposes. The general utility of shorthand writers' notes considered. De la Warr (Earl) v. Miles, 19 Ch. D. 80; 45 L. T. 424; 30 W. R. 35—C. A.

Upon the hearing of an action the principal evidence was given vivâ voce, and the solicitors on each side agreed together that one shorthand writer should be engaged on behalf of both plaintiff and defendant. Shorthand notes were accordingly taken of the speeches of counsel, of the evidence and of the judgment of the court. An order having been made in favour of the defendant, the plaintiff appealed, and the Court of Appeal dismissed the appeal with costs, nothing being said about the shorthand writers' notes. On taxing the defendant's costs of the appeal, the Master disallowed the costs of copies of the shorthand notes, except those of the judgment of the vice-chancellor, and further disallowed the sum paid by the defendant for shorthand writer's charges. Malins, V.-C., decided that the two items in question must be allowed as costs in the cause:—Held, on appeal, that the Master was right in disallowing the two items, there having been a simple dismissal of the appeal with costs, without any special directions. Ashworth v. Outram, 9 Ch. D. 483; 39 L. T. 441; 27 W. R. 98—C. A.

The agreement between the solicitors was merely an arrangement for saving expense, and left the case on the same footing as if each party had employed his own shorthand writer. Ib.

A motion to vary the Master's certificate by allowing costs of supplying copies of shorthand notes to counsel during the progress of trial was refused on the ground that special directions ought to have been asked for at the trial. Kirkwood v. Webster, 47 L. J., Ch. 880; 9 Ch. D. 239; 26 W. R. 812.

The court declined to give the successful plaintiff the costs of the shorthand writer's notes of the proceedings which had been taken by each side, as the court had not required them to be produced for its own use. Thorley's Cattle Food Co. v. Massam, 41 L. T. 543.

Shorthand writers' notes cannot ordinarily and without consent be allowed. Croom v. Gore, 1 H. & N. 14; 25 L. J., Ex. 267; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 427.

At an arbitration, which lasted several days, the successful party had only one counsel, and employed a shorthand writer to take down the evidence, and after each meeting a transcript of his notes were made, and a copy furnished to counsel for his guidance at the subsequent meetings:—Held, that the expense of the shorthand writer, the transcripts, and the copies ought not to be allowed, although the expense of a second counsel, or of a copy of the notes of the evidence, if taken by an attorney's clerk, would have been allowed. Ib.

The court will not include in the costs of an action the costs of the shorthand writer's notes of evidence unless there has been an agreement between the parties on the subject. Mostyn v. Lancaster, 51 L. J., Ch. 705.

Shorthand notes are not allowed as between party and party. Beaufort (Duke) v. Ashburnham (Lord), 13 C. B. (N.S.) 598; 32 L. J., C. P. 97; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 822; 7 L. T. 710; 11 W. R. 267.

—— On Reference.]—Where an action is referred, the cost of brief copies of the transcript of the shorthand writer's notes of each day's proceedings in the reference made for the use of counsel, will not, in the absence of any order and of agreement between the parties, be allowed on taxation. Wells v. Mitcham Gas Light Co., 48 L. J., Ex. 75; 4 Ex. D. 1; 39 L. T. 667; 27 W. R. 112.

Shorthand writer's notes on a reference are as a general rule properly disallowed on taxation. Autothreptic Steam Boiler Co., In re, 59 L. T. 632.

—— For Personal Use of Solicitor.]—In party and party costs a solicitor is not entitled to charge for a copy of the transcript of shorthand writer's notes for proceedings in an arbitration for his own use, when he himself is in possession of the transcript, even though he appears as advocate and makes use of a typewriter copy for his own greater convenience. Latimer, Clarke & Co., Ex parte, infra.

—— In what Cases allowed.]—The court allowed the respondents the costs of copies of a shorthand writer's notes of evidence taken before the registrar, on the ground that they had been served by the appellant with notice that such notes would be read. Harris, Ex parte, Ward, In re, 30 W. R. 561—C. A.

Where the court has used the shorthand writer's notes of evidence taken in the court below, the costs will be allowed. Smith v. Chadwick, 51 L. J., Ch. 621; 20 Ch. D. 81—C. A.

Where shorthand notes of evidence are essential to the proper hearing of the case, the costs of such notes will be allowed. Lee Conservancy Board v. Button, 12 Ch. D. 383; 41 L. T. 481—C. A.

It is competent to this court to make an order for the allowance, on taxation between party and party, of the expense of the shorthand notes of the evidence given at the trial, as part of the costs of a rule for a new trial on the ground that the verdict was against the weight of evidence, in a case where, from the nature and extent of the evidence, it is manifest that the matter could not have been properly disposed of without their aid. Watson v. G. W. Ry., 50 L. J., Q. B. 302; 6 Q. B. D. 163; 29 W. R. 427.

The court allowed the costs of copies of the transcript of the shorthand writer's notes of the judgment below, furnished to the defendants' two original counsel. Wegmann v. Corcoran, 41 L. T. 792.

Shorthand writer's notes of the cross-examination of witnesses in court allowed, but costs of his notes of the judgment disallowed, on a taxation between party and party. Clark v. Malpas, 31 Beav. 554; 1 N. R. 221; 32 L. J., Ch. 313; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 612; 7 L. T. 659; 11 W. R. 251.

—— Number of Copies.]—A defendant in an action upon a policy of insurance, obtained a rule for a new trial on the payment of the costs of and occasioned by the former trial. The Master allowed only one copy of the shorthand notes of the evidence, though he allowed three counsel:—Held, a proper exercise of discretion. Stewart v. Steele, 5 Scott (N.R.) 517; 4 Man. & G. 669.

—— Duty of Taxing-Master.]—It is the duty of the taxing-master in a bankruptcy appeal to decide as to the costs of the transcript of a shorthand writer's notes of the depositions. Cocks, Ex parte, Poole, In re, 21 Ch. D. 397, at p. 407.—C. A.

Judgment as in case of a nonsuit having been signed in an action for a malicious prosecution, the Master allowed three copies of the shorthand writer's notes of the evidence on the trial of the prosecution, considering himself bound by the certificate of counsel that they were necessary:—Held, that the Master was wrong in considering himself bound by the certificate, and was directed to review his taxation, in order that he might exercise his discretion as to the propriety of the allowance. May v. Turn, 12 M. & W. 730; 1 D. & L. 997; 13 L. J., Ex. 234; 8 Jur. 383.

—— On Appeal.]—See APPEAL.

Copies made by Typewriter.]—The allowance of 4*d.* a folio for manuscript copies of documents does not apply to carbon copies produced by a typewriter. Latimer, Clarke & Co., Ex parte, 60 L. J., Q. B. 626; 65 L. T. 552—C. A.

Specimens.]—In an action for an injury to a watercourse by the deposit of noxious materials, the Master disallowed costs incurred by the plaintiff in obtaining specimens of earths and plants from the lands, for the purpose of analysation and production at the trial:—Held, that such disallowance was right. Lamb v. Simpson, 4 Ex. 85; 18 L. J., Ex. 377.

Plans.]—Costs of preparing plans for the better elucidating of the case before the court and jury, may be allowed, at the discretion of the Master. Pilgrim v. Southampton and Dorchester Ry., 8 C. B. 25.

Searches for Evidence.]—On the trial of a replevin, in which the defendants made cognisance as collectors of Crown rent, much old documentary evidence was given by them, and they obtained a verdict; but a new trial was granted on the ground that one of those documents had been improperly received in evidence. A fresh notice of trial, without any alteration in the pleadings, was then given, subsequently to which the plaintiff discontinued:—Held, that the Master had rightly allowed the defendants the costs of a search made by an officer of the Crown in one of its offices for all the documentary evidence used, except that portion for the reception of which the new trial had been granted; and also of the briefs used at the trial. Daniel v. Wilkin, 8 Ex. 156; 22 L. J., Ex. 73.

In an action involving the title to a manor, an antiquarian's charges for researches for and translations of ancient records and documents at the Record Office and elsewhere (which were known to exist), were allowed. Beaufort (Duke) v. Ashburnham (Lord), 13 C. B. (N.S.) 598; 32 L. J., C. P. 97; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 822; 7 L. T. 710; 11 W. R. 267.

—— Antiquary.]—In a suit in equity, raising the question of title to a chapel, the defendant employed an antiquary to search after, translate, and report upon various ancient records, and the judgment of the court turned, in a great measure, upon the evidence so collected. The bill having been dismissed with costs, the antiquary's fees and expenses amounted to 334*l.*, in respect of which the Master allowed 220*l.*; also, of two sums of 26*l.* 5*s.* and 22*l.* for journeys and reports to two other experts. The plaintiff objected, on the ground that the evidence was procured only for the purpose of informing the mind of the defendant as to the best mode of framing his case, that the defendant had no prior knowledge of the existence of many of the documents, and that he had refused to make the antiquary himself a witness in the cause:—Held, that the costs in question had been necessarily and properly incurred by the defendant, and rightly allowed by the Master. Churton v. Frewen, 36 L. J., Ch. 660; 16 L. T. 171; 15 W. R. 559.

Held, also, that the travelling expenses of two eminent architects, who had made affidavits in the cause, were rightly allowed. Ib.

Notice to Admit—Want of.]—A party to a cause, proposing to adduce in evidence at the trial any written or printed document, ought to serve a notice to inspect and admit the same, although the document is not in his possession, or even in a place inaccessible to him; and in the event of his neglecting to do so, he will not be allowed the costs of proving it. Rutter v. Chapman, 8 M. & W. 388; 1 D. (N.S.) 118; 11 L. J., Ex. 178; 5 Jur. 610.

A party proposing to adduce documentary evidence at a trial is bound, in every case, to give a notice to admit, even although the genuineness of the document is put in issue by the pleadings. Spencer v. Barough, 9 M. & W. 425; 11 L. J., Ex. 378; 6 Jur. 154.

He is equally bound to serve this notice, notwithstanding an intimation from the opposite side that no such admission would be made, and that the document proposed to be adduced was a forgery. Ib.

The expenses of a witness at nisi prius to translate and explain ancient records of a public nature, and to watch and explain the records produced by the opposite party, and the expense of searching for and obtaining copies and translations of such records to be used in evidence, will be allowed on taxation between party and party, though the opposite party has not been called upon to admit them. Bastard v. Smith, 10 A. & E. 213; 2 P. & D. 453; 8 L. J., Q. B. 242.

The costs of the attendance of an officer of the Court of Chancery, to produce affidavits filed there, for the purpose of issuing them at a trial to check the testimony of the same deponents at nisi prius, will be allowed on taxation between party and party, though the opposite party has not been called on to admit them. Ib.

—— Refusal to Admit.]—A party refused to admit the handwriting of a third person to a document. The judge made the usual order for the costs of proving it at the trial: the handwriting of the document was proved, but the document itself was one which was not receivable in evidence. The judge at nisi prius would not certify for the costs of proving it. Phillips v. Harris, Car. & M. 492.

Where the counsel of the party refusing, admitted the documents, in consequence of which no proof was given, and the judge did not certify:—Held, that the Master was right in refusing to allow the costs of the witnesses subpœnaed to prove such documents. Freeman v. Rosher, 18 L. J., Q. B. 105; 13 Jur. 427.

The plaintiff's attorney, in possession of a probate essential to the defendant's case, having given an oral, but having refused to give a written undertaking to produce it at the trial, the defendant's attorney warned him that an exemplification of the will must be procured at a heavy expense. The probate was produced at the trial on the plaintiff's part:—Held, that the defendant, who obtained the verdict, was entitled only to the expense of an ordinary copy of the will, and of a summons to call on the plaintiff to admit it. Goldstone v. Tovey, 8 Scott, 562; 6 Bing. (N.C.) 274.

In an action for running down a ship, tried at Newcastle, the plaintiff having got a verdict, the Master refused to allow him the expense of proving the registers and transfers, &c., of the ship, upon the ground that reasonable notice had not been given to defendant to allow copies to be given in evidence. The commission day was on 4th March; notice of trial had been given on 21st February, and the notice to admit the documents was not served till Saturday, 28th February, on the London agent. He, however, refused to admit the copies, and another application was made on Monday following, and the copies were produced to him; but he again refused, and a summons was then taken out, returnable next day, but not attended. On the previous evening the agent sent off the briefs. The court ordered the Master to review the taxation. Tynn v. Billingsley, 3 D. P. C. 810.

On plaintiff paying defendant the expenses of examining a judgment and other documents abroad, an order was made for defendant to pay the expenses of proving them at the trial (such proof being satisfactory to the judge, and so certified by him), whatever might be the result of the case, if after such examination defendant did not admit them. Smith v. Bird, 3 D. P. C. 641.

What to be Admitted.]—A notice to admit documents called on the defendant to admit the authority by which the documents were written:—Held, that the party called on to make the admissions had a right to reject the whole, and having done so, and a verdict having been obtained by the defendant, the plaintiff, who proved these documents at the trial, had no right to the costs of such proof under the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, s. 117. Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton Ry. v. Scudamore, 1 H. & N. 666.

Each admission sought is to be treated as a separate part of the notice. Ib.

Costs of Voluminous Notice.]—In an action by a carrier against a railway company, to recover back exorbitant and unequal charges made upon him for the conveyance of goods on their line, a verdict being found against the company, the Master, on taxation, disallowed a charge of 566*l.* 17*s.* 4*d.* for a voluminous notice to admit, setting forth descriptions of upwards of 21,000 tickets and receipts for goods carried by the company for the carrier, and moneys paid on account, and in respect of which the overcharges arose:—Held, that the Master had exercised a sound discretion in so doing, the notice, though apparently in strict compliance with, being virtually in fraud of, the rule of court. Edwards v. G. W. Ry., 12 C. B. 419.

Affidavits.]—The costs of documentary evidence not read, nor entered as read, were disallowed. Stuart v. Greenall, M'Clel. 705; 13 Price, 755.

Where a motion for an injunction had been refused, with costs, on the ground of want of parties, the defendant is not to be entitled to the costs of affidavits which have been filed by him, but not used on the motion. Camille v. Donato, 11 Jur. (N.S.) 26 ; 11 L. T. 584 ; 13 W. R. 358.

The costs of affidavits, used to qualify the answer of a defendant, so as to excuse him from the production of documents, must be paid for by the defendant. Smith v. Massie, 4 Beav. 417 ; 5 Jur. 1053.

The costs of an affidavit, filed in support of a motion, but not entered in the order as read, will not be allowed on taxation, even as between solicitor and client. Stephens v. Newborough (Lord), 11 Beav. 403 ; 17 L. J., Ch. 332 ; 12 Jur. 319.

Costs may be allowed for affidavits used in reference to the common injunction. Small v. Attwood, 1 Y. & Coll. 53 ; 4 L. J., Ex. Eq. 1.

When a petition is dismissed with costs, the court will not limit the payment of costs merely as to the affidavits that were read on the hearing of the petition, for in general all affidavits filed are entered as read. Lucas, Ex parte, Oldham, In re, 3 Deac. & C. 664 ; 1 Mont. & Ayr. 405.

Plaintiffs filing unnecessary affidavits ordered to pay the defendants' costs occasioned thereby. Att.-Gen. v. Halifax, 18 W. R. 37.

—— Taking Unnecessary Copies.]—The appellants from an order on a claim in a winding-up gave notice to read a mass of affidavits made in the winding-up but not used on the hearing below. The respondent objected to their being admitted, but took copies. The Court of Appeal confined the argument in the first instance to a question not affected by these affidavits, and being against the appellants on that question, dismissed the appeal with costs, so that the question as to the admissibility of the affidavits was not decided. The respondent applied to have the affidavits entered in the order, as otherwise he would not be able to get the costs of having taken copies : —Held, that the application could not be granted, and that the respondent ought not to have taken copies unless and until the court held the evidence admissible, in which case it would have given him time to enable him to meet it. Brampton and Longtown Ry., In re, Shaw's Claim, 44 L. J., Ch. 670 ; L. R. 10 Ch. 186 ; 33 L. T. 5 ; 23 W. R. 813.

—— Irrelevant or Scandalous.]—See ante, col. 1093.

Interrogatories.]—Action for work and labour. Pleas, the general issue and payment. The verdict being for the plaintiff on the first, and for the defendant on the second issue, the Master rightly disallowed the costs of cross-examining upon interrogatories a witness whose examination in chief proved the first issue, and whose cross-examination was material only in reducing the damages on that issue, but did not affect the second issue. Gravatt v. Attwood, 1 B. C. C. 27 ; 21 L. J., Q. B. 215.

Costs of preparing interrogatories, which were not used, owing to admissions being put in, allowed as between party and party. Davies v. Marshall, 1 Dr. & Sm. 564 ; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 669 ; 9 W. R. 756.

So much of a bill for an account against trustees, and to have sums claimed by them disallowed, as charged fraud, was dismissed with costs, and accounts were directed. The Master, in taxing the defendant's costs, had refused to allow to the plaintiff any costs whatever in respect of the interrogatories, answer, or production of documents, considering that all these items were unnecessary upon a mere bill for an account :—Held, that the Master was not justified in disallowing these items without distinguishing those portions which related to the part of the bill which had not been dismissed, and as to which his certificate was sent back for review. Heming v. Leifchild, 8 W. R. 352. Affirmed, 9 W. R. 174.

Depositions.] — Where the Master reported passages in depositions taken for the defendants to be scandalous, but made no report as to the frame of the interrogatories :—Held, that they were not liable to the costs of the reference. Gude v. Mumford, 2 Y. & Coll. 445 ; 1 Jur. 577.

But where the attorney for the defendant made such statements in his examination, the court ordered him to pay the costs of expunging them, and would only visit the examiner in an extreme case. Ib.

A. ISSUE OF EXECUTION.

1. GENERALLY.

See R. S. C. Ord. XLII.

Debtor's Interest.]—A judgment creditor can only by execution take such property of his debtor as the debtor could deal with properly and without violation of the rights of other persons. Badeley v. Consolidated Bank, 57 L. J., Ch. 468; 38 Ch. D. 238; 59 L. T. 419; 36 W. R. 745—C. A.

Variation of Forms.]—The true interpretation of the words, Ord. XLII. r. 14, of the Rules of 1883, "The forms used in Appendix H. shall be followed, with such variations as circumstances may require"—is, that the forms in Appendix H. can only be varied for the purpose of making them to be in accordance with the terms of the judgment or order. Boswell v. Coaks, 57 L. J., Ch. 101; 57 L. T. 742; 36 W. R. 65—C. A.

Time of.]—A petition for the winding-up of a company was presented at one o'clock in the day. At four o'clock in the same day execution was levied on part of the company's property in pursuance of a writ issued before the time when the petition was presented:—Held, that the execution was void. London and Devon Biscuit Co., In re, 40 L. J., Ch. 574; L. R. 12 Eq. 190; 24 L. T. 650; 19 W. R. 943.

Judgment for 20*l.* having been recovered and signed against the defendant, a man of known and undoubted wealth, the costs were taxed at 72*l.*, and on the allocatur being given for that sum about one o'clock in the day, the attorney's clerk, who represented the defendant at the taxation, asked the attorney's clerk attending for the plaintiff to grant time until a return of post in which to pay the money. This the latter refused to do, and he at once issued execution, which was levied at four o'clock the same afternoon. A Master made an order setting aside the fi. fa. and all proceedings thereunder, with costs, on the ground that the execution had been issued with unreasonable haste:—Held, that such order was wrong, as the plaintiff had a right to issue execution instanter, not being bound to wait during the time asked for, and no other indulgence of a more reasonable kind having been craved. Smith v. Smith, 43 L. J., Ex. 86; L. R. 9 Ex. 121; 30 L. T. 429.

Held, also, that a party who has signed judgment is entitled to issue execution without waiting for a return of post. Ib.

Semble, he is entitled to issue execution immediately, and is not bound to wait a reasonable time. Ib.

When a defendant in a chancery suit had, in pursuance of an order of the court, given judgment in an action at law commenced against him by the plaintiff "to be dealt with as the court should direct," the court, under the circumstances, gave the plaintiff leave to issue execution before the hearing of the cause, on his undertaking to pay the proceeds into court. Hodges v. Fincham, 1 Ch. D. 9; 33 L. T. 711; 24 W. R. 36—C. A.

Where a verdict is taken for a plaintiff in an action subject to a reference of the cause, and all matters in difference by order of nisi prius, and an award is made directing the verdict in the action to stand for the plaintiff for a certain sum, and finding another sum to be due to the defendant in respect of the matters in difference, the plaintiff is entitled to sign judgment for the sum awarded to him in the action in fourteen days after the making the award. O'Toole v. Pott, 7 El. & Bl. 102; 26 L. J., Q. B. 88; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 361; 5 W. R. 256.

Service of a decree or an order directing payment of money or costs is not requisite as a preliminary to issuing a writ of fi. fa. Land Credit Co. of Ireland v. Fermoy (Lord), Munster, Ex parte, 39 L. J., Ch. 477; L. R. 5 Ch. 323; 22 L. T. 394; 18 W. R. 393.

To issue execution on the same day on which costs are taxed is an abuse of the procedure of the court, and the costs of such an execution will be ordered to be returned. Cruickshank v. Moss, 8 L. T. 439.

On Judgment more than a Year old.]—A writ of execution issued on a judgment more than a year old, without a scire facias, was not void, but voidable only. Blanchenay v. Burt, 4 Q. B. 737; 3 G. & D. 613; 12 L. J., Q. B. 291; 7 Jur. 575.

—— More than Six Years old.]—Leave will not be given, in the absence of special circumstances, to issue execution on a judgment more than six years old, without notice to the party liable. National Bank v. Cullen, [1894] 2 Ir. R. 683—C. A.

For Balance after previous Execution.]—Where, in an action in the Exchequer Division to recover a sum of money admitted to have been received by the defendant as trustee, and to which the plaintiff was entitled, the plaintiff had obtained final judgment and issued execution:—Held, that the court had no jurisdiction to make an order directing the defendant to pay in four days the balance of the amount of the judgment unrealised by the execution. Drewett v. Edwards, 37 L. T. 622; 26 W. R. 122—C. A.

Changing Solicitor.]—A plaintiff may sue out execution by a different attorney from the attorney in the cause, without obtaining an order for changing the attorney. Tipping v. Johnson, 2 Bos. & P. 357.

On Death or Change of Parties.]—When a change had taken place by death in the parties entitled to execution on a judgment, the executors of the party who obtained the judgment obtained leave to issue execution on an ex parte application. Mercer v. Lawrence, 26 W. R. 506.

Where a defendant died between eleven and twelve o'clock in the morning, and a fi. fa. was sued out against his goods between two and three in the afternoon of the same day, the court set aside the execution as irregular. Chick v. Smith, 8 D. P. C. 337; 4 Jur. 86.

When improperly issued.]—S., as solicitor for a shareholder, presented a petition for the winding-up of a company, which was dismissed with costs. K., the solicitor of the company, made a demand for these costs upon S., who had received a cheque for the amount, but through a misunderstanding between the solicitors as to the authority to receive the costs, payment was not made until after a writ of fieri facias had been issued and executed for the amount. On a motion by S.'s client to set aside the writ, as issued contrary to good faith; or in the alternative that K. might be ordered to pay the costs of the execution and of the motion. The court refused to set the writ aside, but, considering that it ought not to have been issued, ordered K. to pay the costs of the execution and motion. Commonwealth Land, Building, Estate and Auction Co., In re Hollington, Ex parte, 43 L. J., Ch. 99; 29 L. T. 502; 22 W. R. 106.

2. On Rule or Order of Superior Court.

On Rule of Superior Courts—Judgments Act, 1838, 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 18.]—An order of the Court of Chancery, requiring the defendants in a suit to pay a certain sum into the bank, with the privity of the accountant-general, to the credit of the cause, is not an order which has the effect of a judgment within 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 18. Gibbs v. Pike, 8 M. & W. 223; 9 D. P. C. 131; 10 L. J., Ex. 308.

Where an order for payment of a sum of money is made against several persons, process can be issued separately against one of them, though the order is not in terms joint and several. Land Credit Co. of Ireland v. Fermoy (Lord), Munster, Ex parte, 39 L. J., Ch. 477; L. R. 5 Ch. 323; 22 L. T. 394; 18 W. R. 393.

A judge's order for payment of money, obtained ex parte, cannot be made the foundation of an execution. Rickards v. Patterson, 1 D. (N.S.) 52; 8 M. & W. 313; 10 L. J., Ex. 272; 5 Jur. 894.

The rule when granted is a rule nisi only; and the court refused to make such rule absolute without personal service, where it appeared that such service might be effected. Winwood v. Hoult, 3 D. & L. 85; 14 M. & W. 197; 15 L. J., Ex. 10.

A judge at the assizes made an order to postpone a cause to the next assizes, the defendant forthwith to pay to the plaintiff costs of the day, to be taxed. This order was afterwards made a rule of court, before which, however, the action having abated by the defendant's death, the court refused to order the costs to be taxed, with a view to the plaintiff's issuing execution. Hill v. Brown, 16 M. & W. 696; 11 Jur. 290.

Where a party has obtained a rule absolute for costs of the day, and has procured the costs to be taxed, and the allocatur to be indorsed on the rule, he may issue execution for the amount of those costs, without any fresh rule specifying in distinct terms what their amount is. Hodgson v. Patterson, 5 Scott (N.R.) 76; 4 Man. & G. 333; 2 D. (N.S.) 129; 11 L. J., C. P. 289.

A conditional order to pay money is not an order upon which execution can issue. Gibbs v. Flight, 13 C. B. 803; 22 L. J., C. P. 256; 17 Jur. 1034.

A writ of execution cannot issue out of a court of common law upon a decree or an order of a court of equity. Stanford, In re, 4 Scott (N.R.) 23; 1 D. (N.S.) 183; 3 Man. & G. 407; 11 L. J., C. P. 49; 6 Jur. 38. S. P., Gibbs v. Pike, 9 M. & W. 351; 1 D. (N.S.) 409; 6 Jur. 465.

—— Effect of Statute.]—By 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 18, rules of court are not made equivalent to judgments, except so far as concerns the remedy for the recovery of the moneys payable by virtue of them. Farmer v. Mottram, 1 D. & L. 781; 6 Man. & G. 684; 7 Scott (N.R.) 408; 13 L. J., C. P. 10; 7 Jur. 994.

A judge's order under 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, s. 43, ordering judgment to be entered up for the amount found by the master's allocatur to be due on an attorney's bill of costs, has the same force as a rule of court for the payment of money under the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 18, and no action, therefore, need be brought on such order, and if brought the costs of the writ, declaration and appearance will not be allowed. Griffiths v. Hughes, 16 M. & W. 809; 16 L. J., Ex. 176; 11 Jur. 313.

—— Obtaining Leave.]—A party, to whom a sum of money has been made payable by a rule of court, is entitled to sue out execution for the amount, without any leave obtained from the court for that purpose. Wallis v. Sheffield, 7 D. P. C. 793; 3 Jur. 1002.

In cases in which a rule of court for the payment of money has the effect of a judgment, under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 18, a rule nisi, calling upon the parties to shew cause why the amount should not be paid is unnecessary. Doe d. Harrison v. Hampson, 4 C. B. 745; 5 D. & L. 484; 17 L. J., C. P. 147.

Where an application to a judge to set aside an execution is ordered to be referred to the master, the costs of the reference to be in his discretion, and if the judge's order has been made a rule of court, it is not necessary to apply to the court for leave to issue execution on the master's allocatur as to such costs. Watson v. Holcombe, 4 Man. & G. 136; 11 L. J., C. P. 190.

—— When Rule is more than a Year old.]—Where a rule for payment of money is more than a year and a day old, it is not necessary to sue out a scire facias, or to obtain the leave of the court, before issuing execution upon it. Spooner v. Payne, 5 D. & L. 310; 11 Q. B. 136; 17 L. J., Q. B. 68; 12 Jur. 282.

Attachment of Debtor's Person—Rights of Creditor.]—On an attachment for nonpayment of a sum of money under a decree of a court of equity, the defendant was taken into custody by the sheriff:—Held, that the plaintiff had not lost his right to proceed under the decree against the defendant's property. Roberts v. Ball, 3 Sm. & G. 168; 24 L. J., Ch. 471; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 585; 3 Eq. R. 632; 3 W. R. 466.

The seizure of the person of the debtor for contempt of court, is not, under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 18, a release of the debts against the debtor's property. Ib.

3. On Judgment of Inferior Court, by Removal.

Removal from Inferior Court—19 Geo. 3, c. 70.]—In term time a rule should be obtained to remove the record of a judgment in an inferior court under 19 Geo. 3, c. 70. Smithers v. Tanner, 1 W. W. & H. 84.

19 Geo. 3, c. 70, s. 6, applies only to causes removed from an inferior court before judgment. Longden v. Croots, 7 Scott, 377. S. C. nom. Crookes v. Longden, 7 D. P. C. 413; 5 Bing. (N.C.) 410; 3 Jur. 317.

The court will remove a judgment from an inferior court, in order to issue execution thereon, though part of the debt has been levied by process from the inferior court. Knowles v. Lynch, 4 Tyr. 477.

Semble, that 19 Geo. 3, c. 70, s. 4, does not apply to judgments obtained by defendants. Batten v. Squires, 4 D. P. C. 53.

Where the original judgment in an inferior court has been destroyed by fire, the court will allow execution to be issued under a verified copy of the judgment. Cheesewright v. Franks, 6 D. P. C. 471.

The removal of a judgment in an inferior court, under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 22, into the Court of Queen's Bench, is for the purpose of execution only, and the court will not set aside the judgment for irregularity in the service of the process, or because the action was prematurely commenced. Simon v. De Witts (Count), 4 Jur. 989.

Removal from County Court.]—The judgment of a county court, constituted under 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, is not removable into a superior court for the purpose of execution, either under 19 Geo. 3, c. 70, s. 4, or 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 22. Moreton v. Holt, 10 Ex. 707; 3 C. L. R. 348; 24 L. J., Ex. 169; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 215; 3 W. R. 207.

Removal from Mayor's Court.]—By the Mayor's Court of London Procedure Act, 1857, s. 48, execution might be issued in a superior court upon a judgment obtained in the Mayor's Court. By the Borough and Local Courts of Record Act, 1872, s. 6, where final judgment has been obtained in any local court for a sum not exceeding 20*l.*, "such court shall be at liberty to send a writ or precept for the recovery of the same to the registrar of any county court within the jurisdiction of which the defendant may possess any goods or chattels . . . and thereupon the high bailiff of such county court shall execute the same in the same manner as if such writ or precept had been issued out of such county court":—Held, that the two statutes were not inconsistent, and that the Mayor's Court of London Procedure Act, 1857, s. 48, had not been repealed by the Borough and Local Courts of Record Act, 1872, s. 6; and that notwithstanding the latter statute, execution might be issued in the High Court of Justice upon a judgment for a sum not exceeding 20*l.* obtained in the Mayor's Court. Paine v. Slater, 52 L. J., Q. B. 282; 11 Q. B. D. 120; 48 L. T. 623; 31 W. R. 941—C. A.

Under the Mayor's Court of London Procedure Act, 1857, s. 48, a plaintiff who has recovered a judgment, in an action in the Mayor's Court, against a defendant having goods within its jurisdiction, is entitled, as of right, to remove such judgment into one of the superior courts, and to issue execution thereout against the goods of the defendant; and such execution will not be set aside as an abuse of the process of the court, notwithstanding that execution could have been issued out of the Mayor's Court with as full effect as out of the superior court, and that the only object of removing the judgment into the superior court may have been to obtain the increased costs of such execution. Haywood v. Saint, 32 L. T. 566.

The court to which such judgment is so removed may set it aside, if satisfied that it was obtained in a matter over which the inferior court had no jurisdiction. Bridge v. Branch, 1 C. P. D. 633; 34 L. T. 905.

B. Several Writs on Same Judgment.

Issue of Two Writs of Fi. fa. for different Parts of same Debt.]—It is no ground for setting aside the proceedings for irregularity, that the plaintiff has issued two writs of fi. fa. and caused part of the debt to be levied under the second, and that no return has been made to either. Green v. Elgie, 3 B. & Ad. 437; 1 L. J., K. B. 150.

Where a plaintiff from mistake has issued a fi. fa. for less than the sum for which he has obtained judgment, the court will, on conditions, allow him to issue a fi. fa. for the residue. Hunt v. Passmore, 2 D. P. C. 414.

Issue of Second Fi. fa. before returning the First.]—A sheriff having seized the defendant's goods under a fi. fa., it was agreed between the plaintiff and the defendant that the sheriff should withdraw upon payment of part of the debt, and that the judgment should stand as a security for the residue, which was to be paid by instalments; and that, in default thereof, the plaintiff should be at liberty to re-enter into possession; default having been made in payment of the first instalment, the plaintiff issued a second fi. fa. without returning the first:—Held, that the second writ was irregular.

Chapman v. Bowlby, 1 D. (N.S.) 83; 8 M. & W. 249; 10 L. J., Ex. 299.

Issue of Fi. fa. after Party discharged under Insolvent Act.]—A ca. sa. issued against four joint defendants, under which one was taken in execution and discharged under the Insolvent Debtors Act. The plaintiff afterwards issued a fi. fa. against the four defendants, under which the sheriff seized the goods of the one who had been discharged:—Held, that the writ was irregular, in having been issued against a party discharged under the Insolvent Act, and that it should have issued against the three only, suggesting the discharge of the one. Raynes v. Jones, 9 M. & W. 134; 1 D. (N.S.) 373; 11 L. J., Ex. 62; 6 Jur. 133.

C. SEVERAL EXECUTIONS ON SEVERAL JUDGMENTS: PRIORITY OF EXECUTIONS.

Generally.]—The proceeds of the sale of goods under an execution on a warrant of attorney, invalid by reason of a prior act of bankruptcy, under the repealed 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 108, became vested in the assignees for the benefit of the whole body of creditors, subject, however, while in the hands of the sheriff, to any writs of execution in adverse actions, lodged with him before the fiat issued. Goldschmidt v. Hamlet, 1 D. & L. 501; 6 Scott (N.R.) 962; 6 Man. & G. 187; 12 L. J., C. P. 304. S. P., Graham v. Witherby, 7 Q. B. 491; 14 L. J., Q. B. 290. See Congreve v. Evetts, 10 Ex. 298.

Where two writs of fi. fa. against the same defendant are delivered to a sheriff on different days, and no sale is actually made of the defendant's goods, the first execution must have the priority, even though the seizure was first made under the subsequent execution; and if the person claiming under the second execution pays the sheriff the amount of the debt under the first execution for his security, the court will not compel the sheriff to refund that money on motion. Hutchinson v. Johnston, 1 Term Rep. 729; 1 R. R. 380. See Rybot v. Peckham, 1 Term Rep. 731, n.; 1 R. R. 382, n.

Two writs of fi. fa. were issued at the suit of different plaintiffs against one defendant; the goods taken under them were only sufficient to satisfy the first execution, but the officer under the second writ continued in possession until the goods were sold by the sheriff: the defendant then obtained a rule for setting aside the first execution, which was made absolute, and the sheriff was ordered by the court to pay the defendant the proceeds of the levy. The sheriff having so done without application to the court for relief, or without having given notice to the plaintiff in the second execution, he was liable to him for that amount, in an action for a false return of nulla bona. Saunders v. Middlesex (Sheriff), 3 B. & Ald. 95.

Where the sheriff seized goods under a fi. fa. and left a man in possession, and a second fi. fa. issued, under which a warrant was granted, and left with the man in possession:—Held, that the second writ operated in favour of the first, and could not be set aside as irregular. Jones v. Atherton, 2 Marsh. 375; 7 Taunt. 56; 17 R. R. 442.

Delivery of Writ with Instructions to suspend Execution—Subsequent Writs.]—Where a fi. fa. is delivered to the sheriff with directions to suspend the execution, and in the meantime another writ is delivered by another creditor, the sheriff is bound to levy under the latter writ in preference to the former, although the former writ was not delivered with any fraudulent intent or purpose to protect the goods of the debtor. Hunt v. Hooper, 1 D. & L. 626; 12 M. & W. 664; 13 L. J., Ex. 183; 8 Jur. 203.

If a fi. fa. is delivered to the sheriff, and he is directed not to levy thereon till a future day, and in the meantime another writ is delivered, he is to levy under the second writ as if no other writ had been delivered to him. Kempland v. Macauley, Peake, 66.

In March the then sheriffs of London seized the goods of a debtor, by virtue of a fi. fa.; an officer was put in possession of the goods, but the execution creditor directed the sheriffs not to sell, and the debtor continued to have the control of his goods until November, when another execution creditor sued out a fi. fa. directed to the succeeding sheriffs of London:—Held, that the latter were bound to levy this second fi. fa., and that it was their duty, when they found the officer of the former sheriffs in possession, to inquire into the facts, and if they had done so, they would have learned that the first execution was fraudulent. Lovick v. Crowder, 8 B. & C. 132; 2 M. & Ry. 84; 6 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 263.

Where the attorney of a judgment creditor delivered to the sheriff a fi. fa. returnable on a day certain, with directions by letter not to execute it till the return, unless another execution should come in in the meantime, and afterwards sent in an alias, accompanied with the same directions; and the sheriff, upon another execution coming in, issued warrants on and executed both writs on the same day, giving precedence to the last execution, and satisfying that wholly, first, out of the money levied, and then paid over the remainder in part satisfaction of the execution first delivered, and returned that payment and nulla bona as to the residue:—Held, that the plaintiff could not maintain an action against the sheriff for a false return, and that a nonsuit on that ground had been properly directed. Pringle v. Isaac, 11 Price, 445.

Instructions to withdraw countermanded before obeyed.]—P. having recovered judgment against F., the sheriff, on the 15th of April, seized F.'s goods in Hampshire, under a fi. fa. in that action, and left a man in possession. On the same day F. executed a bill of sale to W., and a fi. fa. in an action by N. against F. was lodged with the sheriff for execution. On the 1st of May, F. was taken in Middlesex under a ca. sa. issued at the suit of P., and thereupon P.'s attorney at Southampton immediately wrote to request the sheriff to withdraw from possession under the fi. fa. The officer received the letter, but his man continued in possession of the goods, and did not in fact withdraw. The officer, however, told W. that he would hold for him under his writ. A summons to set aside the ca. sa., on the ground that it had been irregularly issued, "no return to the fi. fa. under which the sheriff now holds the defendant's property having been made," was taken out on the 3rd of May, and on the 4th F. was discharged out of custody, and an order was made by consent that P. should be at liberty to proceed on the fi. fa. under which the sheriff was in possession. The summons was taken out and the consent to the order given by R., the London agent of W., who was the attorney for F. in the action of P. v. F., upon F.'s instructions. W. knew nothing about the terms of the order at the time it was made; and when he heard it, took no steps to inform P. that he objected to it, or that it was made without his authority:—Held, that the sheriff's officer having continued in actual possession under P.'s writ, and the direction of the sheriff to withdraw having been countermanded before it was actually obeyed, W. acquired no right to the goods seized as against P. Withers v. Parker, 4 H. & N. 524; 28 L. J., Ex. 292. Affirmed, on appeal, 5 H. & N. 725; 29 L. J., Ex. 320; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1833; 2 L. T. 602; 8 W. R. 550—Ex. Ch.

Several Writs delivered at one Time.]—There being one attorney employed by six several plaintiffs in various actions against one defendant, in each of which judgment was obtained, and a writ of execution issued, the whole of the writs were delivered to the sheriff for execution at one time and in one bundle. The court refused, upon application by the sheriff, to compel the plaintiffs, or their attorney, to direct in what priority the writs should be executed. Ashworth v. Uxbridge (Earl), 2 D. (N.S.) 377.

Writ issued with Knowledge of Garnishee Order.]—A. recovered judgment against the plaintiff in the Mayor's Court. He levied execution on the plaintiff's goods after he had notice that all the moneys due under the judgment were at that time attached by a garnishee order of the High Court. The plaintiff brought an action of trespass in respect of such execution:—Held, that no action lay. Cronmire v. Maccolla, 58 J. P. 149—C. A.

Liability to Sheriff.]—A fi. fa. issued at the suit of one creditor, and before it was executed the attorneys of another creditor obtained a warrant upon another fi. fa. from the same sheriff, directed to their clerk, and executed it before the prior execution was put in:—Held, that the attorneys were liable to the sheriff (who had made a return that he had levied the money under the first writ, and had in fact paid the amount of the debt to the creditor) to refund the money levied under the second execution, in an action for money had and received. Sawle v. Paynter, 1 D. & R. 307; 24 R. R. 659. And see Cooper v. Wrench, 1 D. & R. 482.

First Writ fraudulently executed.]—In an action against a sheriff for a false return of nulla bona to a fi. fa., the sheriff proved that he had seized all the goods of the debtor under a fi. fa. in another suit before the plaintiffs' writ was delivered to him. The plaintiffs in answer proved that the judgment upon which the first execution was sued out was entered upon a warrant of attorney fraudulently executed by the debtor in order to defeat their execution, and that they gave notice to the sheriff to retain the proceeds of the goods levied. The sheriff on the first day of the next term was served with a rule to return the fi. fa. under which he had first levied. He did not give any notice to the plaintiffs by whom the second fi. fa. had been sued out, that he had been served with such a rule, and at the expiration of the six days mentioned in that rule, the sheriff's officer paid over the proceeds of the goods levied to the plaintiffs at whose suit the first fi. fa. had been sued out:—Held, that this was misconduct in the sheriff, which rendered him liable to the plaintiffs in the second execution. Warmoll v. Young, 5 B. & C. 660; 8 D. & R. 452; 4 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 293.

Where a fi. fa. has been fraudulently executed, a subsequent fi. fa. at the suit of another, which is executed afterwards, will stand and be preferred, and the fact of fraudulent execution is matter for a jury. Bradley v. Wyndham, 1 Wils. 44.

D. FIERI FACIAS.

1. The Writ itself.

Form of—Must agree with Judgment.]—A writ of execution must agree in the mandatory part of it with the judgment. Cobbold v. Chilver, 4 Scott (N.R.) 678; 1 D. (N.S.) 726; 4 Man. & G. 62; 11 L. J., C. P. 173; 6 Jur. 346.

The writ of fi. fa., sued out under a decree or order of court, by virtue of the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 105, s. 27, must correspond with the decree or order: therefore, where a separate fi. fa. against one issued on a joint order for payment of costs against several, the court set aside the writ as irregular, but without costs, and paid back the money levied, on the party undertaking not to bring an action in respect of the seizure and sale by the sheriff. Moneypenny v. De Massy, 1 Ir. Ch. R. 597.

A fi. fa., whereby the sheriff is directed to levy a sum different in amount from that mentioned in the judgment, although smaller, is irregular; unless the reason of the variance is shewn on the face of the writ. Webber v. Hutchins, 8 M. & W. 319; 1 D. (N.S.) 95; 10 L. J., Ex. 354.

The incipitur is not itself the judgment, but merely instructions for entering the judgment. Where, therefore, in the judgment roll, the sum stated to be recovered agrees with the sum for which the fi. fa. issues, the fi. fa. cannot be set aside, because it is for a less sum than is mentioned in the incipitur. King v. Birch, 3 Q. B. 425; 2 G. & D. 513; 11 L. J., Q. B. 183.

In an action of debt, the aggregate amount claimed in the declaration was 1,500*l.*; the plaintiff signed judgment by default, and the entry in the master's book denoted no sum as that for which judgment was entered; a fi. fa. having been issued for 514*l.*, the defendant obtained a summons to set aside the writ, on the ground that the judgment must be taken to be for 1,500*l.*, and that there was, consequently, a variance. The first summons was not attended, and, pending a second summons, the plaintiff made up and carried in the roll, taking judgment for 514*l.* only, and remitting 986*l.* The fi. fa. was, notwithstanding, set aside by an order of a judge, on the ground of the variance:—Held, that the order must be rescinded, for that, when it was made, there was a regular judgment authorising the writ. Phillips v. Birch, 2 D. (N.S.) 97; 5 Scott (N.R.) 178; 4 Man. & G. 403; 11 L. J., C. P. 297.

Form of the writ of fi. fa. to recover a defendant's costs where a plaintiff has given notice of discontinuance of the action under Ord. XXIII., and has made default in payment of the defendant's costs of the action. Bolton v. Bolton, 3 Ch. D. 276.

Indorsement of.]—A defendant, an attorney for P., obtained judgment in an action against W. F., and thereupon caused a fi. fa. to issue against his goods, and delivered the writ to the sheriff. The writ was indorsed, "The defendant is a ——, and resides at Redcar, in your baili-wick." W. F., in fact, lived at Coatham, a village adjoining Redcar, at which latter place his son, of the same name, was living. The writ was handed by the sheriff to the officer, who went to Redcar, and took possession of the goods of the son, who subsequently brought an action against the sheriff and recovered damages. The defendant believed that the son was the person against whom the judgment had been obtained, and the sheriff and his officers had no knowledge of the person intended by the writ, except that which they derived from the indorsement upon it. In an action by the sheriff to recover damages from the defendant, on the ground of his having required him to seize the goods of W. F., of Redcar:—Held, that the action was not maintainable, as the indorsement upon the writ was nothing more than a statement by the defendant, for the purpose of affording information to the sheriff, leaving him to his discretion as to how he would act. Childers v. Wooler, 2 El. & El. 287; 29 L. J., Q. B. 129; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 444; 2 L. T. 49; 8 W. R. 321.

A. lodged with the sheriff a fi. fa., in the indorsement of which the execution debtor was described as of a place at which he carried on business in partnership with others:—Held, that by the indorsement A. had directed the sheriff to levy on the goods at that place. Lane v. Sterne, 10 W. R. 555.

Liability of Execution Creditor—Misdescription in Writ.]—It is the duty of an execution creditor to fill up the indorsement form attached to a writ of fieri facias. And where his solicitor makes a mistake in filling up the indorsement which misleads the sheriff, the execution creditor is liable to the person damnified by the sheriff's act. Lee v. Rumilly, 55 J. P. 519—C. A.

When there is no inaccuracy in filling up the indorsement of a writ of fieri facias, the execution creditor is not liable. The holder of a bill of sale over the goods of the judgment debtor has therefore no cause of action against the execution creditor when the indorsement states the true address of the judgment debtor. Condy v. Blaiberg, 55 J. P. 580—C. A.

—— To whom directed.]—A writ of fi. fa. directed in the first instance to the bailiff of the Isle of Ely, out of King's Bench, is erroneous and void, and the bailiff executing the same is guilty of a trespass against the party whose goods are taken in execution. Grant v. Bagge, 3 East, 128; 6 R. R. 569.

—— Sum ordered to be paid not specific.]—By a judge's order, a judgment irregularly signed was set aside with costs to be taxed. They were taxed at 6*l.* 5*s.* and not paid. The rule of court recited the order verbatim, and ordered the payment of the costs of making the order a rule of court, which were afterwards taxed. A fi. fa. was sued out, directing the sheriff to levy 9*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* as the sum which had been ordered to be paid by the rule of court, together with interest at 4*l.* per cent. (pursuing the form No. 8, appended to R. G., H. T. 2 Vict.):—Held, that the fi. fa. and the levy thereunder were irregular, the form (No. 8) being applicable only to cases where the payment of a specific sum of money is ordered. Badman v. Pugh, 5 Man. & G. 381; 2 D. (N.S.) 907; 6 Scott (N.R.) 150; 12 L. J., C. P. 126.

Amendment of.]—An irregular fi. fa. cannot be amended to the prejudice of the intervening rights of assignees. Brooks v. Hodson, 7 Man. & G. 529; 8 Scott (N.R.) 223.

If, after fi. fa., executed, other effects are discovered, another fi. fa. may issue, or a ca. sa. Hopkins v. Adcock, Dick. 443.

After ca. sa. executed, fi. fa. cannot issue; but after fi. fa. ca. sa. may. Ib.

Service of a decree or an order directing payment of money or costs is not requisite as a preliminary to issuing a writ of fi. fa. when a day certain was fixed for payment. Land Credit Co. of Ireland v. Fermoy (Lord), Munster, Ex parte, 39 L. J., Ch. 477; L. R. 5 Ch. 323; 22 L. T. 394; 18 W. R. 393.

Where an order for payment of a sum of money is made against several persons, process can be issued separately against one of them, though the order is not in terms joint and several. Ib.

Leave to Issue.]—When a change had taken place by death in the parties entitled to execution on a judgment, the executors of the party who obtained the judgment obtained leave to issue execution on an ex parte application. Mercer v. Lawrence, 26 W. R. 506.

In a chancery suit a receiver was appointed on the defendant undertaking to give judgment in an action commenced against him by the same plaintiff, to be dealt with as the court shall direct. Before the cause came on for hearing the defendant advertised for sale his furniture, which was his only property:—Held, that there was nothing to prevent the court from allowing execution to issue before the hearing of the cause, and that under the circumstances leave should be given to the plaintiff to issue execution. Hodges v. Fincham, 1 Ch. D. 9; 33 L. T. 711; 24 W. R. 36.

Irregularity.]—An order dated 19th November, ordered A. to pay to B. a sum of money "on or before the 1st of December next, or within four days, after service of this order." The order was not passed and entered till the 2nd December, and was never served on A. After a month from the time of entering the order, B. sued out a writ of fi. fa. against the goods of A. for the amount:—Held, that A. was not in default, and that the writ was irregular. Adkins v. Bliss, 2 De G. & J. 286; 27 L. J., Ch. 486; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1162; 6 W. R. 453.

A petition for the winding-up of a company was presented at one o'clock in the day. At four o'clock in the same day execution was levied on part of the company's property, in pursuance of a writ issued before the time when the petition was presented:—Held, that the execution was void. London and Devon Biscuit Co., In re, 40 L. J., Ch. 574; L. R. 12 Eq. 190; 24 L. T. 650; 19 W. R. 943.

S., as solicitor for a shareholder, presented a petition for the winding-up of a company, which was dismissed with costs. K., the solicitor of the company, made a demand for these costs upon S., who had received a cheque for the amount, but through a misunderstanding between the solicitors, as to the authority to receive the costs, payment was not made until after a writ of fi. fa. had been issued and executed for the amount. On a motion by S.'s client to set aside the writ, as issued contrary to good faith; or in the alternative that K. might be ordered to pay the costs of the execution, and of the motion: the court refused to set the writ aside, but considering that it ought not to have been issued, ordered K. to pay the costs of the execution and motion. Hollington, Ex parte, Commonwealth Land, Building, Estate and Auction Co., In re, 43 L. J., Ch. 99; 29 L. T. 502; 22 W. R. 106.

2. TIME OF OPERATION.

From what Time Goods become bound.]—Goods taken under a fi. fa. are bound from the date of the teste of the writ, except as against purchasers in market overt. Ranken v. Harwood, 10 Jur. 794.

Therefore, where the debtor died in the interval between the issuing and the execution of the writ, the creditor's title to the goods taken will be paramount to that of the executor. Ib.

The goods are bound from the delivery of the writ to the sheriff. Hutchinson v. Johnston, 1 Term Rep. 732; 1 R. R. 380.

Though a fi. fa. binds the goods as against the defendant, yet the property is not divested out of him till execution executed. Payne v. Drew, 4 East, 523; 1 Smith, 170.

Although the goods of a debtor are bound from the delivery of a writ of execution to the sheriff, yet the property in them is not changed by it, and is still in the debtor, and he may sell them, subject to the rights of the execution creditor, to which they will be liable in the hands of a purchaser, unless the sale took place in market overt. Samuel v. Duke, 3 M. & W. 622; 6 D. P. C. 536; 1 H. & H. 127; 7 L. J., Ex. 177.

A delivery of a fi. fa. to the sheriff's deputy in London is equivalent to a delivery to the sheriff in the country. Woodland v. Fuller, 3 P. & D. 570; 11 A. & E. 859; 9 L. J., Q. B. 181; 4 Jur. 743.

A., expecting an execution, executed a deed assigning all his property to trustees, for the benefit of his creditors, after paying expenses, with a power to the trustees to retain money to pay the costs of an action which had been brought by B. against A. This deed was executed at 9 a.m. on the 25th February. A fi. fa. was delivered to a sheriff's officer on the 24th, and by him delivered to the under-sheriff at 10 a.m. on the 25th:—Held, that the deed was good, notwithstanding the proviso to retain, and that the goods could not be taken under the fi. fa. Bowen v. Bramidge, 6 Car. & P. 140.

Invalidation by Notice.]—The Mercantile Law Amendment Act, 1856, 19 & 20 Vict. c. 97, s. 1, held not to apply where the writ was delivered to the sheriff before the passing of the act. Williams v. Smith, 4 H. & N. 559; 28 L. J., Ex. 286; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1107; 7 W. R. 503—Ex. Ch.

F. issued a fi. fa. against the defendant, and lodged it with the sheriff on the 3rd August. The warrant to seize under the writ was delivered to a bailiff, but no seizure was proved. On the 6th August the defendant assigned his interest in a term of years to W. & Co., who had notice of the writ. On the 12th August the sheriff sold the term to the plaintiff, and executed a deed of assignment on the 4th September:—Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover in ejectment. O'Brien v. Murray, 17 Ir. C. L. R. 46.

A plaintiff on the 23rd of May recovered judgment in an action against B., and on the same day placed a fi. fa. in the hands of the agent of the sheriff of Yorkshire, in London. A warrant was sent down by post, and the next morning, about nine o'clock, was in the hands of the officer of the sheriff at H., at which place B. had a warehouse containing certain property. The officer went to the warehouse, but finding the door locked did not break in or make the seizure. At a little before 10 o'clock, B. executed a deed of assignment of his goods and effects to trustees for the benefit of his creditors: B., and also his attorney, who prepared the deed, knew of the writ being in the hands of the sheriff before the deed was executed; but the trustees did not know it. The deed having been executed, notice was given to the officer, and he, by the direction of the attorney, seized the goods on behalf of the creditors. The sheriff having made a return on nulla bona, an action was brought against him by the plaintiff:—Held, that B. and his attorney, having knowledge of the writ being in the hands of the sheriff, the trustees must be taken to have notice of it also; and therefore that, under 19 & 20 Vict. c. 97, s. 1, they could not set up their title against that of the plaintiff under the writ. Hobson v. Thellusson, 8 B. & S. 476; 36 L. J., Q. B. 302; L. R. 2 Q. B. 642; 16 L. T. 837; 15 W. R. 1037.

3. LIABILITY OF EXECUTION CREDITOR.

For Trespass.]—B. sued out execution against A. After a seizure, and before sale, the execution was set aside by rule of court, of which the sheriff received notice from A. before the sale, and by the terms of the rule A. was to bring no action for the seizure. The sheriff having proceeded to a sale, on the ground that he had received no notice of the rule from B.:—Held, that as the execution was illegally sued out, B. was a wrongdoer, and that having set the sheriff in motion by a writ illegally issued, he was answerable for the acts of the sheriff in executing such writ; and consequently, that he was liable in trespass brought by A. for seizing and selling his goods under the execution. Perkins v. Plympton, 5 M. & P. 731; 7 Bing. 676; 9 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 223.

Under an Interpleader Order.]—Where goods seized by the sheriff under a fi. fa. are claimed and subsequently sold under an interpleader order (which does not restrain any action except against the sheriff), the execution creditor is not liable to the claimant (who, having succeeded in the interpleader issue, sues the execution creditor in trespass) for damages sustained subsequently to the order. Walker v. Olding, 1 H. & C. 621; 32 L. J., Ex. 142; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 53; 7 L. T. 633; 11 W. R. 186.

An execution creditor does not, by becoming a party to an interpleader issue, ratify or adopt the act of the sheriff, so as to render himself liable for the seizure of the goods, which are the subject of the interpleader issue. Woollen v. Wright, 1 H. & C. 554; 31 L. J., Ex. 513; 7 L. T. 73; 10 W. R. 715—Ex. Ch.

Direction to seize—What is.]—Where, under process of execution from a county court, some goods of a stranger had been taken, the mere fact that the execution creditor told the bailiff that goods would be claimed by a third party, but that such claim was not to be regarded, was held not to amount to a direction to take all the goods, or any which were not liable to be seized so as to make the execution creditor personally liable. Cronshaw v. Chapman, 7 H. & N. 911; 31 L. J., Ex. 277; 5 L. T. 54; 10 W. R. 323.

Implied Authority of Solicitor.]—Whether a seizure of particular goods under a fi. fa. was directed by the execution creditor, so as to make him liable for the act of the sheriff, is a question of fact. It is not within the scope of the implied authority of the solicitor of a judgment creditor issuing a fi. fa., to direct the sheriff to seize particular goods. Jarmain v. Hooper (6 Man. & G. 827) distinguished. Smith v. Keal, 9 Q. B. D. 340; 47 L. T. 142; 31 W. R. 76—C. A. Affirming 51 L. J., Q. B. 487; 46 J. P. 615.

To Action for Failure to withdraw Sheriff after Composition—Malice.]—In the absence of malice, no action will lie against a judgment creditor for not withdrawing the sheriff from possession after the judgment creditor has become bound by a composition of the debt. According to the statement of claim, A., having recovered a judgment against B., issued a writ of fi. fa., under which the sheriff entered into possession of B.'s goods. B. filed a petition of insolvency, and A. proved for the amount of his judgment against B.'s estate. Resolutions for a composition were passed and registered. The sheriff refused to withdraw from possession without A.'s instructions, which were not given by A. No malice was alleged as against A.:—Held, on demurrer, that, in the absence of malice, A.'s failure to instruct the sheriff to retire gave B. no right of action against A. Phillips v. General Omnibus Co., 50 L. J., Q. B. 112.

4. Seizure and Sale by Sheriff.

Seizure—What is.]—Where a sheriff's officer executed a fi. fa. by going to the house and informing the debtor he came to levy on his goods, and laying his hand on a table, and saying, "I take this table," and then locked up his warrant in the table drawer, took the key, and went away without leaving any person in possession, and after the fi. fa. was returnable, but not continued, the landlord distrained the goods for rent:—Held, that the sheriff could not maintain trespass against him. Blades v. Arundale, 1 M. & S. 711; 14 R. R. 555.

It is the duty of a sheriff, in executing a fi. fa., to possess himself of all the goods of the debtor within his bailiwick, or sufficient to satisfy the execution. Pitcher v. King, D. & M. 584; 5 Q. B. 758; 13 L. J., Q. B. 162; 8 Jur. 401.

Such a seizure by a sheriff of a debtor's goods under an execution as would have been good before the Mercantile Law Amendment Act, 1856, is an actual seizure within s. 1; and the expression "actual seizure" means no more than seizure. Gladstone v. Padwick, 40 L. J., Ex. 154; L. R. 6 Ex. 203; 25 L. T. 96; 19 W. R. 1064.

Where premises, consisting of a mansion-house, offices, gardens, farm and farmhouse, are in the same county, and in one and the same occupation as an entirety, a seizure by a sheriff at the mansion-house, of part of the effects liable to the execution in the name of the whole, is an actual seizure within the statute of everything on the premises liable to the execution, whatever the extent of the premises, and however dispersed the effects may be. Ib.

An execution debtor was possessed of a mansion-house and grounds and also of a farm, which, with the exception of two outlying fields, adjoined the grounds and formed part of one block with them. The farm was in his occupation, although the accounts were kept distinctly. The farmhouse was a mile distant from the mansion-house in a direct line. On the 19th of May, a fi. fa. was executed at the mansion-house by the under-sheriff, who informed the persons in charge there, including the steward of the estate, that all the goods on the estate were seized; and a man was left in possession. No act of seizure was done at the farmhouse or upon the farm on that day, the under-sheriff intending what he had done to be a seizure of the whole; but on the following day a man was put in possession at the farmhouse. The goods on the farm were claimed by assignees under a bill of sale, made for an antecedent debt, and for the purpose of giving it a preference over the execution, and which was executed on the evening of the 19th, after the seizure at the mansion-house was completed. At the time of the execution of the bill of sale, it was known to the solicitor of the assignees that the judgment creditor had threatened to seize, and that a fi. fa. on the judgment had been executed in another county; and it was expected by him, but not known, that a writ had been delivered to the sheriff of the county in which the goods lay:—Held, that what was done on the 19th of May amounted to an "actual seizure" of the goods on the farm and at the farmhouse within 19 & 20 Vict. c. 97, s. 1. Ib.

—— Of Ships.]—A defendant in an execution, being a registered proprietor of shares in a ship, a fi. fa. was delivered to the sheriff; and the solicitor for the creditor, by the direction of the sheriff, procured the certificate of registry from the ship, and delivered it to the sheriff, who retained it. The sheriff was registered at the custom-house, under the Merchant Shipping Act, as the owner of the shares, which were afterwards sold by him and transferred to the purchaser by a bill of sale, which was also registered:—Held, that the seizure was effectual, although the sheriff did not go on board the ship, and that the property in the shares was regularly transferred by the bill of sale. Harley v. Harley, 11 Ir. Ch. R. 451.

—— Wrongful — Restraining Sale under Fi. fa.]—On the 20th of August the sheriff, under a fi. fa. against A., took possession of B.'s furniture in A.'s house. Both before and after seizure B. gave formal notice to the sheriff that the furniture was his, and on the 23rd issued the writ in this action against the sheriff for an injunction and damages. On the 25th of August the sheriff issued an interpleader summons, under which an issue was directed and an order made for the sheriff withdrawing from possession on payment of 100*l.* into court. The sheriff accordingly withdrew from possession on the 1st of September. B.'s title was afterwards admitted by the judgment creditor, and the 100*l.* paid out of court to B. B. now brought this action to trial against the sheriff for damages and costs:—Held, that the sheriff had not exceeded the scope of his duty in retaining possession till ordered to withdraw under the interpleader order, and that the action must be dismissed, but without costs, on the ground that the sheriff might have applied to the judge under the interpleader order to dispose of the matters in question between him and the plaintiff. Aylwin v. Evans, 52 L. J., Ch. 105; 47 L. T. 568.

—— Goods not belonging to Ostensible Owner.]—M. being owner of goods, procured H. to assign them by a bill of sale to R. to secure an advance of money. R. took the goods bonâ fide, and upon the assurance of M. that the goods belonged to H. The goods were afterwards seized under a fi. fa. as the goods of M. On the trial of an interpleader issue between R. and the execution creditor, the jury found that there had been no actual transfer of the goods from M. to H.:—Held, that R. had acquired no title to the goods as against the execution creditor. Ib.

—— When imperfect.]—A seizure by sheriff's officers is imperfect where neither the warrant is produced nor the seizure in any way made public. Jones, Ex parte, Williams, In re, 42 L. T. 157.

Seizure without Sale—No satisfaction of Debt—Subsequent Seizure and Sale—Rights of Purchaser.]—Where special bailiffs seized and impounded cattle, under a civil-bill execution, and the execution creditor caused the cattle to be returned, on a promise by the execution debtor to pay portion of the debt:—Held, that such seizure and abandonment was no satisfaction of the debt, so as to prevent a subsequent seizure and sale operating to pass the property in the cattle to the purchaser from the sheriff; and that such purchaser was entitled to recover damages in trover and conversion against another creditor who seized the same cattle on the execution debtor's lands, where they had been placed by the execution creditor after the second sale, under an agreement. Lansdowne v. Connor, 24 L. R., Ir. 50.

Direction to Sheriff to levy on particular Goods—Liability of Execution Creditor for wrongful Seizure by Sheriff.]—The defendant having recovered judgment in an action against one G. M. M., his solicitor indorsed on a writ of fieri facias, directing the sheriff to levy the amount of the judgment upon the goods of G. M. M., a statement that the execution debtor resided at a certain address, which, however, was not the address of such execution debtor, but that of his father, G. M. The sheriff seized the goods of G. M. the father. In an action brought by G. M. against the defendant, the execution creditor, in respect of such seizure, the jury found that the sheriff seized the goods of the plaintiff instead of those of G. M. M. the son, because he was misled by the direction he received from the solicitor of the defendant:—Held, that upon such finding, the defendant was liable in respect of the wrongful seizure of the goods. Jarmain v. Hooper (6 Man. & G. 827), and Childers v. Wooler, (2 El. & El. 287), considered. Morris v. Salberg, 58 L. J., Q. B. 275; 22 Q. B. D. 614; 61 L. T. 283; 37 W. R. 469; 53 J. P. 772—C. A.

Apparent Possession.]—Goods formally seized by the sheriff under an execution remain in the apparent possession of the debtor within the meaning of the Bills of Sale Act. Mutton, Ex parte, Cole, In re, 41 L. J., Bk. 57; L. R. 14 Eq. 178; 26 L. T. 916; 20 W. R. 882.

Sale—Sheriff cannot sell before Seizure.]—The sheriff cannot make a valid contract for sale of the goods of a judgment debtor against whom he holds a writ of fi. fa. until he has actually seized the goods. Hall, Ex parte, Townsend, In re, 14 Ch. D. 132; 42 L. T. 162; 28 W. R. 556—C. A.

—— Money realised by.]—Money realised by a sale under a fi. fa. may be attached in the hands of the sheriff. O'Neill v. Cunningham, Ir. R. 6 C. L. 503.

—— Debtor may sell when Sheriff in Possession.]—Possession of goods by a sheriff under a fieri facias does not prevent the debtor from making an effectual sale of the goods by delivery to a purchaser while the sheriff is in possession. Union Bank of London v. Lenanton, 3 C. P. D. 243; 47 L. J., C. P. 409; 38 L. T. 698—C. A.

—— Expenses of advertising under Bankruptcy Act, 1861.]—A sheriff is not entitled to deduct the expenses of advertising a sale by public auction of an execution debtor's effects, seized under a fi. fa., although the debt or damages exceed 50*l.*; and s. 74 of Bankruptcy Act, 1861 (repealed), held to render it imperative on the sheriff in such case to advertise and sell by auction. Braithwaite v. Marriott, 1 H. & C. 591; 32 L. J., Ex. 24; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 26; 7 L. T. 363; 11 W. R. 93.

—— Authority of Sheriff's Officer.]—When a bill of sale of goods taken under a fi. fa. is made by an officer of the sheriff, the court will presume that he was duly authorised to make it. Robinson v. Collingwood, 17 C. B. (N.S.) 777.

—— Validity of.]—A sheriff having received a fi. fa. and issued a warrant to his bailiff, the latter seized the goods of the debtor, valued them, made out an inventory or a sold-note, and delivered one article in the name of the whole to the purchaser:—Held, that the sale was valid, although there was no public auction or bill of sale from the sheriff. Hernaman v. Bowker, 11 Ex. 760; 25 L. J., Ex. 69; 4 W. R. 261.

—— To Execution Creditor.]—The sheriff may make a valid sale by private contract of goods seized under an execution, to the execution creditor. Villars, Ex parte, Rogers, In re, 43 L. J., Bk. 76; L. R. 9 Ch. 439; 30 L. T. 348; 22 W. R. 603.

A creditor taking out execution is not precluded from becoming the purchaser of the property seized under it. Stratford v. Twynam, Jacob, 418; 23 R. R. 107.

—— On different Days.]—If the sheriff sells goods seized under the same writ on different days, all the sales will be considered as one transaction. Ib.

Sheriff cannot be estopped.]—A sheriff who seizes the goods of a debtor under a fi. fa. is not bound by an estoppel, which might have prevented the debtor himself from claiming the goods. Richards v. Johnson, 4 H. & N. 660; 28 L. J., Ex. 322; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 520.

Where Process may be executed.]—Hampton Court Palace is a royal palace, but not a royal residence, and therefore is not exempt from execution within it of civil process. Att.-Gen. v. Dakin, 39 L. J., Ex. 113; L. R. 4 H. L. 338; 23 L. T. 1; 18 W. R. 1111.

Issue of Concurrent Writs — Validity of Seizure.]—Judgment creditors, through their solicitors, issued concurrently two writs of fi. fa. for the amount of the judgment debt and costs, one directed to the sheriff of the City and the other to the sheriff of the county of London. Possession was taken under both writs: the execution in the City was paid off. The creditors and their solicitors had not acted maliciously or without reasonable cause, in levying the executions:—Held, that neither the issue of, nor the seizure under, the two writs of fi. fa. was illegal. Lee v. Dangar, 61 L. J., Q. B. 780; [1892] 2 Q. B. 337; 66 L. T. 548; 40 W. R. 469; 56 J. P. 678—C. A.

Forcible Entry—Building other than a Dwelling-house.]—In levying execution under a writ of fieri facias the sheriff is entitled to break open the outer door of premises occupied by the judgment debtor not being his dwelling-house, or within the curtilage of his dwelling-house. Hodder v. Williams, 65 L. J., Q. B. 70; [1895] 2 Q. B. 663; 14 R. 757; 73 L. T. 394; 44 W. R. 98—C. A.

Breaking Outer Door—Dwelling-house—Shop—Forcible Entry.]—The rule that it is not lawful for a sheriff in executing a writ of fieri facias to break open the outer door of a house, is limited to the case of a dwelling-house, and does not extend to the case of a shop which is only used as a place of business. Penton v. Browne, (1 Keb. 698; Sid. 186) followed. Hodder v. Williams, 65 L. J., Q. B. 70; [1895] 2 Q. B. 663; 14 R. 747; 73 L. T. 394; 44 W. R. 98—C. A.

5. What Property Seizable, and What Not.

a. Fixtures and Machinery.

Fixtures.]—Under a fi. fa. the sheriff cannot take fixtures in a house whereof the freehold is in the debtor. Place v. Fagg, 4 M. & Ry. 277. S. P., Wynne v. Ingleby, 1 D. & R. 247; 5 B. & A. 625; 24 R. R. 503.

Where a sheriff takes a lease and fixtures in execution, he may sell the fixtures separately, if he cannot find a purchaser for the whole. Barnard v. Leigh, 1 Stark. 43.

Rails and other chattels which by the terms of a contract when placed on the land became the absolute property of the company, the contractor to have no property therein, except the right of using them on the land for the purpose of the works, except on completion of the line, as a condition precedent, the plant was to be given to the contractor as part consideration, or if used by the company to be paid for, are not liable to be taken in execution for the company's debts. Beeston v. Marriott, 4 Giff. 436; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 960; 8 L. T. 690; 11 W. R. 896.

—— Portable Engine and Boiler.]—A portable engine and boiler brought on to colliery premises to be used in sinking a new shaft, and, for the purpose of steadying the machinery, bolted to wooden framework, and then the frame embedded in a layer of wet mortar laid upon a brick foundation, pass to the mortgagee of the realty as affixed to the freehold, and cannot be seized by the judgment creditors of the mortgagor. Cross v. Barnes, 46 L. J., Q. B. 479; 36 L. T. 693.

Railway Rolling Stock and Plant.]—The rolling stock and plant of a railway company whose railway has once been opened for traffic are, by s. 4 of the Railway Companies Act, 1867, protected from being taken in execution, even where the traffic on the railway has ceased in consequence of the railway being in need of extensive repairs, and there is no probability that the traffic will be resumed. Midland Waggon Co. v. Potteries, Shrewsbury and North Wales Ry., 43 L. T. 511; 29 W. R. 78.

A reservation in a fee-farm grant of mines, and the right to the grantor, his servants, horses, and carriages, to enter and carry away the minerals, enables the owner of the mines to lay down and maintain a railway over the surface of the lands granted, where such railway is reasonably necessary for working the mines. Rails laid down by a lessee of the mines under such reservation, not permanently attached to the lands, and capable of removal without substantial injury to the rails themselves or the soil, may be taken in execution under a fi. fa. against the lessee. Antrim (Earl) v. Dobbs, 30 L. R., Ir. 424.

Mill Machinery.]—Where mill machinery and a mill were demised to a tenant for a term, and he severed the machinery from the mill without the consent of his landlord, and it was afterwards seized by the sheriff under a fi. fa., and sold by him:—Held, that no property passed to the buyer under such sale. Farrant v. Thompson, 5 B. & Ald. 826; 2 D. & R. 1; 24 R. R. 571.

b. Real Property and Chattels Real.

Freehold Interest.]—A lease for three lives, or thirty-one years, contained a clause of forfeiture if any writ of execution should issue by virtue of which it should be liable to be taken in execution or sold. Under a fieri facias issued against the lessee, the sheriff sold and conveyed his interest under the lease, "if any," to the plaintiff, who, before he bid at the auction, knew it was a freehold lease, and was aware of the clause of forfeiture; the purchaser having got possession, and having been evicted:—Held, that he could not recover the purchase-money in an action against the sheriff for money had and received. Griffin v. Caddell, Ir. R. 9 C. L. 488.

Under a fi. fa. the sheriff, without any actual or formal seizure of the execution debtor's lands or crops, advertised them for sale, and conveyed them to the plaintiff by a deed reciting that the sheriff had caused the interest in the lands and crops to be seized. It turned out that the execution debtor's interest in the lands was a freehold, so that the purchaser could not get possession:—Held, that the purchaser was not entitled to recover the purchase-money from the sheriff in an action for money had and received as for a consideration that had wholly failed. Murphy v. Sandes, Ir. R. 10 C. L. 309.

Interest in Licensed Premises—Assignment of Licence.]—Under a writ of fi. fa. against G., certain chattels and his interest in licensed premises were seized, advertised for sale, and sold on the 31st January, 1885, by the sheriff. No reference to the licence was made either in the advertisements, conditions of sale, or deed of assignment, which was dated the 10th February, 1885, except that in the latter the premises were described as "licensed," as occupied by G. as a licensed publican, and the deed did not purport to assign the licence. The sheriff was not possessed of the licence, but it was subsequently indorsed and delivered by G. to the purchaser. On the 4th April, 1885, G. was adjudicated a bankrupt. The purchaser, however, obtained an ad interim transfer of the licence on the 14th April, and an absolute transfer at the October Sessions. In August the hearing of a charge and discharge, raising a question as to the property in the licence, was adjourned by consent to November, on the terms that the position of the parties should be considered at the hearing as if unaltered:—Held, that the licence did not pass under the sheriff's assignment; that the subsequent indorsement, delivery, and transfer of it by G. to the purchaser were void as against the assignees in bankruptcy of G., and that the licence formed part of the estate and effects of G. in the bankruptcy matter; but having regard to the proceedings at the licensing sessions, the court declined, for the time being, to make any order for the transfer of the licence to the assignee in bankruptcy, or to award damages against the purchaser for withholding the licence. Gilmer, In re, 17 L. R., Ir. 1.

Mortgaged Irish Land.]—The interest of a judgment debtor in lands against which a judgment has been registered as a mortgage, under 13 & 14 Vict. c. 29 (Irish), cannot be taken in execution under a fi. fa. Gerrard, In re, 14 Ir. Ch. R. 466.

Leasehold Property.]—Where a sheriff had taken a lease of premises in execution under a fi. fa., and sold the term to the execution creditor without any assignment in writing:—Held, that the estate remained in the debtor, who might recover it from the execution creditor in ejectment. Doe d. Hughes v. Jones, 1 D. (N.S.) 352; 9 M. & W. 372; 12 L. J., Ex. 265; 6 Jur. 302.

The legal interest in chattels real, seized and sold under a fi. fa., is not vested in the sheriff, in the interval between the seizure and completion of the sale to a purchaser. Playfair v. Musgrove, 3 D. & L. 72; 14 M. & W. 239; 15 L. J., Ex. 26; 9 Jur. 783.

Therefore, where a lease is taken in execution by the sheriff, the interest in it remains in the execution debtor, until actual assignment to the purchaser. Ib.

A sheriff who, under a fi. fa., takes in execution a lease for years, has no right to remain on the premises for the purpose of executing an assignment and putting the purchaser in possession. Ib.

If he should do so, he is liable in trespass at the suit of the execution debtor, if in possession, although the premises have been sold and transferred. Ib.

The sheriff under a fi. fa. seized a lease, and sold the term before the writ was returnable, but did not execute the assignment to the vendee till a subsequent period:—Held, that this was a valid assignment. Doe d. Stevens v. Donston, 1 B. & Ald. 230; 19 R. R. 306.

An outgoing tenant having agreed to assign the remainder of his term to the incoming tenant, the sheriff, before an actual assignment made, may, under an execution against the outgoing tenant, sell his interest in such remaining term, and set upon it the same value that the incoming tenant had agreed to give for it. Sparrow v. Bristol (Earl), 1 Marsh. 10.

Where a tenant entered under an agreement for a lease and paid the stipulated rent:—Held, that a tenancy from year to year was created, which the sheriff might sell under a fi. fa. Doe d. Westmoreland v. Smith, 1 M. & Ry. 137.

A., being possessed of a leasehold house, deposited the lease with B. as a security for a debt. C. afterwards obtained a judgment against A. and sued out a fi. fa. The sheriff sold some of A.'s goods, but not the house, and returned the writ; whilst the writ was in the sheriff's hand, D., with A.'s consent, paid the debt due to B., and had the lease deposited with him, as a security for the amount, and for other sums due to him from A.:—Held, that C., having allowed the writ to be returned without requiring the sheriff to sell the house, had no priority over D. Williams v. Craddock, 4 Sim. 313.

A leasehold estate is affected by an elegit or fi. fa., from the time it is lodged in the sheriff's hands, and if the debtor afterwards makes an assignment of it, the judgment creditor may proceed at law to sell the term, and the vendee will be entitled to the possession notwithstanding such assignment. Burden v. Kennedy, 3 Atk. 739.

Judgment de bonis testatoris—Executor de son tort—Chattels real of a Deceased—In the Hands of the Defendant.]—Under a writ of fi. fa. founded on a judgment de bonis testatoris against an executor de son tort, the sheriff is authorised to seize and sell the deceased's chattels real in the possession of the defendant. Doherty v. Nelson, [1895] 2 Ir. R. 90.

Leasehold, Effect of Seizure of on Tenant.]—A sheriff cannot turn a tenant out of possession when he has taken a term under an execution against the landlord. Rumball v. Murray, 3 Term Rep. 298. And see Miller v. Parnell, 2 Marsh. 78; 6 Taunt. 670.

—— Assignment of, by Sheriff.]—Where an assignment by deed of a lease of premises taken in execution was made in the name and executed under the seal of office of the sheriff, by his under-sheriff:—Held, that such assignment might be proved without shewing the appointment of the under-sheriff, or that he had power by deed to execute instruments in the name of the sheriff. Doe d. James v. Brawn, 5 B. & Ald. 243; 24 R. R. 347.

The sheriff's assignment of a term is sufficient, without an actual seizure of the lease. Coleman v. Rawlinson, 1 F. & F. 330.

—— Equitable Interest in.]—An equitable estate in leaseholds cannot be delivered in execution under a fi. fa. Newcastle (Duke), In re, Padwick, Ex parte, 39 L. J., Ch. 68; 8 L. R. Eq. 700; 21 L. T. 343; 18 W. R. 8.

A mere equitable interest in a term of years cannot be taken in execution under a fi. fa. Scott v. Scholey, 8 East. 467; 9 R. R. 487. S. P., Metcalf v. Scholey, 2 Bos. & P. (N.R.) 461; Lyster v. Dollond, 1 Ves. jun. 431; 3 Bro. C. C. 478.

But a creditor issuing execution on a judgment, and finding the interest of his debtor in a term of years to be an equitable interest, has a lien upon it in equity, without the aid of the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110; and where, after such execution, the leasehold estate of the debtor has been sold, the execution creditor has a lien on the proceeds of the sale. Gore v. Bowser, 3 Sm. & G. 1.

Outstanding Term to attend the Inheritance.]—Semble, that by 29 Car. 2, c. 3, an outstanding term, vested in a trustee upon trust to attend the inheritance, is liable to be seized under a fi. fa. against the cestui que trust, the owner of the inheritance. Doe d. Phillips v. Evans, 1 C. & M. 450; 3 Tyr. 339; 2 L. J., Ex. 179.

Sale of Term of Years mortgaged.]—On an execution being placed in a sheriff's hands to sell a term of years in certain lands over which the plaintiffs held a mortgage, the plaintiffs and the defendant, the solicitor of the execution creditor, agreed in consideration that the plaintiffs as such mortgagees would consent to a sale of their interest in the lands by the defendant through the sheriff, undertook to have the sale carried out subject to and guarded by such conditions that the plaintiffs' mortgage debt should in the first instance be paid out of the proceeds of the sale. The sale was not so carried out, and the present action was brought against the defendant for breach of contract. On demurrer to the statement of claim on the ground that the consideration for the undertaking of the defendant was illegal:—Held, that the demurrer must be allowed, inasmuch as the sale by the sheriff being the act of an officer of a court of justice in the discharge of his duty, he would by selling the property, subject to the conditions which the plaintiffs stipulated for, be acting in violation of his duty on two grounds; first, that the sale of the judgment debtor's interest being an equity of redemption only was not authorised by the writ of fieri facias under which the sheriff acted; and, secondly, that the proceeds of the sale were to be paid to a person other than the execution creditor. Moher v. O'Grady, 41 L. T. 562.

Held, further, however, that while the writ was in the sheriff's hands unexecuted, the mortgagees, the execution creditor, and the mortgagor might together have made an effectual sale of the term, and applied the proceeds of such sale as agreed between them, and might have made such sale through an agent of their own. Ib.

c. Money and Securities for Money.

Money and Bank Notes—13 Eliz. c. 5.]—Money and bank notes being liable, under the Judgments Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 110), s. 12, to be attached by creditors, are goods and chattels within 13 Eliz. c. 5; and therefore a voluntary purchase and settlement of stock by a person in insolvent circumstances out of moneys belonging to him would be held fraudulent and void as against creditors. Barrack v. M'Culloch, 3 Kay & J. 110; 26 L. J., Ch. 105; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 180; 5 W. R. 38.

—— In Sheriff's Hands.]—A party privileged from arrest, having been taken on a ca. sa. by the sheriff of G., paid the money to the sheriff, and obtained a judge's order to have it refunded. When the town agent was about to do so, the money was claimed by the sheriff of M. under a fi. fa. directed to him:—Held, that the money could not be taken under the fi. fa. Masters v. Stanley, 8 D. P. C. 169; 4 Jur. 28.

The surplus of the proceeds of property sold under a fi. fa. remaining in the hands of the sheriff, after satisfying the execution creditors, is a debt due from the sheriff to the debtor, and cannot be taken in execution under a fi. fa. at the suit of a third party, against the defendant in the former suits. Harrison v. Paynter, 6 M. & W. 387; 8 D. P. C. 349; 9 L. J., Ex. 169; 4 Jur. 488.

Where a sheriff who had seized and sold certain goods under a fi. fa. kept the money in his hands in consequence of a suit in equity between the parties respecting the amount due to the plaintiff:—Held, that the writ must be considered as wholly executed, and ought not, on the sheriff's going out of office, to be transferred to his successor, under the repealed 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 99, s. 7. Ib.

The 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 12, authorising money to be taken in execution, applies only to moneys set apart and ear-marked, and which are the property specifically of the party against whose effects the fieri facias issues. Wood v. Wood, 3 G. & D. 532; 4 Q. B. 397; 12 L. J., Q. B. 141; 7 Jur. 325.

Money, therefore, levied under a fi. fa. and in the hands of the sheriff for an execution creditor, cannot be seized under a fi. fa. against such execution creditor. Ib.

After verdict, and before judgment had been entered up, the defendant sold his leaseholds by auction:—Held, that under the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, the plaintiff could not levy execution on the purchase money. Brown v. Perrott, 4 Beav. 585.

A fi. fa. having been issued to the sheriff to levy 97*l.* 10*s.*, the defendant, not knowing the exact amount, sent a person with a banker's bill for 55*l.* 5*s.* and 40*l.* in country notes to the officer to whom the warrant had been delivered. These sums were tendered to the officer. Upon his stating the amount he was to levy, the person went away, in order to obtain the difference, leaving the bill and country notes on the table. The officer seized both the bill and the notes under the execution, while the person was so absent upon this errand, and upon his return with the balance demanded poundage. He subsequently seized some sheep for this, when it was paid under protest:—Held, that money was not liable to seizure, and that the court would interfere summarily to compel the sheriff to refund the sum extorted as poundage. Bell v. Hutchison, 8 Jur. 895.

By 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 12, money seized under a fi. fa. is exactly in the same position as money the proceeds of goods seized. Collingridge v. Paxton, 11 C. B. 683; 2 L., M. & P. 654; 21 L. J., C. P. 39; 16 Jur. 18.

Therefore, where the sheriff seized bank notes and coin under a fi. fa. at the suit of A., against whom he held an unexecuted fi. fa. at the suit of B., he was not justified in paying the amount over to B. as money belonging to A. Ib.

An execution by a fi. fa. founded on a judgment upon a warrant of attorney, may be apportioned so as to entitle the plaintiff to the proceeds of any money actually in the hands of the sheriff, though before the writ is completely satisfied, a vesting order under the Insolvent Act was made, which prevented any further execution of the writ in favour of such judgment creditor under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 61. Squire v. Huetson, 4 P. & D. 633; 1 Q. B. 308; 10 L. J., Q. B. 116; 5 Jur. 840.

In such a case, the plaintiff becomes entitled to money seized by the sheriff in specie, as much as if it was money realised for goods seized and sold under the writ. Ib.

—— Deposited in Court.]—The 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 12, gives no power to seize money in execution while in the hands of a third person as trustee for the debtor; and therefore money deposited in court in one action, pursuant to 43 Geo. 3, c. 46, s. 2, and 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 71, s. 2, cannot be paid out to an execution creditor in a second action in satisfaction of his claim. France v. Campbell, 6 Jur. 105.

—— In Hands of Auctioneer.]—After verdict, and before judgment had been entered up, the defendant sold his leaseholds by auction:—Held, that under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 12, the plaintiff could not levy execution on the purchase-money in the hands of the auctioneer. Brown v. Perrott, 4 Beav. 585.

Cheque—Drawn but not delivered.]—A cheque of the accountant-general in favour of A., but not delivered out, is not his property, so as to be liable to be seized by the sheriff. Courtoy v. Vincent, 15 Beav. 486; 21 L. J., Ch. 291.

—— Delivered to Debtor's Solicitor, and by him returned.]—A judgment having been entered up against a party to whom a sum standing to the credit of the cause had been ordered to be paid, and the accountant-general having drawn a cheque for the sum, and delivered it to the attorney of the debtor, who subsequently returned it to the accountant-general, the court, on the petition of the judgment creditor, gave the sheriff liberty to take the cheque under a fi. fa. Watts v. Jefferyes, 3 Mac. & G. 422; 15 Jur. 435.

Policy of Insurance.]—A policy of insurance, effected by the debtor on his own life, and on which annual premiums are payable, is not a security for money which the sheriff is empowered to seize and sell under a fieri facias by 3 & 4 Vict. c. 105, s. 20, or the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 113 (Common Law Procedure (Ireland) Act, 1853). Alleyne v. Darcy (5 Ir. Ch. R. 55) followed in preference to Stokoe v. Cowan (29 Beav. 637). Sargent's Policy, 7 L. R., Ir. 66.

d. Goods.

i. Of Debtor.

In Pledge or Mortgage.]—Under an execution against the goods of A., the sheriff cannot seize goods which he has deposited with another person as security for a debt. Rogers v. Kennay, 9 Q. B. 592; 15 L. J., Q. B. 381; 11 Jur. 14.

Property held by way of lien cannot be taken in execution under a fi. fa., either at common law or under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 12. Legg v. Evans, 6 M. & W. 36; 8 D. P. C. 177; 9 L. J., Ex. 102; 4 Jur. 197.

Whether Goods those of Apparent Owner or Intestate — Business carried on.]—After the death in May, 1880, of A., a shopkeeper, his daughter B. carried on the business. Judgment was obtained against B. personally, and a fi. fa. was issued thereon and delivered to the sheriff in March, 1881. At this time B. was in possession of shop goods of considerable value, some of which had been the property of A. in his lifetime, and the rest were purchased out of the proceeds of sale of other goods of A. In an action for a false return against the sheriff, who had returned nulla bona, he claimed to have a verdict entered for him on the ground that the goods were not the goods of B. No evidence was given of any testamentary disposition by A.:—Held, that in the absence of any proof that the trading was carried on by B. as personal representative of A., the onus of which lay on the sheriff, the goods purchased by her after A.'s death could not be held to be the assets of A. Kelly v. Browne, 12 L. R., Ir. 348. Affirmed in C. A.

ii. Of other Persons in Debtor's Possession.

With Right of Purchase.]—The plaintiff let to D. a house and the furniture: they entered into a written contract whereby the plaintiff agreed to sell the house and furniture to D., the purchase-money to be paid on the completion of a good title by the plaintiff. Before the completion of a good title the contract was rescinded by consent:—Held, that, under this contract, the furniture never vested in D. as his property, and, therefore, could not be taken under a fi. fa. against him. Lanyon v. Toogood, 13 M. & W. 27; 13 L. J., Ex. 273.

Purchased at Public Auction for Debtor's Benefit.]—Where goods are bonâ fide sold by public auction, and the seller after such sale is allowed to continue in possession, they cannot be taken in execution by one of the seller's creditors, who was present at the sale, as the change of possession was notorious, and there being a good and legal consideration to support it. Woodham v. Baldock, 3 Moore, 11; Gow, 35.

Where the husband of the plaintiff's mother assigned his effects to trustees for the benefit of his creditors, and absconded, leaving his wife in possession of his house and goods, and notice of such assignment was advertised in the newspapers, and the goods were afterwards sold by the trustees at public auction, and the plaintiff purchased them in order to accommodate his mother, and paid for them at a fair valuation, and removed some, but left the greater part in her possession:—Held, that such purchase by the plaintiff would protect the goods against a judgment afterwards obtained, and execution levied by a creditor of the husband, who had notice of the assignment at the time; although the plaintiff permitted his mother to continue in possession: and therefore that he was entitled to recover them from the sheriff. Leonard v. Baker, 1 M. & S. 251.

Of Assignee of Debtor.]—Where a sheriff being in possession under a fi. fa., the defendant executed a deed of assignment for a valuable consideration, on which the execution was withdrawn, and the assignee continued to manage the property, but allowed the defendant to continue in possession, and the same property was afterwards seized under an execution, at the suit of another creditor:—Held, that it was protected by the assignment, although the defendant had continued in the visible possession. Jezeph v. Ingram, 1 Moore, 189.

—— Under Bill of Sale.—Where the bonâ fide assignee of a bill of sale executed by the sheriff under a fi. fa. against the goods of A. allowed the latter to remain in the possession and enjoyment of the goods until another execution was put in, and the same effects were again seized:—Held, that the first execution being notorious, the assignee of the bill of sale might maintain trespass against the sheriff, and that an absolute change of possession was not necessary to give effect to the bill of sale against creditors. Latimer v. Batsen, 7 D. & R. 106; 4 B. & C. 652: 4 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 25.

Trover for various articles of household furniture, which the defendants had taken in execution under a judgment against C., and which the plaintiff claimed to be entitled to under a bill of sale from the same person. The plaintiff proved the execution of the bill of sale for a valuable consideration, and the seizing of the goods. The defendants' case was, that the bill of sale was fraudulent and void, there having been no change of possession; but they were not prepared to prove the judgment under which they had taken the goods in execution:—Held, that without this they could not impeach the title transferred by the bill of sale, and the plaintiff had a verdict. Steel v. Brown, 1 Camp. 512; 1 Taunt. 381; 9 R. R. 795.

See also BILLS OF SALE.

On Hire.]—If a party has goods on hire for a term, and the sheriff seizes them under an execution against such party, the owner of the goods may maintain an action against the sheriff, if he sells the entire property of such goods; but to support the action he must shew, that, as soon as the goods were seized, he apprised the sheriff that the goods were lent for a term only, in order that the sheriff might know that he had only a right to sell the qualified property that the hirer had in the goods. Dean v. Whittaker, 1 Car. & P. 347.

An action by the owner of goods, let for an unexpired term, against the sheriff, for taking them under an execution against the party who hired them, is not maintainable if it appears that the sheriff has not sold; and it is in such a case the duty of the party letting to give notice to the sheriff of the limited nature of the hirer's interest. Duffil v. Spottiswoode, 3 Car. & P. 435.

A. having let his house ready furnished to B., cannot maintain an action against the sheriff for taking the furniture under an execution against B., though notice was given that the goods belonged to A. Ward v. Macauley, 4 Term Rep. 489.

Where goods lent on hire have been wrongfully taken in execution by the sheriff, under a fi. fa., the owner cannot maintain trover against him, he not having the right of possession as well as the right of property at the time of the sale. Pain v. Middlesex (Sheriff), R. & M. 99.

—— Pawnbroker's Business — Unredeemed Pledges — Property in Articles pawned.]—A receiver was appointed in an action in the Queen's Bench Division, to receive the profits and other moneys receivable from a pawnbroker's business carried on by the defendant. Subsequently to the appointment of the receiver, but before he perfected his security, a writ of fi. fa. was issued to the sheriff to recover a sum of money ordered to be paid by the defendant in an action in the Chancery Division, in pursuance whereof the sheriff took possession of certain goods and chattels in the possession of the defendant, including various articles pawned with her and not yet redeemed. The receiver perfected his security, and claimed the redeemable pledges in the defendant's house:—Held, that the defendant, as pawnbroker, had a qualified property in the articles pawned with her and not yet redeemed, which was not intercepted by the appointment of a receiver; and that therefore the sheriff was entitled to hold such articles on behalf of the execution creditor, and to receive money paid to redeem the same. Rollason, In re, Rollason v. Rollason, 56 L. J., Ch. 768; 34 Ch. D. 495; 56 L. T. 303; 35 W. R. 607.

In Hands of Employé of Contractors, and falsely represented to belong to Debtor.]—A declaration in an action against A. and B. alleged that the plaintiff was employed by the contractors of some proposed buildings to cart and convey away the earth dug out of the excavations and sites of the buildings with the horses and cart of the plaintiff; that an action was depending in the Queen's Bench, wherein B. was the plaintiff, and C. the defendant, in which action C. allowed judgment to go by default, and a fi. fa. issued against the goods of C., directed to A., as sheriff, to be put in execution by him as such sheriff; yet he, as sheriff, by and with the aid, counsel, and assistance of B., by him wrongfully and maliciously given, seized, took, and carried away, in execution of the writ, the goods of the plaintiff, under the pretence that the same belonged to C., and afterwards sold the goods as an execution under the writ against the goods of C. By means of the premises, and for want of the use of the goods, the plaintiff was unable to carry on his employment and business, and thereby lost great gains:—Held, that the declaration shewed no cause of action against B. Sedman v. Walker, 1 Ex. 589.

In Hands of Executor.]—Goods of a testator, in the hands of his executor, cannot be seized under a fi. fa. against the executor in his own right. Farr v. Newman, 4 Term Rep. 621; 2 R. R. 479.

The goods of a testator in the possession of his executor were taken, and sold under a fi. fa., on a judgment against the executor for a debt of his own, and with his consent; the property passed by such execution, notwithstanding the plaintiff in the action against the executor knew they were assets. Whale v. Booth, 4 Dougl. 36, n.; 4 Term Rep. 625, n.; 2 R. R. 483, n.

Where the goods of a testator, which had long remained in the hands of his executor, but consistently with the trusts of the will, were seized by the sheriff under a fi. fa., on a judgment against the executor in his own right, the sheriff may be liable to an action; and if the defendant in the execution disputes the seizure, on the ground that the goods were held by him as executor in trust for others, and not in his own right, that is a claim by a person "not being the party against whom the process issued," which will entitle the sheriff to an interpleader rule under the repealed 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 58, s. 6. Fenwick v. Laycock, 1 G. & D. 532; 2 Q. B. 108; 11 L. J., Q. B. 146; 6 Jur. 346.

—— In Hands of Agent of Executor.]—When an executor before probate by his agent takes the goods and carries on the business of the deceased, and judgment is recovered against the agent as executor, and a fi. fa. issues thereunder directing the sheriff to levy on the goods of the deceased in his hands as executor of the deceased to be administered, the sheriff is not justified, as against the executor, in seizing goods of the deceased in such agent's hands. Sykes v. Sykes, 39 L. J., C. P. 179; L. R. 5 C. P. 113; 22 L. T. 236; 18 W. R. 551.

In Hands of Executrix who subsequently Marries.]—If an executrix uses the goods of her testator as her own, and afterwards marries, and then treats them as the goods of her husband she will not be allowed to object to their being taken in execution for her husband's debt. Quick v. Staines, 1 Bos. & P. 293; 2 Esp. 57; 4 R. R. 881.

Chattels devised as heirlooms to a certain house, are removed by the tenant for life of that house to another, and are there taken in execution for a debt of the tenant for life. On a question whether these chattels were liable to be so taken, it was held they were. But this was so held under the particular words of the testator's will. Foley v. Burnell, 4 Bro. P. C. 319. Affirming 1 Bro. C. C. 274.

In Hands of Administrator.]—Goods of an intestate taken possession of, and used by an administrator in the house of the intestate, for three months after the death of the intestate, cannot be taken in execution for the administrator's own debt. Gaskell v. Marshall, 1 M. & Rob. 132.

In Trust Settlement.]—One being indebted, by settlement before marriage, in consideration of the marriage, and of his wife's portion, which was supposed to be more than the amount of his debts at that time, conveyed all his real estate, and likewise his household goods (his real estate alone not being thought an adequate settlement), in trust for himself for his life, remainder to his wife for life, remainder to his first and other sons in strict settlement. The lady being a ward of chancery, the settlement was approved of by the Master, and the goods enumerated in a schedule. A., after the marriage, continued in possession of the goods; after which a creditor, at the time of the settlement, having obtained judgment, took them in execution:—Held, that the settlement was good against creditors, and the trustees entitled to the possession of the goods. Cadogan v. Kennet, Cowp. 432.

A. executed a deed by which he conveyed chattels to B., in trust, as to one moiety for certain scheduled creditors, as to the other for A.'s own benefit; C., a creditor not in the schedule, sued A. and recovered, and took out execution against the chattels in the hands of B. B. sued the sheriff's officer and recovered at law. Bill for an injunction on the ground that the deed was void against creditors for the moiety. The court refused the injunction, for there can be no execution against goods in the hands of a trustee. Caillaud v. Estwick, 2 Anstr. 381.

Goods having been taken in execution under a fi. fa. against W., the trustee of Mrs. W.'s settlement claimed them as separate estate of the wife. The sheriff thereupon took out an interpleader summons in the Common Pleas Division, upon which an order was made that upon the trustee paying 115*l.* into court within a limited time the sheriff should withdraw, but in default of such payment being made, should sell and pay the proceeds into court, and that the parties should proceed to the trial of an issue as to the title to the goods. The money was not paid into court by the trustee within the time, and the sheriff advertised the goods for sale. Mrs. W. thereupon commenced an action in the Chancery Division to have the trusts of the settlement carried into execution, a new trustee appointed, and, in the meantime, for the appointment of a receiver. An injunction to restrain the sheriff from selling the goods or remaining in possession of them was granted by the vice-chancellor:—Held, on appeal, that this order was a restraining by injunction a proceeding pending in the Common Pleas Division, and was inconsistent with the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 24, sub-s. 5, and must be discharged. Wright v. Redgrave, 10 Ch. D. 24; 40 L. T. 206; 27 W. R. 562—C. A.

Husband and Wife.]—Where, in an action upon a bond given by the wife while sole, both husband and wife were outlawed, her separate goods are property liable to be taken in execution, although the outlawry is set aside as to him. Briscoe v. Kennedy, 2 Wils. 127.

In an action against a sheriff for taking the goods of B. under a fi. fa.:—Held, that A. having assumed his name, and passed for his wife, and permitted him to appear to be the owner of the furniture of the house in which they both lived, such furniture being her property is not liable to be taken in execution against B. Edwards v. Bridges, 2 Stark. 396; 20 R. R. 702.

Where, by a settlement executed before marriage, personal property was conveyed to trustees, for the sole and separate use of the wife, the trustees having, in pursuance of the trust, paid over a portion of it to her, with which she purchased some wearing apparel:—Held, that the property in the wearing apparel vested in the husband, and that it might be taken under an execution issued against him. Carne v. Bryce, 7 M. & W. 183; 8 D. P. C. 884; 10 L. J., Ex. 28; 4 Jur. 1115.

Where a sheriff, under a fi. fa. against A., seized and sold the furniture in his house, where he lived with a woman to whom he had been married, and to whom the goods belonged before marriage:—Held, that the woman, having afterwards discovered that the marriage was void, might maintain trover against the sheriff, and recover the value of the goods, although it exceeded the price for which they were sold. Glasspoole v. Young, 9 B. & C. 696; 7 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 305.

In Hands of Tenant.]—Injunction to restrain sheriff from executing fi. fa. on goods, &c., of landlord, in possession of plaintiff, his tenant, refused. Garstin v. Asplin, 1 Madd. 150.

In Hands of Servant.]—The plaintiff having purchased a public-house, for which he could not himself obtain a licence, because he resided in another tavern, put B., an insolvent person, into the house as his servant, to keep it for him, and supplied him with money to pay for the licence, which was granted to B.:—Held, that the sheriff was not entitled to take, under an execution against B., the plaintiff's liquors and chattels in the house committed to B.'s custody. Dawson v. Wood, 3 Taunt. 256.

Mortgagee of Ship.]—If A. lends money on the security of a ship, and takes possession before execution executed at the suit of B., the vessel cannot be seized under B.'s execution. Ladbrooke v. Crickett, 2 Term Rep. 649; 1 R. R. 571.

Execution Debtor holding Goods under Void Deed.]—Where a person against whom a fi. fa. was taken out was in possession of goods under a deed which was given in consideration of an antecedent debt, and a small annuity payable thenceforth, the sheriff was warranted in returning nulla bona, if it appeared that the memorial of such annuity was not registered according to 17 Geo. 3, c. 26, s. 1, for in that case the deed was absolutely void. Crossley v. Arkwright, 2 Term Rep. 603.

Belonging to Person with whom Debtor lodged.]—A sheriff cannot seize under a fi. fa. against A. a horse belonging to B., with whom he lodged, although the only evidence of ownership was, that the horse had belonged to her husband, and that after his death she had kept it, but had not administered. Oughton v. Seppings, 1 B. & Ad. 241; 8 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 394.

In Colonial Warehouse.]—Goods, arriving at Quebec, were taken to the customs' examining warehouse, according to the regulations of the port. The goods were entered by the officer in charge, as consigned to M. & S. The goods remained subject to the lien for freight, and to the charges for customs' duties and storage. Till these several claims were discharged, the officer in charge was bound not to part with the goods. Subsequently M. & S. obtained an advance from Y. & Co. on the security of these goods, and gave to them a request note, signed by M. & S., and directed to the officer in charge, requesting him to hold the goods "subject to the order" of Y. & Co., "they paying the duty and storage charge before removal." This note was sent to the officer in charge, who accepted it, and made a corresponding entry in his book. Afterwards the goods, while still lying at the customs' warehouse, were seized by a judgment creditor of M. & S.:—Held, that the seizure was bad, there having been a valid constructive delivery and transfer of the goods to Y. & Co. as pledgees. Young v. Lambert, 6 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 406; L. R. 3 P. C. 142; 22 L. T. 499; 18 W. R. 497.

e. Partnership Property.

See Partnership Act, 1890, s. 23, and tit. PARTNERSHIP.

Before this act a judgment creditor of any partner might take in execution against that partner his share in the personal property of the partnership. Johnson v. Evans, 7 Man. & G. 240; 1 D. & L. 935; 13 L. J., C. P. 117.

But not his interest in the good will or the book debts or in anything else not seizable under a fi. fa. Helmore v. Smith (1), 35 Ch. D. 436; 56 L. T. 535; 36 W. R. 3—C. A.

f. Growing Crops.

Right of Sheriff to—As against Landlord.]—Growing crops of a tenant having been seized under a fi. fa., a writ of habere facias possessionem was subsequently delivered to the sheriff in an ejectment, at the suit of the landlord, founded on a demise made long before the issuing of the fi. fa.:—Held, that the sheriff was not bound to sell the growing crops under the fi. fa., as they could not be legally considered as belonging to the tenant, the latter being a trespasser from the day of the demise laid in the declaration of ejectment. Hodgson v. Gascoigne, 5 B. & Ald. 88; 24 R. R. 295.

—— As against Vendee of Debtor.]—The vendee of a growing crop of grass, who is in possession of the field for the purpose of making it into hay, may maintain trespass against a sheriff, if, when cut, the close is entered, and part of the grass carried away by a person who has purchased the grass of the bailiff of the sheriff, who had seized and sold it under a fi. fa. against the original vendor, where the person actually entering claims under the sale of the sheriff's bailiff, and carries of the crop by his authority. Tompkinson v. Russell, 9 Price, 287; 6 East, 602.

After growing crops had been seized and taken possession of under bill of sale, but before sale, a fi. fa. on the judgment of another creditor of the vendor was delivered to the sheriff, who seized and sold the crops, and paid the proceeds to the execution creditor. The debtor, becoming insolvent, petitioned the Insolvent Debtors' Court for protection, but his assignees withdrew from contesting the right of the vendee of the bill of sale:—Held, that such vendee was entitled to the proceeds of the crops as against the execution creditor, and that it would have made no difference in this respect if the assignees had not withdrawn. Congreve v. Evetts, 10 Ex. 298; 23 L. J., Ex. 273; 18 Jur. 655.

g. Effect of Bankruptcy.

Sale of Goods by Private Contract—Application Ex parte.]—Under s. 145 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, the court has a discretion to order goods taken in execution by the sheriff to be sold by private contract instead of by public auction, notwithstanding that the application for leave to sell by private contract is made by the execution creditor ex parte, and in the absence of all the other creditors of the execution debtor. Hunt v. Fensham, 12 Q. B. D. 162; 32 W. R. 316.

Sale by Sheriff by Private Contract—Execution for more than £20—Validity.]—A sale of the goods of a debtor by the sheriff by private contract instead of by public auction is not void under s. 145 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, and cannot be set aside at the instance of a subsequent judgment creditor. Crawshaw v. Harrison, 63 L. J., Q. B. 94; [1894] 1 Q. B. 79; 10 R. 608; 69 L. T. 860; 1 Manson, 407.

Protected Transaction—Charging Order.]—A charging order, on a debtor's interest in a sum of money, is not a "contract, dealing or transaction" within the protection of s. 49 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883. Pillers, Ex parte, Curtoys, In re (17 Ch. D. 653), approved and followed. O'Shea, In re, Courage v. O'Shea, 64 L. J., Ch. 263; [1895] 1 Ch. 325; 12 R. 70; 71 L. T. 827; 43 W. R. 232; 2 Manson, 4—C. A.

Execution—Liability of Sheriff to Creditor—Money paid in order to avoid Sale.]—A sheriff who has seized the goods of an execution debtor, but who has left the premises where the goods are upon receiving the written admission of the debtor that he is in possession and is at liberty to enter at any time, and who holds the key of the premises, is no longer in possession of the goods under the execution, and payment to him of the debt in order to obtain the key is neither money paid "under an execution" nor "in order to avoid sale," within s. 1, sub-s. 2, of the Bankruptcy Act, 1890. Therefore, where the high bailiff of a county court, after such payment to him, received notice of a bankruptcy petition, and paid over to the official receiver the sum he had received:—Held, in an action by the execution creditor against the bailiff to recover the amount of the debt, that the bailiff was liable. Bower v. Hett, 64 L. J., Q. B. 772; [1895] 2 Q. B. 337; 14 R. 710; 73 L. T. 176; 44 W. R. 4—C. A. And see BANKRUPTCY.

6. Landlord's Claim for Rent.

Position of Landlord after Seizure by Sheriff—Landlord and Tenant Act, 1709, 8 Anne, c. 14 (c. 18 in Revised Statutes).]—The above act makes it unlawful to remove goods taken in execution, without paying one year's arrear of rent to the landlord, but it does not invalidate the execution itself. Wharton v. Naylor, 6 D. & L. 136; 12 Q. B. 673; 17 L. J., Q. B. 278; 12 Jur. 894.

Goods therefore, so taken, are in custodiâ legis, and cannot be distrained on by the landlord for the year's rent; and they are equally in custodiâ legis for this purpose, whether they are in the hands of the sheriff or of his vendee, provided they are incapable of removal. Ib.

The landlord of premises, on which goods have been seized under an extent in aid, is not entitled to call on the sheriff to pay a year's rent due before the teste of the writ. Rex v. De Caux, 2 Price, 17.

To what Tenancies, 8 Anne, c. 14, applies.]—The 8 Anne, c. 14, s. 1, only applies to subsisting tenancies; and the sheriff is not liable for removing goods taken in execution without first paying to the landlord a year's rent, where the tenancy has determined before the seizure, though within six months of it. Cox v. Leigh, 43 L. J., Q. B. 123; L. R. 9 Q. B. 333; 30 L. T. 494; 22 W. R. 730.

The 8 Anne, c. 14, s. 1, is not limited to the case of an original demise of entire premises, but applies to a sub-lessee, and to goods taken in execution in apartments being part and parcel of the messuage. Thurgood v. Richardson, 5 M. & P. 270; 7 Bing. 428; 4 Car. & P. 481; 9 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 121.

—— Does not apply, unless Creditor Claims adversely to Landlord.]—The statute applies only to cases where the judgment creditor claims adversely to the landlord, and not where the execution is sued out at the instance of the landlord himself. Taylor v. Lanyon, 4 M. & P. 316; 6 Bing. 536; 8 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 180; 31 R. R. 485.

For what Rent Landlord can claim.]—The sheriff is not bound to allow to the landlord a year's rent, where, under the circumstances, it must be taken to have ceased at the time of the execution. Hodgson v. Gascoigne, 5 B. & Ald. 88.

The landlord of premises, upon which the goods of his tenant are taken in execution, can only claim from the party issuing the execution the rent due at the time of taking the goods, and not that which accrues after the taking, and during the continuance of the sheriff in possession. Hoskins v. Knight, 1 M. & S. 245; 14 R. R. 424.

As against an execution creditor, a landlord is entitled to a full year's rent, although he has been used to remit some portion of it to his tenant. Williams v. Lewsey, 8 Bing. 28; 1 M. & Scott, 92; 1 L. J., C. P. 13.

A sheriff who takes corn in the blade under a fi. fa., and sells it before the rent is due, is not liable to account to the landlord of the defendant for rent accruing subsequently to the levy and sale, although he has given notice, and though the corn be not removed from the premises until long afterwards. Gwilliam v. Barker, 1 Price, 274.

Where goods seized under an extent had been kept by the sheriff's officer on the premises, pending a reference of the prosecutor's claim, during which a sum of money accrued due to the landlord for rent; the court refused to interfere in his behalf, to order the rent to be paid to him out of the produce of the sale, because he might bring an action for use and occupation against the tenant, or an action against the officer. Rex v. Hill, 6 Price, 19; 20 R. R. 615.

In order to maintain the action, it must appear that the premises were held at a rent certain. Riseley v. Ryle, 11 M. & W. 16; 12 L. J., Ex. 322.

By a memorandum signed 31st January, 1840, by B. and J., J. agreed to become the tenant of a farm G. at the customary time of entry, under the following conditions, viz. that 260*l.* annual rent, should be paid at the usual time for the house, premises and lands, as agreed upon; and B. agreed to lay out in improvements and alterations of the farm-house and new sheds a sum not exceeding 200*l.*, with the understanding that spars for rafters should be found from the estate; cartage for all materials, except stones for walls, to be done or found by J. It was proved, that the usual time of entry on the neighbouring farms was on the 12th May; and that the rents of the estate of which the farm of G. was a part were reserved payable at Michaelmas. The audit day being in January, J. entered on the farm in the spring of 1840, and continued in possession until 1842. In May, 1843, he was in arrear for rent to the extent of 160*l.*, and, on being pressed by his landlord, executed a warrant of attorney for 420*l.*, the amount of the arrears, and of the year's rent; the understanding being, that a fi. fa. was to be delivered to the sheriff upon a judgment to be entered up; but that it was not to be executed unless the writs of other creditors were sent to the sheriff. In October, 1842, J. was again applied to for another year's rent, at which time he paid a portion of it, promising to pay the residue before Christmas. In November, the sheriff, who had received writs from other persons against the property of J., executed the fi. fa.:—Held, that these facts warranted the jury in finding that a year's rent became due at Michaelmas. Gore v. Lloyd, 12 M. & W. 463; 13 L. J., Ex. 366.

—— How set out in Sheriff's Return.]—A landlord is entitled, as against the execution creditor, only to rent due at the time of the seizure. But, if the sheriff returns that he has paid so much for rent due for the premises, the court will intend that the payment was for rent due at the time of the seizure; and it is no objection to the return, that it does not expressly state that the rent was due at the time of the seizure. Reynolds v. Barford, 7 Man. & G. 449; 8 Scott (N.R.) 233; 2 D. & L. 327; 13 L. J., C. P. 177.

—— When payable in Advance.]—A claim may be supported by a landlord in an action against a sheriff for removing goods seized under a fi. fa. for forehand rent, or rent stipulated by the lease to be paid in advance, as being rent due at the time of the seizure within the statute of Anne. Harrison v. Barry, 7 Price, 600; 21 R. R. 781.

A. being indebted to B., and C. being his surety, A. conveyed certain premises by way of mortgage to C. to indemnify him, and attorned as tenant to C., at a rent of 50*l.* a year, payable in advance. The goods of A. having been seized under a fi. fa.:—Held, that by 8 Anne, c. 14, s. 1, C. was entitled to payment of this rent as against the execution creditor. Yates v. Ratledge, 5 H. & N. 249; 29 L. J., Ex. 117.

—— Improper Sale of Goods by Sheriff.]—Where the owner of a cotton factory on the 15th November, 1815, demised the same, together with its machinery, for seven years and two months, reserving for the first year and two months a rent of 1,600*l.*, payable on the day after the date of the indenture, and for the rest of the term a yearly rent of 350*l.*, payable in advance; and the indenture contained a clause of entry and distress in case of nonpayment of rent; a covenant to use the machinery upon the premises only, and not elsewhere; and a proviso, that when and as soon as the rents by the lease reserved to be payable for the first year and two months of the term should have been paid and discharged, and all other covenants, clauses and agreements therein contained, on the lessees' part and behalf, having also been fulfilled and performed, the lessees should become absolutely entitled to the machinery comprised in a certain schedule, as their own goods and chattels, absolutely for ever. But the agreement was, that the tenants should purchase the machinery from the landlord for 2,500*l.*, of which 1,250*l.* were to be paid down before the execution of the lease, and the remaining 1,250*l.* to be paid with the first year's rent; and the latter sum was inserted in the lease as an increased rent for the first year and two months; and the tenants committed acts of bankruptcy prior to the 28th of June, 1821, upon which a commission issued on the 14th July, and the assignment was executed on the 8th September following; and the sheriff had levied an execution at the suit of a creditor, on the 28th June, under which his bailiff took possession; and notice of the bankruptcy and commission was given to the bailiff in August; and all the preceding rents had been paid, and the landlord required the sheriff to pay him the rent in arrear, being less than a year's rent, before the goods should be removed; but the sheriff, notwithstanding, on the 19th, 20th and 21st September, sold all the machinery and effects on the premises, out of which he paid the execution creditor his debt, and retained the amount of the rent due:—Held, in an action on 8 Anne, c. 14, brought by the landlord against the sheriff, that the machinery was the absolute property of the tenants; that the landlord had a right to distrain on it; that he had been disappointed of his rent by the sheriff's acts, and was therefore entitled to recover against him the rent in arrear; although the sheriff might have been also liable to an action at the suit of the assignees. Duck v. Braddyll, M'Clel. 217; 13 Price, 455.

—— What Deductions can be made from.]—In an agreement for assigning a lease for a sum of money to be paid on or before a distant day, the lessee agreed to make some alterations on the premises which his assignee was to occupy, paying, until the completion of the assignment, at the rate of 100*l.* per year in half-yearly payments. The lessee afterwards agreed to allow 12*l.* for some of the alterations he ought to have made; the rest was never completed, and the assignee paid in advance 10*l.*:—Held, that the sheriff levying on the goods of the assignee under a fi. fa., was bound to pay over to the lessee half a year's rent due; and that the 12*l.* and 10*l.* were in part payment of rent, as they were intended to be allowed out of the first payment due by the assignee to the lessee. Saunders v. Musgrave, 6 B. & C. 524; 9 D. & R. 549; 5 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 192.

Notice—To be given to Sheriff.]—Semble, that a sheriff is not bound to find out what rent is due to a landlord, and pay it him, unless the landlord gives him notice. Smith v. Russell, 3 Taunt. 400; 12 R. R. 674.

A notice to a sheriff, stating that the rent was due to S. and the mortgagees of his estate, and signed by a person who was not the receiver appointed by the mortgage deed, is sufficient. Colyer v. Speer, 4 Moore, 473; 2 Br. & B. 67.

Notice of Landlord's Claim for Rent.]—There is no legal obligation upon a sheriff to give an execution creditor notice of a landlord's claim for rent. Davidson v. Allen, 20 L. R., Ir. 16. —Q. B. D.

—— Within what Time.]—Under 8 Anne, c. 14, the sheriff is bound to retain one year's rent out of the proceeds of a tenant's goods taken in execution, provided he has notice of the landlord's claim, at any time while the goods or the proceeds remain in his hands; and the court ordered such rent to be paid to the landlord out of the proceeds, though notice was not given to the sheriff until after the removal of the goods from the premises. Arnitt v. Garnett, 3 B. & Ald. 440; 22 R. R. 453.

Goods having been taken in execution, the landlord, after the sale, but before the removal of the goods, gave notice to the sheriff that rent was due to him:—Held, that an order on the sheriff to pay the rent out of the proceeds in his hands was properly made. Yates v. Ratledge, 5 H. & N. 249; 29 L. J., Ex. 117.

—— Sheriff aware that Rent is due.]—If a sheriff, knowing that rent is due to the landlord, proceeds to sell the tenant's goods under a fi. fa., without retaining a year's rent, he is liable to the landlord for it, although no specific notice has been given him by the landlord that such rent is due to him. Andrews v. Dixon, 3 B. & Ald. 645; 22 R. R. 518.

Duty of Sheriff as to.]—It is the duty of the sheriff to levy for the rent in the first instance, and then for the execution; and he must retain a sufficient sum to satisfy such rent, before he removes any of the goods from off the premises. Colyer v. Speer, 4 Moore, 473; 2 Br. & B. 67.

The sheriff is not bound to levy under a fi. fa. whatever the value of the goods may be, unless the execution creditor (having notice) first satisfies the landlord's rent. Cocker v. Musgrove, 9 Q. B. 223; 15 L. J., Q. B. 365; 10 Jur. 922.

Where the sheriff seized the goods of A. under an execution against the goods of B., and after the making of an interpleader order, and before the trial of the issue, paid the landlord a quarter's rent out of the proceeds of the goods:—Held, that the sheriff was bound to pay over the amount of the quarter's rent, as well as the rest of the proceeds of the sale, to A., after the decision of the issue in his favour. White v. Binstead, 13 C. B. 304; 22 L. J., C. P. 115; 17 Jur. 394.

Where a sheriff has realised the amount of an execution on a fi. fa. he cannot justify the retention of the money on the ground that the landlord has made a claim to the whole of it for rent, which claim he has not yet been enabled to prove the truth of; and upon a return to the writ setting forth such facts an attachment will issue. Hall v. Badden, 7 L. T. 721; 11 W. R. 344.

Where the sheriff executes a fi. fa., and he receives notice of a year's rent being due, and the goods on the premises are not sufficient to satisfy a year's rent, he must withdraw; and, if he sells, the court will not stay proceedings in an action against him on 8 Anne, c. 14, s. 1, on paying over the proceeds of the sale. Foster v. Hilton, 1 D. P. C. 35.

Bankruptcy of Execution Debtor—Power of Sheriff to deduct from Proceeds of Sale.]—Where a sheriff, having seized and sold the goods of a trader under a writ of fi. fa., in respect of a judgment for a sum exceeding 20*l.*, paid one quarter's rent due to the landlord of the trader's premises, in obedience to a demand made at the time of sale, and within fourteen days from the date of sale received notice of the trader's having been adjudicated a bankrupt on foot of the levy:—Held, that the sheriff was entitled to deduct from the produce of the sale the amount of rent so paid by him. M'Carthy, In re, 7 L. R., Ir. 473—C. A.

Action against Sheriff for removing Goods before Satisfying.]—In an action against a sheriff for removing goods without paying a year's rent due to the landlord, it is no ground for arresting the judgment, that the declaration does not shew upon whose goods the levy was made, if it appears they were on the demised premises. Forster v. Cookson, 1 G. & D. 58; 1 Q. B. 419; 10 L. J., Q. B. 167; 5 Jur. 1083.

8 Anne, c. 14, s. 1, does not apply, unless the goods are actually removed from the premises. White v. Binstead, 13 C. B. 304; 22 L. J., C. P. 115; 17 Jur. 394.

A landlord having distrained for rent, was induced to withdraw the distress by the tenant's assurance (which was false) that a particular debt had been satisfied. The creditor having proceeded to judgment and execution, the tenant's goods were seized by the sheriff:—Held, that the landlord was entitled to a year's rent under 8 Anne, c. 14, s. 1. Wollaston v. Stafford, 15 C. B. 278.

In an action by a landlord against the sheriff, the court refused to allow the proceeds of the sale to be paid into court with the costs of the action, though it was sworn that the sale was regularly conducted. Groombridge v. Fletcher, 2 D. P. C. 353.

A sheriff is not liable to the landlord in an action under 8 Anne, c. 14, s. 1, unless there is an actual removal of the goods from the premises; the mere execution of a bill of sale not being equivalent to a removal. Smallman v. Pollard, 7 Scott (N.R.) 911; 1 D. & L. 901; 6 Man. & G. 1001; 13 L. J., C. P. 116; 8 Jur. 246.

An action for money had and received cannot be maintained by a landlord, to recover the amount of a year's rent against the sheriff, who has sold his tenant's goods under an execution. Green v. Austin, 3 Camp. 260.

A sheriff seized goods upon lands leased to a tenant, sold the same for less than a year's rent, and permitted them to be removed without paying the landlord the year's rent, which was due. The latter brought an action against the sheriff for such a removal, and the court refused, on payment into court of the sum which the goods produced, to stay the proceedings until the plaintiff undertook to pay the costs of the suit in the event of his not recovering more than the sum paid into court. Calvert v. Joliffe, 2 B. & Ad. 418; 9 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 240.

When Sheriff's Officer has given Undertaking to pay.]—If, on goods of a tenant being taken in execution, the agent of the landlord takes from the sheriff's officers an undertaking for a year's rent, and then consents to the goods being sold, the landlord cannot afterwards maintain an action against the sheriff for not paying a year's rent on making the levy; although the rent is not paid according to the undertaking, and although the undertaking should be void under the Statute of Frauds, for not stating any consideration. Rothery v. Wood, 3 Camp. 24.

—— After Notice.]—A sheriff who seizes goods under a fi. fa., and, after notice that rent is due to the landlord, removes the goods without such rent having been first paid, is liable for such removal under 8 Anne, c. 14, s. 1, to an action by the landlord. Riseley v. Ryle, 11 M. & W. 16; 12 L. J., Ex. 322.

Where the landlord has a claim for rent, and gives notice in proper time, the sheriff ought to pay him, otherwise the court will make the sheriff pay the costs of appearing. Clarke v. Lord, 2 D. P. C. 55.

If the sheriff levies on and removes goods which are not the property of the judgment debtor, and has notice of rent due before removal, he is liable to the landlord under 8 Anne, c. 14, s. 1, although he has paid over the whole proceeds of the levy to the owner of the goods. Forster v. Cookson, 1 G. & D. 58; 1 Q. B. 419; 10 L. J., Q. B. 167; 5 Jur. 1083.

In an action under 8 Anne, c. 14, s. 1, against the sheriff for removing goods taken in execution without paying the landlord a year's rent, the measure of damages is primâ facie the amount of rent due, but it is competent to the sheriff to prove in mitigation of damages that the value of the goods removed was less than the amount of rent due. Thomas v. Mirehouse, 56 L. J., Q. B. 653; 19 Q. B. D. 563; 36 W. R. 104.

In 1881 the plaintiff carried a resolution under the arrangement sections of the Bankruptcy (Ireland) Act, 1857, for a composition with his creditors, it being required by the resolution that the plaintiff's estate and effects should vest in the official assignees and one H., as a security for the creditors, upon trust, in default in payment of the composition, to apply to realise the estate. Afterwards, and before the composition had been carried out or the plaintiff had obtained any certificate, the plaintiff by lease, dated the 13th April, 1883, demised certain premises to T. Goods of T. in these premises were seized under a fi. fa. and a quarter's rent then due under the lease was claimed from the sheriff by the plaintiff, and by the official assignees and H. The sheriff paid the official assignees and H., and sold the goods. In an action by the plaintiff against the sheriff for allowing the goods to be removed without satisfying the plaintiff, the above facts being stated in the pleadings:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to maintain the action. Doran v. Moore, 16 L. R., Ir. 181.

Bill given by Execution Debtor and Third Party for Arrears.]—In an action against a sheriff for abandoning a seizure, it appeared that after seizure the sheriff learned that a year's rent was due to the landlord, and withdrew, without giving notice to the execution creditor that the rent was due; that a bill of exchange, still current, accepted by a third party, had been given to the landlord for a sum equal to a year's rent, and that the value of the goods seized was less than a year's rent. The only evidence given as to the bill of exchange was that of the landlord's agent, who deposed that he took it as a collateral security for the rent, and that there was no contract binding him not to sue. No question as to any such contract was asked by the plaintiff to be submitted to the jury:—Held, that the currency of the bill did not exonerate the sheriff from responsibility to the landlord, under the statute of 9 Anne, c. 8, s. 1; and that there is no legal obligation upon a sheriff to give the execution creditor notice of a landlord's claim for rent. Davidson v. Allen, 20 L. R., Ir. 16.

Goods in Custodiâ Legis.]—On the 11th of March the sheriff seized under a fi. fa. for an amount exceeding 20*l.* goods and chattels of a tenant upon premises held upon lease, the rent of which accrued due on the usual quarter days. On the 17th of March the goods were sold by the sheriff by private sale, and the sheriff went out of possession. On the 23rd of March a bankruptcy petition founded on the seizure and sale was presented against the tenant, upon which he was on the 5th of May adjudicated bankrupt. On the 10th of April the purchaser from the sheriff removed the goods. On the 15th of April the landlord gave notice to the sheriff requiring payment, under 8 Anne, c. 14, of two quarters' rent, due on the 25th December and the 25th of March preceding. The sheriff paid the proceeds of the sale to the trustee of the bankrupt's estate:—Held, that the landlord was not entitled to payment by the trustee in bankruptcy of the rents, as he might have distrained between the 17th of March and the 10th of April; and that he was not entitled to payment of the quarter's rent due on the 25th of March, as the rent was not due at the time the goods were seized. Pollen Trustees, Ex parte, Davis, In re, 55 L. J., Q. B. 217; 54 L. T. 304; 34 W. R. 442; 3 Morrell, 27.

The purchaser from the sheriff is bound to remove the goods within a reasonable time. If he leaves the goods on the demised premises for his own convenience the landlord can distrain on them. Ib.

—— Proof of Amount of Rent due.]—In an action against a sheriff for removing goods taken in execution without paying the landlord a year's rent, it is not necessary to prove that a year's rent is due; it is sufficient to prove the occupation by the tenant; and it lies on the defendant to shew that the rent has all been paid. Harrison v. Barry, 7 Price, 690; 21 R. R. 781.

In an action against a sheriff, for negligence in not levying under a fi. fa., the defence was that he had withdrawn on notice from the landlord that rent was due. At the trial the landlord stated that rent was due; but, on cross-examination, it appeared that the execution debtor held under a lease, which was not produced:—Held, that the fact of rent being due could not be proved without production of the lease, and that the plaintiff was entitled to a verdict. Augustin v. Challis, 1 Ex. 279; 17 L. J., Ex. 73.

In an action by a landlord against a sheriff, for removing under an execution the goods of his tenant, without securing payment of a year's rent under 8 Anne, c. 14, the tenant was called to prove the rent due, but objected to as interested, and released by the landlord:—Held, that the release could not be pleaded in bar of the action, puis darrein continuance, nor did it reduce the landlord to the necessity of taking a verdict against the sheriff for nominal damages only. 8 Anne, c. 14, s. 1, applies to goods in apartments being parcel of a messuage. Thurgood v. Richardson, 4 Car. & P. 481.

—— Brought by Trustees.]—The trustees of outstanding satisfied terms, assigned in trust to attend the inheritance, may sue the sheriff for not retaining a year's rent due to the landlord, after notice so to do, in an execution against the tenant. Colyer v. Speer, 4 Moore, 473; 2 Br. & B. 67.

When Sheriff is entitled to an Interpleader.]—Where an execution has been levied, and a landlord makes a claim upon the sheriff for rent, which the execution creditor has not expressly disputed, although the claim may be disputable, whether as regards the amount of rent due, or as regards the liability of the property which has been seized to distress, the sheriff is not entitled to an interpleader, at all events unless the landlord claims any part of the property. Bateman v. Farnsworth, 29 L. J., Ex. 365; 2 L. T. 390.

Forfeiture of Right of Action against Sheriff by Execution Creditor directing Sheriff to withdraw Execution.]—If the attorney for an execution creditor, on being informed of a claim by the landlord for rent, directs the sheriff's officer to withdraw the execution, and he does so, and the plaintiff issues a ca. sa. for the debt, such execution creditor cannot bring an action against the sheriff for falsely returning to the fi. fa. that so much rent was due, and he will not be entitled to recover though he shews that the supposed landlord had not a right to the rent claimed; and that the attorney, at the time he directed the officer to withdraw the execution, did not know what the landlord's title was. Stuart v. Whittaker, 2 Car. & P. 100; R. & M. 310.

7. Husbandry Provisions.

Sale of Farming Stock Act, 1816, 56 Geo. 3, c. 50.]—56 Geo. 3, c. 50, although passed for the purpose of general good and public benefit, in promoting good husbandry, does not extend to bind the crown; therefore, sales of goods seized under prerogative process are not within it, and the sheriff must sell unconditionally; nor can the sheriff sell crops as subject to tithe; he must sell without any qualification. Rex v. Osborne, 6 Price, 94; 20 R. R. 619.

56 Geo. 3, c. 50, s. 11, is not confined to sales of farming stock and crops on land let to farm by the sheriff under an execution, but applies to an ordinary sale by the tenant himself, and a purchaser from the tenant is bound by the terms of the lease under which the tenant holds. Willmott v. Rose, 3 El. & Bl. 563; 2 C. L. R. 677; 23 L. J., Q. B. 281; 18 Jur. 518; 2 W. R. 378.

E. ELEGIT.

1. GENERALLY.

Not necessary preliminary to Equitable Execution.]—Since the Judicature Act, 1873, it is not necessary for a judgment creditor, who seeks to obtain equitable execution of the judgment debtor's equitable interest in land, previously to sue out an elegit. Evans, Ex parte, Watkins, In re, 49 L. J., Bk. 7; 13 Ch. D. 252; 41 L. T. 565; 28 W. R. 127—C. A.

Goods.]—Bankruptcy Act, 1883, s. 146, which deprived the plaintiff of his right to the delivery of goods under elegit, not retrospective. Hough v. Windus, 53 L. J., Q. B. 165; 12 Q. B. D. 224; 50 L. T. 312; 32 W. R. 452; 1 Morrell, 1—C. A.

Delivery in Execution.]—The return of the sheriff to an elegit constitutes actual delivery of the land in execution within the 27 & 28 Vict. c. 112. Champneys v. Burland, 23 L. T. 584; 19 W. R. 148.

Priority of.]—A judgment creditor of a railway company, who had obtained an elegit, was restrained from taking possession of the lands and chattels belonging to the company as against prior mortgagees to whom were assigned the undertaking, calls on shareholders, and tolls. Legg v. Mathieson, 2 Giff. 71; 29 L. J., Ch. 385; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1010; 2 L. T. 112.

A judgment debtor, after a fi. fa. had been partially executed against his goods and chattels, gave a second charge on mortgaged leasehold property to another creditor. The judgment had been duly registered, but no further steps had been taken to obtain delivery of or to bind the land. The mortgagees sold the property, and after satisfying their debt there remained a balance in their hands, to attach which balance a garnishee summons was taken out by the judgment creditor:—Held, that the holder of the charge on the mortgaged property was entitled to satisfy his claim out of this balance, in priority to the judgment creditor. Backhouse v. Siddle, 38 L. T. 487.

Issue of for Part of Sum recovered by Judgment.]—An elegit cannot be sued out for part only of the sum recovered by a judgment, unless it shews on the face of it that the residue of the judgment has been satisfied or otherwise disposed of. Sherwood v. Clark, 15 M. & W. 764.

For Costs.]—A defendant in a suit having been condemned in costs, and having neglected to pay them, and having no personal property, but having real property:—Held, that the court had power to issue a writ of elegit. Heath v. Heath, 29 L. T. 931; 22 W. R. 266.

2. WRIT, AND REGISTRATION.

Form of Writ.]—On the 4th February, 1840, judgment was signed against the defendants in an action of debt, at the suit of A., B. and C., assignees of D., a bankrupt. C. (who was the official assignee under the fiat) died in February, 1848. On the 4th April, 1849, an elegit was sued out at the suit of A., B. and C., without any sci. fa. or suggestion of the death of C., or of the appointment of his successor, who was stated in the affidavit to have been duly appointed the official assignee of the estate and effects of D. on C.'s death:—Held, that the elegit was regular in thus following the judgment; and that the affidavit was essentially defective in not shewing in precise terms that the appointment of the new assignee took place before the issuing of the elegit. Rolt v. Gravesend Corporation, 7 C. B. 777.

Registration of Writ.]—The registration of the writ prior to the date of the return of the sheriff is not in disaccordance with the terms of the Judgments Act, 1864, 27 & 28 Vict. c. 112, s. 3. Champneys v. Burland, 23 L. T. 584; 19 W. R. 148.

Alteration in Date of Return of.]—The court will not alter the return of an elegit to a later day; at all events, not at the instance of the sheriff, without the consent of the plaintiff. Hildyard v. Baker, 1 C. & M. 611; 9 D. P. C. 16; 2 L. J., Ex. 218.

3. PROPERTY EXTENDIBLE.

Leaseholds.]—Notwithstanding the provisions of s. 146 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, a writ of elegit still extends to leaseholds. Richardson v. Webb, 1 Morrell, 40.

Lands of Tenant in Tail—Exoneration.]—Lands to which a testator was believed to be entitled in fee simple, but of which he was in fact tenant in tail under a settlement, were in his lifetime delivered in execution under a writ of elegit, to judgment creditors. The testator devised these lands to W., who survived the testator and died intestate, leaving H. his heir-at-law. H. was tenant in tail in possession of these lands under the limitations of the settlement:—Held, that the charge created by the judgment, though enforceable against the estate tail of H., was not so enforceable in exoneration of the testator's personal estate. Anthony, In re, Anthony v. Anthony, 62 L. J., Ch. 1004; [1893] 3 Ch. 498; 3 R. 671; 69 L. T. 300; 41 W. R. 667.

Advowson.]—An advowson descending to an heir is real assets, and (as it seems) extendible in an elegit. Robinson v. Tonge, 3 P. W. 401.

Estate in Remainder of Infant, producing no present Income.]—A plaintiff, who had recovered judgment with damages in an action in tort against an infant, sued out an elegit against his land on the judgment. The infant's only interest in land was a remainder in fee expectant on the death of a tenant for life, which produced no present income to the infant. The sheriff returned that the infant was seised of the reversion of the land in fee-simple, and that it was of the annual value of 12*l.*, and that he had delivered the premises to the creditor. The creditor then presented a petition under 27 & 28 Vict. c. 112, s. 4, for a sale of the infant's interest in the land:—Held, first, that the sheriff had no power to seize an estate in remainder belonging to an infant, and therefore the judgment creditor had acquired no charge on the infant's interest. South, In re, 43 L. J., Ch. 441; L. R. 9 Ch. 369; 30 L. T. 347; 22 W. R. 460.

Held, secondly, that the sheriff having erroneously returned that the infant was seised of a reversion producing a present income, a petition for sale of the infant's interest, which was a bare remainder, was inconsistent with the return, and could not be supported. Ib.

—— Trust Property.]—A judgment affects the legal estate of a party from the time it is signed; but it affects only such trust property as the debtor is possessed of at the time execution is sued out, so that such trust property cannot be taken under an elegit sued out after a conveyance of it, grounded on a judgment signed before such a conveyance. Harris v. Pugh, 4 Bing. 335; 12 Moore, 577; 5 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 189.

Mansion-house excepted from Leasing Power of Tenant for Life.]—A mansion-house excepted from the leasing power of a tenant for life, is subject to execution at the suit of his creditors during his life. Davis v. Marlborough (Duke), 2 Swans. 122.

Estates granted by Crown.]—Estates granted by the crown for the maintenance of dignities, with reversion in the crown, have the usual incidents, and may be taken in execution. Ib.

Property of Corporation.]—Property acquired by a corporation after the Municipal Corporations Act, 1835, 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, cannot be extended under an elegit by a creditor of the corporation in respect of a debt contracted before the passing of the act. Arnold v. Rigge, 13 C. B. 745; 1 C. L. R. 309; 22 L. J., C. P. 235; 17 Jur. 896; 1 W. R. 389.

Land which had been conveyed to a local board of health, for the purposes of the Public Health Acts, was used as a reservoir for the supply of water to the district of the local board. A judgment having been obtained against the local board in the name of their clerk:—Held, that the land was liable to be taken under an elegit. Worral Waterworks Co. v. Lloyd, L. R. 1 C. P. 719.

Equitable Interests.]—Equitable interests in land are within the Judgments Act, 1864, 27 & 28 Vict. c. 112, s. 1. Hatton v. Haywood, 43 L. J., Ch. 372; L. R. 9 Ch. 229; 30 L. T. 279; 22 W. R. 356.

Therefore, if a judgment creditor who has sued out an elegit is unable to obtain delivery by the sheriff of his debtor's lands by reason of the legal estate being outstanding, he must apply to the Court of Chancery to remove the impediment, and the order of the court will be a delivery in execution within the statute. Ib.

A judgment creditor sued out an elegit against his debtor, who had no other interest in land than an equity of redemption, and the sheriff accordingly returned nil. Soon afterwards the debtor became bankrupt. The creditor then filed a bill asking for a declaration that he had a charge on the debtor's equity of redemption at the time of the bankruptcy:—Held, that the creditor had no charge on the land. Ib.

A judgment creditor of a railway company, who had obtained an elegit, was restrained from taking possession of the lands and chattels belonging to the company as against prior mortgagees to whom were assigned the undertaking, calls on shareholders, and tolls. Legg v. Mathieson, 2 Giff. 71; 29 L. J., Ch. 385; 2 L. T. 112; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1010. And see Ames v. Birkenhead Docks Trustees, 20 Beav. 332; 24 L. J., Ch. 540; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 529; 3 W. R. 381.

4. Position of Execution Creditor.

a. Generally.

Right of Eviction.]—In an action on a lease the defendant pleaded that, before the lease, P. impleaded the plaintiffs, and had judgment of elegit of the lands; that the plaintiffs were found by the inquisition to be seised of the premises, which were leased to B. for seven years, subject to two mortgages; that the sheriff delivered the premises to P., to hold until the damages should be fully levied; that before any rent became due, P., by virtue of the delivery to him, ejected, expelled, and put out the defendant therefrom. The plaintiffs traversed the eviction in the words of the plea. It was proved at the trial that P. demanded rent of the defendant, and threatened, if he did not pay, to turn him out, whereupon the defendant paid P. three quarters of a year's rent, and attorned to him without the plaintiff's knowledge:—Held, that P. having merely a reversion expectant on the determination of the mortgage terms, had no title to evict the defendant; that the attornment was immaterial, and the plaintiffs were entitled to succeed on that issue—the expulsion, as pleaded, not having been established by the evidence. Poole Corporation v. Whitt, 15 M. & W. 571; 16 L. J., Ex. 229.

Distress.]—A tenant by elegit has a right to distrain without attornment. Lloyd v. Davies, 2 Ex. 103; 18 L. J., Ex. 80.

Action for Rent.]—By an inquisition taken on an elegit against C., it was found that, at the time of the judgment, he was seised of lands in the occupation of B. In point of fact, these lands were vested in trustees in trust for C., and for raising a sum of money for F., but the trustees permitted C. to receive the rents:—Held, that the tenant by elegit could not sue B. for the rent. Harris v. Booker, 4 Bing. 96; 12 Moore, 283; 5 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 92.

Evidence.]—In an action by a plaintiff claiming under an elegit for use and occupation, an examined copy of the judgment roll, containing the award of the elegit and return of the inquisition, is evidence of his title, without proving a copy of the elegit and of the inquisition. Ramsbottom v. Buckhurst, 2 M. & S. 565; 15 R. R. 352.

—— Before Inquisition.]—Where rent became due after the delivery of an elegit to the sheriff, but before the inquisition was taken thereon:—Held, that the execution creditor was not entitled to the rent. Sharp v. Key, 8 M. & W. 379; 9 D. P. C. 770; 10 L. J., Ex. 304.

Execution Creditor not bound by Scheme of Debenture-holders.]—A scheme made under the Railway Companies Act, 1867, and confirmed by the Court of Chancery, provided that unpaid vendors of land and other mortgagees of a railway company should take debenture stock in satisfaction of their claims. Before the scheme was made a judgment creditor of the company, over whom the unpaid vendors and mortgagees had priority, had sued out a writ of elegit, and the sheriff had made a return that the company was possessed of the lands used for the purposes of the railway. The lands were in the possession of another company, by whom the railway was worked under an agreement:—Held, that the scheme did not operate, upon the principle of Mocatta v. Murgatroyd (1 P. Wms. 393), to give the elegit creditor priority over the holders of debenture stock who had taken such stock under the scheme in satisfaction of their mortgages, and that the elegit creditor, not being bound by the scheme, was entitled to no other rights than those which he had before the scheme was made. Stevens v. Mid-Hants Ry., London Financial Association v. Stevens, 42 L. J., Ch. 694; L. R. 8 Ch. 1064; 29 L. T. 318; 21 W. R. 858.

Inquisition—Evidence of.]—Upon an inquisition on a writ of elegit, proof of possession or receipt of the rent of the land by the party, is primâ facie evidence of title. Barnes v. Harding, 1 C. B. (N.S.) 568; 5 W. R. 570.

Where a jury, notwithstanding such evidence, found that the party had no lands, the court set aside the finding, and directed the sheriff to take a new inquisition. Ib.

—— Description of Land in.]—In inquisition on elegit taken since the Judgments Act, 1838, 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 11, it is not necessary to set out the land by metes and bounds: it is sufficient to describe it in such a manner as would be sufficient to identify it in a conveyance. Doe d. Roberts v. Barry or Parry, 2 D. & L. 430; 13 M. & W. 356; 14 L. J., Ex. 20; 8 Jur. 963. S. P., Sherwood v. Clark, 15 M. & W. 764.

When more than one Writ issued by same Creditor.]—Where lands are extended under an elegit, there is no interest in them left in the debtor which can be extended under a subsequent writ. Carter v. Hughes, 2 H. & N. 714; 27 L. J., Ex. 225; 6 W. R. 212.

A creditor issued three elegits on three several judgments, and extended the lands of the debtor; he afterwards took a conveyance of part of them. On a question whether the tenancy by elegit had been wholly extinguished and the judgment satisfied, the creditor insisted that it had not been shewn that the writs had been duly returned, and that no evidence had been given to shew in respect of which elegit the lands conveyed had been extended:—Held, that the onus of proof was on the creditor, he being bound to make out that he was a subsisting incumbrancer; and, secondly, that as it was his duty to have caused a proper return to be made and filed, he could not take advantage of his own omission. Hele v. Bexley (Lord), 17 Beav. 14; 22 L. J., Ch. 1007.

A creditor issued three elegits under three judgments, and the sheriff, by virtue of the first two, extended the whole of a leasehold estate, and returned nil to the third. The first two judgments being adjudged to have been satisfied at the time:—Held, that the creditor had acquired no right under his elegits. Ib.

A tenant by elegit took a conveyance of part of the lands extended, in satisfaction of part of his debt:—Held, that his tenancy by elegit on the rest of the lands was extinguished, and that his judgment was satisfied. Ib.

A., being entitled to three annuities secured by covenant and judgment, received for twenty years part of the rents of the grantor's estates under elegits issued on satisfied judgments:—Held, that he was not accountable for his receipts to a party having a charge on the estate who had taken no proceedings to obtain possession. Ib.

Held that certain orders appointing a receiver, and restraining the surviving trustee from paying the annuities to D., were properly made; also that the defects in the sheriff's return to the elegit were immaterial, as no return was necessary, and that the serving out an elegit was sufficient to ground the equity; and further that one elegit is sufficient, although the rent be payable out of lands in three counties. Dillon v. Plaskett (Lord), 2 Bli. (N.S.) 241.

Lands of Contributory.]—A contributory was indebted to a company for calls, and an order was made for the payment of them. An elegit was afterwards duly sued out under the 27 & 28 Vict. c. 112, and lands belonging to the contributory were delivered in execution to the official liquidator of the company. The official liquidator afterwards presented a petition for an order for the sale of the lands, and payment out of the proceeds of such sale of the calls due from the contributory, and for other relief:—Held, that there must be an inquiry what interest the contributory had in the lands when they were delivered in execution to the official liquidator of the company, and what other parties (if any) were interested in the lands. Leeds Banking Co., Ex parte, Kirby, In re, 14 L. T. 615.

Seizure under, constitutes Judgment Creditor a secured Creditor.]—Under a writ of elegit the sheriff is entitled to seize the debtor's goods at once, before the holding of the inquisition, and from the time of the seizure the creditor becomes a secured creditor within the meaning of s. 16, sub-s. 5, of the repealed Bankruptcy Act, 1869. Sect. 87 has no application to a seizure of goods under an elegit. Abbott, Ex parte, Gourlay, In re, 50 L. J., Ch. 80; 15 Ch. D. 447; 43 L. T. 417; 29 W. R. 143—C. A.

Notwithstanding 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 11, which gives to a judgment the effect of an equitable charge upon the land of the debtor, an equitable mortgagee retains his right in equity to enforce his security against the title of a creditor under a subsequent judgment, although the latter may have acquired the legal seisin and possession of the land under an elegit without notice of the mortgage. Whitworth v. Gaugain, 1 Ph. 728; 15 L. J., Ch. 433; 10 Jur. 531.

—— Defeated by Power of Appointment.]—In 1822, an estate was conveyed to such uses as A. should, by deed, appoint, and in the meantime to the use of himself for life. In 1826, a judgment was obtained against him, and in 1827 he mortgaged this estate, and appointed the use to C. D. for 500 years. After the execution of this deed, the judgment creditor issued an elegit:—Held, that his lien upon the land was defeated by the execution of the power. Doe d. Wigan v. Jones, 10 B. & C. 459; 8 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 214.

—— Costs of.]—An execution creditor in possession of the debtor's lands by virtue of a writ of elegit is not entitled to an order to ascertain and tax the costs of the proceedings by the writ, and of the inquisition, and add them to the judgment debt in the action and to the plaintiff's security under the writ. Mahon v. Miles, 45 L. T. 540; 30 W. R. 123.

Rights of Creditor in Possession.]—If judgment creditor has sued out elegit, and is in possession, court cannot put him upon level with other judgment creditors. Rowe v. Bant, Dick. 151.

Bill lies for creditor by elegit to set aside a fraudulent conveyance, whether he could recover at law or not. Bennet v. Musgrove, 2 Ves. 51.

An elegit creditor in possession made a lease of the extended lands for twenty-one years, provided his estate should last so long. Before the debt was paid off or the years had expired, the lands were sold under a decree in a creditor's suit, and so conveyed to a purchaser. The conveyance was executed by the administrator of the elegit creditor:—Held, that the lease in equity was at an end, and, semble, the court would enjoin the lessee from enforcing his legal title under it. Williams v. Morris, 13 Ir. Eq. R. 147.

A leasehold estate is affected by an elegit or fi. fa. from the time it is lodged in the sheriff's hands, and if the debtor afterwards makes an assignment of it, the judgment creditor may proceed at law to sell the term, and the vendee will be entitled to the possession, notwithstanding such assignment. Burden v. Kennedy, 3 Atk. 739.

Notwithstanding 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 11, which gives to a judgment the effect of an equitable charge upon the land of the debtor, an equitable mortgagee retains his right in equity to enforce his security against the title of a creditor under a subsequent judgment, although the latter may have acquired the legal seisin and possession of the land under an elegit without notice of the mortgage. Whitworth v. Gaugain, 1 Ph. 728; 15 L. J., Ch. 433; 10 Jur. 531.

Redemption and Foreclosure.]—On a bill filed against mortgagees and mortgagor, who was also a judgment debtor, by a judgment creditor who had issued a writ of elegit against the goods and hereditaments of the judgment debtor, but the execution of which, in consequence of the mortgages, could not be proceeded with, for accounts, redemption and foreclosure, the ordinary redemption and foreclosure decree was made, notwithstanding the 27 & 28 Vict. c. 112. Beckett v. Buckley, L. R. 17 Eq. 435; 22 W. R. 294.

Redemption by Tenant by Elegit—Right of Mortgagee to tack.]—A mortgagee, although without notice of any writ of elegit having been issued, is not entitled to tack a subsequent charge to his first mortgage on redemption by the tenant by elegit. Champneys v. Burland, ante, col. 1160.

b. Account.

Account of Rent and Profits.]—Where lands had been taken possession of under an elegit, the court ordered it to be referred to the master to take an account of the rents and profits received, and if upon inquiry it appeared that the debt had been satisfied, possession to be restored to the debtor. Price v. Varney, 5 D. & R. 612; 3 B. & C. 733; 3 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 107.

If the debtor comes into equity for relief, the court will give it him, by obliging the creditor to account for the whole he has received; but as he who comes for equity must do equity, they will direct the debtor to pay interest to the creditor, though it should exceed the principal. Godfrey v. Watson, 3 Atk. 517.

Elegit creditor in possession, not to account for rents permitted to be received by the inheritor, before notice of proceedings by another creditor. Holton v. Lloyd, 1 Moll. 30.

Bill filed by a judgment creditor against the heir and assignee of the conusor (the latter having been discharged as an insolvent shortly prior to his death) and also against an elegit creditor of the conusor who had been in possession for many years:—Held, that the plaintiff was only entitled to an account for wilful default against the elegit creditor from the time of the filing of the bill. M'Donnell v. Walsh, 2 Dr. & War. 252; 1 Con. & L. 388.

A judgment debtor having called upon an elegit creditor in possession to account before the officer of a court of law, and having had the officer's report confirmed, he is bound thereby, and cannot afterwards have the same accounts taken in a court of equity. Irwin v. Gee, 1 Hay. & J. 283.

It was asserted to be a general rule, that until a judgment has been revived against the heir and terre-tenants of the conusor, and an elegit has issued, a court of equity will not entertain a bill to levy the debt; but courts of equity (in Ireland), for more than a century, have entertained bills in the first instance, after the death of the conusor, for an account of the real and personal estate, and of the sum due for principal, interest, and costs on the foot of the judgment; plainly because this course tends to expedite the payment of the debt, and to preserve the estate from accumulated costs, and also to save a multiplicity of suits by directing an account of the real and personal estates of the debtor, and by applying, in the first instance, the fund properly applicable to the payment of the debt. Barnwall v. Barnwall, 3 Ridgw. P. C. 61.

Judgment creditor in possession under an elegit, buying up other judgments, cannot apply the rents to discharge the interests of all the securities in the first instance. The rents must go to pay interest on the first judgment, then to discharge the principal, and so on in order of the judgments. Skirrett v. Athy, 1 Ball & B. 430.

After an estate has been held under an extent for a long time, and has gone through several hands, whether upon a bill to redeem, the defendants shall account otherwise than at the extended value. Poole v. Guise, 1 Vern. 468.

When a mortgage is made in trust that mortgagee should continue in possession till by perception of the rents and profits he should be satisfied the principal and interest, mortgagor may come into court of equity for an account of the profits received; as in an elegit the conusor has a right to see if the conusee on the extended value has received a satisfaction for his whole debt, and to have surplus paid to him. Yates v. Hambley, 2 Atk. 362.

Where a mortgagee takes an estate subject to a perpetual account, he will not be relieved from his own contract. Ib.

Where tenant by elegit has received rents and profits beyond the debt, though he shall account to the debtor, yet he shall not pay costs. In such case, appeal may be for the costs only, where defendant decreed to pay them. Owen v. Griffith, Ambl. 520; 1 Ves. 249.

An elegit creditor in possession is bound to account for wilful default upon the application of the debtor himself. O'Brien v. Mahon, 2 Dr. & War. 306; 1 Con. & L. 390, n.

A subsequent elegit creditor has no right to call a prior elegit creditor to account, until the former has by an inquisition got a specific right to the debtor's lands. Shaw v. Murtagh, Hayes, 586.

And such subsequent creditor cannot invalidate any dealings which may previously have been had between the debtor and prior creditor. Ib.

A creditor in possession, under an elegit, of lands belonging to his debtor, sued out for the sale of the property under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 11, is bound to account as a mortgagee in possession. Bull v. Faulkner, 1 De G. 685 ; 17 L. J., Ch. 23 ; 12 Jur. 33.

A. D., being entitled to three annuities secured by covenant and judgment, received for twenty years part of the rents of the grantor's estates under elegits issued on satisfied judgments :—Held, that he was not accountable for his receipts to a party having a charge on the estate who had taken no proceedings to obtain possession. Hele v. Bexley (Lord), 17 Beav. 14 ; 22 L. J., Ch. 1007.

c. Determination of Tenancy by Elegit.

An elegit creditor in possession made a lease of the extended lands for twenty-one years, provided his estate should last so long. Before the debt was paid off or the years had expired, the lands were sold under a decree in a creditor's suit, and so conveyed to a purchaser. The conveyance was executed by the administrator of the elegit creditor :—Held, that though the estate by elegit was merged by the conveyance as between the creditor and the purchaser, it had continuance as between the purchaser and lessee to support the lease which still existed at law ; but—Held, also, that the lease in equity was at an end, and, semble, the court would enjoin the lessee from enforcing his legal title under it. Williams v. Morris, 13 Ir. Eq. R. 147.

Nature of estate of elegit and modes by which it may be determined. Ib.

Judgment creditor having sued out an elegit, and having obtained possession, and continued in receipt of the issues of a moiety of the lands, until the death of his debtor, and being then evicted :—Held, that his judgment was not extinguished, and that he was entitled to come into equity after the death of the conusor for satisfaction of so much as remained unpaid. Whether, if he was not evicted, but elected to abandon his elegit, he would be so entitled, quære. The Lord Chancellor expressed an opinion that equity would not hold a creditor disentitled to participate in the ordinary and regular distribution of assets, because during the lifetime of his debtor he had gone as far as he could go to obtain payment. Leahy v. Dancer, 1 Moll. 313.

A tenant by elegit took a conveyance of part of the lands extended, in satisfaction of part of his debt :—Held, that his tenancy by elegit on the rest of the lands was extinguished, and that his judgment was satisfied. Hele v. Bexley (Lord), 17 Beav. 14 ; 22 L. J., Ch. 1007.

5. DISCHARGE OF WRIT.

Elegit—Application to Discharge—Action against Local Authority.]—The plaintiff having recovered a judgment for costs against the defendants, issued a writ of elegit against the defendants' lands. The defendants moved to discharge it on the ground that execution ought not to issue against their lands to satisfy a debt which they could not legally pay. The sheriff had made no return to the writ and there was no evidence as to whether the defendants had any lands that could lawfully be applied in payment of the debt :—Held, that the application was premature. Jersey (Earl) v. Uxbridge Sanitary Authority (No. 1), 55 J. P. 165.

—— Application to set aside—Staying Proceedings.]—Where a writ of elegit and inquisition are quite regular, a motion to set them aside is wrong in form ; but the court may in the exercise of its discretion under s. 24 (5) of the Judicature Act, 1873, order all further proceedings under the writ and inquisition to be stayed. Jersey (Earl) v. Uxbridge Sanitary Authority (No. 2), 60 L. J., Ch. 833 ; [1891] 3 Ch. 183 ; 64 L. T. 858.

F. WRIT OF POSSESSION.

When Issued.]—Where, in an ejectment, after defence taken, the plaintiff obtains a verdict for possession, mesne rates and costs, execution cannot issue until the judgment is complete, and the plaintiff is therefore not entitled to a writ of possession until the costs are taxed and added to the judgment, or are waived by him. Beasley v. Chapman, 6 L. R., Ir. 393.

Renewal of Writ.]—When, after writ of possession executed, the defendant forcibly retook possession, the Queen's Bench Division made an order renewing the writ. Staepoole v. Walsh, 6 L. R., Ir. 444.

Judgment for.]—A judgment for foreclosure absolute is not a judgment for the recovery of the possession of land within the meaning of Ord. XLII. r. 3, of Rules of Court, 1875. Wood v. Wheater, 52 L. J., Ch. 144 ; 22 Ch. D. 281 ; 47 L. T. 440 ; 31 W. R. 117.

Instead of Writ of Assistance.]—Under Ord. XLVIII., a writ of possession is now substituted for the writ of assistance, whether between parties or as against strangers to the action. Hall v. Hall, 47 L. J., Ch. 680.

G. LEVARI FACIAS BY THE CROWN.

When Issued.]—Where a defendant, convicted of a misdemeanour, is sentenced to be imprisoned for a certain term, and to pay a fine, and to be further imprisoned till the fine is paid, a levari facias may issue to levy the fine on his goods, chattels, and lands, even before the expiration of the term for which the defendant is sentenced to be imprisoned. Rex v. Woolf, 2 B. & Ald. 609 ; 21 R. R. 412.

The sheriff is bound ex officio to levy the fine imposed upon a defendant on his conviction for a misdemeanour ; at all events, the writ of levari facias is regular when it has been adopted on the part of the crown. Ib.

Priority of.]—Where a sheriff seized goods of a debtor under a fi. fa. delivered to him by a judgment creditor, and executed a bill of sale of them to the creditor, and gave him possession ; a levari facias issued by the crown, on a judgment entered up for penalties incurred by the debtor for frauds on the revenue, under a verdict obtained on an information filed before the subject creditor's judgment, comes too late ; for the property in the goods becomes, by a bill of sale, completely altered; and in such a case the sheriff might well return nulla bona: if, however, any of the goods included in the bill of sale have been chargeable with the duties of excise in arrear, on a breach of the revenue laws, on which the information was founded, the crown will be entitled to a verdict for the value of such goods, notwithstanding the sale; and the return of nulla bona will not be a good return as to them. Att.-Gen. v. Ford, 8 Price, 364, n.

Default in Payment of Land-Tax—Setting aside Writ.]— Where a party has been returned in the schedule of the collector of land-tax for a particular parish, under 48 Geo. 3, c. 141, as in default for a sum assessed upon him for land-tax in that parish, and the schedule having been duly certified to the court, a writ of levari facias has issued, under which such sum has been levied on his goods, and paid into the receipt of the exchequer, the court cannot afterwards set aside the writ, on the ground that the party has been assessed in the wrong parish. Glatton Land-tax, In re, 4 M. & W. 570; 8 L. J., Ex. 113.

H. SEQUESTRATION.

1. GENERALLY.

Foundation of Process.] — Sequestration is neither in form nor substance an execution; it is founded on default of performance of the decree of the court, and gives no right in the funds levied to the party at whose instance it is sued out. Brune v. Robinson, 7 Ir. Eq. R. 188.

Performance of a Duty—Death of Contemnor—Revivor.]—A trustee having failed to comply with an order directing him to pay money into court, a writ of sequestration was issued against his estate and effects, and subsequently the sequestrators were authorised to sell certain chattels in their possession belonging to the trustee. Before any sale was effected the trustee died, and a creditor's action was brought, in which the usual judgment was made and a receiver appointed. The trustee's estate was insolvent, and the receiver and the administrator of the deceased trustee commenced an action against the sequestrators to restrain them from selling the chattels and moved for an injunction:—Held, on the authority of Hyde v. Greenhill (1 Dick. 106), that sequestration to compel the performance of a duty is not determined by the death of the person against whose estate and effects sequestration has been issued; and proceedings may therefore be continued against his legal personal representative. Pratt v. Inman, 59 L. J., Ch. 274; 43 Ch. D. 175; 61 L. T. 760; 38 W. R. 200.

In Rem.]—The writ of sequestration is in rem, and not in personam. Tatham v. Parker, 1 Sm. & G. 506; 1 Eq. R. 257; 22 L. J., Ch. 903; 17 Jur. 929; 1 W. R. 491.

Application.]—Chancery has jurisdiction in case of sequestration of titles during a vacancy, by reason of general jurisdiction of court in matters of trust. Birch v. Bygrave, 6 Madd. 158.

All decrees in chancery, as well for personal as for real things, shall be executed by sequestration. Beddingfield v. Zouch, 2 Freem. 168; Hide v. Petit, 1 Ch. Ca. 91; 2 Freem. 125, 168.

A sequestration will be granted in chancery or exchequer for a personal duty; for the court hath authority to see its decrees executed. Guarers v. Fountaine, 2 Freem. 99, 125, 168; 1 Ch. Ca. 91.

During the construction of a railway an injunction was granted against the company, restraining them from further interfering with a particular road, and from so constructing their works as to obstruct, impede, or render less secure the same road, or so as to hinder or prevent the passage of carriages along the same. The company then laid their permanent rails over the road on a level, and by the direction of the commissioners of railways, erected gates across the road, for security of passengers, and, with the sanction of the same commissioners, opened the line for public traffic; whereupon the court ordered a sequestration to issue for breach of the injunction, and refused to suspend the issuing of process until an appeal against the order could be heard. Att.-Gen. v. G. N. Ry., 15 Jur. 387.

Sequestration will issue against defendant for contempt, in not putting in examination to interrogatories before master. Lupton v. Hescott, 1 Sim. & S. 274.

Sequestration issued for contempt in not producing papers. Trigg v. Trigg, and Detillin v. Gale, Ib., n. Trigg v. Trigg, Dick. 325.

Sequestration nisi granted for not returning papers according to order. Hassenclever, In re, 1 Bro. C. C. 434.

Whether a writ of sequestration can be properly issued to enforce a simple judgment for a debt, or to enforce an order upon a judgment debtor's summons, quære. Nelson, Ex parte, Hoare, In re, 49 L. J., Bk. 44; 14 Ch. D. 41; 42 L. T. 389; 28 W. R. 554.

—— Payment of Costs.]—On a motion the court gave leave in its discretion, under the Rules of Court of April, 1880, to issue a sequestration for the payment of costs. Snow v. Bolton, 50 L. J., Ch. 743; 17 Ch. D. 433; 44 L. T. 571; 29 W. R. 583.

Leave of Court.] — Under Judicature Act, Ord. XLII. rr. 2 and 20, and Ord. XLVII., a writ of sequestration against the estate and effects of a receiver or other person for disobedience of an order of the court may be issued without the leave of the court. Sprunt v. Pugh, 7 Ch. D. 567; 26 W. R. 473.

Scotch Acts.]—The Scotch Acts of Sequestration, many of which passed since the union, support the general principle, passing all the property of a bankrupt to the assignees. Cridland, Ex parte, 3 Ves. & B. 100; 13 R. R. 152.

Defendant in Ireland.]—The Court of Chancery in England may grant a sequestration against the defendant in Ireland, but it must be after a sequestration taken out here, and nulla bona returned. Fryer v. Bernard, 2 P. W. 261; Sel. Ch. Ca. 5.

2. THE WRIT.

Issue of.]—Judgment having been obtained against a beneficed clergyman in the county of Brecon, a writ of sequestration was issued against him on the 17th August, at which time no fi. fa. had been issued. On the 9th October a fi. fa. against him was returned, by the sheriff of Bristol, nulla bona, but not that he was a beneficed clerk. The rule to set aside the writ was moved for on the 22nd November :—Held, that the writ was irregular, and that the application to set it aside was made in sufficient time. Bromage v. Vaughan, 7 Ex. 223 ; 21 L. J., Ex. 111.

Effect of Death of Bishop.]—On the death of a bishop, to whom a writ of sequestration has been directed, no fresh writ of sequestration need issue. Phelps v. St. John, 3 C. L. R. 478 ; 10 Ex. 895 ; 24 L. J., Ex. 171.

Attachment.]—Attachment against defendant for non-payment of money, and sequestration against the defendant's property for the same cause : both may be kept up, this court allowing the double execution, subject however to its discretion. Crone v. O'Dell, 2 Moll. 344.

Where a defendant is out of the jurisdiction, and has been served by substitution, a sequestration will be issued without a writ of attachment. East of England Bank, In re, 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1093 ; 11 L. T. 410 ; 13 W. R. 128.

A writ of sequestration issued against the property of a personal representative, who was in default for non-compliance with an order for payment of money, without attachment of his person. Sykes v. Dyson, L. R. 9 Eq. 228.

Form of Writ.]—On the application of a husband, who had obtained a decree nisi for divorce against his wife, an order was made that the wife should deliver up into the custody of the husband the children of the marriage. The wife knew of the order, but evaded service of it, and disobeyed it. On the application of the husband an order was then made declaring the wife contumacious and in contempt, and directing that a writ of sequestration should issue against the estate and effects of the wife :—Held, first, that as the wife knew of the order for delivery up of the children, and evaded service of it, personal service of the order upon her was not necessary to give the court jurisdiction to issue the writ of sequestration ; secondly, that the general form of the writ of sequestration against "the estate and effects" of the wife, without any express limitation therein to separate property of the wife not subject to a restraint on anticipation, was right, but that the writ would only operate on her separate property which was not so subject. Hyde v. Hyde, 57 L. J., P. 89 ; 13 P. D. 166 ; 59 L. T. 529 ; 36 W. R. 708—C. A.

Indorsement on Writ.]—The court refused to permit a sequestrator to indorse interest upon his writ of sequestrari facias, which issued before the Judgments Act, 1838, 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, which by s. 17 gives creditors interest upon their judgment debts, as by so doing subsequent sequestrators would be prejudiced by having satisfaction of their judgments postponed. Watkins v. Turpley, 2 B. C. Rep. 158 ; 5 D. & L. 226 ; 17 L. J., Q. B. 47 ; 11 Jur. 1017.

Disobedient Corporation.] — Where a clear breach of an injunction has been committed by a corporate body, the court will direct the issue of a sequestration, although it is stated and deposed to that the real and personal property of the corporate body is vested in and held by that body under the provisions of acts of parliament, and were necessary for carrying out their duties under such acts. Spokes v. Banbury Local Board, 35 L. J., Ch 105. Affirmed, 11 Jur. (N.S.) 1010 ; 13 L. T. 453 ; 14 W. R. 169—L.JJ.

The court had granted an injunction restraining the defendants from polluting with sewage a pool belonging to the plaintiff, but suspended the order for three months to allow them to comply with it. They had moved the court for a further extension of time, but had been refused. As they had taken no steps to obey the order, the plaintiff soon after the expiration of the three months served them with notice of motion under Ord. XLII. r. 31, for leave to issue sequestration against the property of the corporation. Before, however, this notice was served they remedied the nuisance, so the motion now came on merely as a question of costs. The defendants submitted the following technical objections under the Rules of the Supreme Court, 1883 : (1) No memorandum had been indorsed upon the copy of the judgment served on them, as required by Ord. XLI. r. 5. (2) No copies of the affidavits intended to be used had been served with the notice of motion, as required by Ord. LII. r. 4. (3) There was no case for sequestration at all, but if there were the plaintiff was entitled to, and ought to have issued his writ under Ord. XLIII. r. 6, without moving for leave. (4) Application for leave, if necessary, ought to have been by summons in chambers, in accordance with Snow v. Bolton (17 Ch. D. 434) :—Held, that the defendants had been guilty of wilful disobedience to the order of the court ; and (1) that Ord. XLI. r. 5, had no application to a prohibitive order like the present one ; (2) that copies of affidavits need only be served with the notice of motion in cases where the liberty of the subject was involved, as in attachment ; (3) that Ord. XLIII. r. 6, applied to something to be done in a limited time, and not to something which had been ordered (as in the present case) not to be done at all ; and (4) that, under the circumstances of the case, the plaintiff was right to move the court in the first instance instead of proceeding by summons in chambers. Selous v. Croydon Rural Sanitary Authority, 53 L. T. 209.

Personal Service of Order.] — A husband obtained a decree for restitution of conjugal rights, which was not complied with, and the court afterwards made an order giving the petitioner the custody of the only child of the marriage. A copy of the order for custody was left at the house where the respondent was residing, but the respondent had not given up the child to the petitioner. The court, being satisfied that the order as to the custody of the child had come to the knowledge of the respondent, ordered a writ of sequestration to issue against her for non-compliance with the order, without a previous writ of attachment, and ordered the respondent to pay the costs of the motion. Allen v. Allen, 54 L. J., P. 77 ; 10 P. D. 187 ; 33 W. R. 826.

Operation, from what Time.]—A sequestration binds from the time of awarding the commission, and not from the time of executing it only. Burdett v. Rockley, 1 Vern. 58.

Lands when bound from the institution of the suits ; when not bound till sequestration. Crofts v. Oldfield, 3 Swan. 278.

If sequestration is executed, a judgment creditor, though prior, can only claim to be examined pro interesse suo; if not executed he may take execution. Angel v. Smith, 9 Ves. 336; 7 R. R. 214.

—— Order for Payment of Money within limited Time — Want of Jurisdiction.]— The plaintiffs, having recovered judgment against the defendant, a married woman, obtained from a master at chambers an order directing her to pay the amount recovered within ten days from the service of the order, and, in default of such payment, giving the plaintiffs leave to issue a writ of sequestration against her separate property:— Held, that the master had no jurisdiction to make such an order. Hulbert and Crowe v. Cathcart, 63 L. J., Q. B. 121; [1894] 1 Q. B. 224; 70 L. T. 558.

Taxed Costs—Solicitor—Four-day Order.]— The effect of Ord. XLIII. r. 7, is to alter the old chancery common practice under which payment of costs, where no time was fixed, was enforced by subpœna, upon proof of service of which and of non-payment a writ of sequestration might issue as of course, and to substitute for the subpœna the leave of the court or a judge to issue a writ of sequestration, no four-day order being necessary. Lumley, In re, Cathcart, Ex parte, 63 L. J., Ch. 435; [1894] 2 Ch. 271; 7 R. 179; 70 L. T. 780; 42 W. R. 401—C. A.

Satisfaction of—Entered on Record.]—A judgment on a warrant of attorney was for 1,800*l.*; the defeasance provided, that on the death of the defendant, and full payment of the arrears of the annuity, satisfaction should be entered on the record. A second judgment having been signed by a different creditor, who sued out a sequestrari facias thereupon, it appeared that, at that time, the former creditor had, by sequestrations, levied more than 1,800*l.* for arrears of his annuity, and there were arrears still due. The court ordered that satisfaction should be entered on the roll of the former judgment, as of the date when judgment was signed by the second creditor; and that the sums levied since should be paid over to him. But they refused to order payment to this creditor of the surplus over 1,800*l.*, levied before the signing of his judgment. Cottle v. Warrington, 2 N. & M. 227; 5 B. & Ad. 447.

Copyhold.] — Whether copyhold lands are subject to sequestration, quære. Carmarthen (Marquis) v. Hawson, 3 Swan. 294.

A sequestration on a decree runs against copyhold lands, though it cannot be revived against the customary heir. Whitehead v. Harrison, 1 Barnard. 431.

Freehold.]—A sequestration covers the personal estate, and the court will direct a sale for a duty; it also covers the rents and profits of the real estate, but not the land. Hyde v. Greenhill, Dick. 107. And see Athol v. Derby (Earl), 1 Ch. Ca. 222.

Tithe.]—Sequestrators appointed by the Court of Chancery have no right to seize the tithes of an ecclesiastical benefice. Ward v. Hayes, 1 Hog. 107.

Rent Charge.]—Order made for payment to sequestrators, by a party out of whose estate the same was issuing, of a rent-charge payable to the person whose estate was sequestered. Wilson v. Metcalfe, 1 Beav. 260, 270; 8 L. J., Ch. 331; 3 Jur. 601.

A defendant, against whom a sequestration had issued, was entitled to a rent-charge issuing out of the estate of A. B., with power of distress; the rent-charge being in arrear was claimed both by the sequestrators and the defendant; A. B. offered to pay the arrears to the sequestrators on being indemnified; but no protection having been afforded her, she paid over the arrears to the defendant, who threatened to distrain:—Held, that A. B. was entitled to protection, and that an application ought to have been made to the court for an order for her to pay; and that, under the circumstances, she was not liable to repay the amount to the sequestrators. Ib.

Chose in Action.]—Choses in action are subject to the process of sequestration. In a clear and simple case, a sequestration may be made effective in respect to choses in action by an order only, or a voluntary payment may be protected; in other cases, it may be necessary to resort to an action or suit under the direction of the court. Ib.

Dividends.]—Dividends of bank stock, being choses in action, cannot be sequestered. M'Carthy v. Goold, 1 Ball & B. 387.

Pension.]—Judgment having been obtained against a county court judge for a large sum, a judge's order, under the Debtors Act, 1869, s. 5, was made for payment of the judgment debt by quarterly instalments of 50*l.* each on days named. Default being made in the payment of these instalments, and there being no other means of enforcing obedience to the order, writs of sequestration were issued under Ord. XLVII. The debtor having resigned his office, a pension of 1,000*l.* per annum was granted to him under the repealed County Courts Act, 1852, 15 & 16 Vict. c. 54, s. 15, out of the consolidated fund:—Held, that this pension, being a reward for past services only, was liable to seizure under the writs of sequestration; and the court, at the instance of the judgment creditor, made an order to restrain the debtor from receiving the quarterly payments, and empowering the sequestrators to receive the same, to the extent of the moneys due and payable under the judge's order. Willcock v. Terrell, 3 Ex. A salary to an equerry to one of the royal family is not a subject of sequestration. Fenton v. Lowther, 1 Cox, 315.

Future Profits.]—A writ of sequestration attaches the future profits only, and does not affect the arrears which have accrued before the writ issued. Egan v. Heenan, Fl. & K. 39; 3 Ir. Eq. R. 50.

Settled Land.]—The decree declared that the estate therein mentioned was divisible into three parts, and that the younger children of A., B. and O. were severally entitled to a third. O. was largely indebted to the estate, and a sequestration issued and continued against him until his death; by means of which certain sums were brought in from time to time, and allocated according to the rights of the parties. Two of O.'s younger children died before any of the funds were allocated, and the master's report found that certain sums (being their shares of the fund then in the bank) were payable to their personal representatives. O. became entitled as executor and sole legatee of one of his deceased children, and as administrator and sole next of kin of the other, to both their shares, but made no claim, there being a sequestration against him. He died, owing a large balance to the fund, and the proportion of that balance to which his younger children should have been entitled exceeded the amount of the aforesaid shares. T., another of O.'s younger children, having become legal personal representative of his deceased father and brothers now applied for the aforesaid shares, after payment of the costs due to their solicitor:—Held, that when O. became entitled to this money it was attached for the purposes of the decree by the sequestration against him, and should not now be paid out to his representative. Crone v. O'Dell, 3 Ir. Eq. R. 12.

Rent.]—Arrear of rent claimed by sequestrators, and a promissory note, which had been given for the same arrear of rent put in suit by the defendant. Order obtained upon motion by the tenant in the cause without form, and to lodge in court expense of bill of interpleader. S. C., 2 Moll. 348.

Married Woman's Separate Estate.]—Sequestration may be awarded against the separate estate of a married woman for costs given against her. Keogh v. Catheart, 11 Ir. Eq. R. 280.

Dividend already accrued on a fund in court to which a married woman was entitled for life for her separate use, without power of anticipation, ordered to be paid to the sequestrators of her property on their petition. Claydon v. Finch, 42 L. J., Ch. 416; L. R. 15 Eq. 266; 28 L. T. 101.

In a suit for restitution of conjugal rights against a wife, there being no defence, the usual order was made that she should return to her husband's house within a certain number of days, and certify to the court that she had done so, and, on the court being satisfied that she had a considerable separate estate, it further ordered that she pay the costs of the proceedings. She was abroad and did not obey the order to return to her husband at all, or to pay the costs until after a long delay. The court ordered a writ of sequestration to issue against her estate in the first instance, without attachment. Miller v. Miller, 39 L. J., Mat. 38; L. R. 2 P. 54; 22 L. T. 418; 18 W. R. 585.

—— Without Anticipation defeats Sequestration.]—By marriage settlement in 1856, property was settled to the separate use of the wife for life, without power of anticipation, with remainders over. In 1866, the wife left her husband, and he instituted a suit against her in the Divorce Court for restitution of conjugal rights. Judgment was given against the wife with costs. The wife withdrew from the jurisdiction, and declined to obey the judgment. In 1870, the husband procured from the Divorce Court a writ of sequestration against the separate property of the wife for the costs of the suit. In October, 1869, dividends and interest on the settled property fell due, and were received by one of the trustees, who retained them in his hands. In December, 1869, a hostile suit was instituted by the wife against the trustee to compel the payment of the dividends and interest, and for the removal of the trustee, but not asking for the general administration of the fund. The trustee admitted that he had in his hands the greater part of the entire fund. A few days after his answer the trustee filed a bill in the Rolls Court for the administration of the trusts of the settlement. On motion by the wife in the first of the two suits, that the trustee might be ordered to pay into court the entire sum admitted by him to be in his hands:—Held, that, regard being had principally to the restraint on anticipation contained in the settlement, the money ought to be paid into court, notwithstanding the writ of sequestration, and notwithstanding that the wife's bill had not prayed the general administration of the trust fund. Miller v. Miller, 18 W. R. 750.

Property of Personal Representative.]—A writ of sequestration issued against the property of a personal representative, who was in default for non-compliance with an order for payment of money, without attachment of his person. Sykes v. Dyson, 39 L. J., Ch. 288; L. R. 9 Eq. 228; 21 L. T. 696.

An order was made on summons in an administration action directing payment to sequestrators, appointed by the Probate and Divorce Division, of income of a beneficiary under the trust being administered. Slade, In re, Slade v. Hulme. 50 L. J., Ch. 729; 18 Ch. D., 653; 45 L. T. 276; 30 W. R. 28.

Property of Third Person.]—Where the goods of a third person are seized by sequestrators, an order to examine pro interesse suo will be made; and if the goods taken are found to belong to the party so applying, a reference to ascertain his damages will be granted. Copeland v. Mape, 2 Ball & B. 387.

A sum of money in the hands of the banker of a party against whom a sequestration had issued, sequestered. Proceeding for ascertaining the interest of a third person. Pelham (Lord) v. Newcastle (Duke), 3 Swan. 290.

Where a sequestrator obtains possession of property, as belonging to the party against whom the process issued, and such property is claimed by a third person, the mode of trying the right is in the discretion of the court.

Moneys in Bankers' Hands—Payment into Court.]—Where bankers had in their hands money belonging to a person against whom sequestration had issued, it was ordered (the bankers admitting the sum in their hands) that it should be paid into court, and the costs of the plaintiff and the bankers, and the remuneration of the sequestrators paid out of it. Miller v. Huddlestone, 52 L. J., Ch. 208; 22 Ch. D. 231; 47 L. T. 570; 31 W. R. 138.

An executor had deposited at his bankers' money, being part of the estate, and an order had been made that the executor should pay the money into court, and sequestration had issued against him:—Held, that an adverse order to pay the money in could not be made against the bankers, not being parties to the suit, but on their submission to the jurisdiction a directory order was made. Manton v. Manton, 40 L. J., Ch. 93.

Deposit on Appeal.]—When a deposit on an appeal had been ordered to be returned to the appellant, and before it was paid to him sequestration was issued against him for non-payment of costs previously due, the deposit was ordered to be paid to the sequestrators instead of the appellant. Conn v. Garland, L. R. 9 Ch. 101; 22 W. R. 175.

c. Priorities.

A sequestrator being in possession of a rectory, under a sequestration issued by a creditor of the rector, a subsequent creditor, having obtained a second sequestration, is entitled to an account in equity against the first sequestrator, and payment of the surplus after satisfaction of the first creditor: nor are prior incumbrancers who have not obtained sequestration, necessary parties to the suit. Cuddington v. Withy, 2 Swan. 174; 19 R. R. 52. And see ECCLESIASTICAL LAW.

Under sequestration, landlord is entitled to be paid arrears of rent without reference to master. Dixon v. Smith, 1 Swan. 457.

Sequestrators took possession of certain mortgaged premises; mortgagees, on petition, obtained order to have rents and profits of premises in hands of sequestrators applied towards payment of mortgage money, and possession of premises delivered up to them. Walker v. Bell, 2 Madd. 21; 17 R. R. 174.

A sequestration having issued against the defendant for non-performance of a decree for payment of money to the plaintiff, the sequestrators seized the rents and profits of his lands. The plaintiff and a prior incumbrancer both applied for the funds in the sequestrator's hands:—Held, that the prior incumbrancer was entitled to them. Burne v. Robinson, 7 Ir. Eq. R. 188.

The title of a person claiming under a writ of sequestration issued by the Court of Chancery prevails over that of a mortgagee under a mortgage for value made in order to avoid the effect of the writ, and with full knowledge on the part of the mortgagee of all the circumstances. Ward v. Booth, 41 L. J., Ch. 729; L. R. 14 Eq. 195; 27 L. T. 364; 20 W. R. 880.

In a suit of W. v. C., a writ of sequestration issued against C. was irregularly discharged without the knowledge of W., and at the instance of M., acting on behalf of C. W. afterwards filed a bill to enforce a later writ against property to which C. had become entitled subsequently to the discharge of the writ, and which was claimed by M. under a mortgage by C. After filing the bill, W., for the first time, became aware of the existence of the order discharging the writ, and procured such order to be itself discharged, and amended his bill, relying on the first writ:—Held, that he had sufficient title at the time of filing the bill to enable him to maintain the suit. Ib.

A conveyance established against a sequestration, and the sequestrators who had obtained possession ordered to account to the alienee for rents and profits. Another conveyance rescinded, but the alienee declared entitled to be reimbursed, out of the subsequent rents, the balance of payments for interest, taxes, and repairs. Hamblyn or Amblyn v. Ley, 3 Swan. 301.

Attornment to Sequestrator.]—A sequestration to compel answer may be executed, but no order will be made for the tenants to attorn till the commission is returned. Rowley v. Ridley, 3 Swan. 306; Dick. 622; 19 R. R. 206.

Tenants ordered to attorn to sequestrators under sequestration for duty. Wood v. Adams, Dick. 576.

Leases.]—Under a sequestration for non-payment of money, the sequestrators may, on a motion with notice (not on a motion of course), be empowered to let real estate. Neale v. Bealing, 3 Swan. 304.

Notice is necessary of a motion for sequestrators to set and let. Neal v. ——, Ridgw. 193.

Land and house in possession of sequestrators belonging to defendant, in contempt for non-payment of money into court, ordered to be let. Dunkley v. Scribnor, 2 Madd. 443; 17 R. R. 237.

Sale.]—Notice should be given to the defendant of an application that sequestrators do sell the goods under the writ. Ridgway v. Davis, 2 Jones, 507.

Bill for an account taken pro confesso against surviving executor and devisee in trust, and leasehold estates taken under a sequestration for want of answer, the court would not order the sequestrators to sell, but directed them to apply the profits. Shaw v. Wright, 3 Ves. 22.

The court will sell perishable commodities, rents paid in kind, or the natural produce of a farm under a sequestration. Ib. 23.

Court will not order perishable goods, taken under a sequestration for want of an answer, to be sold before decree. Wilcocks v. Wilcocks, 2 Ambl. 421.

Estate ordered to be sold for debts; money raised under sequestration, paid into court, though contempt cleared. —— v. Bennett, 1 Ves. J. 89.

Sequestrator ordered to sell the goods where the party is in contempt for non-payment of money. Caril v. Smith, 3 Bro. C. C. 362.

An order to sell goods under a sequestration for not obeying the order of the court was made on motion ex parte, the party having gone out of the jurisdiction. Rush, In re, L. R. 10 Eq. 442; 22 L. T. 116; 18 W. R. 417.

Motion to sell furniture under sequestration for not performing decree, must be on notice. Mitchell v. Draper, 9 Ves. 208.

A sequestration having issued against a defendant who was entitled to a reversionary interest in stock standing in the name of the accountant-general in another cause, the court gave the sequestrators liberty to sell that interest. Cowper v. Taylor, 16 Sim. 314.

Fees.]—The court will not order a sequestrator his fees who has made no return of goods sequestered, and many years before application delivered them over without making a demand; but if the plaintiff seeks an account of goods sequestered, the sequestrator may set off his fees at any time, if he has from time to time made returns of what he has seized under the sequestration. Hawkins v. Crook, 3 Atk. 594.

Where costs are payable to the sequestrators, the application to the court must be in their names, not that of the solicitor, though the money be actually due to the solicitor. Crone v. O'Dell, 2 Moll. 355.

Costs.]—When a deposit on an appeal had been ordered to be returned to the appellant, and before it was paid to him sequestration was issued against him for non-payment of costs previously due, the deposit was ordered to be paid to the sequestrators instead of the appellant. Conn v. Garland, L. R. 9 Ch. 101; 22 W. R. 175.

Costs of a sequestration as between solicitor and client will not be taxed. Hunt, Ex parte, Shapland, In re, 23 W. R. 40.

Discharge.]—Sequestration for non-production of deeds, discharged on payment of costs, the party having been examined, and denied knowledge of them. Pelham (Lord) v. Newcastle (Duke), 3 Swan. 293.

A sequestration must be returned before a motion can be made to discharge it. Anon., Bunb. 31.

Appointment of a receiver in the place of the sequestrators, discharges the sequestration, Shaw v. Wright, 3 Ves. 23.

A. was ordered to pay a sum of money into court, and the order was duly registered. He was committed for not obeying the order, and a writ of sequestration issued against his estate, A. afterwards obtained his discharge under the Insolvent Debtors Act. Upon a petition presented by A.'s assignees to discharge the sequestration:—Held, that A.'s discharge under the Insolvent Debtors Act did not discharge the sequestration, which was not an order of contempt, but the consequence of such an order, and was a proceeding in rem after the process of contempt in personam had been exhausted. Tatham v. Parker, 1 Sm. & G. 506; 1 Eq. R. 257; 22 L. J., Ch. 903; 17 Jur. 929; 1 W. R. 491.

An order was made in a suit in the court of Kindersley, Vice-Chancellor, declaring K., a party to the suit, entitled to money. An order was made in a suit at the Rolls, directing a party to that suit to pay money. Sequestrators were appointed in the suit at the Rolls against K.'s estate. The plaintiffs in the suit at the Rolls were also the defendants in the suit before the Vice-Chancellor; they and the sequestrators presented a petition in the suit before the Vice-Chancellor, praying payment to them of K.'s money in that suit, or the transfer of it to the credit of the other cause:—Held, that the petition must be amended, by being entitled in both suits, and must then be presented to the lords justices, but that K. must, in the meantime, be enjoined from receiving the money which had been ordered to be paid to her. Knight v. Knight, 25 L. J., Ch. 848; 4 W. R. 771.

Where an injunction has been issued, and an order of sequestration made to enforce it, the Court of Appeal will not suspend the order, but will leave the parties to make any application for the purpose to the court below. Spokes v. Banbury Local Board, 11 Jur. (N.S.) 1010; 13 L. T. 453; 14 W. R. 169. Affirming, 35 L. J., Ch. 105.

A solicitor who had been conducting a suit, but who was not then acting for the plaintiff, accepted a sum of money on his behalf, and allowed an order of sequestration previously granted against the defendant to be discharged. On the application of the plaintiff, the order of discharge thus obtained was set aside. Ward v. Cornwall, 19 W. R. 1075.

5. Sequestration of Ecclesiastical Benefice.

See Ecclesiastical Law.

6. Other Matters.

Sequestration of Benefice — Suspension of Clergyman subsequent to Issue of Writ.]—A sequestration issued on a judgment against a beneficed cleryman, it was published, and the sequestrator entered into receipt of the profits. Subsequently the clergyman was suspended from the exercise of his office, and from receiving the fruits of his benefice for eighteen months. The bishop issued a sequestration on this sentence to a different sequestrator, which was published, the judgment debt for which the first sequestration had issued being unsatisfied. On a rule calling upon the bishop to shew cause why he should not pay the party at whose suit the first sequestration issued the profits of the benefice received:—Held, that the suspension for the time of its endurance operated in respect of perception of the profits, as a motion would have done, not only against the clerk, but against his creditors, and the rule was discharged as to the profits received after the second sequestration was published. Fisher v. Cresswell or Bunter, 14 Q. B. 825; 19 L. J., Q. B. 357; 14 Jur. 692. And see Ecclesiastical Law.

Second Writ.]—No new sequestration to be granted till first returned. Yarroth v. Seys, Bunb. 62.

Waiver of Irregularity.]—The irregularity of a sequestration is waived, if the party against whom it is issued gives the sequestrators directions how to deal with his property. Const v. Barr, 2 Russ. 161.

Costs.]—When a deposit on an appeal had been ordered to be returned to the appellant, and before it was paid to him sequestration was issued against him for non-payment of costs previously due, the deposit was ordered to be paid to the sequestrators instead of the appellant. Conn v. Garland, L. R. 9 Ch. 101; 22 W. R. 175.

Costs of a sequestration as between solicitor and client will not be taxed. Shapland, In re, Hunt, Ex parte, 23 W. R. 40.

Restraining in Winding-up.]—The arrest of a ship in a cause of wages, after the company to which the ship belonged was ordered to be wound up, is a sequestration within the meaning of the Companies Act, 1862. s. 163, and consequently void. Australia Direct Steam Navigation Co., In re, Baker, Ex parte, 44 L. J., Ch. 676; L. R. 20 Eq. 325.

Selling Goods under Sequestration.]—An order to sell goods under a sequestration for not obeying the order of the court was made on motion ex parte, the party having gone out of the jurisdiction. Rush, In re, 22 L. T. 116; 18 W. R. 417.

Enforcing.]—A writ of sequestration having been issued to enforce an order for the payment of costs, the sequestrator demanded possession of the property, which was in the hands of parties holding under the person whose estate had been sequestrated, and was refused possession. The court declined to enforce the sequestration by an attachment against those parties, but granted a writ of assistance to the sheriff for that purpose. Bayley v. Bayley, 4 Sw. & Tr. 222; 29 L. J., P. 72.

For Payment of Costs—Application.]—Where an application is made in an action which is transferred, for hearing only, to a judge who does not sit in chambers, it is properly made to such judge in court; otherwise in chambers. Snow v. Bolton, 50 L. J., Ch. 743; 17 Ch. D. 433; 44 L. T. 571; 29 W. R. 553.

Payment ordered to Sequestrators appointed by another Division.]—An order was made on summons in an administration action directing payment to sequestrators, appointed by the Probate and Divorce Division, of income of a beneficiary under the trust being administered. Slade, In re, Slade v. Hulme, 50 L. J., Ch. 729; 18 Ch. D. 653; 45 L. T. 276; 30 W. R. 28.

Sequestration in Colonial Court—Jurisdiction of Court of Bankruptcy.]—Before issuing a sequestration against real estate of a bankrupt situate in a colony, for the purpose of compelling his appearance in an action in the colonial court to realise a mortgage given by him of other real estate in the colony, the leave of the Court of Bankruptcy ought to be obtained. Rogers, Ex parte, Bousted, In re, 16 Ch. D. 665; 44 L. T. 357—C. A.

—— Issued without Leave—Undertaking.]—But where such a sequestration had been issued without leave, and an appearance had been entered in the colonial action:—Held, that it was sufficient that the plaintiffs in the action should undertake not to use the sequestration for any other purpose. Ib.

Costs, Taxation of.]—Costs of sequestration, on discharge, taxed as between party and party, and not as between solicitor and client. Shapland, In re, Hunt, Ex parte, 23 W. R. 40.

I. CHARGING STOCKS, FUNDS, AND SHARES.

1. Jurisdiction to Charge.

Charging Order—Worthless Shares—Discretion.]—A judge at chambers has a discretion as to whether he will make absolute an order nisi charging shares; and therefore when such an order is refused on the ground that the shares in question are worthless, the court will not review his decision. Wicks v. Shanks, 4 R. 117; 67 L. T. 609—C. A.

Writ of Execution not Issued.]—A charging order cannot be made unless there be an existing writ of execution issued and leviable. When therefore a writ of fi. fa. had been issued, the debt partly levied, and the writ returned, the court declined to grant an order, charging the defendant's interest in money, in court, until the plaintiff issued a new writ of fi. fa. Donohoe v. Mullarkey, 18 L. R., Ir. 425.

Writ to Enforce—Service out of Jurisdiction.]—This was a motion for leave to issue for service out of the jurisdiction a writ in an action seeking to enforce a charging order obtained by the plaintiff, a judgment creditor, upon certain shares belonging to the defendant, the judgment debtor. The Judgment Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 110), s. 14, which by virtue of Ord. XLVI. r. 1, regulates the effect of a charging order, provides that "such order shall entitle the judgment creditor to all such remedies as he would have been entitled to if such charge had been made in his favour by the judgment debtor." Ord. XL. r. 1, provides that service out of the jurisdiction of a writ of summons, or notice of a writ of summons, may be allowed by the court or a judge whenever (e) "the action is founded on any breach, or alleged breach, within the jurisdiction, of any contract wherever made, which, according to the terms thereof, ought to be performed within the jurisdiction":—Held, that, assuming that the case could be treated as one of contract at all, it would only be a contract that the shares should be charged, and of such a contract there had not been any breach within the jurisdiction. Moritz v. Stephan, 58 L. T. 850; 36 W. R. 779.

To what Judge application to be Made.]—An application for a charging order under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, and 3 & 4 Vict. c. 82, upon a fund in court need not be made to the judge in whose court the suit or matter is, in which the fund is standing. Nor is it material that the order is entitled as in a revived cause, although made before the order of revivor on the defendant. Hastings (Marquis) v. Beavan, 4 De G. F. & J. 316; 31 L. J., Ch. 546; 5 L. T. 734; 10 W. R. 206.

Charging Order on Property preserved in favour of Solicitor—To what Judge Application made if Action Tried in District Registry.]—Upon a petition by a solicitor for a charging order under s. 28 of the Solicitors Act, 1860, on property preserved in an action marked "Chancery Division, Liverpool District Registry, Hall, V.-C.," which had been tried by a judge and jury at Liverpool:—Held, that the judge who had dealt with the substantial part of the case was the only judge who could deal with the application. Owen v. Henshaw, 47 L. J., Ch. 267; 7 Ch. D. 385; 26 W. R. 188. And see Solicitor.

2. What are Companies within Judgment Act, 1838, 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110.

Banking.]—A banking co-partnership which made returns to the stamp-office pursuant to 7 Geo. 4, c. 46, is a public company not incorporated within the meaning of the above statute. Macintyre v. Connell, 1 Sim. (N.S.) 225; 20 L. J., Ch. 284; 15 Jur. 529. See Graham v. Connell, 1 L. M. & P. 438; 19 L. J., Ex. 361.

Mining.]—It is doubtful whether a mining company, conducted on the cost-book principle, is a public company within the statute, and whether the interest of a registered proprietor in certain shares in a company can be charged by a judge's order made under that section, if the shares have been sold previously to such order, but no notice of the sale has been given to the purser of the mine, and the shares are still remaining in the name of the judgment debtor. In such a case, therefore, the court confirmed a judge's order for charging the debtor's interest in such shares, as the court would not decide such matter on a summary application, from which there was no appeal. Nicholls v. Rosewarne, 6 C. B. (N.S.) 480; 28 L. J., C. P. 273; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1266; 7 W. R. 612.

3. ORDER CHARGING STOCKS, &c.

When Granted.]—A decree declaring a plaintiff entitled to one-fifth of the proceeds of sale of chattels, and directing an account to be taken of what was due, and payment of such amount together with the costs of the action to him, does not entitle him to a charging order under the Judgments Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 18), or to a stop order against funds in court in another suit belonging to the same defendant. Widgery v. Tepper, 6 Ch. D. 364; 37 L. T. 297; 25 W. R. 872—C. A.

Upon judgment in an action declaring that the defendant is liable to pay to the plaintiff a certain sum, and decreeing payment to be made on or before that day three months, the plaintiff is at once entitled, under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 14, to obtain a charging order upon stock and shares standing in the name of the defendant. Bagnall v. Carlton, 47 L. J., Ch. 51; 6 Ch. D. 130; 36 L. T. 730; 26 W. R. 71.

A charging order will not be made against government stock, standing in the name of a judgment debtor, upon a judgment de bonis testatoris obtained against the debtor as administratrix. Hewat v. Davenport, 21 W. R. 78.

A registered owner of shares in a company deposited the certificates with E. as a security for money advanced. He afterwards borrowed a further sum from an insurance office, and executed to C., one of his sureties on that occasion, with the consent of E., who was the other surety, a transfer of the shares, accompanied by a declaration of the terms of the transfer, and delivered both instruments to C. The money not having been paid to the insurance office, they claimed it from E. and C., when C. requested the insurance office to transfer the shares into his name, which they refused to do, on the ground that they had been previously served with an order nisi to charge the shares:—Held, that the shares were properly charged as shares standing in the owner's name "in his own right." Fuller v. Earle, 7 Ex. 796; 21 L. J., Ex 314.

A charging order will be made absolute, notwithstanding proceedings against the trustees of the fund by creditors, and there is no other fund for payment of costs. Smith v. Youde, 2 F. & F. 376.

Part of Stock.]—Possibility of charging, under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, a part only of a sum of stock standing in the name of a debtor. Stanley v. Bond, 8 Beav. 50; 14 L. J., Ch. 51.

Pension.]—The East India Company granted to a person a pension, in consideration of his distressed state and the services of his father:—Held, that this could not be charged with a judgment debt by an order. Morris v. Manesty, 7 Q. B. 674; 14 L. J., Q. B. 285; 9 Jur. 1034.

The order directed that the pension should stand charged, unless cause was shewn at chambers in six calendar months. The court rescinded the order on motion by the East India Company and by an assignee of the pension within the six months. Ib.

Annuity.]—A judge having made an order, charging an annuity payable out of the Suitors' Fund, by order of the Lord Chancellor, in pursuance of 46 Geo. 3, c. 128, the court considering it doubtful whether or not the order was valid, refused to set it aside, as, by so doing, they would deprive the party of the right of appeal Witham v. Lynch, 1 Ex. 391; 17 L. J., Ex. 13.

A judgment debtor was entitled as sole executor and legatee under the will of D., to the arrears of a government annuity granted for the life of D. He also was entitled, as such executor and legatee, to a government annuity in the name of D., but granted for his own life:—Held, that under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 14, neither the arrears nor the annuity were chargeable. Taylor v. Turnbull, 4 H. & N. 495.

When Interest is Contingent or Uncertain.]—The contingent reversionary life interest of a judgment debtor in the surplus (if any) of stock standing in the name of trustees, and assigned by him to another set of trustees, on trust to sell it and pay his debts, to a named amount, with a resulting trust, as to the surplus after such payment (subject to the present life interest of another person therein) in favour of the debtor, is chargeable under the enactments, notwithstanding the doubtful nature of the interest and the uncertainty as to its extent. Baker v. Tynte, 2 El. & El. 897; 29 L. J., Q. B. 233; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1192.

A debtor, being possessed of shares in a company, transferred them to B. as a security for a debt. Subsequently he assigned them (subject to B.'s debt) to trustees to repay a loan which had been made to him by his brother, and to apply the surplus for the benefit, at the trustees' discretion, of his wife, his children, or himself. There were other trusts for the benefit of his wife and children, and an ultimate trust, on his wife's decease, and in case no child attained the age of twenty-one, or being a daughter married before that age, to the debtor and his assigns:—Held, that he had an interest in the shares capable of being charged under the above statutes. Cragg v. Taylor, 36 L. J., Ex. 63; L. R. 2 Ex. 131; 15 L. T. 584.

Stock Vested in Trustees—Interest Determinable on Alienation—Chargeable Interest.]—An order was made under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 14, and 3 & 4 Vict. c. 82, charging a judgment debtor's interest in the dividends on certain bank stock. It appeared that by the terms of a will certain property, including this stock, was bequeathed to trustees on trust as to one moiety thereof for the testatrix's niece, and as to the other moiety in trust to pay the income thereof to her nephew, the judgment debtor, for life, or until he should attempt to alien or charge the same. And upon his interest determining, there were limitations over in favour of his wife for life, and after her death in favour of his children, with an ultimate remainder in the event of the failure of the preceding trusts to the judgment debtor absolutely. At the time when the charging order was made, there was a dividend on the stock accrued due, but which the trustees had not yet received from the bank:—Held, that the fact that the stock stood in the name of the trustees in trust for another, besides the judgment debtor, did not prevent it being stock "standing in the name of any person in trust for him," within the words of 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 14. South-Western Loan Co. v. Robertson, 51 L. J., Q. B. 79; 8 Q. B. D. 17; 46 L. T. 427; 30 W. R. 102.

Held, also, that the accrued dividend and the ultimate remainder to the judgment debtor, after failure of the preceding trusts, constituted a sufficient chargeable interest, whatever might have been the case with regard to the interest determinable on alienation, if that had stood alone; and that the order was therefore rightly made, the trustees being responsible upon its being made for the due application of the fund according to the legal effect of the order, whatever it might be. Ib.

Where Debtor has no Beneficial Interest.]—In an action under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 15, against a company for permitting the transfer of shares after notice of a charging order nisi, and before the making of it absolute, it is a good answer to shew that the judgment debtor in whose name the shares stood had no beneficial interest in them. Gill v. Continental Union Gas Co., 41 L. J., Ex. 176; L. R. 7 Ex. 332; 27 L. T. 428; 21 W. R. 111.

The Companies Act of 1862, s. 30, enacts that no notice of any trust shall be entered on the register of a company incorporated under the act; and therefore the court will not set aside an order made, charging shares in a limited company standing in the name of the judgment debtor, although he is owner of the shares as trustee only, and has no beneficial interest whatever therein. Cragg v. Taylor, 4 H. & C. 158; 35 L. J., Ex. 92; L. R. 1 Ex. 148; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 320; 13 L. T. 756; 14 W. R. 399.

Where bank stock, vested in trustees, is conveyed by will in terms which leave it doubtful whether any beneficial interest is conveyed to a party against whom final judgment has been obtained, a judge may make an order charging the stock conditionally. Fowler v. Churchill, 2 D. (N.S.) 562; 11 M. & W. 57; 12 L. J., Ex. 230; 7 Jur. 156.

Stock of a company standing in the name of a trustee is not affected by a charging order under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 14, obtained by a judgment creditor of the trustee in respect of the trustee's own debt. Blakely Ordnance Co., In re, Coates' Case, 46 L. J., Ch. 367; 35 L. T. 617; 25 W. R. 111.

Limit on Beneficial Interest.]—A creditor who has obtained a charging order on shares is only entitled to the beneficial interest in the shares which the judgment debtor actually has at the time of the order. Gray v. Stone, 3 R. 692; 69 L. T. 282.

Residuary Estate—Produce of—Interest in.]—A testatrix gave her whole estate and effects, which included stock and shares, to trustees, on trust to pay debts and legacies, and as to the residue of her estate and effects, upon trust for the defendant and two other persons; and she directed her trustees to pay the legacies so soon after her decease as her means could be judiciously converted into cash, and in any case not later than twelve months after her decease. A charging order having been made upon the stock and shares, to the extent of the defendant's interest therein, in favour of a judgment creditor:—Held, that he having no interest in the stock and shares, but only an interest in their produce after performance of the prior trusts, they could not be charged with his judgment debt under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 14, or under 3 & 4 Vict. c. 82, s. 1. Dixon v. Wrench, 38 L. J., Ex. 113; L. R. 4 Ex. 154; 20 L. T. 492; 17 W. R. 591.

Debtor's Shares "Standing in his Name, in his own Right" — Director's Qualification Shares.]—By 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 14, the shares of a debtor, against whom judgment has been recovered, "standing in his name, in his own right," may be charged with payment of the judgment debt. The articles of association of a company provided that the qualification of a director should be the "holding in his own right" 300 shares; and certain shareholders of the company, in order to qualify a person as managing director, and with the knowledge and assent of the directors, transferred the requisite number of shares into his name on the register of the company, the transferors themselves retaining the beneficial ownership of the shares. Judgment having been recovered against the transferee by the plaintiff:—Held, that the shares were not held by the judgment debtor "in his own right," so as to entitle the plaintiff to a charging order upon them under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 14. Pulbrook v. Richmond Consolidated Mining Co. (9 Ch. D. 610) discussed. Cooper v. Griffin, 61 L. J., Q. B. 563; [1892] 1 Q. B. 740; 66 L. T. 660; 40 W. R. 420—C. A.

Shares standing in the name of a judgment debtor in the books of a company cannot be made the subject of a charging order if he is not the beneficial owner of them, but is merely registered as owner for the purpose of qualifying as a director of the company. Pulbrook v. Richmond Consolidated Mining Co. (9 Ch. D. 610) and Cooper v. Griffin ([1892] 1 Q. B. 740) followed. Howard v. Sadler, [1893] 1 Q. B. 1; 5 R. 45; 68 L. T. 120; 41 W. R. 126.

C. transferred 1,000*l.* stock of a company into the name of his son without any consideration, and merely to qualify him as a director of that company; to be transferred to C. on request; which was ultimately done. C. received the dividends on the stock. The son was a contributory to the B. company, to whom he owed 3,000*l.* The official liquidator of that company gave notice to the company of his intention to move for an injunction to restrain the son as owner of the stock, and that company from dealing with it. Thereupon the official liquidator of the B. company was informed of the true facts as to the ownership of the stock. The official liquidator of the B. company immediately afterwards obtained a charging order against the 1,000*l.* stock in the company:—Held, that that order must be discharged, not only on the ground of the notice, but also because the stock was not standing in the name of the son of C. "in his own right." Blakely Ordnance Co., In re, Coates's Case, 46 L. J., Ch. 367; 35 L. T. 617; 25 W. R. 111.

Married Woman—Property Settled to Separate Use without Power of Anticipation.]—A wife having property settled to her separate use, with restraint upon anticipation, concurred in a fraudulent mortgage of such property, concealing the restraint upon anticipation. The mortgagee obtained a judgment against her for the amount lent, and a charging order to charge her next accruing dividend:—Held, that such charging order must be discharged; for in no case and by no device could the restraint upon anticipation be evaded. Stanley v. Stanley, 47 L. J., Ch. 256; 7 Ch. D. 589; 37 L. T. 777; 26 W. R. 310.

The mortgagee, having discovered the fraud, obtained from the married woman a warrant of attorney; entered up judgment thereon, and afterwards obtained a charging order on a dividend due to her the very day it accrued due:—

Held, that this was a mere device to make her future income a security for the mortgage debt, and an attempt to do indirectly what could not be done directly; and that, therefore, the charging order must be discharged. Ib.

When a married woman was entitled, during the joint lives of herself and her husband, to the interest of certain stock, to her sole and separate use, without power of anticipation, and there were certain limitations over as to the principal, in favour of herself and her husband, the court, upon petition by a judgment creditor, made an order, under 3 & 4 Vict. c. 105, charging the judgment upon the stock, without prejudice to the wife's right of receiving the interest during her coverture. Carter v. Mahon, Fl. & K. 342; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 305.

Declaration of Charge—Debtor's Reversionary Interest in Personalty—Sale—Jurisdiction.]—The court has no jurisdiction to make a declaration of charge upon a judgment debtor's reversionary interest in personalty in favour of a judgment creditor who has obtained an order appointing himself receiver of such property. Flegg v. Prentis, 61 L. J., Ch. 705; [1892] 2 Ch. 428; 67 L. T. 107.

Estate in Remainder.]—A judgment creditor is not entitled to a charge on his debtor's estate in remainder, inasmuch as it cannot be actually or constructively delivered in execution. Hood-Barrs v. Cutheart, 64 L. J., Ch. 461; [1895] 2 Ch. 411; 13 R. 489; 72 L. T. 583; 43 W. R. 586.

For Costs.]—When a plaintiff's bill has been dismissed with costs, an order nisi charging railway shares belonging to the plaintiff with the amount of the defendant's costs, when taxed, will be made before taxation upon the application of the defendant. Burns v. Irving, 46 L. J., Ch. 423; 3 Ch. D. 291; 34 L. T. 752; 25 W. R. 66.

Courts of equity will carry into execution their orders and decrees for costs by charging the government stock of the debtor, under the provisions of the statute 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110; and for that purpose it is not necessary to give further proof of application for payment than is contained in the notice of the intended application to make the order for the charge absolute. Blake v. White, 3 Y. & Coll. 434; 3 Jur. 749.

Parties interested in a fund standing in the name of the accountant-general in one suit were ordered to pay the defendants in another suit their costs. These being taxed, and a minute having been left with the senior master of the Common Pleas, the court on petition made a charging order on the fund for such costs, and granted an interim stop order. Wells v. Gibbs, 22 Beav. 204.

Under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 18, an order for payment of costs operates only as against purchasers, mortgagees, and creditors obtained by a subsequent purchaser without notice. Ib.

Jurisdiction — Order Charging Cash — Stop Order.]—A charging order may be made by a judge of the Queen's Bench Division upon cash standing to the credit of the debtor in the Chancery Division in the name of the paymaster-general. Such an order may be made ex parte, and in order to give effect to it it is not necessary to obtain a stop order or to obtain the appointment of a receiver; but notice given to the paymaster-general will be sufficient to secure priority. Brereton v. Edwards, 21 Q. B. D. 488; 60 L. T. 5; 37 W. R. 47—C. A. Affirming on other grounds 52 J. P. 647.

Fund in Court.]—When a judgment has been recovered against a person interested in a fund in the Chancery Division, a stop order will be granted to the judgment creditor on such fund, without a preliminary charging order having been obtained in the division of the High Court in which the judgment was recovered. Hopewell v. Barnes, 1 Ch. D. 630; 33 L. T. 777; 24 W. R. 629.

A plaintiff has such an interest in money lodged in the name of the master of the court to the credit of the cause that the money so lodged may be the subject of a charging order. Adams v. Gillem, Ir. R. 9 C. L. 148.

A decree declaring a plaintiff entitled to one-fifth of the proceeds of sale of chattels, and directing an account to be taken of what was due, and payment of such amount together with the costs of the action to him, does not entitle him to a charging order under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 18, or to a stop order against funds in court in another suit belonging to the same defendant. Widgery v. Tepper, 6 Ch. D. 364; 37 L. T. 297; 25 W. R. 872—C. A.

The court refused, on petition, to order a fund in court charged, under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 14, with a judgment by a party to a suit, and to which the judgment debtor was entitled, to be paid over without his consent. Whitfield v. Prickett, 13 Sim. 259; 12 L. J., Ch. 84.

The effect of a charging order made by a judge in favour of a judgment creditor under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, does not depend upon the capacity of the judgment debtor to give a valid charge, but upon the validity of the judgment; and the 14th section of that act, and the proviso in the 1st section of 3 & 4 Vict. c. 82, must be read as meaning that the judgment creditor is to have the same remedies, and the order of the judge the same effect, as if the judgment debtor had made a valid and effective charge in favour of the judgment creditor. Leavesley, In re, 60 L. J., Ch. 385; [1891] 2 Ch. 1; 64 L. T. 269; 39 W. R. 276—C. A.

A. was entitled to a portion of a fund standing in the name of the accountant-general. B., a judgment creditor of A., had obtained an assignment from him of his interest in this fund. Subsequently to this assignment C., also a creditor of A., obtained a judge's charging order, which was made absolute. B. obtained a stop order subsequently to C.'s charging order being made absolute, and subsequently to B.'s stop order C. obtained a stop order also:—Held, upon petition, that B. was entitled to an order for payment to him of the fund, the effect of the charging order being merely to restrain the transfer during the interval between its being obtained nisi and made absolute, and not giving priority over the assignment when made absolute, the prior stop order having been obtained by such assignee. Wells v. Gibbs, 2 W. R. 365; 2 Eq. R. 441.

Pending a suit for the administration of a testator's estate, in which a decree had been made directing preliminary inquiries, a cestui que trust of a share of the proceeds of the residuary reality and personalty assigned his share by way of security, and the assignee immediately gave notice to the trustees of the will. Afterwards the real estates were sold, and the proceeds paid into court to the credit of the cause generally. A creditor who had entered up a judgment against the cestui que trust subsequently to the assignment obtained an order charging the fund in court, with respect to which the assignee had not obtained a stop order or taken any other proceeding :—Held, that the judgment creditor did not thereby acquire a priority over him. Beaveliff v. Dorrington, 4 De G. & Sm. 122 ; 19 L. J., Ch. 331 ; 14 Jur. 1101.

—— Lunatic Debtor.]—On an application at chambers, by the judgment creditor of a debtor found lunatic by inquisition, for a charging order on funds standing in the books of the paymaster-general of the Chancery Division to the credit of the debtor, who was described in such books as "a person of unsound mind," the judge ordered that "so much of the defendant's interest in the fund so standing as aforesaid should stand charged with the payment of the . . . amount due on the judgment as the Lords Justices sitting in Lunacy might deem applicable to payment of the judgment debt" :—Held, that the acts gave the judge no power to make an order providing that the amount to be charged should be determined by the Lords Justices, and that the creditor was entitled to an unconditional order on a specified amount of the fund. Horne v. Pountain, 58 L. J., Q. B. 413 ; 23 Q. B. D. 264 ; 61 L. T. 510 ; 38 W. R. 240 ; 54 J. P. 37.

—— Priority over Mortgage.]—A judgment creditor cannot, by obtaining a charging order on a fund in court, acquire priority over a previous mortgagee of the fund who has obtained no order. Bell. In re, Carter v. Stadden, 54 L. T. 370 ; 34 W. R. 363.

—— Not actually in Court.]—A judgment creditor may obtain a stop order upon a fund in court to the credit of an action in the Chancery Division, without any charging order obtained in the division where the judgment was recovered. Stop order granted upon a fund of a specified amount not actually in court, but to be paid in to the credit of an action under an order of the court. Shaw v. Hudson, 48 L. J., Ch. 689.

Entitling Application.]—An application for a charging order needs not to be entitled in the particular matter to the credit of which the fund is standing, the order being valid if entitled in the matter of the acts which confer the jurisdiction. Hastings (Marquis) v. Bearan, 4 De G. F. & J. 316 ; 31 L. J., Ch. 546 ; 5 L. T. 734 ; 10 W. R. 206.

Such an order properly entitled will not be rendered void by being also entitled in a matter in which it was not necessary to entitle it at all. Ib.

Petition to make Charges Effectual.] — A judgment creditor had obtained a judge's order under the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 14, charging the annuity payable to his debtor out of a fund in a cause in this court. The judgment creditor is entitled to a decree upon a claim against the debtor, to charge the annuity with the judgment debt ; but in order to make these charges effectual, a petition (which is of course) to be presented in the cause is necessary ; and the claim was ordered to stand over, and ultimately one order was made on the claim and petition. Reece v. Taylor, 5 De G. & Sm. 480 ; 21 L. J., Ch. 463.

Priorities Generally.]—An order under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, and 3 & 4 Vict. c. 82, charging the stock standing in the name of the accountant-general, affects only the interest of the debtor, and does not interfere with the rights of prior incumbrancers. Hulkes v. Day, 10 Sim. 41 ; 10 L. J., Ch. 21 ; 4 Jur. 1125.

If a person beneficially entitled to stock standing in the names of trustees has a judgment recovered against him, and the judgment creditor obtains a charging order under the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 14, a mortgagee of the fund claiming under a mortgage (whereof no notice was given to the trustee) made subsequently to the judgment, but before the charging order, has priority over the judgment creditor. Scott v. Hastings (Lord), 4 Kay & J. 633 ; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 450 ; 6 W. R. 862.

A fortiori, such mortgagee has priority when the order is only an order nisi under the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 14. Ib.

In such a case, the rule in Dearle v. Hall (3 Russ. 1) does not apply in favour of the judgment creditor. Ib.

The 14th section of the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, gives to a charging order absolute upon stock held in trust for the judgment debtor, the same effect as a charge under his hand ; and the object of the 15th section is only to prevent any new charge being effected after the charging order nisi has been obtained, and before it is made absolute. When the charging order is made absolute, the 15th section has performed its functions. But if the judgment debtor has assigned the stock before the date of the order nisi the assign might obtain a stop order before the order nisi was made absolute, notwithstanding the 15th section ; for the real charge under a charging order is only acquired when it is made absolute. Warburton v. Hill, 1 Kay, 470 ; 23 L. J., Ch. 633 ; 2 Eq. R. 365 ; 2 W. R. 365.

If a person, having notice of a previous assignment of a trust fund, take an assignment to himself of the same fund, he cannot obtain priority over the previous assign, whether the trustee had notice or not ; and therefore, if a judgment creditor, at the time of making his charging order absolute, have similar notice, he is likewise unable to obtain priority. Ib.

Where the fund is standing in the name of the accountant-general of the Court of Chancery, the practice of the office is to enter a memorandum of every charging order left at the office ; but such notice is not treated as any restraint nor as equivalent to a stop order. No entry is made of the notice of any other assignment. The accountant-general is not a trustee of the funds committed to him, but merely the agent of the court. The trustees who have paid the fund into court, are the trustees of it until the court has in some way dealt with it, and then the court becomes the trustee. Therefore, notice to the accountant-general of an assignment of funds in his hands is of no avail against a stop order afterwards obtained in the division of the High Court in which the judgment was recovered. Hopewell v. Barnes, 33 L. T. 777 ; 24 W. R. 629.

The order made by a court of law under ss. 132, 133, 134 and 135 of the Common Law Procedure Amendment Act (Ir.) 1853, to attach stock standing to the credit of a debtor in a cause in the Court of Chancery, does not per se operate as a seizure or a charge on the stock. Semble, the lodging of such an order with the acccountant-general without obtaining an order of the Court of Chancery does not charge the stock. Semble also, that a conditional order does not attach the fund under the Common Law Procedure Act. A conditional order to charge funds in chancery was obtained under the Common Law Procedure Act on the 30th of June, made absolute on the 8th of August, and lodged with the accountant-general on the 14th of November. A conditional order to charge the same fund was obtained in chancery by another creditor, under 3 & 4 Vict. c. 105, on the 1st of August, lodged with the accountant-general on the 7th of August, and made absolute on the 13th of November :—Held, that the creditor who had obtained the order in chancery was entitled to the fund in priority to the other creditor. French v. Balfe, 6 Ir. Ch. R. 63.

4. Reviewing or Rescinding Order.

Jurisdiction.]—The court has power to review, by way of appeal, an order absolute to charge stock made by a judge. Fowler v. Churchill, 2 D. (N.S.) 562 ; 11 M. & W. 57 ; 12 L. J., Ex. 230 ; 7 Jur. 156.

The court has no jurisdiction to entertain an appeal against an order nisi for a distringas upon stock made by a judge. Baldwin v. Timbrell, 6 Jur. 488.

An application under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 15, that a charging order, made under ss. 14, 15, should be discharged, cannot be entertained after the order has been made absolute. Jeffryes v. Reynolds, 52 L. J., Q. B. 55 ; 48 L. T. 358.

A charging order having been made upon shares standing in the name of a judgment debtor, the father of the debtor applied, after the order had been made absolute, that it might be discharged, on the ground that the shares were in fact his :—Held, that there was no power to entertain the application, "such order" meaning the order nisi, and not the order absolute. Ib.

The court has no power to entertain an application under s. 15 of 1 & 2 Vict. 110, that a charging order, made under ss. 14 and 15 of that act, should be rescinded or varied, after such order has been made absolute. Jeffryes v. Reynolds (52 L. J., Q. B. 55) approved. Drew v. Lewis or Willis, 60 L. J., Q. B. 264 ; [1891] 1 Q. B. 450 ; 64 L. T. 760 ; 39 W. R. 310 ; 55 J. P. 373—C. A.

Where a charging order has been obtained upon a judgment which has since been set aside, the charging order must be set aside at the instance of the judgment debtor. Drew v. Willis, [1891]1 Q. B. 450) distinguished. Brain v. Herrick, 10 R. 171.

—— Summons to Discharge Order — Jurisdiction of Master.] — A master having once granted a charging order nisi upon shares in a public company upon an ex parte application under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, ss. 14, 15, is functus officio, and, except by consent, has no jurisdiction to discharge it. Mitchell v. De Vesey, 67 L. T. 53.

—— On what Ground.]—A party held shares in the Union Bank of London, and judgment having been obtained in an action against him, a judge made an order, charging such shares with the judgment. On application to set aside such order, it appeared that the bank consisted of a number of shareholders, and was carried on pursuant to the terms of a deed, by which it was provided that the shares should not be transferred, except by the consent of the directors, and also that if any order or decree was made against any proprietor by which his shares became charged, they were to be forfeited to the company. The company was not registered under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, but was entitled to sue and be sued by a public officer, under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 113, s. 47, and 7 Geo. 4, c. 46 :—Held, that it being doubtful whether the company was a public company or not, the order ought not to be set aside. Graham v. Connell, 1 L. M. & P. 438 ; 19 L. J., Ex. 361.

The court refused to discharge an order to charge stock standing in the names of trustees for the defendant. The stock had been transferred into the names of the trustees by a deed of settlement, made pursuant to an order of the Court of Chancery. Rogers v. Holloway, 5 Man. & G. 292 ; 6 Scott (N.R.) 274 ; 12 L. J., C. P. 182 ; 7 Jur. 932.

It is not a good objection to an order for charging stock, that it requires cause to be shewn on a day specified, although the statute directs that it shall require cause to be shewn "within a time to be mentioned in such order." Robinson v. Burbidge, 1 L. M. & P. 94 ; 9 C. B. 289 ; 19 L. J., C. P. 242.

Nor that such order purports to be made in pursuance of the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, alone, and not also of the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 82. Ib.

A judgment was entered in the master's book as in a cause of "A. v. B." The plaintiff obtained an order to charge stock of the defendant standing in the name of the accountant-general, which order was entitled "A. v. C. sued as B." A rule to rescind it having been obtained, on the ground that it did not follow the judgment in its title, the plaintiff produced the judgment paper, which was entitled in the same way as the order :—Held, that the order was properly entitled. Ib.

The words "C. sued as" appeared to have been interlined :—Held, that such interlineation must be presumed to have been made before the judgment paper was sealed. Ib.

When an order had been made charging shares in a mining company on the cost-book principle, which, at the date of the order, stood in the name of the judgment debtor, but which he had previously assigned to another person for a valuable consideration, notice of the assignment not having been given to the purser of the company until after the order had been served upon him, the court confirmed the order, there being no appeal from their decision in case they set it aside ; but without deciding whether such company is within the statute, or whether such shares are liable to be charged by a judge's order. Nicholls v. Rosewarne, 6 C. B. (N.S.) 480; 28 L. J., C. P. 273 ; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1266.

Evidence—Interest of Debtor in Stock.]—A testator constituted railway stock an auxiliary fund to secure the jointure of his widow, and without specfically bequeathing the stock he made the defendant his residuary legatee ; subsequently the Court of Chancery, upon the consent of the defendant as executor, ordered a transfer of the stock to the trustees of the testator's settlements, and that the dividends should be paid to the defendant; a charging order, at the instance of a judgment creditor, having been made upon the defendant's interest in the stock:—Held, that the order of the Court of Chancery was evidence against the defendant that the testator's debts had been paid and the estate administered, and that the defendant had such an interest in the stock as could be attached by a charging order. McDonogh v. Davies, Ir. R. 9 C. L. 300.

Suppression of Material Fact—Discharge on Ground of.]—The plaintiff entered judgment in 1872, and in 1874 the defendant executed a mortgage to secure it, with interest at 5 per cent. The mortgage was not mentioned in the plaintiff's affidavit:—Held, that there had been a suppression of a material fact, and that the charging order must be discharged. Ib.

5. Operation of Charging Order.

Generally.]—A charging order under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, ss. 14, 15, has no greater effect than an instrument of charge executed by the judgment debtor would have had. Onslow's Trust, In re, 44 L. J., Ch. 628; L. R. 20 Eq. 677.

Therefore, where D., after the passing of the Infants Relief Act, 1874, obtained judgment by default against O. for a debt which was in fact for money lent by him to O. during his infancy, and D. subsequently obtained a charging order upon a fund in court belonging to O:—Held, that, inasmuch as the debt on which the judgment and charging order were founded was void, the charging order was inoperative. Ib.

If shares are sold, a charging order obtained against the seller subsequently to the sale, but before the transfer, will not prevent the company from registering the buyer as owner. Gill v. Continental Union Gas Co., 41 L. J., Ex. 176; L. R. 7 Ex. 332; 27 L. T. 428; 21 W. R. 111.

Payment of Dividends by Bank.]—A., being possessed of 12,058*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* new 3*l.* 10*s.* per cent. stock, bequeathed to C. an interest in 5,000*l.*, parcel thereof. A judgment having been obtained against C., the judgment creditor obtained a judge's order, charging this latter sum with the judgment debt, which, upon cause shewn, was made absolute as to so much of the dividends as were payable to C. for her own use. These orders having been served upon the Bank of England, the bank refused in consequence to pay the dividends upon the stock to the executors under A.'s will, and they brought an action against the bank to recover those dividends; and the bank applied for a stay of proceedings on payment of a portion of the dividends:—Held, that there was no ground or necessity for the application, the bank being bound to pay the dividends to the legal owners, the executors, who were answerable for their proper application. Churchill v. Bank of England, 11 M. & W. 323. S. C., nom. Fowler v. Churchill, 2 D. (N.S.) 767; 12 L. J., Ex. 230; 7 Jur. 538, n. S. P., Bristed v. Wilkins, 3 Hare, 235.

That the meaning of s. 14, of 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, is to give the judgment creditor the same right under the charging order as against prior incumbrances as he would have under a valid and effectual charge made at the same moment by the debtor himself. Watts v. Porter, 3 El. & Bl. 743; 2 C. L. R. 1553; 23 L. J., Q. B. 345; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 133.

Therefore, where stock standing in the names of trustees, in trust for A., was charged by A. as security for money lent to him by B., but no notice of this charge was given to the trustees, and subsequently C., a judgment creditor of A., obtained a charging order of this stock, of which he gave express notice to the trustees, C.'s charge, created by the order, took priority of that to B., whose title had never been perfected by notice to the trustees. Ib.

Held (by Erle, J., dissentiente), that the effect of the statute is only to give the judgment creditor with a charging order the same right as he would have under a lawful charge made by the debtor; and therefore, under the circumstances, C. was not entitled to the stock as against B. Ib.

Making Absolute on Death of Judgment Debtor.]—An order charging stock under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, ss. 14, 15, cannot be made absolute where it appears that the judgment debtor was dead when the order nisi was obtained. Finney v. Hinde, 48 L. J., Q. B. 275; 4 Q. B. D. 102; 40 L. T. 193; 27 W. R. 413.

Made ex parte.]—A charging order made ex parte under 3 & 4 Vict. c. 105. s. 24, is conditional only, and the court has power to direct service of it out of the jurisdiction. Gethin, In re, Nixon, Ex parte, Ir. R. 9 Eq. 512.

Right of Assignee of Stock of Debtor, where Assignment before Order nisi.]—1 & 2 Vict. 110, s. 14, gives, to a charging order absolute upon stock held in trust for a judgment debtor, the same effect as a charge under his hand; and the object of s. 15 is only to prevent any new charge being effected after the charging order nisi has been obtained, and before it is made absolute. When the charging order is made absolute, the 15th section has performed its functions. But if the judgment debtor has assigned the stock before the date of the order nisi, the assignee may obtain a stop order before the order nisi has been made absolute, notwithstanding the 15th section; for the real charge under a charging order is only acquired when it is made absolute. Warburton v. Hill, Kay, 470; 23 L. J., Ch. 633; 2 Eq. R. 441; 2 W. R. 365.

Six Months' Limit.]—The proviso contained in 1 & 2 Vict. c 110, s. 14, that no proceeding shall be taken to have the benefit of the charge created under that section until after the expiration of six calendar months from the date of the charging order, does not prevent the creditor from obtaining a stop order to restrain the debtor from receiving dividends of stock accruing within the six months. Watts v. Jefferyes, 3 Mac. & G. 372; 20 L. J., Ch. 659; 15 Jur. 783.

The correct construction of the proviso is, that although no steps can be taken to enforce immediate payment of the debt by realising the security, yet that the judgment creditor may in the meantime, by force of the order, prevent the security given him by the statute from being defeated or diminished pro tanto, by stopping payment to the debtor of part of his security. Ib.

Semble, a judgment creditor, who has obtained an order charging the interest of his debtor in government stock, may, in a proper case, sustain a suit for the intermediate protection of the interest which he has so acquired, notwithstanding the six months prescribed by the statute 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 14, have not expired. Bristed v. Wilkins, 3 Hare, 235.

The proviso contained in the 14th section of 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, that no proceeding shall be taken to have the benefit of the charge created under that section until after the expiration of six calendar months from the date of the charging order, does not prevent the creditor from obtaining a stop order to restrain the debtor from receiving dividends of stock accruing within the six months. Watts v. Jefferyes, 3 Macn. & G. 372; 20 L. J., Ch. 659; 15 Jur. 783.

The correct construction of the proviso is, that although no steps can be taken to enforce immediate payment of the debt by realising the security, yet that the judgment creditor may in the meantime, by force of the order, prevent the security given him by the statute from being defeated or diminished pro tanto, by stopping payment to the debtor of part of his security. Ib.

Where a charging order had been obtained by a judgment creditor, upon funds reported to his debtor in the cause, the court will, after the expiration of the six months from the date of the order, direct the funds to be transferred to the creditor upon motion, without a bill being filed. Burke v. Burke, 7 Ir. Eq. R. 174.

Time.]—Upon judgment in an action declaring that the defendant is liable to pay to the plaintiff a certain sum, and decreeing payment to be made on or before that day three months, the plaintiff is at once entitled, under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 14, to obtain a charging order upon stock and shares standing in the name of the defendant. Bagnall v. Carlton, 47 L. J., Ch. 51; 6 Ch. D. 130; 36 L. T., 730; 26 W. R. 71.

Not an Execution against Goods of Debtor.]—An order nisi charging shares under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 14, is not an execution against the goods of a debtor within s. 45 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883. Hutchinson, Ex parte, or Plowden, Ex parte. Hutchinson, In re, 55 L. J., Q. B. 582; 16 Q. B. D. 515; 54 L. T. 302; 34 W. R. 475; 3 Morrell, 19.

Date from which Charging Order takes effect.]—A charging order nisi, when it is afterwards made absolute, takes effect from the date of the order nisi. Ib. S. P., Haly v. Barry, 37 L. J., Ch. 723; L. R. 3 Ch. 452; 18 L. T. 491; 16 W. R. 654.

Order—Two Parts—Execution as to One.]—An order of court providing that one party should pay to the other party a certain sum, and that one party should deliver a conveyance to the other, consists of two separate and distinct parts, and on failure to pay the sum of money execution will issue. Robinson v. Galland, 60 L. T. 697; 37 W. R. 396.

Service of Notice on Legatee—Effect of.]—Service of a notice under Ord. XLVI. r. 4, as to stock or shares comprised in a legacy by the legatee or his solicitor, is not an acceptance of the legacy so as to bring the legatee under the liabilities attaching to the stock or shares, or estop him from subsequently disclaiming the legacy. Hobbs v. Wayet, 56 L. J., Ch. 819; 36 Ch. D. 256; 57 L. T. 225: 36 W. R. 73.

Order for Sale—No Jurisdiction to make.]—The plaintiff, having recovered judgment in an action, obtained an order absolute under Ord. XLVI., charging shares of the defendant in a company with the payment of the judgment debt and interest, and then applied to the court for an order for sale of the shares:—Held, that s. 24 of the Judicature Act, 1873, did not give the court jurisdiction to order the sale. Leggott v. Western, 53 L. J., Q. B. 316; 12 Q. B. D. 287; 32 W. R. 460.

6. Other Matters.

Service of Order.]—Service of a charging order nisi upon the solicitor, and upon the brother, and at the last address of the person sought to be charged, is sufficient without an order for substituted service. Paragon and Spero Mining Co., In re, 8 Jur. (N.S.) 11; 10 W. R. 76.

Costs.]—After decree taken pro confesso in the cause against the defendant, an order was made in March, 1844, on petition in the cause, and in the matter of the act of parliament, 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, that a large sum of stock, standing in the defendant's name, should stand charged with payment of a sum of 299*l.* (being the plaintiff's costs of the suit), and interest thereon, unless the defendant (who was out of the jurisdiction of the court) should shew good cause to the contrary, on the 2nd November then next; and the Bank of England was in the meantime restrained from permitting the transfer of the stock:—Held, that the defendant must pay the plaintiff his costs of the order, charging the stock with the sum of 299*l.* and interest, and of the subsequent application to shew cause against the order being made absolute, notwithstanding the 299*l.* and interest had been paid previously to the 2nd November. Stanley v. Bond, 14 L. J., Ch. 51.

The costs of obtaining the charging order on stock, under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, where the amount with interest was paid before the order made absolute, as well as of a motion to try the defendant's liablity for costs of obtaining the order, which failed, ordered to be paid by the defendant. Stanley v. Bond, 8 Beav. 50.

Debtors (Ireland) Act.]—Sects. 23 & 24 of the Debtors (Ireland) Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 105), are to be read in connection, and therefore the charging order under the statute is first a conditional order ex parte to be made absolute, which last is the order contemplated by the 23rd section. Dunscombe, In re, 9 Ir. Eq. R. 4.

A charging order made ex parte under 3 & 4 Vict. c. 105, s. 24, is conditional only, and the court has power to direct service of it out of the jurisdiction. Gethin, In re, Nixon, Ex parte, Ir. R. 10 Eq. 512.

To obtain a charging order under the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 105, s. 23, it is not necessary that the judgment should be revived. Therefore the court granted an order, on the petition of husband and wife on a judgment obtained by the wife dum sola, without its having been revived. Irwin v. Nesbit, 13 Ir. Eq. R. 125

Defeasibility of Property by Charging Order.]—Property was settled on A. until bankruptcy, or until, by any act or default of A., or by any other ways, it should become vested in or the property of any other person. A creditor of A. obtained a judgment against him, and a charge, under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 14, on the fund:—Held, that his interest had thereby determined. Montefiore v. Behrens, 35 Beav. 95.

J. EQUITABLE EXECUTION.

1. GENERALLY.

No Previous Elegit.]—Since the coming into operation of the Judicature Act, 1873, it is not necessary for a judgment creditor, who seeks to obtain equitable execution of the judgment debtor's equitable interest in land, previously to sue out an elegit. Evans, Ex parte, Watkins, In re, 49 L. J., Bk. 7; 13 Ch. D. 252; 41 L. T. 565; 28 W. R. 127—C. A.

The appointment of a receiver of the rents of land at the instance of a judgment creditor, though conditional upon the receiver's giving security, operates as an immediate delivery of the land in execution. When the security is afterwards given the order relates back to the date when it was made. Ib.

A judgment creditor became the transferee of a legal mortgage of leaseholds belonging to the judgment debtor. He then commenced an action in the Chancery Division, claiming an account and payment of what was due to him on both mortgage and judgment; or a sale of the property and payment out of the proceeds; and the appointment of a receiver. On the same day he obtained ex parte an order extending over eight days, appointing an interim receiver of the rents, without security. On the eighth day he obtained, on notice, an order absolute for the appointment of the same person to be receiver of the rents, upon his giving security. On the same day the debtor filed a liquidation petition, and a receiver of his property was appointed by the Court of Bankruptcy. It did not appear which receiver was appointed first. The receiver in the action never gave security. The creditor had not sued out an elegit:—Held, that the appointment of the receiver in the action was such a delivery in execution by lawful authority of the mortgaged lands, within the meaning of s. 1 of the Judgments Act, 1864 (27 & 28 Vict. c. 112), as to render the judgment creditor a secured creditor, within the meaning of s. 16, sub-s. 5, of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, and that he was entitled to hold the lands as a security for his judgment debt as well as for his mortgage debt. Ib.

—— After Elegit Returned.]—A creditor who had recovered judgment in an action sued out a writ of elegit, to which writ the sheriff returned that there were no goods or lands of the debtor which he could deliver. It appearing, however, that the debtor was entitled to an equity of redemption of certain land, the creditor without commencing any fresh action for the purpose, made an application to a judge at chambers for the appointment of a receiver:—Held, that such application was rightly made in the original action, and that it was unnecessary to commence a new action for the purpose. Smith v. Cowell, 50 L. J., Q. B. 38; 6 Q. B. D. 75; 43 L. T. 528; 29 W. R. 227—C. A.

Equitable interests in land are within the Judgments Act, 1864 (27 & 28 Vict. c. 112, s. 1). Hatton v. Haywood, 43 L. J., Ch. 372; L. R. 9 Ch. 229; 30 L. T. 279; 22 W. R. 356.

Equity of redemption of a term cannot be taken in execution. Lyster v. Dolland, 1 Ves. J. 431; 3 Bro. C. C. 478.

Semble, that the Judgments Act, 1864 (27 & 28 Vict. c. 112, s. 1), does not apply to an equity of redemption, inasmuch as such an interest in land cannot be delivered in execution. Thornton Finch, 4 Giff. 515; 34 L. J., Ch. 466.

Lands have "been actually delivered in execution" within the meaning of ss. 1, 4 of the Judgments Act, 1864, when sequestrators are in receipt of rents and profits. Rush, In re, 39 L. J., Ch. 759; L. R. 10 Eq. 442.

The return of the sheriff to an elegit constitutes actual delivery in execution within the Judgments Act, 1864. Champneys v. Burland, 23 L. T. 584; 19 W. R. 148.

Order for Sale.]—The Court of Chancery has no jurisdiction under the Judgments Act, 1864 (27 & 28 Vict. c. 112, s. 4), to order a sale, except of property actually delivered in execution. Newcastle (Duke), In re, Padwick, Ex parte, 39 L. J., Ch. 68; L. R. 8 Eq. 700; 21 L. T. 343; 18 W. R. 8.

A judgment creditor having taken out a fi. fa. against his debtor, who had an equitable life interest in a leasehold house, the sheriff took possession under the writ, and sold a portion of the effects of the debtor. The creditor presented a petition under 27 & 28 Vict. c. 112, s. 4, for an order for the sale of the interest in the house:—Held, that, as the creditor had no charge on the house under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 13, and as an equitable leasehold interest could not be "actually delivered in execution," no order could be made on the petition. Ib.

A. being seised in fee of lands, subject to a charge for marriage portions, gave judgments for the amount of the charges upon the occasions of the marriages. Subsequently, on his own marriage, he executed a voluntary settlement reciting those charges and settling the lands on himself for life, remainders over in strict settlement. He afterwards executed two separate mortgages of the lands, and still later, on the marriage of his son, executed articles of agreement, reciting the voluntary settlement and the mortgages. During his life some of the incumbrances were paid out of his life estate, and after his death a judgment creditor, whose debt was later in date than the mortgaged dates and secured by judgment on his life estate, sought that so much of the mortgaged debts as had been paid out of his life estate as should be necessary to satisfy the demands of creditors whose demands affected the life estate alone, should be raised by sale of part of the inheritance in exoneration of the life estate:—Held, that he was not entitled to the relief sought, since courts of equity will not, where there has been a voluntary settlement, interfere to disturb that settlement in favour of a person whose claim is derived only through the settlor. Dolphin v. Aylward, L. R. 4 H. L. 486; 23 L. T. 636; 19 W. R. 49.

An owner in fee of an estate in fee-simple, in 1802, charged it with two judgment debts in favour of B. and M. In 1809 he made a voluntary settlement of the estate, reciting the charges. Afterwards, in 1818 and 1819, he mortgaged the estate to H. and N. by separate mortgages. In 1822 another judgment debt was recovered against him, the title to which vested in D.:—Held, that D.'s judgment debt affected only the interest that the owner had in the estate, i.e. the residue of the life estate after satisfaction of the incumbrances; the judgment creditor standing in the position of an assignee of the life interest of the owner. Ib.

Form of decree in a suit instituted by a judgment creditor who had obtained a charge on the lands of his debtor, under the Judgments Acts, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 110). Whether the debtor is entitled to an immediate sale, quære. Carlon v. Farlar, 8 Beav. 525.

In a suit by a judgment creditor against his debtor to give effect to a charge, under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, on the interest of the debtor in an estate of which he was mortgagee, which was vested in trustees for sale to satisfy incumbrances and pay the surplus to the mortgagor, a sale of the estates was directed; and the purchase-money proving insufficient to satisfy the charges thereon, the plaintiff was held entitled to be paid his debt and costs in priority to the costs of the mortgagor or mortgagee of the estate, or any other of the defendants, except the trustees for sale. Clare v. Wood, 4 Hare, 81.

"Equitable Execution"—Nature of.]—The appointment of a receiver of the interest of a judgment debtor in real estate, though sometimes inaccurately called "equitable execution," is not a mere form of execution, but it is relief, producing the same benefit as execution properly so called, but obtainable and obtainable only, by means of an order of the court in that behalf, based on the fact that execution, properly so called, cannot be had. Shephard, In re, Atkins v. Shephard, 59 L. J., Ch. 83; 43 Ch. D. 131; 62 L. T. 337; 38 W. R. 133—C. A.

Previous Issue and Registration of Writs of Execution.]—Land is not affected by a registered judgment against the owner, executed in part by a writ of fi. fa., unless it has been actually delivered in execution. Backhouse v. Siddle, 38 L. T. 487.

Where such land is out on mortgage at the time of the judgment, an order of the Chancery Division for sale or appraisal should be obtained in order to bind the land by the judgment. Ib.

A judgment debtor, after a fi. fa. had been partially executed against his goods and chattels, gave a second charge on mortgaged leasehold property to another creditor. The judgment had been duly registered, but no further steps had been taken to obtain delivery of or to bind the land. The mortgagees sold the property, and after satisfying their debt there remained a balance in their hands, to attach which balance a garnishee summons was taken out by the judgment creditor:—Held, that the holder of the charge on the mortgaged property was entitled to satisfy his claim out of this balance, in priority to the judgment creditor. Ib.

The Law of Property Amendment Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 38, s. 1), applies to lands in which the judgment debtor has an equitable interest. Wallis v. Morris, 10 Jur. (N.S.) 741; 10 L. T. 709; 12 W. R. 997.

A judgment will not affect an equity of redemption as against a purchaser, unless a writ of execution is issued before completion of the purchase. Ib.

The mere registration of a judgment upon which no writ of execution has issued, constitutes no lien upon the debtor's land. The Judgments Act, 1864 (27 & 28 Vict. c. 112), has in effect repealed s. 13 of the Judgments Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 110). Bailey's Trusts, In re, 38 L. J., Ch. 237; 20 L. T. 168; 17 W. R. 393.

Since the Judgments Act, 1864, a judgment creditor is not entitled to redeem, unless he issues execution and gets the return to the writ before the expiration of the six months allowed for redemption. Mildred v. Austin, L. R. 8 Eq. 220; 20 L. T. 939; 17 W. R. 638.

Semble, that s. 3 of the Judgments Act, 1864, does not apply to an equity of redemption, inasmuch as such an interest in land cannot be delivered in execution. Thornton v. Finch, 4 Giff. 515; 34 L. J., Ch. 466.

A registered judgment is of no effect on the priority of an incumbrancer on land, unless execution is issued thereon. Thomas v. Cross, 2 Drew & Sm. 423; 34 L. J., Ch. 580; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 384; 12 L. T. 293; 13 W. R. 647.

Non-retrospective Operation of Judgments Act, 1864.]—The Judgments Act, 1864, applies only to future judgments. Isle of Wight Ferry Co., In re, 34 L. J., Ch. 194; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 279; 12 L. T. 263.

Railway Co.'s Land.]—A writ of execution having been sued out on a judgment debt against a railway company, upon petition, the court ordered inquiries and a sale of the company's lands in default of payment of this debt. Hull and Hornsea Ry., In re, 35 L. J., Ch. 838; L. R. 2 Eq. 262; 14 L. T. 855; 14 W. R. 758.

An order will be made for the sale of lands of a railway company under an elegit as a debtor, within 27 & 28 Vict. c. 112, s. 4. Bishop Waltham Ry. In re, 14 W. R. 1008.

But the court will not, under 27 & 28 Vict., c. 112, s. 4, make an order for sale of property of a debtor, if it is not apparent that his interest in that property is of a saleable nature, but will direct an inquiry as to the nature of his interest in the property. S. C., 2 L. R., Ch. 382; 15 W. R. 96.

A judgment creditor who has caused a writ of elegit to be issued, is not entitled to apply to the court upon petition in a summary way for a sale of his debtor's lands under 27 & 28 Vict. c. 112, s. 4, where his debtor's lands have been already extended and delivered to another judgment creditor under a prior elegit, although he is not prevented by the act from filing a bill to assert his equitable rights. Cowbridge Ry. In re, 37 L. J., Ch. 306; L. R. 5 Eq. 413; 18 L. T. 102; 16 W. R. 506.

A contributory was indebted to a company for calls, and an order was made for the payment of them. An elegit was afterwards duly sued out under 27 & 28 Vict. c. 112, and lands belonging to the contributory were delivered in execution to the official liquidator of the company. The official liquidator afterwards presented a petition for an order for the sale of the lands, and payment out of the proceeds of such sale of the calls due from the contributory, and for other relief:—Held, that there must be an inquiry what interest the contributory had in the lands when they were delivered in execution to the official liquidator of the company, and what other parties (if any) were interested in the lands. Leeds Banking Co. Ex parte, Kirby, In re, 14 L. T. 615.

A railway company being indebted to the contractor for its original line in 5,734*l.*, obtained an act of parliament for the making of an extension line, which act authorised the raising of 85,000*l.* by shares to be called extension shares, and of 28,000*l.* by mortgage, and enacted that the works thereby authorised should for financial purposes form a separate undertaking, and that the capital and new shares should constitute a separate capital, and that the money to be raised by mortgage should be applied only to the purposes authorised by the act. The contractor having obtained judgment for the amount due to him, extended certain surplus lands acquired under the extension act, and afterwards petitioned the Court of Chancery for a sale:—Held, that the judgment creditor was entitled to his order for sale; for that, whatever might be equities of the shareholders inter se, that could not affect the rights of the creditor to have the lands sold to pay the debt due to him. Ogilvie, In re, 41 L. J., Ch. 336; L. R. 7 Ch. 174; 25 L. T. 860; 20 W. R. 226.

A defendant in an administration suit failed to comply with an order (which had been registered) directing him to pay two sums of money into court to the credit of the cause. Sequestrators, under a writ issued by the plaintiff, having entered into possession of the defendant's real estate, a petition was presented by the plaintiff, under 27 & 28 Vict. c. 112, praying that such real estate might be sold, and the proceeds applied in payment of the moneys due from the defendant:—Held, that the plaintiff was not a creditor to whom the real estate of his debtor had been delivered in execution, and the petition was dismissed accordingly. Johnson v. Burgess, 42 L. J., Ch. 400; L. R. 15 Eq. 398; 28 L. T. 188; 21 W. R. 453.

—— Form of Order.]—Form of order where, upon the petition of a judgment creditor, a sale of land of a debtor under 27 & 28 Vict. c. 112, s. 4, was directed in addition to the usual inquiries. Howson v. Trant, 42 L. J., Ch. 808; 21 W. R. 781.

Joint Judgment.]—A joint judgment was entered against father and son upon their joint and several bond; the son was an infant at the time of the execution of the bond and the entry of the judgment, and survived his father:—Held, that the amount of the judgment could not be raised out of the father's assets. Henry v. Archibald, Ir. R. 5 Eq. 558.

Attachment of Land Abroad.]—When a company has in this country been ordered to be wound up, judgment creditors who are in this country, and have proved under the winding-up, will not be allowed to attach property in India belonging to the company. Oriental Inland Steam Co., In re, Scinde Ry., Ex parte, 43 L. J., Ch. 699; L. R. 9 Ch. 557; 31 L. T. 5; 22 W. R. 810.

Death of Debtor—Interest in Real Estate—Heir not served.]—After the death of a judgment debtor the court has no jurisdiction on the ex parte application of the judgment creditor, to make an order appointing a receiver of the interest of the deceased judgment debtor in real estate, for the purpose of satisfying the judgment debt, when the person on whom the real estate has devolved is not a party to the proceedings. Ib.

Sale of Debtor's Interest in Land—Form of Order—Contingent equitable Interest.]—Where one person is entitled to land in the event of his surviving another person, an annuity to be raised out of the rents and profits of such land can be sold under the provisions of the Judgments Act, 1864 (27 & 28 Vict. c. 112). No order for payment should be contained in the order for sale made upon a petition under the said act, and the inquiry as to liens, charges and incumbrances should contain a direction to the chief clerk to distinguish which, if any, of the same liens, charges and incumbrances have been created by the means prior, and which, if any, subsequent to the date of the lands and property being delivered in execution, and which, if any, have arisen under or by virtue of any judgment, statute, or recognizance; and the order for sale should direct the sale of the lands and property free from all liens, charges, or incumbrances which have been created by any means subsequent to the delivery in execution, or which have arisen (whether before or after the delivery in execution) under or by virtue of any judgment, statute, or recognizance, and also free from the incumbrances of such of the other incumbrancers as shall consent to the said sale, but subject to the incumbrances of the said other incumbrancers as shall not consent. Cooper, In re, 60 L. T. 95; 37 W. R. 330.

Equity of Redemption.]—A creditor, who had recovered judgment in an action in the Chancery Division for payment of a sum of money, sued out an elegit against his debtor, whose only interest in land was an equity of redemption in fee. The creditor then commenced an action in the Chancery Division, claiming to have it declared that he was entitled to a charge on the land, and to have such charges enforced by sale, foreclosure, delivery in execution, or otherwise as the court might direct, and asking for a receiver. The plaintiff then moved for a receiver in the new action:—Held, that the 27 & 28 Vict. c. 112, s. 1, did not take away the old right which a judgment creditor had before 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, to take proceedings in equity to obtain the benefit of a judgment which there were legal impediments to his enforcing at law, and that the plaintiff was not obliged to wait till the trial, but might obtain a receiver on an interlocutory application in the new action. Anglo-Italian Bank v. Davies, 47 L. J., Ch. 833; 9 Ch. D. 275; 39 L. T. 244; 27 W. R. 3—C. A.

Semble, that it is now unnecessary to bring such an action, as the relief can be given on motion in the action in which the judgment was recovered, under the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 25, sub-s. 8, and Ord. XLII. r. 1. Ib.

Dispensing with Inquiries.]—Upon a petition by a judgment creditor who had obtained equitable execution by the appointment of a receiver, an order was made, without directing inquiries, for the immediate sale of the debtor's interest in land which was subject to a legal mortgage, there being evidence that the mortgagee (who consented to the sale) had not received any notice of any incumbrance on the land; that searches had been made by the petitioner's solicitor, who had found that no execution or other process affecting the land had been registered, except the order appointing the receiver, and that no bankruptcy petition had been presented or receiving order made against the debtor. Bithray, In re, 59 L. J., Ch. 66; 61 L. T. 383; 38 W. R. 60.

Creditor appointed Receiver—Time limited.]—Judgment creditor appointed receiver, by way of equitable execution over the accruing gales of a net head-rent for a limited number of years, estimated as sufficient to satisfy the judgment. Orr v. Grierson, 28 L. R., Ir. 20—C. A.

Order for Sale of Debtor's Interest—Petition instead of Originating Summons — Costs.]—Where under the Judgment Law Amendment Act, 1864 (the procedure under which has been altered by Ord. LV. r. 9B of the Rules of the Supreme Court), an application has been made by a judgment creditor by petition instead of by originating summons for the sale of the debtor's interest in certain houses in respect of which a receiver has been appointed, the court has power under Ord. LXX. r. 1 to allow the petition, but the petitioner, if successful, will only be entitled to the costs of an originating summons. Martin and Varlow, In re, 13 R. 189; 43 W. R. 247.

2. LIMIT OF ONE YEAR, UNDER S. 13 OF JUDGMENTS ACT, 1838, 1 & 2 VICT. C. 110.

After twelve months a judgment creditor may enforce his equitable charge against the real estate, although twelve months have not elapsed since its registration. Derbyshire and Staffordshire Ry. v. Bainbridge, 15 Beav. 146.

The court only interferes in aid of the legal right when the party has proceeded at law to the extent necessary to give him a complete title; and therefore, where the plaintiff had obtained judgment, but had not sued out an elegit, it was held, that he was not entitled to the aid of the court, as against the freehold estate of the debtor; that he did not, under the Judgments Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 13), become entitled to such aid until the expiration of one year from the time of entering up his judgment; and that this, being an objection that the plaintiff's title was incomplete, was therefore not removed by a resort to the jurisdiction of the court to relieve against fraud in respect to the freehold estate. Smith v. Hurst, 10 Hare, 30; 22 L. J., Ch. 289; 17 Jur. 30.

The rule, that no judgment creditor is to proceed in equity until one year after the judgment has been entered up, does not extend to a bill by a tenant by elegit to redeem a mortgage. Barnes v. Thrupp, 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1242.

The plaintiff was mortgagee of premises, the equity of redemption in which belonged to J. H. G., against whom, in May, 1857, an adjudication in bankruptcy was made, and assignees of the estate and effects duly appointed. B. G., in December, 1856, and L., in February, 1857, entered up judgments duly recovered against the bankrupt. On a bill filed by the plaintiff for foreclosure, B. G., by answer, disclaimed all right and interest in the premises. L., by answer, after stating that his judgment remained unsatisfied, stated that he did not claim to be entitled to any charge on the mortgaged premises, being advised that under the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, such judgment was unavailable, by reason of the bankruptcy of J. H. G., and that he was an unnecessary party to the suit. He did not, however, disclaim all right and interest in the premises:—Held, that though by the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 13, a judgment creditor is not entitled to proceed in equity to obtain the benefit of his charge until after the expiration of one year from the time of entering up his judgment, yet it seems that there is nothing to prevent him from taking proceedings to make his charge available at the end of one year. Harrison v. Pennel, 4 Jur. (N.S.) 682; 6 W. R. 712.

Where a judgment is not entered up one year before the bankruptcy of the person against whom judgment is entered up, it will not operate to give the judgment creditor any preference; and therefore, although L. was deprived of his right to a preference, he was not deprived of his right to a charge, of which he would at the end of one year be entitled to claim the benefit, and consequently he was properly made a party to the suit; but that, as he had not sufficiently disclaimed by his answer, he was entitled to his costs. Ib.

The court refused to stay a mortgagee's suit after decree in another creditor's suit, in which the plaintiff was a puisne judgment creditor who filed his bill within a year of the entry of his judgment, and whose right to a sale of the estate depended on setting aside a settlement puisne to the mortgage, under which no tenant in tail was in esse. Foster v. Ker, 12 Ir. Eq. R. 51.

A bill filed by a judgment creditor before the expiration of twelve months from the date of the judgment, to foreclose a fee-simple estate of the judgment debtor, cannot be supported, unless he has issued an elegit. Godfrey v. Tucker, 33 Beav. 280; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1188; 12 W. R. 33.

1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 13, declares that a judgment shall not be enforced for a given period; but a court of equity will in the meantime restrain trustees from paying to the debtor, a tenant for life, the income arising from the property affected, until the charge can be enforced. Yescombe v. Landor, 28 Beav. 80; 28 L. J., Ch. 876; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 780; 7 W. R. 534.

A judgment creditor of a tenant for life of real estate sued out an elegit, but was unable to obtain payment of his demand, as the estates were vested in trustees. Upon a bill by the judgment creditor, asking for the aid of the court to obtain satisfaction of his demand:—Held, that he was entitled to an injunction to restrain the trustees from paying the rent and profits of the estates to the tenant for life, until the creditor was in a position to obtain the benefit of the judgment. Ib.

A judgment creditor having sued out an elegit against his debtor, filed a bill, within the year, to enforce the judgment against the equitable interest of the debtor in certain leasehold estates. A demurrer to the bill overruled. Partridge v. Foster, 34 Beav. 1; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 741; 10 L. T. 808; 12 W. R. 1127.

A judgment creditor who has sued out an elegit without effect is entitled (independently of 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110) to equitable relief, though the year from entering up the judgment has not expired. Ib.

The court will, within the twelve months, interfere and protect the property charged by a judgment, from destruction. Ib.

3. WHAT PROPERTY LIABLE, AND WHAT NOT.

Estate in Remainder—Infant.]—A plaintiff, who had recovered judgment with damages in an action in tort against an infant, sued out an elegit against his land on the judgment. The infant's only interest in the land was a remainder in fee expectant on the death of a tenant for life, which produced no present income to the infant. The sheriff returned that the infant was seised of the reversion of the land in fee simple, and that it was of the annual value of 12*l.*, and that he had delivered the premises to the creditor. The creditor then presented a petition under 27 & 28 Vict. c. 112, s. 4, for the sale of the infant's interest in the land:—Held, first, that the sheriff had no power to seize an estate in remainder belonging to an infant, and therefore the judgment creditor had acquired no charge on the infant's interest. South, In re, 43 L. J., Ch. 441; L. R. 9 Ch. 369; 30 L. T. 347; 22 W. R. 460.

Unsatisfied Term—Fraudulent Conversion of Legal into Equitable Estate.]—Semble, an equitable execution can be maintained only where there is an unsatisfied term, or where a person has converted his legal into an equitable estate, for the purpose of defeating his creditors. Kirby v. Dillon, 2 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 140.

Rents and Profits of Land — Earnings of Business.]—Although a judgment creditor is entitled to have a receiver appointed, by way of equitable execution, of land in which the judgment debtor has only an equitable interest, he is not entitled to take through such receiver the earnings of a business carried on by the judgment debtor upon the land. Cudogan v. Lyric Theatre, 63 L. J., Ch. 775; [1894] 3 Ch. 338; 7 R. 594; 71 L. T. 8—C. A.

Equitable Reversionary Interest in Personalty —Land held "in trust for" Judgment Debtor.]—A reversionary interest in the proceeds of land which trustees are directed to sell is not land held "in trust for" the beneficiary, within the meaning of s. 11 of the Judgments Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 110). An equitable reversionary interest in personalty cannot be taken in execution under an elegit; and consequently, notwithstanding that there may for the present be nothing to receive, the court has jurisdiction to appoint, and will in a proper case appoint, by way of equitable relief, a receiver of such an interest. Fuggle v. Bland (11 Q. B. D. 711), and Macnicoll v. Parnell (35 W. R. 773) followed. Tyrrell v. Painton, 64 L. J., P. 33; [1895] 1 Q. B. 202; 11 R. 589; 71 L. T. 687; 43 W. R. 163—C. A.

Marriage Settlement—Life Interests of Husband and Wife in use of Furniture—Judgment Creditor of Husband and Wife.]—Under a marriage settlement certain furniture and effects were vested in trustees upon trust to permit the wife to use the same during her life for her sole and separate use, and after her death to permit her husband to use the same during his life, and the settlement contained a power, under certain conditions, to sell the furniture and invest the proceeds, and that the trustees should stand possessed of the annual income therefrom in trust for such persons as the husband and wife should during their joint lives jointly appoint, or as the survivor should appoint, and in default of such appointment for the wife for her life for her sole and separate use, and so that she should not have power to anticipate the same, with other trusts over in favour of the children. Upon an application by a judgment creditor of the husband and wife for the appointment of a receiver of the several interests of the husband and wife under the settlement:—Held, that having regard to the terms of the settlement, the court had no power to appoint a receiver of the interests of the husband and wife under the settlement. Whitaker v. Cohen, 69 L. T. 451.

M., a married woman, by her next friend, applied to tax the bill of costs of her solicitor, incurred in a suit relating to her separate estate. After the taxing-master's certificate had been filed an order was made on the application of the solicitor, directing an inquiry of what M.'s separate estate consisted at the date of the filing of the certificate, capable of being reached by the judgment and execution of the court, and appointing a person to receive it until the amount found due on taxation was paid:—Held, that this order was proper, and that it was not necessary to take separate proceedings by action to enforce the demand against the separate estate. Peace and Waller, In re, 24 Ch. D. 405; 31 W. R. 899—C. A.

Fund in Discretion of Trustees.]—An order was made, in an action in a county court, appointing a receiver to receive the interest of a sum of money in the hands of trustees, and ordering the trustees to pay a specific amount out of the interest to the receiver half-yearly until the judgment in the action should be satisfied. The trustees were trustees of a will, by which they were directed to set apart and invest the sum in question, and were authorised, at their absolute discretion, from time to time, and at such time or times as they should think proper, to pay or apply the whole or any part of the income to or for the benefit of the judgment debtor in such a manner in all respects as they should think proper. The trustees applied for a prohibition:—Held, that, as it depended on the discretion of the trustees whether anything should be paid to the judgment debtor, the receiver could not be entitled to receive the interest in their hands, and that an order for payment could not be made against the trustees, who were strangers to the action, and therefore the county court judge had exceeded his jurisdiction, and the proper remedy was by prohibition. Reg. v. Lincolnshire County Court Judge, 57 L. J., Q. B. 136; 20 Q. B. D. 167; 58 L. T. 54; 36 W. R. 174.

A judgment debtor was entitled for his life to the income arising from a fund vested in trustees, payable half-yearly in February and August. Upon application by the judgment creditor in November for a garnishee order, it appeared that the August instalment had been paid:—Held, that the money could not be attached, but semble, that the proper course for the judgment creditor to adopt was to apply for the appointment of a receiver under the practice in the Chancery Division. Webb v. Stenton, 52 L. J., Q. B. 584; 11 Q. B. D. 518; 49 L. T. 432—C. A.

Future Payments of Annuity.]—The Probate and Divorce Division ordered a husband, against whom it granted a divorce, to pay alimony. The divorced wife brought an action in the Chancery Division against her late husband and the trustees of a post-nuptial settlement made by him during the continuance of a former marriage, to enforce payment of arrears, and recurring payments of alimony, by the appointment of a receiver of his life interest under such settlement:—Held, that she was entitled to the appointment of a receiver, and that the court would not take into consideration the injury done to the children of the former marriage, by depriving their father of his power to consent to their advancement out of the settlement funds. Oliver v. Lowther, 42 L. T. 47; 28 W. R. 381.

Future Salary or Earnings.]—The court has no jurisdiction to appoint a receiver by way of equitable execution of the future salary or earnings of a judgment debtor. Holmes v. Millage, 62 L. J., Q. B. 380; [1893] 1 Q. B. 551; 4 R. 332; 68 L. T. 205; 41 W. R. 354; 57 J. P. 551—C. A.

Pension.]—The pension of an officer of her majesty's forces, being by s. 141 of the Army Act, 1881, made inalienable by the voluntary act of the person entitled to it, cannot be taken in execution, even though such pension be given solely in respect of past services, and the officer cannot again be called upon to serve:—Held, that an order appointing a receiver of such pension was bad. Birch v. Birch (8 P. D. 163) approved; Dent v. Dent (L. R. 1 P. 366) distinguished. Lucas v. Harris, 56 L. J., Q. B. 15; 18 Q. B. D. 127; 55 L. T. 658; 35 W. R. 112; 51 J. P. 261—C. A.

The court can appoint a receiver by way of equitable execution over a civil service pension, payable monthly to the defendant, and by order direct the receiver to receive the whole of the said monthly instalments, and retain thereout a certain amount per month, and apply the same in discharge of the judgment debt and costs, and pay the balance to the defendant. Molony v. Cruise, 30 L. R., Ir. 99.

Deposit Receipt in Joint Names—Absence of Remedy.]—The appointment of a receiver by way of equitable execution is the proper mode of attaching a deposit receipt held in the joint names of the judgment debtor and another, even though the whole beneficial interest in the fund be in the judgment debtor. A judgment creditor will not be debarred from his right to equitable relief upon the ground of the existence of a remedy at common law, unless a fruitful remedy be shewn to exist. O'Donovan v. Goggin, 30 L. R., Ir. 579.

Judgment Debtor's Money in Bailee's Hands.]—There is no need to appoint a receiver to receive a sum of money due to a judgment debtor, where the money is in the bailee's hands, and can be seized by the sheriff under a fieri facias. Morris v. Taylor, 32 L. R., Ir. 14—C. A.

Deceased Plaintiff—Application by Plaintiff's Executors for Receiver and Injunction—No Order to continue Proceedings.]—The executors of a deceased plaintiff whose judgment remains unsatisfied cannot (where no order has been made for the proceedings to be continued in their names) apply under Ord. XLII. rr. 8 and 23 for a receiver of a sum due to the defendant under a will, and for an injunction to restrain him from dealing therewith. Norburn v. Norburn, 63 L. J., Q. B. 341; [1894] 1 Q. B. 448; 10 R. 10; 70 L. L. 411; 42 W. R. 127.

Share of Assets of Intestate, to whom no Administration taken out.]—A judgment debtor was entitled, as one of the next of kin of a deceased intestate, to whom no administration had been taken out, to a share of the personal estate of the deceased:—Held, that the judgment creditor was entitled to have a receiver appointed over the share. Mullane v. Ahern, 28 L. R., Ir. 105.

Legacy.]—A judgment debt being unsatisfied for want of goods of the defendant, who was entitled, expectant on the death of a tenant for life, to a legacy of much larger amount than the debt:—Held, that a receiver should be appointed by way of equitable execution to receive a sufficient portion of the legacy when it should become receivable. Macnicoll v. Parnell, 35 W. R. 773.

The defendants, executors of a testatrix, obtained a judgment for their costs against the plaintiff, who was entitled to a legacy under the will which was the subject of the action. The judgment was unsatisfied, and in an affidavit filed on behalf of the defendants it was stated that, except through this legacy, they had no means of obtaining payment of their demand:—Held, that a receiver by way of equitable execution could be appointed over the legacy. M'Nulty, In re, M'Kenna v. Harley, 31 L. R., Ir. 391.

4. Sale or Foreclosure.

The relief to which a judgment creditor is entitled under the Judgments Act, 1888 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 110), is a foreclosure and not a sale. Jones v. Bailey, 17 Beav. 582.

A judgment creditor ranking after a first mortgagee but prior in rate to a further charge and to other judgments, held entitled to a foreclosure though all the other parties insisted on a sale. Messer v. Boyle, 21 Beav. 559.

A judgment creditor within a year after entering up judgment, without previously issuing an elegit, filed a bill against a prior mortgagee from the judgment debtor, and the judgment debtor seeking to redeem the former and foreclose the latter:—Held, that the suit was not maintainable. Godfrey v. Tucker, 33 Beav. 280; 33 L. J., Ch. 559; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1188; 9 L. T. 359; 12 W. R. 33.

The judgment creditor afterwards got in the mortgage, and amended his bill, asking for an account and payment of principal and interest due both on the judgment debt and mortgage, or, otherwise, for foreclosure:—Held, that he could not sustain the bill by this new title to sue, and that it must be dismissed with costs. Ib.

A judgment creditor having registered his judgment under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, is not entitled to a decree for foreclosure, but only to one for sale. Form of such a decree. Footner v. Sturgis, 5 De G. & Sm. 736; 21 L. J., Ch. 741.

Judgment creditors who have not issued execution have no lien on the land of the debtor sufficient to satisfy their being made parties to a suit for foreclosure. Cork (Earl) v. Russell, 20 W. R. 164.

A plaintiff in a foreclosure suit had made parties as defendants certain judgment creditors who had not taken the steps necessary to obtain a charge on the land under the Judgments Act, 1864 (27 & 28 Vict. c. 112). One of these, immediately on being served with a copy of the bill, wrote a letter saying he claimed no interest.

The others disclaimed by answer:—Held, that they were not necessary parties. S. C., 41 L. J., Ch. 226; L. R. 13 Eq. 210; 26 L. T. 230.

A judgment creditor who had in 1872 sued out an elegit, to which a return of nil has been made by the sheriff, the legal estate in the debtor's lands being vested in a mortgagee, may, on a bill filed against the debtor and the prior incumbrancers, obtain a decree for a sale and receiver of the rents of an equity of redemption of the debtor, subject to the rights of prior incumbrancers. He cannot obtain a declaration that he has a charge or a decree for foreclosure. Wells v. Kilpin, 44 L. J., Ch. 184; L. R. 18, Ex. 298; 22 W. R. 675.

On a bill filed against mortgagees and mortgagor, who was also a judgment debtor, by a judgment creditor who had issued a writ of elegit against the goods and hereditaments of the judgment debtor, but the execution of which, in consequence of the mortgages, could not be proceeded with, for accounts, redemption, and foreclosure, the ordinary redemption and foreclosure decree was made, notwithstanding the 27 & 28 Vict. c. 112. Beckett v. Buckley, L. R. 17 Eq. 435; 22 W. R. 294.

After Decree.]—A. and B., in 1838, filed their bill for the administration of an estate, of the residue of which they were each entitled to one-third. In 1840 they changed their solicitor in the cause, and appointed F. as such solicitor, who so continued until 1843, when they again changed their solicitor. F. then brought his action against A. (B. having gone out of the jurisdiction) for the amount of his bill of costs, and in June, 1844, he recovered and entered up judgment in such action. In June, 1845, F. filed his bill for foreclosure under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, as against A.'s third part of the property, the subject of the first suit. In July, 1846, F. obtained the common decree for foreclosure against A. and (default being made) on the 23rd March, 1847, the order for foreclosure was made absolute. The order absolute was then enrolled; A. had no property except that which she was entitled to in the first suit, but the value of the property to which she was entitled in that suit was three or four times the amount of F.'s judgment debt and costs. The master had made his report in the first suit, and the cause stood for hearing on further directions and on exceptions, when, on an application in June, 1847, the court enlarged the time appointed by the master for the payment of the debt and costs, notwithstanding the order absolute, and notwithstanding its enrolment. Ford v. Wastell, 6 Hare, 229; 16 L. J., Ch. 372; 11 Jur. 537.

5. Appointment of Receiver.

Receiver—When Appointed.]—A judgment creditor of a railway company to whom the company's land (including the line) has been delivered under an elegit, is entitled to a receiver of the tolls and earnings, and is not accountable as a mortgagee in possession if he has not obtained beneficial possession. Kingston v. Cowbridge Ry. 41 L. J., Ch. 152.

A judgment creditor who has sued out an elegit but is unable to obtain delivery by the sheriff of the debtor's lands by reason of the legal estate being outstanding and the existence of prior incumbrances, is not bound to redeem such prior incumbrances, but may obtain a decree for the appointment of a receiver and a sale in a suit to which the debtor and subsequent incumbrancers only are parties. Wells v. Kilpin, 44 L. J., Ch. 184; L. R. 18 Eq. 298; 22 W. R. 675.

A judgment creditor who has issued an elegit and obtained a return from the sheriff, although unable to sell the lands of his debtor before the expiration of one year under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110. s. 13, is nevertheless entitled to a receiver of the rents at once. Tillett v. Pearson, 43 L. J., Ch. 93; 22 W. R. 209.

Plaintiff in an action which had been followed by a cross action, obtained an order in both actions that his costs of the cross action should be paid by the defendant in the action, a married woman, entitled for life, for her separate use, to the dividends of a sum of stock, standing in the names of trustees, who were not parties to either action. Plaintiff had endeavoured to obtain a sequestration, but failed from not being able to find the defendant's address, so as to serve the subpœna for costs. He then moved the court for a receiver, under s. 25, sub-s. 8, of the Judicature Act, 1873. After service of the notice of motion, but before the motion was heard, the defendant made an affidavit, in which her address was set forth:—Held, that the principle of Anglo-Italian Bank v. Davies (supra, col. 1204) applied, and that the plaintiff was entitled to a receiver. Bryant v. Bull, 48 L. J., Ch. 325; 10 Ch. D. 153; 39 L. T. 470; 27 W. R. 246.

Over another Receiver.]—A receiver will not be appointed over the possession of another receiver; but the proper motion is, that the receiver already appointed shall be extended to the cause in which it is sought to appoint one; and a defendant who appears on the motion, and makes the objection, may get the costs of his appearance, though in contempt. Valle v. O'Reilly, 1 Hog. 199.

Ex parte Application for—Jurisdiction.]—There is jurisdiction to appoint a receiver by way of equitable execution upon an ex parte application; and that jurisdiction is properly exercised in cases where there is danger that the defendant's interest in the property would have ceased to exist before the order was made if the application were on notice. Minter v. Kent, Sussex and General Land Society, 14 R. 236; 72 L. T. 186; 59 J. P. 102—C. A.

An order appointing a receiver by way of equitable execution ought not to be made on an ex parte application. Potts, In re, Taylor, Ex parte, 62 L. J., Q. B. 392; [1893] 1 Q. B. 648; 4 R. 305; 69 L. T. 74; 41 W. R. 337; 10 Morrell, 2—C. A.

Service of Summons out of Jurisdiction.]—The plaintiff having obtained judgment against the defendant, a foreigner resident out of the jurisdiction, a summons was issued by leave of a judge at chambers, calling on the defendant to show cause why a receiver should not be appointed. On an application for leave to serve this summons on the defendant out of the jurisdiction:—Held, that there was no jurisdiction to grant such leave. Weldon v. Gounod, 15 Q. B. D. 622.

Evidence of Property.]—Where a plaintiff obtained judgment and issued execution, and the sheriff returned nulla bona, the court will not appoint a receiver on the ground that since the return, the defendant has been found to be possessed of a patent the value of which did not appear from the evidence before the court. Smith v. Carter, 52 J. P. 615.

Form of Order—Security.]—Where a judgment creditor, in an action for equitable execution, obtained the appointment of a receiver for the purpose of creating a charge upon the debtor's property, subject to prior incumbrances, but not for the purpose of entering into possession or receiving the rents and profits, the receiver was not required to give security, the plaintiff and the receiver undertaking not to act without the leave of the court. Hewett v. Murray, 54 L. J., Ch. 572; 52 L. T. 380. See also McGarry v. White, infra.

When Trustee out of the Jurisdiction.]—An order had been made for the payment of money into court by the defendant in an action for breach of trust. The defendant was out of the jurisdiction of the court at the time, and there was slight prospect of his returning within it. The plaintiff accordingly moved to enforce the order by the appointment of a receiver of the interest payable to the defendant on some shares owned by him in a certain syndicate:—Held, that the court would enforce its order for the payment of money on a defendant out of its jurisdiction by the appointment of a receiver of property belonging to him within its jurisdiction. Coney, In re, Coney v. Bennett, 54 L. J., Ch. 1130; 29 Ch. D. 993; 52 L. T. 961; 33 W. R. 701.

Married Woman—Separate Estate.]—In an action against a married woman alleged to be possessed of separate estate, no defence was delivered, and the master found that she was entitled to separate property vested in trustees and subject to certain charges. The plaintiff was appointed receiver without security of the residue of the income of the separate estate, after payment of the prior charges, the plaintiff undertaking to act without remuneration. M'Garry v. White, 16 L. R. Ir. 322.

M., a married woman, by her next friend, applied to tax the bill of costs of her solicitor, incurred in a suit relating to her separate estate. After the taxing-master's certificate had been filed, an order was made on the application of the solicitor, directing an inquiry of what M.'s separate estate consisted at the date of the filing of the certificate capable of being reached by the judgment and execution of the court, and appointing a person to receive it until the amount found due on taxation was paid:—Held, that this order was proper, and that it was not necessary to take separate proceedings by action to enforce the demand against the separate estate. Peace and Waller, In re, 24 Ch. D. 405; 49 L. T. 637; 31 W. R. 899—C. A.

Beneficed Clergyman.]—A judgment, entered up in 1845, against a beneficed clergyman, for a debt was fully registered:—Held, that under the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 13, it was a charge upon his benefice, and that the creditor was entitled to have a receiver of the profits of the benefice appointed. Hawkins v. Gathercole, 1 Sim. (N.S.) 63; 20 L. J., Ch. 59; 14 Jur. 1103.

Railway Company's Undertaking.]—The court, after appointing a receiver of property comprised in the general undertaking of a railway company, refused to allow a judgment creditor and mortgagee of a particular undertaking to sell the lands of the company comprised in his security. Gardiner v. L. C. & D. Ry., Grissell, Ex parte, 15 L. T. 311.

Garnishee Proceedings not Applicable.]—Since the Judicature Acts the court can grant equitable execution by the appointment of a receiver at the instance of a judgment creditor against debts and sums of money payable to the judgment debtor to which garnishee proceedings are not applicable. Westhead v. Riley, 53 L. J., Ch. 1153; 25 Ch. D. 413; 49 L. T. 776; 32 W. R. 273.

Receiver instead of Sequestration.]—An order was made against the defendants in an action who were defaulting trustees, for the payment of money into court. The defendants having failed to comply with such order, an application, was made by the plaintiffs that a writ of attachment might issue against them. At the defendant's instance, however, the court made an order allowing payment by weekly instalments. L., one of the defendants, had made an affidavit on that occasion stating that all the property he possessed was the furniture in his house. It subsequently transpired that L. had executed bills of sale affecting the furniture; but that the plaintiffs, in other proceedings, had successfully disputed the validity of such bills of sale. An application was accordingly made on behalf of the plaintiffs for the appointment of a receiver of the furniture by way of equitable execution. For the defendant L. it was contended that the legal and proper remedy of the plaintiffs was by sequestration, and that the court had no jurisdiction to appoint a receiver:—Held, that, although under r. 4 of Ord. XLII. of the Rules of the Supreme Court, 1883, sequestration was the appropriate remedy, yet under s. 25, sub-s. 8 of the Judicature Act, 1873, the court had jurisdiction to appoint a receiver if it appeared just or convenient so to do; and that, in the present case, it was just and convenient to appoint a receiver, and that an order must be made accordingly. Whiteley, In re, Whiteley v. Learoyd, 56 L. T. 846.

"Just or Convenient"—Judicature Act, 1873, s. 25, sub-s. 8—Jurisdiction.]—Sect. 25, sub-s. 8 of the Judicature Act, 1873, which empowers the court to appoint a receiver where "just or convenient," does not confer an arbitrary and unregulated discretion. The court can under that sub-section appoint a receiver by way of equitable execution only in cases where the Court of Chancery would have so acted before the Judicature Act, 1873. Harris v. Beauchamp, 63 L. J., Q. B. 480; [1894] 1 Q. B. 801; 9 R. 653; 70 L. T. 636; 42 W. R. 451—C. A.

Semble, the court would make such an order where it was established that a judgment debtor threatened and intended fraudulently, and for the purpose of delaying and defeating his creditors, to make away with his property. Ib.

A judgment having been obtained in an action to recover money due, the judgment debtor died, leaving a will by which she appointed an executor. The judgment debtor at the time of her death was possessed of certain furniture and chattels, and was carrying on a business. The judgment remaining unsatisfied, the judgment

The others disclaimed by answer:—Held, that they were not necessary parties. S. C., 41 L. J., Ch. 226; L. R. 13 Eq. 210; 26 L. T. 230.

A judgment creditor who had in 1872 sued out an elegit, to which a return of nil has been made by the sheriff, the legal estate in the debtor's lands being vested in a mortgagee, may, on a bill filed against the debtor and the prior incumbrancers, obtain a decree for a sale and receiver of the rents of an equity of redemption of the debtor, subject to the rights of prior incumbrancers. He cannot obtain a declaration that he has a charge or a decree for foreclosure. Wells v. Kilpin, 44 L. J., Ch. 184; L. R. 18, Ex. 298; 22 W. R. 675.

On a bill filed against mortgagees and mortgagor, who was also a judgment debtor, by a judgment creditor who had issued a writ of elegit against the goods and hereditaments of the judgment debtor, but the execution of which, in consequence of the mortgages, could not be proceeded with, for accounts, redemption, and foreclosure, the ordinary redemption and foreclosure decree was made, notwithstanding the 27 & 28 Vict. c. 112. Beckett v. Buckley, L. R. 17 Eq. 435; 22 W. R. 294.

After Decree.]—A. and B., in 1838, filed their bill for the administration of an estate, of the residue of which they were each entitled to one-third. In 1840 they changed their solicitor in the cause, and appointed F. as such solicitor, who so continued until 1843, when they again changed their solicitor. F. then brought his action against A. (B. having gone out of the jurisdiction) for the amount of his bill of costs, and in June, 1844, he recovered and entered up judgment in such action. In June, 1845, F. filed his bill for foreclosure under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, as against A.'s third part of the property, the subject of the first suit. In July, 1846, F. obtained the common decree for foreclosure against A. and (default being made) on the 23rd March, 1847, the order for foreclosure was made absolute. The order absolute was then enrolled; A. had no property except that which she was entitled to in the first suit, but the value of the property to which she was entitled in that suit was three or four times the amount of F.'s judgment debt and costs. The master had made his report in the first suit, and the cause stood for hearing on further directions and on exceptions, when, on an application in June, 1847, the court enlarged the time appointed by the master for the payment of the debt and costs, notwithstanding the order absolute, and notwithstanding its enrolment. Ford v. Wastell, 6 Hare, 229; 16 L. J., Ch. 372; 11 Jur. 537.

5. Appointment of Receiver.

Receiver—When Appointed.]—A judgment creditor of a railway company to whom the company's land (including the line) has been delivered under an elegit, is entitled to a receiver of the tolls and earnings, and is not accountable as a mortgagee in possession if he has not obtained beneficial possession. Kingston v. Cowbridge Ry. 41 L. J., Ch. 152.

A judgment creditor who has sued out an elegit but is unable to obtain delivery by the sheriff of the debtor's lands by reason of the legal estate being outstanding and the existence of prior incumbrances, is not bound to redeem such prior incumbrances, but may obtain a decree for the appointment of a receiver and a sale in a suit to which the debtor and subsequent incumbrancers only are parties. Wells v. Kilpin, 44 L. J., Ch. 184; L. R. 18 Eq. 298; 22 W. R. 675.

A judgment creditor who has issued an elegit and obtained a return from the sheriff, although unable to sell the lands of his debtor before the expiration of one year under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110. s. 13, is nevertheless entitled to a receiver of the rents at once. Tillett v. Pearson, 43 L. J., Ch. 93; 22 W. R. 209.

Plaintiff in an action which had been followed by a cross action, obtained an order in both actions that his costs of the cross action should be paid by the defendant in the action, a married woman, entitled for life, for her separate use, to the dividends of a sum of stock, standing in the names of trustees, who were not parties to either action. Plaintiff had endeavoured to obtain a sequestration, but failed from not being able to find the defendant's address, so as to serve the subpœna for costs. He then moved the court for a receiver, under s. 25, sub-s. 8, of the Judicature Act, 1873. After service of the notice of motion, but before the motion was heard, the defendant made an affidavit, in which her address was set forth:—Held, that the principle of Anglo-Italian Bank v. Davies (supra, col. 1204) applied, and that the plaintiff was entitled to a receiver. Bryant v. Bull, 48 L. J., Ch. 325; 10 Ch. D. 153; 39 L. T. 470; 27 W. R. 246.

Over another Receiver.]—A receiver will not be appointed over the possession of another receiver; but the proper motion is, that the receiver already appointed shall be extended to the cause in which it is sought to appoint one; and a defendant who appears on the motion, and makes the objection, may get the costs of his appearance, though in contempt. Valle v. O'Reilly, 1 Hog. 199.

Ex parte Application for—Jurisdiction.]—There is jurisdiction to appoint a receiver by way of equitable execution upon an ex parte application; and that jurisdiction is properly exercised in cases where there is danger that the defendant's interest in the property would have ceased to exist before the order was made if the application were on notice. Minter v. Kent, Sussex and General Land Society, 14 R. 236; 72 L. T. 186; 59 J. P. 102—C. A.

An order appointing a receiver by way of equitable execution ought not to be made on an ex parte application. Potts, In re, Taylor, Ex parte, 62 L. J., Q. B. 392; [1893] 1 Q. B. 648; 4 R. 305; 69 L. T. 74; 41 W. R. 337; 10 Morrell, 2—C. A.

Service of Summons out of Jurisdiction.]—The plaintiff having obtained judgment against the defendant, a foreigner resident out of the jurisdiction, a summons was issued by leave of a judge at chambers, calling on the defendant to show cause why a receiver should not be appointed. On an application for leave to serve this summons on the defendant out of the jurisdiction:—Held, that there was no jurisdiction to grant such leave. Weldon v. Gounod, 15 Q. B. D. 622.

Evidence of Property.]—Where a plaintiff obtained judgment and issued execution, and the sheriff returned nulla bona, the court will not appoint a receiver on the ground that since the return, the defendant has been found to be possessed of a patent the value of which did not appear from the evidence before the court. Smith v. Carter, 52 J. P. 615.

Form of Order—Security.]—Where a judgment creditor, in an action for equitable execution, obtained the appointment of a receiver for the purpose of creating a charge upon the debtor's property, subject to prior incumbrances, but not for the purpose of entering into possession or receiving the rents and profits, the receiver was not required to give security, the plaintiff and the receiver undertaking not to act without the leave of the court. Hewett v. Murray, 54 L. J., Ch. 572; 52 L. T. 380. See also McGarry v. White, infra.

When Trustee out of the Jurisdiction.]—An order had been made for the payment of money into court by the defendant in an action for breach of trust. The defendant was out of the jurisdiction of the court at the time, and there was slight prospect of his returning within it. The plaintiff accordingly moved to enforce the order by the appointment of a receiver of the interest payable to the defendant on some shares owned by him in a certain syndicate:—Held, that the court would enforce its order for the payment of money on a defendant out of its jurisdiction by the appointment of a receiver of property belonging to him within its jurisdiction. Coney, In re, Coney v. Bennett, 54 L. J., Ch. 1130; 29 Ch. D. 993; 52 L. T. 961; 33 W. R. 701.

Married Woman—Separate Estate.]—In an action against a married woman alleged to be possessed of separate estate, no defence was delivered, and the master found that she was entitled to separate property vested in trustees and subject to certain charges. The plaintiff was appointed receiver without security of the residue of the income of the separate estate, after payment of the prior charges, the plaintiff undertaking to act without remuneration. M'Garry v. White, 16 L. R. Ir. 322.

M., a married woman, by her next friend, applied to tax the bill of costs of her solicitor, incurred in a suit relating to her separate estate. After the taxing-master's certificate had been filed, an order was made on the application of the solicitor, directing an inquiry of what M.'s separate estate consisted at the date of the filing of the certificate capable of being reached by the judgment and execution of the court, and appointing a person to receive it until the amount found due on taxation was paid:—Held, that this order was proper, and that it was not necessary to take separate proceedings by action to enforce the demand against the separate estate. Peace and Waller, In re, 24 Ch. D. 405; 49 L. T. 637; 31 W. R. 899—C. A.

Beneficed Clergyman.]—A judgment, entered up in 1845, against a beneficed clergyman, for a debt was fully registered:—Held, that under the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 13, it was a charge upon his benefice, and that the creditor was entitled to have a receiver of the profits of the benefice appointed. Hawkins v. Gathercole, 1 Sim. (N.S.) 63; 20 L. J., Ch. 59; 14 Jur. 1103.

Railway Company's Undertaking.]—The court, after appointing a receiver of property comprised in the general undertaking of a railway company, refused to allow a judgment creditor and mortgagee of a particular undertaking to sell the lands of the company comprised in his security. Gardiner v. L. C. & D. Ry., Grissell, Ex parte, 15 L. T. 311.

Garnishee Proceedings not Applicable.]—Since the Judicature Acts the court can grant equitable execution by the appointment of a receiver at the instance of a judgment creditor against debts and sums of money payable to the judgment debtor to which garnishee proceedings are not applicable. Westhead v. Riley, 53 L. J., Ch. 1153; 25 Ch. D. 413; 49 L. T. 776; 32 W. R. 273.

Receiver instead of Sequestration.]—An order was made against the defendants in an action who were defaulting trustees, for the payment of money into court. The defendants having failed to comply with such order, an application, was made by the plaintiffs that a writ of attachment might issue against them. At the defendant's instance, however, the court made an order allowing payment by weekly instalments. L., one of the defendants, had made an affidavit on that occasion stating that all the property he possessed was the furniture in his house. It subsequently transpired that L. had executed bills of sale affecting the furniture; but that the plaintiffs, in other proceedings, had successfully disputed the validity of such bills of sale. An application was accordingly made on behalf of the plaintiffs for the appointment of a receiver of the furniture by way of equitable execution. For the defendant L. it was contended that the legal and proper remedy of the plaintiffs was by sequestration, and that the court had no jurisdiction to appoint a receiver:—Held, that, although under r. 4 of Ord. XLII. of the Rules of the Supreme Court, 1883, sequestration was the appropriate remedy, yet under s. 25, sub-s. 8 of the Judicature Act, 1873, the court had jurisdiction to appoint a receiver if it appeared just or convenient so to do; and that, in the present case, it was just and convenient to appoint a receiver, and that an order must be made accordingly. Whiteley, In re, Whiteley v. Learoyd, 56 L. T. 846.

"Just or Convenient"—Judicature Act, 1873, s. 25, sub-s. 8—Jurisdiction.]—Sect. 25, sub-s. 8 of the Judicature Act, 1873, which empowers the court to appoint a receiver where "just or convenient," does not confer an arbitrary and unregulated discretion. The court can under that sub-section appoint a receiver by way of equitable execution only in cases where the Court of Chancery would have so acted before the Judicature Act, 1873. Harris v. Beauchamp, 63 L. J., Q. B. 480; [1894] 1 Q. B. 801; 9 R. 653; 70 L. T. 636; 42 W. R. 451—C. A.

Semble, the court would make such an order where it was established that a judgment debtor threatened and intended fraudulently, and for the purpose of delaying and defeating his creditors, to make away with his property. Ib.

A judgment having been obtained in an action to recover money due, the judgment debtor died, leaving a will by which she appointed an executor. The judgment debtor at the time of her death was possessed of certain furniture and chattels, and was carrying on a business. The judgment remaining unsatisfied, the judgment creditors obtained an order at chambers appointing a certain person receiver of the furniture and chattels and of the business, and to get in and receive the debts due to such business, and directing him to pay the balance which should appear due on his accounts in or towards satisfaction of the judgment:—Held, that in the absence of any legal impediment to obtaining execution of the judgment in the ordinary course of law by fieri facias, or attachment of debts, and there being no special circumstances showing it to be just or convenient that a receiver should be appointed, the order for appointment of a receiver was wrongly made and ought to be rescinded. Whittaker v. Whittaker (7 P. D. 15) discussed. Manchester and Liverpool District Banking Co. v. Parkinson, 58 L. J., Q. B. 262; 22 Q. B. D. 173; 37 W. R. 264—C. A.

—— "Interlocutory Order."]—The words "interlocutory order" in s. 25, sub-s. 8, of the Judicature Act, 1873, are not confined in their meaning to an order made between writ and final judgment, but mean an order other than final judgment in an action, whether such order be made before judgment or after. Smith v. Cowell, 50 L. J., Q. B. 38; 6 Q. B. D. 75; 43 L. T. 528; 29 W. R. 227—C. A.

—— By Motion after Final Judgment.]—So long as the final judgment in an action remains unsatisfied, the action is a "cause or matter pending" within the meaning of s. 24, sub-s. 7, of the Judicature Act, 1873, and consequently, in an action by a creditor against a debtor in which the plaintiff has obtained final judgment, the court has power, under that sub-section, in order to satisfy the judgment, to grant equitable execution against the defendant by appointing a receiver upon motion in that action, although the writ may not have been indorsed with a claim for a receiver; it being unnecessary in such case to bring another action for the purpose. Salt v. Cooper, 50 L. J., Ch. 529; 16 Ch. D. 544; 43 L. T. 682; 29 W. R. 553—C. A.

6. Control of Receiver by Court.

Improper Conduct of Receiver—Application to what Court.]—A receiver was appointed in an action in the Queen's Bench Division under an order directing him to collect the rents of certain specified property (including property in which S. was in possession as mortgagee), such order to be without prejudice to the rights of any incumbrancer who might be in or enter into possession. The receiver gave notice to the tenants of the mortgaged property to pay the rents to him, who informed him that they had already been served with a notice from S. The receiver not withdrawing the notice, S. brought an action in the Chancery Division, asking for an injunction to restrain the receiver from receiving the rents:—Held, that although the receiver's conduct was improper, and in violation of the rights of S., S. was not justified in instituting a fresh action in the Chancery Division; and that, whatever might have been the course previous to the Judicature Act, such a proceeding since that act was irregular, the proper course being to apply in the action and to the court in and by which the receiver was appointed. Searle v. Choat, 53 L. J., Ch. 506; 25 Ch. D. 723; 32 W. R. 397—C. A.

Trustee and Receiver—Soliciting Customers after Removal.]—D. was trustee of the business of S. & Co. under the will of the testator in the action. He was appointed receiver and manager of the business by the court, and was subsequently removed; his beneficial interest had passed to his trustee in bankruptcy. D. entered the employment of another firm and solicited the customers of S. & Co.:—Held, that he had not committed a contempt of court. Gent, In re, Gent-Davis v. Harris, 40 W. R. 267.

Interference with Receiver.]—Judgment was entered up against a railway company at the suit of a creditor. In a suit by creditors against the company a receiver was, by the consent of all parties, appointed over the property of a company. Afterwards the judgment creditor issued a writ of fieri facias against the company, under which the sheriff levied execution. A motion was made by the plaintiff for the committal of the sheriff for contempt of court, in having interfered with the receiver, but the execution creditor was not served with notice:—Held, that he must be served. Russell v. East Anglian Ry., 14 Jur. 967.

Property in the possession of a receiver appointed by the court, in a suit, was in two instances seized by the sheriff under writs of fieri facias issued by judgment creditors of the defendant. On motions in the suit to commit the sheriff:—Held, that he was not warranted in making the seizures, and that he could not justify the seizures by questioning the propriety of the order under which the receiver was appointed; and on the submission of the sheriff an order was made in each case for him to withdraw from possession and to pay the costs, the court considering this order as sufficient under the circumstances for the maintenance of its jurisdiction. The court at the same time protected the sheriff against proceedings by the judgment creditor, in one of the cases where the judgment creditor had been served with notice and appeared on the motion, but refused to make this addition to the order in the other case, where the judgment creditor had not been served and was not present. S. C., 3 Macn. & G. 104; 6 Rail. Cas. 501; 20 L. J., Ch. 257; 14 Jur. 1033.

When the sheriff entered, a receiver, appointed by the court, was in possession of the partnership premises and effects. The sheriff took out an interpleader summons against the receiver and partnership creditor. Ordered, that the sheriff and creditor must pay the costs consequent on the contempt, and also of the summons, without prejudice to any question which might arise as between themselves. Lane v. Sterne, 3 Giff. 629; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 320; 10 W. R. 555.

After an order for, but before the actual appointment of, a receiver in a suit for dissolution of partnership, the sheriff had taken possession of part of the partnership property under a fieri facias, and afterwards refused to quit possession when the receiver was appointed; a motion to commit the sheriff for contempt was refused with costs. Defries v. Creed, 34 L. J., Ch. 607; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 360; 12 L. T. 262; 13 W. R. 632.

Power to order Sale of Goods.]—The court has no power to order a sale of the goods of a judgment debtor which have been taken in equitable execution by the appointment of a judgment creditor as receiver. Flegg v. Prentis ([1892] 2 Ch. 428) followed. De Peyrecave v. Nicholson, 10 R. 532; 71 L. T. 255; 42 W. R. 702.

Receiver's Accounts—Payments to Solicitor for Creditors—Authority of Solicitor.]—A receiver appointed under any order made by way of equitable execution, directing that moneys received by him shall be paid to the judgment creditor, must make his payments to the judgment creditor direct. The solicitor in the action has no authority as such to receive the payments on behalf of his client. If payment is made to the solicitor, and the money is misappropriated, the receiver cannot credit himself with the amount in his accounts. Ind, Coope & Co. v. Kidd, 63 L. J., Q. B. 726; 10 R. 528; 71 L. T. 203.

Receiver appointed in Partnership Action—Subsequent Judgment against Firm.]—Where a plaintiff had obtained an order for dissolution of partnership and accounts, and a receiver was appointed, a creditor, who had obtained a judgment in the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice for 48*l.* 13*s.* 8*d.* and 8*l.* costs, took out a summons in chambers for leave to issue execution against the assets of the firm in the hands of the receiver, and this application was refused. On the motion to discharge the order: the court refused to decide that the applicant would be entitled to any preferential payments in the administration of the partnership assets, but gave him a charge for his judgment debt, with 4 per cent. interest and costs, and costs of the motion, on all the moneys then in the hands of the receiver, or to come into his hands, he undertaking to deal with it according to the order of the court, the court intending to preserve to the applicant such legal rights as he would have had in case the sheriff had seized under an execution and sold on that day. Kewney v. Attrill, 56 L. J., Ch. 448; 34 Ch. D. 345; 55 L. T. 805; 33 W. R. 191.

7. Effect of Order for Receiver.

Date from which Order takes Effect.]—The defendants recovered judgment against a French company for the price of certain copper delivered to the company. Certain other copper belonging to the company was in the hands of third persons, who had a lien on it for work and labour done. The defendants obtained an order appointing a receiver to receive this copper. Notice of this order was served on the third persons. Subsequently to the making of the receivership order, a decree of judicial liquidation was pronounced in France against the French company, and the plaintiffs were appointed judicial liquidators. An application made by the plaintiffs for the receivership order to be discharged was dismissed, and the order varied by a direction that the receiver was not to pay out anything received under the order without the direction of the court. The copper having been sold, an issue was directed to determine whether the plaintiffs or the defendants were entitled to the balance, after payment of the lien of the proceeds of the sale:—Held, that as the time when the receivership order was obtained was the date from which it took effect, the defendants were entitled to the balance. Levasseur v. Mason and Barry, 60 L. J., Q. B. 659; [1891] 2 Q. B. 73; 64 L. T. 761; 39 W. R. 596—C. A.

Forfeiture of Interest under Will.]—Testator, by will made in 1870, devised freehold land to his son for life, and declared that his son should have no power to sell, dispose of, mortgage, charge, or otherwise anticipate his life estate, and in case he should attempt to do so, or in case he should become bankrupt or insolvent, or in case his estate should be "taken in execution by any process of law for the benefit of any creditor," then the devise to him should become void and cease as if he were then actually dead. After the testator's death a creditor of the son obtained judgment against him and was appointed receiver of his interest under the will by way of equitable execution. No elegit was ever sued out, and it was not shewn that there was ever any obstacle to the land being extended, under an elegit:—Held, that the appointment of a receiver worked a forfeiture of the son's life estate. Blackman v. Fysh, 60 L. J., Ch. 666; 64 L. T. 590; 39 W. R. 520.

No Elegit or Registration—Subsequent Purchaser.]—A judgment debtor had lands in Surrey subject to an equitable mortgage, and his judgment creditor obtained an order for a receiver of these lands. This order was not registered. After the appointment of the receiver the debtor sold the lands to a purchaser for value without notice:—Held, first, that under the circumstances of the case, it was just and convenient for the court to appoint a receiver within the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 25, sub-s. 8; secondly, that as the appointment of the receiver was equivalent to actual delivery of the land in execution, registration of the order appointing the receiver was, under 27 & 28 Vict. c. 112, unnecessary, registration under that act being only necessary when an order for sale is required, and that the purchaser was affected by the order. Pope, In re, 55 L. J., Q. B. 522; 17 Q. B. D. 743; 55 L. T. 369; 34 W. R. 693—C. A.

Application to vacate Registration of Charge—Jurisdiction.]—A husband having been ordered to pay various sums of money due upon alimony proceedings in the Probate Division, and having failed to pay the said sums, an action was commenced in the Chancery Division to compel payment thereof, and sequestrators were appointed under two sequestrations. The respondent having assigned his interest in the lands directed to be sold, a sum agreed upon was paid into court in respect of the claims of the petitioner, and the latter gave notice of motion in the Probate Court to obtain the discharge of the sequestrators and to vacate the registration of the writs in the Land Registry:—Held, that the Probate Court had no power or jurisdiction to vacate the registration of the charges, the Lands Charges Registration Act, 1888, which directs their registration, conferring no power or directions as to vacating the same. Cook v. Cook, 59 L. J., P. 69; 15 P. D. 116; 62 L. T. 667; 38 W. R. 656.

8. Cases Before Judgments Act, 1838.

Sale of moiety of debtor's real estate, decreed for satisfaction of judgment and costs. Rowe v. Bant, Dick. 150.

In case of judgment recovered against an heir who has a reversion in fee, which is only assets cum acciderit, court will not decree a sale of the reversion, but the creditor must wait till it falls. Fortrey v. Fortrey, 2 Vern. 134.

A judgment creditor is not bound to wait till he is paid out of the rents, for the court will accelerate the payment by directing a sale. Stileman v. Ashdown, 2 Atk. 609.

K. DISCOVERY IN AID OF EXECUTION.

Garnishee Order — Oral Examination of Garnishee.]—A garnishee order is an order for the payment of money, and a judgment creditor, being a person entitled to enforce it, may apply to the court for an order for the oral examination of the garnishee under Ord. XLII. r. 32. Cowan v. Carlill, 52 L. T. 431 ; 33 W. R. 583.

Examination of Third Parties.]—There is no power under Ord. XLII. r. 32, when a judgment or order has been obtained for the recovery or payment of money, to make an order for the examination of any person other than the debtor liable under such judgment or order, or in the case of a corporation, other than an officer of the defendant corporation. Irwell v. Eden, 56 L J., Q. B. 446 ; 18 Q. B. D. 588 ; 56 L. T. 620 ; 35 W. R. 511—C. A.

On the application of a husband, who had obtained a decree nisi for divorce against his wife, an order was made that the wife should deliver up into the custody of the husband the children of the marriage. The wife knew of the order, but evaded service of it, and disobeyed it. On the application of the husband an order was then made declaring the wife contumacious and in contempt, and directing that her mother, sister, and brother-in-law should attend the court to be examined as to her whereabouts :—Held, that the court had no jurisdiction to order the attendance of third parties for examination. Hyde v. Hyde, 57 L. J., P. 89 ; 13 P. D. 166 ; 59 L. T. 529 ; 36 W. R. 708—C. A.

Court will compel discovery of goods in hands of third persons, in order to subject them to a judgment. Taylor v. Hill, 1 Eq. Abr. 132.

Examination of Judgment Debtor—Order to Answer Questions—Discretion.]—The plaintiff, having recovered judgment against the defendant, obtained an order for his examination as to debts owing to him. The defendant had before judgment deposited with the plaintiff a debenture bond of a limited company for 1,000*l.* to secure 300*l.* On his examination the judgment debtor declined to answer certain questions as to the validity of the debenture, which the plaintiff desired to have answered for the purposes of an action commenced by him against the company :—Held, that the judgment debtor had a sufficient interest in the debenture to bring the case within Ord. XLII. r. 32 ; but that the granting or refusing the order was a matter of discretion. The appeal was accordingly dismissed. Watkins v. Ross, 4 R. 365 ; 68 L. T. 423—C. A.

Married Woman, Examination of.]—Where a judgment or order has been obtained in a county court against a married woman for the recovery or payment of money, the judge has power to make an order for her examination as to her separate estate. Aylesford (Countess) v. G. W. Ry., [1892] 2 Q. B. 626 ; 41 W. R. 42 ; 57 J. P. 70.

Upon an inquiry under Ord. XLII. r. 42, as to the separate estate of a married woman against whom a judgment has been recovered, there is no power to compel witnesses other than the judgment debtor to attend for examination. Irwell v. Eden (56 L. J., Q. B. 446 ; 18 Q. B. D. 588) followed. Bursill v. Tanner (55 L. J., Q. B. 53 ; 16 Q. B. D. 1) distinguished. Hood-Barrs v. Heriot, 65 L. J., Q. B. 622 ; [1896] 2 Q. B. 338 ; 75 L. T. 15 ; 45 W. R. 1—C. A.

Examination of Witnesses — Judgment Debtor's Expenses.]—Ord. XXXVII. r. 9, does not apply to a judgment debtor against whom an order is made under Ord. XLII. r. 32, for examination in aid of execution ; such a person is not upon the same footing as a witness at the trial of an action and is only entitled to be paid the reasonable expenses of his appearance, and their amount must be ascertained by the master. Rendell v. Grundy, 64 L. J., Q. B. 135 ; [1895] 1 Q. B. 16 ; 71 L. T. 564 ; 43 W. R. 50 ; 14 R. 19—C. A.

M. STAY AND SETTING ASIDE.

1. STAY.

Generally.] — Injunction to restrain sheriff from executing fi. fa. against furniture, &c., of defendant at law, which, with house, &c., had been let by him to plaintiff, who was in possession, refused. Garstin v. Asplin, 1 Madd. 150.

Court has no jurisdiction to stay execution on judgment obtained against defendant, till plaintiff shall do any act, however reasonable, to make the defendant a title to the subject-matter of the action ; a rule for that purpose was discharged with costs. Butts v. Bilke, 4 Price, 291.

The court has no jurisdiction to restrain a plaintiff from taking proceedings to enforce a judgment in his favour on the ground that the action was brought under circumstances amounting to the common-law offence of maintenance. Elborough v. Ayres, 39 L. J., Ch. 601 ; L. R. 10 Eq. 367 ; 23 L. T. 68 ; 18 W. R. 913.

Rule to Reduce Damages.]—Where a rule nisi for reducing the damages is granted, execution should be stayed only in respect of the amount mentioned in the rule. Bate v. Pane, 18 L. J., Q. B. 273 ; 13 Jur. 609.

Mode of Stay—Payment by Instalments.]—The power to suspend execution should be exercised by a separate order, and not by a qualification of the judgment. Semble, an order for payment by instalments, and postponement of costs, is not within the discretionary powers as to staying execution conferred by Ord. XLI. r. 15. Brien v. Sullivan, 14 L. R., Ir. 391.

2. ON WHAT GROUNDS SET ASIDE.

Generally.]—Where judgment has been signed, costs taxed, and execution issued for the amount of debt and costs, without notice of taxation, the court will not set aside the judgment or execution, but will direct a review of the taxation. Field v. Partridge, 7 Ex. 689 ; 21 L. J., Ex. 269 ; 16 Jur. 413.

Money levied by a regular execution, under a judgment valid on the face of it, cannot be recovered, in an action for money had and received, on the ground that judgment was signed or execution issued fraudulently for the whole sum named in the judgment, when part had been already paid. De Medina v. Grove, 10 Q. B. 152 ; 15 L. J., Q. B. 287 ; 10 Jur. 428.

The remedy in case of such fraud is by motion to the court in which the action is brought, to set aside the judgment and execution. Ib.

When a party has been improperly made a co-defendant in a cause, and the defence has been conducted in his name without his authority or knowledge, the court will relieve him from execution, when it appears from the circumstances of the attorney that he could have no remedy against him. Stanhope v. Firmin, 4 Scott, 39. S. P., Stanhope v. Avery, 5 D. P. C. 357.

For Irregularity — Application must be Prompt.]—If a defendant seeks to set aside an execution levied upon his goods upon the ground that he has never been served with process, and was ignorant of the existence of the action, he must apply promptly. Jones v. Davies, 1 B. C. Rep. 290.

—— What constitutes Irregularity.] — A plaintiff having obtained final judgment in a cause in the exchequer, afterwards proceeded for the same cause of action by a foreign attachment in the Lord Mayor's Court against the defendant's goods ; the defendant surrendered himself into custody in discharge of the attachment ; and on the following day, whilst he was so in custody, the plaintiff issued a ca. sa. under which the defendant was detained :—Held, that the ca. sa. was not irregular ; and that the plaintiff having abandoned his proceedings in the Lord Mayor's Court, and the defendant having in consequence obtained judgment of non pros. thereon, there was no ground for his discharge under the equitable jurisdiction of the court. Chamberlayne v. Green, 9 M. & W. 790 ; 1 D. (N.S.) 649 ; 11 L. J., Ex. 307 ; 6 Jur. 400.

—— Cured by Sheriff obtaining Time to Return.]—An irregularity in signing judgment and issuing execution is cured by the defendant obtaining time for the sheriff to return the writ. Lewis v. Gompertz, 1 Jur. 984.

For Breach of Faith.]—Pending an action, it was agreed that the proceedings should be stayed, and that no judgment should be signed if a mortgage on the defendants' ship was delivered to the plaintiff within one week, and so long as the amount above mentioned was kept insured. A policy was then effected, which expired on the 23rd of September. On the 22nd the secretary of the defendants wrote to insurance brokers in London, to effect an insurance, but in consequence of some doubt about the stamp, and the absence of the secretary of the insurance company, policies were not issued until the 30th, though dated on the 24th and 27th. They were issued in pursuance of the instructions given on the 22nd, and the slips for the same were delivered on that day, which, according to the practice of insurance companies, are considered honorary engagements. The plaintiff having signed judgment and issued execution, the court refused to interfere, as the defendants had not performed their undertaking, and judgment was not signed against good faith. Parry v. Great Ship Co., 4 B. & S. 556 ; 33 L. J., Q. B. 41 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 294 ; 9 L. T. 379 ; 12 W. R. 78.

The interest which a bankrupt has in increasing the divisible fund under the fiat is sufficient to entitle him to set aside an execution levied on his goods against good faith. Pinches v. Harvey, 1 G. & D. 236 ; 1 Q. B. 868 ; 10 L. J., Q. B. 316 ; 6 Jur. 389.

S., as solicitor for a shareholder, presented a petition for the winding-up of a company, which was dismissed with costs. K., the solicitor of the company, made a demand for these costs upon S., who had received a cheque for the amount, but through a misunderstanding between the solicitors as to the authority to receive the costs, payment was not made until after a writ of fi. fa. had been issued and executed for the amount. On a motion by S.'s client to set aside the writ, as issued contrary to good faith ; or in the alternative that K. might be ordered to pay the costs of the execution, and of the motion : the court refused to set the writ aside, but considering that it ought not to have been issued, ordered K. to pay the costs of the execution and motion. Hollington, Ex parte, Commonwealth Land, Building, Estate and Auction Co., In re, 29 L. T. 502 ; 22 W. R. 106.

For Excess.]—A writ of execution taken out for too large a sum can in general only be quashed for excess ; but where a ca. sa. was indorsed to levy the penalty of a warrant of attorney where the defeasance only authorised execution for the arrears, the rule was made absolute for setting aside the execution in toto. Tilby v. Best, 16 East, 163. See Webber v. Hutchins, 8 M. & W. 319 ; 1 D. (N.S.) 95 ; 10 L. J., Ex. 354.

Pending Indictment of Witnesses for Perjury.]—The court refused to stay execution after verdict and judgment, which was affirmed in error, until the trial of an indictment for perjury against two of the plaintiff's witnesses in the action. Warwick v. Bruce, 4 M. & S. 140.

3. Conditions to Setting Aside.

When Court will Impose.]—Where a defendant had been arrested on a ca. sa. at the suit of the plaintiff, but a voluntary escape was permitted by the sheriff, and an action was brought against the sheriff for such escape, in which the plaintiff recovered, but the defendant was subsequently again arrested on a second ca. sa., nominally at the suit of the plaintiff, but which, as it was admitted, was in fact sued out, with a view to the indemnification of the sheriff, the court ordered the writ to be set aside, and the defendant to be discharged out of custody ; and costs not being prayed on his behalf, refused to impose terms on him, that he should bring no action. Gillott or Gillett v. Aston, 2 D. (N.S.) 413 ; 12 L. J., Q. B. 5 ; 7 Jur. 235.

Where a defendant has been taken on a ca. sa. as he was leaving the Insolvent Debtors Court, his petition having been adjourned sine die, without protection, the court refused to discharge him without his undertaking to bring no action against the sheriff. Andrews v. Martin, 12 C. B. (N.S.) 371 ; 6 L. T. 433.

Held, also, that the fact of his having delayed his application for six months was no objection. Ib.

A plaintiff recovered judgment, and took the defendant on a ca. sa. ; W., the attorney of the plaintiff's father, agreed with the defendant that on delivery of certain documents he would discharge the defendant; the documents were delivered, and W. gave the defendant an order of discharge, directed by the plaintiff to his attorney; the sheriff refused to discharge, as the order was not directed to him:—Held, that the defendant was entitled to his discharge, on condition that no actions were brought against the sheriff or anyone else, and that the plaintiff's attorney's remedies on the judgment should not be prejudiced. Langley v. Headland, 19 C. B. (N.S.) 42; 34 L. J., C. P. 183; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 431; 12 L. T. 335; 13 W. R. 752.

Application to set aside Condition.]—The defendant's goods having been taken under a fi. fa. after the debt and costs had been paid by another party liable upon the same instrument, he applied to a judge to set aside the execution. The judge made the order, but imposed as a term that the defendant should bring no action; having availed himself of the order so as to get the sheriff to withdraw from possession:—Held, that the defendant could not afterwards move to set aside so much of it as restrained him from bringing an action. Wilcox v. Odden, 15 C. B. (N.S.) 837.

A defendant having been arrested on a ca. sa. after the plaintiff had proved his debt under a fiat against him, applied by summons for his discharge and to set aside the ca. sa. The judge made the order, imposing as a term that the defendant should bring no action; having availed himself of the order so as to obtain his discharge:—Held, that the defendant could not afterwards move to set aside so much of it as restrained him from bringing an action. Hayward v. Duff, 12 C. B. (N.S.) 364; 6 L. T. 433; 10 W. R. 562.

The court will not interfere with the discretion of a judge at chambers, where, upon a summons to set aside an execution for irregularity, with costs, he makes the order as prayed, adding, as a condition, that the defendant bring no action, even though the order has not been drawn up. Bartlett v. Stinton, 35 L. J., C. P. 238; L. R. 1 C. P. 493; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 342; 14 L. T. 287; 14 W. R. 614.

N. EXPENSES OF EXECUTION.

Meaning of.]—The words "expenses of execution" mean expenses of the specific execution under which the fruits are obtained. Salisbury (Marquis) v. Ray, infra.

Expenses of Previous Abortive Writ.]—The Common Law Procedure Act, 1852 (15 & 16 Vict. c. 76), s. 123, which gave the plaintiff in every case of execution a right to levy the expenses of the execution, over and above the sum recovered by the judgment, did not entitle him to take under a ca. sa. the expenses of a previous abortive fi. fa. Salisbury (Marquis) v. Ray, 8 C. B. (N.S.) 193; 29 L. J., C. P. 225; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1117; 2 L. T. 286; 8 W. R. 462. S. P., Earp v. Satchell, 3 G. & D. 346; 4 Q. B. 121; 12 L. J., Q. B. 122; 7 Jur. 172.

Of Irregular Execution.]—Where an irregular execution is set aside, and the sums levied and paid by the defendant are ordered to be repaid, the plaintiff is only bound to repay the money which has been properly paid by the defendant. Whalley v. Barnett, 2 D. P. C. 33.

Effect of County Courts Act, 1856, s. 30.]—By the repealed County Courts Act (19 & 20 Vict. c. 108), s. 30, where an action of contract is brought in one of the superior courts to recover a sum not exceeding 20*l.*, and the defendant suffers judgment by default, the plaintiff shall recover no costs unless a court or judge otherwise order:—Held, that this section did not deprive the plaintiff of the costs of a writ of execution. Armitage v. Jessop, L. R. 2 C. P. 12; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 963; 15 L. T. 214; 15 W. R. 130.

I. TITLE OF EXECUTOR OR ADMINISTRATOR.

a. EXECUTOR.

1. Appointment.

What amounts to Appointment.]—Appointment at the end of will of A. and B., to receive and pay the contents before mentioned, makes them executors. Pickering v. Tower, Ambl. 364; 1 Eden, 142.

A testator gave his property to C. and D. upon various trusts, and among others, upon trust for sale, and empowered C. and D. and the survivor of them, his heirs, executors, &c., to give receipts for the purchase-money, and concluded by appointing his wife and C. and D. "trustees and executors" of his will:—Held, that this appointment conferred on his wife only the general powers and duties of executrix, and did not make her a trustee with C. and D. under the specific trusts of the will. Sidebotham v. Watson, 11 Hare, 170.

A testator directed his debts to be paid, and appointed executors in England, and other executors in Italy, directing the English executors to transmit the residue to the Italian executors, and bequeathing such residue amongst classes of persons alleged to reside in Italy:—Held, that as to the sum to be paid over, being the residue, after payment of debts, the Italian executors must be regarded as simply trustees, and not as executors, holding the fund charged with debts; and that therefore inquiries must be directed to ascertain the persons beneficially entitled. Weatherby v. St. Giorgio, 2 Hare, 624; 12 L. J., Ch. 412; 7 Jur. 717.

Alternative or Substitutional Appointment of Executors.]—If a man adds in his will, that if his executor should be attainted of felony or treason, another should stand in his room; if the person be attainted in the testator's lifetime the substitution is good. Carte v. Carte, Ridgw. 210; 3 Atk. 180; Ambl. 28.

Where an appointment of an executor is made in a duly-executed will, and the testator, having expressed his intention of so doing, obliterates the original name and substitutes another, such obliteration and substitution being executed the court will direct the original name to be restored in the probate, if it is satisfied by evidence aliunde what the original name was. Harris, In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 536; 29 L. J., P. 79; 2 L. T. 118; 8 W. R. 368. S. P., Parr, In goods of, 29 L. J., P. 70; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 56.

A testator appointed his son sole executor, but in the event of his going abroad, or being and remaining abroad for upwards of two calendar months, then he appointed B. his executor. The son, after the death of the testator, went abroad, without taking probate, and there remained. The court granted probate to B., but reserved power to the son to prove the will. Lane, In goods of, 33 L. J., P. 185.

A. made a will, and appointed B., C., D. and E. executors; and in case of the death of B., F. to be executor in his place. B., C., D. and E. proved the will; B. and C. died. F. applied to have a double probate granted to him; D. and E. approving such grant:—Held, that F. was entitled to the grant, and that the casualty was not restricted to the death of B. in his lifetime. Johnson, In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 17; 27 L. J., P. 9; 6 W. R. 275.

B. made C. his executor and trustee, with power to appoint by deed or will other persons as co-trustees or succeeding trustees. B. died, C. did not take probate, but by will, referring to B.'s will, appointed E. and F. to be succeeding trustees in respect of B.'s will, after his (C.'s) death. F. proved C.'s will, and was called upon, as executor substituted according to the tenor, to take probate of B.'s will:—Held, that in the language of the two wills the distinction between trustee and executor was so marked that F. could not be called upon to take probate of B.'s will. Moss v. Bardswell, 3 Sw. & Tr. 187; 29 L. J., P. 147; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 589; 2 L. T. 300; 8 W. R. 503.

An appointment of A. as executor, and, "in case of his absence on foreign duty," of B. as executrix, is an appointment of B. as substituted executrix in the event of A.'s absence from the country when the necessity for proving the will arises. Will and probate granted to B. in A.'s absence. Langford, In goods of, 37 L. J., P. 20; L. R. 1 P. 458; 17 L. T. 415.

A will contained the following clause: "I appoint J. J. my executor; but should he decline or consider himself incapable of acting, then I appoint E. J. to be executor." J. J. died in the lifetime of the executrix:—Held, that her intention was that E. J. should be executor if J. J. could not or would not act, and that E. J., as substituted executor, was therefore entitled to probate. Betts, In goods of, 30 L. J., P. 167.

A will contained this clause: "I appoint my wife sole executrix, and, in default of her, I appoint K. and F. to be executors":—Held, that the substitution of executors was not confined to to the event of the wife's dying without having taken probate, but that it also took effect where she proved the will and died, without having fully administered Foster, In goods of, 41 L. J., P. 18; L. R. 2 P. 304; 25 L. T. 763; 20 W. R. 302.

The testatrix, by her will, appointed two persons to be her executors and trustees, conferred upon the surviving trustee or trustees power to appoint new trustees, and directed that every trustee appointed under her will should, by force of his or her appointment to be such trustee, become and be an executor under her will. The persons named in the will renounced, and letters of administration with the will annexed were granted in 1852 to two persons, who died respectively in 1855 and 1870, without having administered the estate. In 1856 the Court of Chancery appointed as trustees of the will two other persons, one of whom died in 1869. The survivor of these two trustees died in 1884, leaving a will by which he appointed his wife his sole executrix, and she, in February, 1895, under the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, appointed two persons to be trustees of the will of the testatrix. The court held that these trustees became executors by force of the special clause in the said will, and granted probate thereof to them. Shaw, In goods of, 73 L. T. 192.

Falsa Demonstratio.]—A testator appointed as executrix of his will "my wife M. G.":—Held, that this was no falsa demonstratio, though she was not wife of the testator, the pretended marriage being void on the ground of affinity. Gausden, In goods of, 2 Sw. & Tr. 362; 31 L. J., P. 53; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 180; 5 L. T. 767.

Void for Uncertainty.]—A brother, by his will, left all his property to his three sisters therein named, or to such of them as were alive at the time of his decease, and appointed "either one of my three sisters my sole executrix." Two of the three sisters had predeceased him, and on his death the surviving sister applied for a grant of probate of the will as executrix. The court rejected the motion, holding the appointment of "either of my three sisters" to be void for uncertainty. Blackwell, In goods of, 46 L. J., P. 29; 2 P. D. 72; 36 L. T. 413; 25 W. R. 305.

B., by will, left all his property to his three sons therein named, and appointed "A. as my executor, with any two of my sons." A. proved the will at the Cape of Good Hope alone, and two of the sons asked for probate of an authentic copy, reserving power to A. The court rejected the motion; holding the appointment of "any two of my sons" to be void for uncertainty. Baylis, In goods of, 2 Sw. & Tr. 613; 31 L. J., P. 119; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 546; 7 L. T. 251.

A., in his will, after ordering an arrangement to be made to the satisfaction of his executors, continued, "I appoint J. O'H. and G. B., of the W." and there stopped:—Held, that these persons were not entitled to probate as executors. Bonham, In goods of, 8 Jur. (N.S.) 596.

Misdescription or Uncertainty—Admission of Evidence to Explain.]—A testator appointed as one of his executors Francis Courtenay Thorpe, of Hampton, gentleman. There was living a youth of twelve years of age to whom the name and description applied. The court refused to admit evidence to shew that the testator intended the father of the youth, whose name was Francis Corbet Thorpe. Peel, In goods of, 39 L. J., P. 36; L. R. 2 P. 46; 22 L. T. 417.

A testator appointed his "said nephew, Joseph Grant, executor" of his will. His wife's nephew of that name had resided with him for many years, and managed his business. There was also living a nephew (a brother's son) of the like name. Both claimed probate of the will:—Held, that parol evidence was admissible to shew the relation and circumstances in which the respective parties stood to the testator, and the sense in which he habitually used the word "nephew" when referring to his wife's nephew. And the evidence shewing that the wife's nephew was the person meant, probate of the will was decreed to him accordingly. Grant v. Grant, 39 L. J., P. 17; L. R. 2 P. 8; 21 L. T. 645; 18 W. R. 230. S. P. and S. C., 39 L. J., C. P. 272; L. R. 5 C. P. 727; 22 L. T. 829; 18 W. R. 951.

A testator appointed as his executrix "Georgiana Geraldine de Bellin," but there was no person answering to that description. He left a grand-daughter named "Adelaide Geraldine de Bellin," and a grand-daughter (who was only six months old at the date of the execution of the will) named "Georgiana Geraldine Kate de Bellin":—Held, that extrinsic evidence was admissible to shew whom he intended to designate by the description "Georgiana Geraldine de Bellin"; and the evidence shewing that his grand-daughter, Adelaide Geraldine de Bellin, was the person whom he meant, probate of the will was decreed to her accordingly. O'Reilly, In goods of, 43 L. J., P. 5; 29 L. T. 546; 22 W. R. 224.

A testator by his will appointed several executors, one of whom was described as "Perceval——, of Brighton, Esq., the father." The testator was intimately acquainted with William Perceval Boxall, of Brighton, who was commonly known as Mr. Perceval Boxall, and had a son named Perceval Gretwick Boxall. It did not appear that any person bearing the surname of Perceval was known to the testator. The court held that extrinsic evidence was admissible to assist it in ascertaining the person designated, and ordered the name of William Perceval Boxall to be included in the probate as one of the executors. De Rosaz, In goods of, 46 L. J., P. 6; 2 P. D. 66; 36 L. T. 263; 25 W. R. 352.

A father appointed as his executor his son Forster Charter. He had no son of that name, but two sons named William Forster Charter and Charles Charter. The court, on evidence of the circumstances under which the testator wrote the will, and of the position of the parties about him, and also on consideration of the contents of the will itself, determined that the latter was the person denoted by the will, and decreed probate to him. Charter v. Charter, 43 L. J., P. 73; L. R. 7 H. L. 364. Affirming 20 W. R. 212.

A testator nominated Joseph W. to be executor, but on affidavit that the person he intended to name was John Gibbon W. the court granted probate to him. Gaskill, In goods of, 33 L. T. 578.

The testator appointed as one of his executors his brother-in-law, Edmund O'Kelly. He had no brother-in-law of that name, but he had a brother-in-law named Edward O'Kelly:—Held, that evidence of the circumstances, habits and position of the testator's family was admissible to prove that Edward O'Kelly was the only person to whom the name and description in the will could be applied; and such evidence being satisfactory, it was ordered that probate should be granted to him and the other executors named in the will:—Held, also, that parol evidence of declarations of intention by the testator could not be admitted. Twohill, In goods of, 3 L. R., Ir. 21.

Testator, a congregational minister, appointed "William McCormack, of Canonbury," an executor of his will. There was no person answering the description "William McCormack, of Canonbury," but there was a Thomas McCormack, who had been for several years one of the deacons at the testator's chapel, and he had a son named William Abraham McCormack:—Held, that extrinsic evidence was admissible to shew who was intended by the testator to be his executor. Brake, In goods of, 50 L. J., P. 48; 6 P. D. 217; 45 L. T. 191; 29 W. R. 744.

Executrix of Property not named in Will.]—A testator by his will, which did not dispose of the residue of his personal estate, nominated and appointed his daughter to be his "executrix for all property whatsoever and wheresoever not named in the will":—Held, that she was not entitled to probate of the will. Wakeham, In goods of, 41 L. J., P. 46; L. R. 2 P. 395; 27 L. T. 214; 20 W. R. 685.

By Foreign Court—Effect of.]—Where an executor is appointed by a foreign will, the nature and extent of the office conferred by the appointment are regulated by the law of the testator's domicil, and not by English law, even as to property situate in England. If, by the law of the domicil, the executorship lasts only for a limited period, the court cannot, after that period has expired, grant probate to the executor. Laneville v. Anderson, 2 Sw. & Tr. 24; 30 L. J., P. 25; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1260; 3 L. T. 304; 9 W. R. 74.

The court will make a grant to a provisional executor, appointed by the proper court, of the domicil of the deceased, but it will limit it for such time as the appointment by the court of domicil remains unrescinded and in force. Steigerwald, In goods of, 10 Jur. (N.S.) 159.

A natural-born British subject died, domiciled in Russia, having acquired large property, both real and personal, in that country; he was also possessed of a considerable sum in English funds. He left a will made in Russia, whilst he was domiciled there, in the Russian language and form, appointing Russian subjects executors, which will was duly authenticated in the Russian courts. It purported to dispose of all his movable and immovable property; there were no words distinctly excluding any part of his property from its operation, nor was there any allusion to, nor were there any words distinctly describing the money in the English funds:—Held, that the executors being clothed with the authority of the competent court of the testator's domicil were entitled to probate as regards the money in the English funds. Enohin v. Wylie, 1 Sw. & Tr. 118. And see S. C., 10 H. L. Cas. 1.

Persons who had obtained possession of mortgage money, under colour of being personal representatives constituted by a joint will of husband and wife, and beneficially interested in part under that will, and with the assistance of an executors' court of dealing in St. Croix, which appeared to have had, in fact, under the circumstances of the case, no jurisdiction:—Held, to be trustees of the money for the personal representatives of the husband and wife, who claimed under their respective sole wills. Nature and jurisdiction of executor's court of dealing in St. Croix. Price v. Dewhurst, 4 Myl. & C. 76; 8 L. J., Ch. 57; 2 Jur. 1006.

2. Relation back of Title.

Generally.]—Where an executor proves a will probate has reference back to the death of the testator, and what was then in the hands of the executor is assets for the payment of the testator's debts. Ingle v. Richards, 28 Beav. 366; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 117; 8 W. R. 697.

Action against, prior to Grant of Probate—Effect on Testator's Estate.]—Until the person named as executor in the will of a deceased person has intermeddled with the estate or has actually obtained a grant of probate, he does not represent the testator's estate, and a seizure and sale of part of the testator's assets under an execution founded upon a judgment in a suit by a creditor of the deceased against such person is ineffectual to bind the testator's estate. Mohamadu Mohideen Hadjiar v. Pitchey, 63 L. J., P. C. 90; [1894] A. C. 437; 6 R. 510; 71 L. T. 99—P. C.

3. Joint and Several Authority.

In General.]—One administrator cannot release a debt so as to bind his fellow; otherwise as to an executor, for each entirely represents the testator. But one administrator may bar both by his release, if releasee is accountable to them in their own right, and not as administrators. Hudson v. Hudson, 1 Atk. 460. And see Jacomb v. Harwood, 2 Ves. Sen. 267, post.

Signature of one trustee to a bankrupt's certificate, without authority to act for the other, is not sufficient. Secus, of executor who can do any act. Rigby, Ex parte, 19 Ves. 463; 2 Rose, 224.

The interest and authority of executors is joint, and cannot be divided into distinct powers; but they may be so appointed that their authority may commence or determine at different times. Owen v. Owen, 1 Atk. 495.

Chose in Action.]—Assignment of chose in action, part of the assets, and judgment confessed to a creditor by one executor, not available against the dissent of the others, on behalf of the general creditors, though perhaps the court would not interpose against the particular creditor, if the property had actually passed, or to deprive him of any legal advantage. Lepard v. Vernon, 2 Ves. & B. 51; 13 R. R. 13.

Settling Accounts.]—One of several executors may settle an account with a person accountable to the estate, and in the absence of fraud, the settlement will be binding on the others though dissenting. Smith v. Everett, 27 Beav. 446; 29 L. J., Ch. 236; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1332; 7 W. R. 605.

Assigning Leaseholds.]—It is no objection to title, that assignment of term was executed by one executor only, though deed was prepared as an assignment by two, one executor being competent to assign. Simpson v. Gutteridge, 1 Madd. 609; 16 R. R. 276.

One of two executors erroneously believing that he was acting with the authority of the other, contracted to sell a leasehold house, part of the testator's estate:—Held, that the purchaser could not enforce a specific performance of the contract. Sneesby v. Thorne, 7 De G. M. & G. 399; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1058; 3 W. R. 605.

Quære, whether he could have done so if the executor had been under no misapprehension. Ib.

Mortgaging Leaseholds.]—Each executor has entire control over a testator's personal estate; he may release, pay or transfer without the others; and so as to each administrator, though formerly questioned; one executor may retain in satisfaction of his own debt, if no fraud. A surviving partner, therefore, being an executor of the deceased partner, and having mortgaged leasehold property of the latter for better securing of a debt due from the testator to himself, the mortgagees were entitled to satisfaction; and creditors of the testator, under marriage articles, who had no specific lien, were not allowed to pursue the premises thus assigned. Jacomb v. Harwood, 2 Ves. Sen. 265.

One of two executors who has a beneficial interest in property may create a good equitable mortgage of such interest by depositing the title deeds relating thereto and signing a memorandum of deposit, although he makes the deposit without the consent of his co-executor. Sheffield Union Banking Co., Ex parte, Carter and Justins, In re, 13 L. T. 477.

Borrowing Money—Advances to One Executor for Executorial Purposes.]—One of two executors, who was himself a residuary legatee, entered an account with a banker in his own name for executorial purposes, and the banker, with notice of the dispositions under the will, made advances to the executor for payments connected with the executorship, and securities were deposited for repayment of the advances. The co-executor assented to the first advance, but upon a second advance being made to the acting executor upon other securities, he withdrew his assent, and objected to the banker being repaid out of the trust property, on the ground that the money had been placed to the separate account of the acting executor. The advances were duly applied to the purposes of the administration. Upon an action being brought by the banker for a lien upon the second securities for repayment of his advances:—Held, that the banker was justified in advancing money to the acting executor for executorial purposes, and that the assent of the co-executor in the first instance was a further justification for placing confidence in the acting executor and in making further advances to him. The repayment was therefore decreed with mortgagee's costs. Child v. Thorley, 16 Ch. D. 151; 29 W. R. 417.

Proving in Bankruptcy.]—Where the bankrupt and another are executors of a creditor of the bankrupt, the court will permit the other executor to prove the debt, even though a suit is pending in the Ecclesiastical Court, as to the executorship. Shakeshaft, Ex parte, 3 Bro. C. C. 198.

Admission—Co-executor—Answer to Interrogatories.]—Semble, one co-executor's answer to interrogatories cannot be used as an admission against his co-executor. Peek v. Ray, 63 L. J., Ch. 647; [1894] 3 Ch. 282; 7 R. 259; 70 L. T. 769; 42 W. R. 498—C. A.

Forgery—Fraudulent Mortgage by One Executor.]—A son, who was heir-at-law to his father, and who was one of the executors and trustees of his father's will, though he had not proved the will, and whose christian names and description were identical with those of his father, after his father's death, executed mortgages of freehold and leasehold property of the father and applied the mortgage money to his own purposes. He handed over the title-deeds to the mortgagees. The transaction took place without the knowledge of his mother and sister, who were co-trustees and co-executrices with him, and who had proved the will. The will had not been registered in the Middlesex registry, though the property was situate in that county. The mortgage deeds were registered. They purported to be executed by the absolute owner of the property, and the solicitor who acted for both parties believed the son to be the absolute owner. The son told him nothing about the father's will. The solicitor searched the Middlesex registry. The son took a beneficial interest under the trusts of the father's will. After the son's death the fraud was discovered, and the mother and sister, as trustees of the father's will, brought an action against the mortgagees, claiming a declaration that the mortgages were void against them, and delivery up of the title-deeds. The other beneficiaries under the will were made defendants:—Held, that the son in executing the mortgage deeds was personating his father; that the deeds were forgeries and passed nothing to the mortgagees, except the son's beneficial interest under the father's will; and that the mortgagees could obtain no title by virtue of the Middlesex Registry Act. Cooper, In re, Cooper v. Vesey, 51 L. J., Ch. 862; 20 Ch. D. 611; 47 L. T. 89; 30 W. R. 648—C. A.

Per Lindley, L.J.:—The son could have been convicted of forgery by reason of his executing the mortgage deeds. Ib.

—— Receipt for Money due on Bond to Two Executors.]—A testator gave the residue of his estate to his two executors upon certain trusts. Part of his estate consisted of a bond given by the trustees of a minor who came of age within a year after the death of the testator, and the executors then accepted his bond to them jointly, in the place of the bond given by the trustees. Ten years afterwards a part of the money was paid by the obligor to one of the obligees, who embezzled the money so paid, and gave a receipt purporting to be signed by both the obligees, but, in fact, signed by one only, the signature of the other being a forgery. In a suit by the other executor and cestui que trust under the will against the obligor:—Held, that, though the obligor intended to have the receipt of both obligees, the receipt of one was sufficient to discharge the obligor as the obligees were executors. Charlton v. Durham (Earl), L. R. 4 Ch. 433; 20 L. T. 467; 17 W. R. 995. Affirming 38 L. J., Ch. 183.

Debtors to the estate of a testator will not, merely on account of the lapse of time, be held to have notice of the fact that all the debts are paid, and that the executors have become trustees. Ib.

Negligence by One of Co-executors of Legal Mortgagee — Legal Title of Co-executors and Legatees, Effect on.]—The acts of one of several executors cannot bind their testator's estate so as to preclude other persons interested in that estate from relying on their legal title, unless the legal owner himself, or some predecessor of his in title, has personally either been guilty of misconduct or conferred on the mortgagor an apparent authority to deal with the mortgaged property as if it were unincumbered. Ingham, In re, Jones v. Ingham, 62 L. J., Ch. 100; [1893] 1 Ch. 352; 3 R. 126; 68 L. T. 152; 41 W. R. 235.

Statute of Limitations.]—In an action by a payee of a promissory note for 300*l.*, against the surviving executors of William P., the maker, in order to take the case out of the Statute of Limitations, he proved that he had been supplied by Joseph P., the deceased executor, with malt and other articles; and he put in an account between them, signed "Settled, Joseph P.," on one side of which the plaintiff was charged with various quantities of malt; and on the other side had credit for payments, there being, amongst others, the following item:—"To one year's interest, 15*l.*":—Held, that this settlement of account was evidence of payment of the 15*l.* by Joseph P., but not in his representative character. Scholey v. Walton, 12 M. & W. 510; 13 L. J., Ex. 122.

An acknowledgment of, or promise to pay, a debt of a testator by one of several executors is sufficient to take the case out of the Statute of Limitations. Tullock v. Dunn (Ry. & M. 416) and Scholey v. Walton (12 M. & W. 510; 13 L. J., Ex. 122) distinguished. Macdonald, In re, Dick v. Fraser, 66 L. J., Ch. 630; [1897] 2 Ch. 181; 76 L. T. 713; 45 W. R. 628. And see LIABILITY FOR ACTS OF EACH OTHER, III. d., col. 1355, post.

4. Survivorship.

The power of an executor is not determined by the death of one, but the whole survives to the other, and he may assent to the legacy. Flanders v. Clarke, 3 Atk. 509; 1 Ves. Sen. 9.

Executors divide a part of their testator's property, but lodge a sum in the funds for securing the payment of an annuity: as to this they are joint tenants, and it shall survive upon the death of one to the other. Balwyn v. Johnson, 3 Bro. C. C. 455.

Where legacy was by order directed to be paid to A. B., and he dies, leaving executors, and one executor dies, on application court will order legacy to be paid to surviving executors, without acquittance from executor of deceased co-executor. Moodie v. Bainbridge, 6 Madd. 107.

5. Devolution of Office.

In General.]—A. appoints executors, who prove his will in the Prerogative Court; B., the surviving executor, dies, having appointed C. his executor, and C. proves B.'s will in the Consistory Court of Llandaff. C. is the personal representative of A. Fowler v. Richards, 5 Russ. 39. And see Jernegan v. Baxter, 5 Sim. 568; and Jossaume v. Abbot, 15 Sim. 127.

An acting executor of a testator cannot renounce the executorship of other persons of whom his testator was executor. Brooke v. Haymes, L. R. 6 Eq. 25. And see Barker v. Railton, 11 L. J., Ch. 372; 6 Jur. 549.

Executors cannot renounce the executorship of the estate of a person to whom their testator was executor. Delacour, In re, Ir. R. 9 Eq. 86.

Where, therefore, A. appointed B. and C. his executors, and B. obtained probate, C.'s rights being saved; B. died, having appointed as his executors D. and E., who both obtained probate; C. afterwards renounced probate of A.'s will, and D. and E. disclaimed the executorship of it:—Held, that, notwithstanding the disclaimer of D. and E., they would be the executors of A. Ib.

If A. gives legacies, and makes B. and C. executors, and B. makes C. and D. his executors, and dies, and they possess themselves of the estate of A., they may be both charged in equity, though at law the executorship survived to C., and D. is not privy, yet A.'s estate shall be liable in whatsoever hands it may be. Resolved, upon demurrer. Nicholson v. Sherman, 1 Ch. Ca. 57; 2 Freem. 181.

Probate essential.]—If an executor dies before probate of the will, his executor cannot prove it, but administration cum testamento, &c., must be granted to residuary legatee (if any), or to the next of kin. Day v. Chatfield, 1 Vern. 200.

——Action by Executor to prove Will—Death before Probate.]—A testatrix died, having appointed A. B. sole executor, who commenced proceedings to prove her will in solemn form. After the delivery of the statement of claim in the action, A. B. died, and his will was proved by an executor therein named:—Held, that the executor under the last-mentioned will did not represent the testatrix so as to entitle him to continue the proceedings commenced by his estator. Wilcocks v. Doughty, 29 L. R., Ir. 17.

Foreign Probate.]—A. died in India. B., one of the executors, proved his will in India. B. died, and C., his executor, proved his will in England. C. is not the personal representative of A. Twyford v. Trail, 7 Sim. 92.

Married Women.]—B., a married woman, made a will merely executing a power given her by the marriage settlement, but she appointed C. executrix generally. The Ecclesiastical Court granted probate of this will in the general form. B. was the sole executrix of her late husband A. The general probate of the will of B. will transmit to C. the representation of A. without administration de bonis non. Barr v. Carter, 2 Cox, 429; 2 R. R. 98.

The chain of executorship is not continued by the appointment of an executor by a married woman in a will made under a power. Hughes, In goods of, 4 Sw. & Tr. 209.

A husband appointed his wife and two other persons as executrix and executors. The wife re-married and died, having, during her second coverture, made a will in accordance with her power of appointment, and she appointed her husband her sole executor. The husband took out letters of administration with the will annexed. Part of the estate of the original testator remained unadministered, the two other executors having predeceased the wife. The court held that the grant of letters of administration to the second husband, with will of his wife annexed, did not continue the chain of representation to the original testator, and, with the consent of the second husband, granted administration of the unadministered effects of the testator to his daughter as one of he residuary legatees. Bridger, In goods of, 47 L. J., P. 46; 26 W. R. 535.

Default of Derivative Executor.]—Where J. C. was executor of R. C., and died, leaving unadministered a portion of R. C.'s assets, which came to C. W. as executor of J. C.:—Held, that the proper assets of J. C. were exonerated, and not liable for the default of C. W. respecting R. C.'s assets. Oldham v. Wilkins, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 59.

b. Administrator.

1. Appointment.

Who entitled to Grant—20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, s. 73.]—The court has no power under this section to grant general administration to a person who, before the act, would only have been entitled to a grant of administration during the minority of an infant, that section not conferring power to substitute one kind of administration for another, but merely to substitute another person as administrator in the place of the person who would by law be entitled to administration. Smith, In goods of, 27 L. J., P. 105.

The court will not make a grant of administration under this section to a party entitled to a grant in another character. Fairweather, In goods of, 2 Sw. & Tr. 588; 6 L. T. 788; 10 W. R. 862.

One of the next of kin of a deceased person having applied for letters of administration, he was opposed by others, and contentious proceedings ensued. Ultimately, all parties came to an agreement to suspend the litigation, and to consent to administration being granted to an individual who had no interest in the property of the deceased:—Held, that the court could make such a grant under this section. Farrell v. Brownbill, 33 L. J., P. 185; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 593.

Administration will not, under this section, be granted to a person other than the one who by law would be entitled to administration, though the latter may be resident abroad, if he has received no notice of the application, unless the court is satisfied by other circumstances, that it is necessary or convenient that the grant should be made. Cooke, In goods of, 1 Sw. & Tr. 267; 28 L. J., P. 43.

A mere general statement upon affidavit, that "it is necessary for the preservation of the personal estate and effects of the deceased that administration should be granted," will not, in the absence of such notice, suffice. Ib.

A joint grant of administration to the person by law entitled to administration, and to another, is a grant to a person other than the one entitled within the meaning of this section. Grundy, In goods of, 37 L. J., P. 21 ; L. R. 1 P. 459 ; 17 L. T. 451 ; 16 W. R. 406.

The court will not exercise the power conferred on it by this section, by passing over a person entitled to a grant in favour of a creditor when the fact of the insolvency of the intestate is disputed. Hawke v. Wedderburne, 37 L. J., P. 33 ; L. R. 1 P. 594 ; 18 L. T. 336 ; 16 W. R. 712.

Grant, Effect of Colonial and Indian.] — Colonial letters of administration will enable an administrator to sue in this country, in respect of stock standing in the names of trustees, to a share of which the intestate was entitled. M'Mahon v. Rawlings, 16 Sim. 429.

Where the widow of an officer who died intestate in India, obtained letters of administration of her husband's effects there, and remitted the proceeds thereof in government bills to her agent in England ; and a creditor of the intestate took out letters of administration of the intestate's effects in this country, and brought an action against the widow's agent for money in his hands as part of such effects :—Held, that the letters of administration in India prevailed over those granted in this country ; and that the action would lie only at the suit of the widow as administratrix. Currie v. Bircham, 1 D. & R. 35 ; 24 R. R. 634.

Where a defendant, acting under a power of attorney from the plaintiff, took out administration at Bengal to the estate of a deceased debtor by bond to the plaintiff, and received moneys under the administration :—Held, that he could not recover as against the plaintiff, on the ground of a subsequent administration obtained by other creditors in this country. Farrington v. Clarke, 2 Chit. 429 ; 3 Dougl. 125.

B. died in India, and his will was proved there by two of the executors. One came to England, and a portion of the testator's assets was remitted to him there by his co-executor, who shortly afterwards died. On a bill filed by his executor in England for an account of the moneys so remitted :—Held, that probate or administration ought to have been taken out in this country. Bond v. Graham, 1 Hare, 482 ; 6 Jur. 620.

A testator at the time of his death was domiciled in New South Wales, and the court of New South Wales granted probate of his will to A. as executrix according to the tenor. A. was not entitled to the grant as executrix according to the tenor, by the law of England ; but the court, under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, s. 73, decreed administration, with the will annexed, to A. as the person entitled to administer under the grant of the court of the country of domicil. Earl, In goods of, 36 L. J., P. 127; L. R. 1 P. 450; 16 L. T. 799.

—— Foreign.]—An Englishman having died intestate in Belgium, possessed of real and personal property there, his brother went over from England and obtained representation to him pur et simple, which by the Belgian law imposed upon him a personal obligation to pay all the debts of the intestate, independently of the amount of the assets. The intestate's brother afterwards returned to this country, but did not take possession of any property in England belonging to the intestate. A creditor of the intestate obtained letters of administration to him in England :—Held, that he could not sue the intestate's brother in equity in respect of the personal liability which he had so incurred, but that his remedy to recover his debt was at law. Beavan v. Hastings (Lord), 2 Kay & J. 724 ; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1044 ; 4 W. R. 785.

In 1856 the Prerogative Court granted administration de bonis non, with the will annexed, of a domiciled Portuguese, to Carniero, a substituted executor in the will ; Carniero, in conjunction with the widow, being by the law of Portugal the legal representative. Carniero, in conformity with the Portuguese law, had since renounced his executorship, and Vianna had been, by the administrator of the district, nominated executor for all legal purposes. The court refused to grant administration de bonis non to Vianna, on the ground that there was no authority for an executor who takes such a grant in an English court renouncing, so that there was still a legal personal representative of the deceased in this country. Veiga, In goods of, 3 Sw. & Tr. 13 ; 32 L. J., P. 9 ; 7 L. T. 644 ; 11 W. R. 84.

A Sardinian, who had settled in Brazil, died intestate on his voyage from Bahia to Genoa. He had wound up his affairs in Brazil, and intended to resume his domicil of origin at Genoa. An agreement had been come to by the Brazilian and Italian governments, with respect to the administration of his property and the guardianship of his children (some of whom were in Genoa and others in Brazil), by which the Brazilian government gave up to the Italian government all claim to such administration and guardianship. The court revoked a grant of administration which had been made to the representative of the person entitled to it according to the Brazilian law, and made a grant to the person entitled to it according to the Italian law. Bianchi, In goods of, 3 Sw. & Tr. 16 ; 8 L. T. 171 ; 11 W. R. 240.

2. Relation Back of Title.

A., having sent goods to Fernando Po for sale, died intestate ; and, after his death, the defendant purchased the goods from the agent of the intestate there, who sold them for the benefit of the intestate's estate ; subsequently to the sale, the plaintiff took out letters of administration to the intestate, and sued the defendant for the price of the goods :—Held, that the action was maintainable ; that the title of administrator, though it does not exist until the grant of administration, relates to the time of the death of the intestate, so as to entitle the administrator to sue for goods sold and delivered ; and that, as the act of the agent was ratified by the plaintiff after he became administrator, it was no objection that the intended principal was unknown at the time to the person who intended to be the agent. Foster v. Bates, 12 M. & W. 226 ; 1 D. & L. 400 ; 13 L. J., Ex. 88 ; 7 Jur. 1093. And see Rex v. Horsley, 8 East, 405, 408 ; and the cases under PROCEEDINGS AT COMMON LAW—WHEN MAINTAINABLE, XIII. a. 1, col. 1607, post.

3. Survivorship.

When administration is granted to two, and one dies, the administration survives to the other, without new letters of administration. Hudson

v. Hudson, Cas. t. Talb. 127. But see Jacomb v. Harwood, 2 Ves. Sen. 268.

Administration granted to two: one dies, it survives to the other; but if a letter of attorney is made to two, and one dies, the authority ceases. Adam v. Buckland, 2 Vern. 514. And see Eyre v. Shaftesbury (Countess), 2 P. W. 121.

4. Other Cases.

Administrator de bonis non—Position of.]—In an action by an administrator de bonis non, the promise may be laid to have been made to the first administrator. Hirst v. Smith, 7 Term Rep. 182; 4 R. R. 415.

Where a solicitor has acted professionally for a testator and for his executor or administrator, and papers belonging to the estate have come into his possession, and, after the death of the executor or administrator, an administrator de bonis non has been appointed, the administrator de bonis non is not entitled to reclaim from the solicitors the papers in his possession without first paying the costs due to him, not only in respect of work done for the testator, but also in respect of work done for the executor or administrator. Watson, In re, 53 L. J., Ch. 305; 50 L. T. 205; 32 W. R. 477.

There is a privity of estate between an executor or administrator and a subsequent administrator de bonis non, and the liabilities of the estate pass, with the benefits of it, to the administrator de bonis non. Ib. And see cases under PROCEEDINGS AT COMMON LAW—WHEN MAINTAINABLE, XIII. a. 1, col. 1607, post.

Administrator durante minore ætate—Position of.]—An administrator durante minore ætate is an ordinary administrator, and the limit to the administration is the minority of the person, but there is no other limit. Cope, In re, Cope v. Cope, 50 L. J., Ch. 13; 16 Ch. D. 49; 43 L. T. 566; 29 W. R. 98.

Joint Administrators—Several Authority.]—A release by one administrator will bind his companion. Willand v. Fenn, 2 Selw. N. P. 767.

II. RIGHTS, POWERS AND DUTIES.

a. RENUNCIATION AND DISCLAIMER.

By 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, s. 79, where any person, after the commencement of the act, renounces probate of the will of which he is appointed executor or one of the executors, the right of such person in respect of the executorship shall wholly cease; and the representation to the testator and the administration of his effects shall and may, without further renunciation, go, devolve, and be committed in like manner as if such person had not been appointed executor.

And see 21 & 22 Vict. c. 95, s. 16.

Before 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, s. 79.]—A formal renunciation or refusal of probate by an executor named in a will is absolutely binding and conclusive on him, unless he afterwards comes in and retracts it. Venables v. East India Co., 2 Ex. 633; 18 L. J., Ex. 266; 12 Jur. 855.

Probate, Effect of.]—Where personal property is bequeathed to the executors as trustees, the probate of the will is an acceptance of the trusts. Muckleo v. Fuller, Jac. 198; 23 R. R. 29.

Where the executor is also trustee of the real estate, by acting as executor he is liable in both characters. The taking probate is an acceptance of the whole trust. Ward v. Butler, 2 Moll. 533.

Where a person appointed an executor under a will proves it, and deals with the estate, he cannot be permitted to say that he acts under a delegated power from the other executors, or in any other character than as executor. Graham v. Keble, 2 Dow, 24; 14 R. R. 96.

Probate to one of several executors, the right of the other being reserved, enures to the benefit of all; and, upon the death of the executor to whom probate has been granted, the other executor may accept the office: and upon doing so, fully represents his testator without further probate. Cummins v. Cummins, 3 Jo. & Lat. 64; 8 Ir. Eq. R. 723.

—— Since 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, s. 79.]—An executor cannot renounce after he has taken probate. Veiga, In goods of, 3 Sw. & Tr. 13; 32 L. J., P. 9; 7 L. T. 644; 11 W. R. 84.

Acceptance of Office — Intermeddling.]—If an executor administer part of the assets, he shall be charged with the receipts, though he renounced the executorship and paid the money to the other executor who proved the will. Read v. Truelove, Ambl. 417.

Where one, appointed executor, intermeddled with the estate of the testator, and afterwards renounced:—Held, that he was liable to be sued in equity in the character of executor, by the legatees under the will, one of whom was also executrix, and had proved the will. Rogers v. Frank, 1 Y. & J. 409; 30 R. R. 813.

A slight act of intermeddling with the assets by the surviving executor, who has not joined in proving the will, will amount to an acceptance of the office of executor, and will preclude him from afterwards refusing to act. Cummins v. Cummins, 3 J. & L. 64; 8 Ir. Eq. R. 723.

An application by an executor before probate for payment of a debt, though unsuccessful, constitutes a sufficient act of intermeddling to preclude subsequent renunciation. Stevens, In re, Cooke, v. Stevens, 66 L. J., Ch. 155; [1897] 1 Ch. 422; 76 L. T. 18; 45 W. R. 284.

Executor who has not proved, not considered as acting by assisting a co-executor, who had proved, in writing letters to collect debts. Nor by writing directly to a debtor of the testator, and requiring payment. Orr v. Newton, 2 Cox, 274; 2 R. R. 44.

Three executors, A., B. and C., were appointed; two, A. and B., proved the will; the third, C., did not prove, but administered part of the assets: A. and B. sold the stock-in-trade to C.:—Held, that he having paid part of the purchase-money into the hands of A., was answerable for his misapplication, and that although as mere purchaser the payment would be a complete discharge, he is liable as executor; having acted in one instance he cannot exclude a particular part of his dealing with the assets, but is completely executor, notwithstanding his intention of not interfering generally, and his own transaction as purchaser is not an exception. Kilbee v. Sneyd, 2 Moll. 186.

A. owed C. a large sum of money upon two promissory notes. C. appointed A. and B. executors of her will, who upon her death proceeded to obtain probate of the same. Before it was obtained, A. died: having previously, however, investigated the private papers of the testatrix, and obtained, in his character of executor, from B. her book of accounts:—Held, that such acts were sufficient to shew that A. had accepted the office of executor, although he died before probate; and that where a question arose in chambers as to whether he was, under such circumstances, indebted to the testatrix, the proper course is to adjourn it into court under the 20th Order, 16th October, 1852. Clarke v. Phillips, Bayliss v. Phillips, 2 W. R. 331.

—— Intermeddling as Agent of Acting Executor.]—A person who was appointed executor and trustee, who did not prove, and received none of the property except as agent to the executor who proved, was held not to have accepted the trust, nor to be responsible for loss occasioned to the estate by improper investments. Lowry v. Fulton, 9 Sim. 115; 8 L. J., Ch. 314; 3 Jur. 454.

A person named as executor and trustee under a will, did not formally renounce probate until after the death of the acting executrix, nor did he ever disclaim by deed the trust of the real estate; but he purchased a part of the real estate, and took the conveyance from the widow, who was tenant for life, and heir, to whom the estate must have descended upon the disclaimer of the trust. During the life of the acting executrix, however, he interfered in the disposition of the testator's property, as her friend or agent:—Held, that he was not, under the circumstances, chargeable as executor or trustee. A deed of disclaimer is the best evidence of the renunciation of a trust, but the conduct of the party desirous of renouncing a trust may amount to a disclaimer. Stacey v. Elph, 1 Myl. & K. 195; 2 L. J., Ch. 50.

If one of two persons named trustees and executors disclaims and renounces, and afterwards possesses himself of assets, as the agent of the other, who has accepted the trust and proved the will, he does not thereby become accountable as a trustee and executor, and ought not to be made a party to a suit for the administration of the estate. Dove v. Everard, 1 Russ. & M. 231; Taml. 376.

—— Intermeddling on behalf of Legatee.]—Executors, in order to be discharged, must either wholly renounce, or put the administration of the assets into the hands of a court of equity. Doyle v. Blake, 2 Sch. & Lef. 231; 9 R. R. 76.

A., named executor in a will, acts on behalf of particular legatees, disclaiming an intention of interfering generally; he afterwards renounces formally, in favour of B., who was named a trustee in the same will, who thereupon obtains administration cum testamento annexo. B. possesses himself of the assets, and afterwards dies insolvent. A. is liable as executor, notwithstanding his renunciation, and is answerable for the acts of B., it appearing that he had a control over the assets, and B. being considered as having obtained possession thereof by his means. Ib.

—— Intermeddling as Agent of Testator.]—The agent of the testator who was named by him a trustee and executor, and did not prove the will, but did not disclaim:—Held, responsible as trustee, and could not protect himself as agent only. Montgomery v. Johnson, 11 Ir. Eq. R. 476.

—— Power—Right to exercise—Executor Renouncing.]—One devises that his executors should sell his land, and leaves two executors, one whereof dies, and the other renounces, and administration was granted to A., who brings a bill against the heir, to compel a sale; whether the renouncing executor in whom the power of sale collateral to the executorship was vested, ought not to be made a party. Yates v. Compton, 2 P. W. 308. And see Ford v. Ruxton, 1 Coll. C. C. 403; Keates v. Burton, 14 Ves. 434; 9 R. R. 315.

A power in a settlement to a party, his executors, &c., to appoint new trustees, may, on the renunciation of one executor, be exercised by the remaining acting ones. Granville (Earl) v. M'Neile, 7 Hare, 156; 18 L. J., Ch. 164; 13 Jur. 252.

A testator by his will, after appointing three executors, bequeathed the residue of his personalty to such charitable institutions as his executors therein named might select, in such proportions as they might approve of. One executor renounced:—Held, that the renouncing executor could not take part in selecting the charities and distributing the residue among them:—Held also, on the context, that the power could be exercised by the other two executors. Mainwaring, In re, Crawford v. Forshaw, 60 L. J., Ch. 683; [1891] 2 Ch. 261; 65 L. T. 32; 39 W. R. 484—C. A.

A disclaimer executed by an executor, who with two other executors had a power of sale of copyhold property, but, without joining with them in a sale, reciting that he had, from the testator's decease, declined to act, and had never acted, in the executorship, or the trusts of the will, is a refusal ab initio, there being nothing to impeach the bona fides of the transaction. Peppercorn v. Wayman, 5 De G. & S. 230; 21 L. J., Ch. 827; 16 Jur. 794.

By Executor of Executor.]—An executor of an executor who has accepted the executorship of the latter testator, cannot renounce the executorship of the former. Brooke v. Haymes, L. R. 6 Eq. 25.

Executors cannot renounce the executorship of the estate of a person to whom their testator was executor. Delacour, In goods of, Ir. R. 9 Eq. 86.

Where, therefore, A. appointed B. and C. his executors, and B. obtained probate, C.'s rights being saved; B. died, having appointed as his executors D. and E., who both obtained probate; C. afterwards renounced probate of A.'s will, and D. and E. disclaimed the executorship of it:—Held, that, notwithstanding the disclaimer of D. and E., they would be the executors of A. Ib.

Presumption of, by Lapse of Time.]—After the lapse of sixty years, and in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, the court—having power to draw inferences of fact—presumed that executors who had renounced had also disclaimed an estate in a chattel real bequeathed to them. M'Kenna v. Eager, Ir. R. 9 C. L. 79.

b. Possession and Disposition of the Body.

There is no property in a dead body, but the executors have a right to the possession of the body, and their duty is to bury it, although there is a direction in the will that some other person should cause the body to be burnt. Williams v. Williams, 51 L. J., Ch. 385; 20 Ch. D. 659; 46 L. T. 275; 30 W. R. 438; 15 Cox, C. C. 39; 46 J. P. 726.

c. ACTS DONE BEFORE PROBATE OR LETTERS OF ADMINISTRATION.

Generally.]—The right of an executor to the estate of his testator is derived from the will, and he is in possession in point of law from the time of the death, although before probate is granted. Smith v. Milles, 1 Term Rep. 480.

But the probate is the only evidence which is admissible to prove such right. Rex v. Netherseal, 4 Term Rep. 258.

Before Probate—What Valid.]—An executor, before probate, may so far act as to get in and receive his testator's estate, or release debts, or even bring actions for them. Wills v. Rich, 2 Atk. 285.

The interest of an executor arises, not from the probate but the will; therefore, he may release a debt, or assign a term before probate. Hudson v. Hudson, 1 Atk. 461.

Where an insolvent executor is getting in the assets before probate, the court will restrain him, and direct the money to be paid into the bank. Smith v. Aykwell, 3 Atk. 566.

An assignment of a trust term by executrix, who died before probate:—Held, to be established by subsequent probate. Brasier v. Hudson, 8 Sim. 67; 5 L. J., Ch. 296.

—— Instituting Proceedings.]—Where an executor before probate files a bill, and afterwards proves the will, such subsequent probate makes the bill a good one. Humphreys v. Humphreys, 3 P. W. 351.

Executor may issue commission before probate. Paddy, Ex parte, 3 Madd. 241; Buck. 235.

An executor cannot bring a bill of interpleader till after probate; for till probate he does not stand in the place of the testator, and has not made himself a debtor. Mitchell v. Smart, 3 Atk. 607.

If an executrix sues in that character, she must produce probate, though she could make out her title as legatee of a lease for years. Gleeson v. Cooke, 1 Hog, 294.

Executor cannot bring a bill without shewing thereby that he has proved the will in the Spiritual Court; if he does, this is good cause of demurrer. But it is enough to allege he has duly proved the will without saying in what court. Humphreys v. Ingledon, 1 P. W. 752. And see further, PROCEEDINGS BY OR AGAINST, XIII. a. 1, col. 1607, post, b. 1, col. 1620, post.

Before Letters of Administration—What valid.]—The distribution of an intestate's estate amongst the next of kin before administration granted is not an act for the benefit of the estate, so that a person who subsequently takes out administration will be entitled to recover the property, although it was distributed with his assent. Morgan v. Thomas, 8 Ex. 302; 22 L. J., Ex. 152; 17 Jur. 283.

—— Instituting Proceedings.]—Though administration is not taken out till after the filing of the bill, yet if granted before a cause comes to a hearing in equity, it is sufficient; otherwise at law, because there the defendant may crave oyer of the letters of administration. Fell v. Lutwidge, 2 Atk. 120.

An objection was taken to a bill by a husband for a legacy due to his late wife, that administration had not been taken out till after bill filed; the objection was overruled, partly because the administration had relation to the time of the death; partly because, before taking out administration, the husband had an equitable interest. Moses v. Levi, 3 Y. & C. 359.

A husband cannot sue for a wife's choses in action till he has administered. Grosvenor v. Lane, 2 Atk. 180.

And see further, PROCEEDINGS BY OR AGAINST, XIII. a. 1, col. 1607, post, b. 1, col. 1620, post.

—— Other Matters.]—Payments made by an administrator de son tort, pending a suit for an account of an intestate's estate, to a person who took out administration after the institution of the suit, and was thereupon made a co-defendant, will not be allowed. Layfield v. Layfield, 7 Sim. 172; 4 L. J., Ch. 2.

d. COLLECTION AND MANAGEMENT OF ESTATE.

By the Land Transfer Act, 1897, s. 1 (1): Where real estate is vested in any person without a right in any other person to take by survivorship, it shall, on his death, notwithstanding any testamentary disposition, devolve to and become vested in his personal representatives or representative from time to time as if it were a chattel real vesting in them or him.

Sect. 2 (2). All enactments and rules of law relating to the effect of probate or letters of administration as respects chattels real, and as respects the dealing with chattels real before probate or administration, and as respects the payment of costs of administration and other matters in relation to the administration of personal estate, and the powers, rights, duties and liabilities of personal representatives in respect of personal estate, shall apply to real estate so far as the same are applicable, as if that real estate were a chattel real vesting in them or him, save that it shall not be lawful for some or one only of several joint personal representatives, without the authority of the court, to sell or transfer real estate.

1. Inventory and Accounts.

Duty as to.]—One of the first duties of an executor is to be constantly ready with his accounts; and neglect in this is a ground for charging him with interest. Pearse v. Green, 1 J. & W. 135; 20 R. R. 258.

It is the bounden duty of an executor to keep clear and distinct accounts of the property which he is bound to administer. If, therefore, he chooses to mix the account with those of his own trading concerns, he cannot thereby protect himself from producing the original books in which any part of those accounts may be inserted. Freeman v. Fairlie, 3 Mer. 40; 17 R. R. 7.

An executor, dealing with money in his hands, is bound to ear-mark it, but if he cannot answer as to the state of it, the court has no power to act as upon an admission. Ib.

A legatee has a clear right to have a satisfactory explanation of the state of the testator's assets, and an inspection of the accounts, but he is not entitled to a copy thereof at the expense of the estate. Ottley v. Gilby, 8 Beav. 602; 14 L. J., Ch. 177.

—— Attachment for not filing.]—An administrator, who is in prison under an attachment for not filing his inventory and accounts, will not be discharged upon filing a sufficient inventory and account except upon payment of costs. Marshman v. Brooks, 11 W. R. 549.

2. Authority to receive Money.

Payment to Executors — Discharge by.]—Motion that securities be delivered to the executor to receive the money granted. Jones v. Jones, 3 Bro. C. C. 80.

A fund was vested in trustees for A. for life, remainder for B. for life, remainder for such persons as A. should by will appoint. A. appointed that certain legacies should be paid out of the fund after B.'s death, and named B. her executor. B. proved the will, and the trustees then handed over the whole fund to B., who spent it, and died insolvent. On a bill by the legatees against the original trustees:—Held, that they were discharged by the payment to A.'s executor. Hayes v. Oatley, 41 L. J., Ch. 510; L. R. 14 Eq. 1; 26 L. T. 816.

Bankers, the agents of executors, and authorised by them to receive certain assets, remitting the amount to the executors in the course of their duty as agents, and afterwards, the assets when received being applied in payment of the amount of such remittances, are not responsible in respect of a misapplication by the executors, they not being privy to any intention of such misapplication. Keane v. Robarts, 4 Madd. 332; 20 R. R. 306.

Payment to One of Two Executors—Executor also Agent of Debtor.]—Payment by a debtor, for the express purpose of discharging his debt to an estate, to his own agent, who happens to be, but not to the debtor's knowledge, one of the executors of the estate, is not sufficient to discharge the debtor. Miller v. Douglas, 56 L. J., Ch. 91; 55 L. T. 583; 35 W. R. 122.

Payment to Third Party by Order of Executor.]—A partner in a mercantile firm by his will directed that the residue of his property should be divided into four shares, and that one share should be invested by his executors, and the dividends paid to J. F. for life; and that after his decease the principal should be divided among his children surviving him equally, and he appointed J. F., C. and P. (a member of the firm) his trustees and executors. C. alone proved the will. The testator's share of the profits of the firm was ascertained, and C. called on P., the principal member of the firm, to pay 1,000*l.* of the trust fund. P. wrote to C. that, pursuant to his directions, it should be lodged in bank; and on the 24th March, 1870, P. lodged a cheque of the firm for 1,000*l.* in bank to the credit of J. F.'s wife (who was under the impression that it was paid to her on account of money due to her by C.), and P. obtained a receipt from C. in the following words:—"Received from Messrs. F. P. & Co. the sum of 1,000*l.*, on account of the late A. J. F. (the testator), said sum having been lodged in the R. bank to the credit of Mrs. J. F. on the 24th of March, 1870, at my request. 1,000*l.*—T. R. C., executor of the late A. J. F.—24/3/'70." P. denied notice of any trust for the children of J. F., or of any intended misapplication of the money:—Held (Palles, C.B., dissenting), that the payment of the 1,000*l.* was a good payment, and that neither P. nor the firm were responsible for it to the children of J. F. Ferrier v. Ferrier, 11 L. R., Ir. 56—C. A.

A person indebted to a testator's estate who pays a third party by order of the testator's executor, and obtains the executor's receipt, without notice that the payment is wrongfully made, obtains thereby a complete discharge. Ib.

3. Getting in and Realising Estate.

Expenses.]—It is the duty of executors to get in property specifically bequeathed at the expense of the general estate. Perry v. Meddowcroft, 4 Beav. 204.

Arrears of Rent.]—The difficulty of collecting arrears of rent does not excuse executors for not collecting them, without some evidence that in fact they could not have been recovered. Alexander, In re, 13 Ir. Ch. R. 137.

Realisation of Estate—Tenant for Life and Remainderman—Debts.]—When a tenant for life is entitled in specie, the rule is, that investments may remain, but debts, as turnpike bonds, must be realised. Holgate v. Jennings, 24 Beav. 623.
